So the substitute was rejected.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I find that I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HEMENWAY, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TUCKER. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. DRAPER. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

The following-named members were announced as pairs until further notice:

Mr. DALZELL with Mr. CRISP.
 Mr. BOUTELLE with Mr. McMILLIN.
 Mr. PRINCE with Mr. BAILEY.
 Mr. HEMENWAY with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.
 Mr. RANEY with Mr. COWEN.
 Mr. LACEY with Mr. HUTCHESON.
 Mr. STEPHENSON with Mr. MONEY.
 Mr. GROUT with Mr. NEILL.
 Mr. REEVES with Mr. CATCHINGS.
 Mr. BEACH with Mr. HARRISON.
 Mr. HULL with Mr. MOSES.
 Mr. DRAPER with Mr. TUCKER.
 Mr. WANGER with Mr. SWANSON.
 Mr. HADLEY with Mr. PRICE.
 Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota with Mr. LAWSON.
 Mr. MOZLEY with Mr. McLAURIN.
 Mr. ALDRICH of Alabama with Mr. McKENNEY.
 Mr. HUFF with Mr. MINER of New York.
 Mr. BELKNAP with Mr. LIVINGSTON.
 Mr. SMITH of Michigan with Mr. BERRY.
 The following for this day:
 Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. LAYTON.
 Mr. BROSIUS with Mr. ELLETT of Virginia.
 Mr. SIMPKINS with Mr. MEREDITH.
 Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. SULZER.
 Mr. SPARKMAN with Mr. HENRY of Indiana.
 The following on this question:
 Mr. MILLIKEN with Mr. BANKHEAD.
 Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts with Mr. WILSON of South Carolina.
 Mr. ROYCE with Mr. TURNER of Virginia.
 Mr. BAKER of Maryland with Mr. SHAW.
 Mr. BARRETT with Mr. MADDOX.
 Mr. MAHANY with Mr. HENDRICK.

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. WASHINGTON.
Mr. WOODARD with Mr. ALLEN of Utah.
Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I voted, but I withdraw my vote, being paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DALLAS.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. PRINCE, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. HENDRICK. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. MAHANY, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I voted in the affirmative, but as I am paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. BOUTELLE, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, my name was read as paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. HURLEY. That pair was made under the arrangement that I should have the right to vote on all amendments, and I wish to have that statement appear in the RECORD. I wish to state further that at the time this pair was made with my colleague I expected to vote against the bill, but because of the amendments which have been made to it I now intend to vote for it. My colleague is also in favor of the bill, and would so vote, if he were present.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I move to recommit the pending bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report the same back to the House so amended that the provisions for involuntary bankruptcy, if any, shall apply to none but cases of actual fraud.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, there were—ayes 88, noes 116.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Many MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 37 voting in favor thereof.

So the motion of Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 80, not voting 117, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

On this question:

Mr. HERMANN with Mr. YOAKUM.

Mr. HURLEY with Mr. TRELOAR.

Mr. WILSON of New York with Mr. OTEY.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have voted in the negative on this question; but I wish to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the gentleman from Maine, Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. BRODERICK. The gentleman from Utah, Mr. ALLEN, who is absent, requested me to state that if he were here he would vote against this bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. My colleague, Mr. HUFF, desired to be excused from attendance this afternoon.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated. [Applause.]

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ELECTION CONTEST—THORP VS. M'KENNEY.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I rise to a privileged question, and call up the report of the Committee on Elections No. 3 on the case of Thorp vs. McKenney, from the Fourth district of Virginia.

The resolutions reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Resolved, That W. R. McKenney was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Fourth district of Virginia, and is not entitled to his seat.

Resolved, That R. T. Thorp was duly elected as a Representative from the Fourth Congressional district of Virginia to the Fifty-fourth Congress, and is entitled to the seat.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I presume it is not necessary to have the report read.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it intended to dispose of this matter now?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Oh, yes; there is no opposition.

Mr. MCALL of Massachusetts. The report of the committee is unanimous.

The SPEAKER. If no one asks to have the report read the Chair will put the question on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were adopted.

Mr. R. T. Thorp presented himself and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

PRINTING PACIFIC RAILROAD REPORTS.

Mr. PAYNE. I call up the motion to reconsider that I entered a day or two ago with reference to a resolution providing for the printing of the reports of the Committee on Pacific Railroads in the Fifty-fifth Congress. The gentleman from California agrees to this.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes. There was some question as to the scope of the resolution; and I am willing that the matter shall be reconsidered by the House and a different form of resolution adopted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the motion by which the resolution was adopted will be reconsidered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be reprinted the usual number of Senate Executive Document No. 51, Fiftieth Congress, first session, being the majority and minority reports of the Pacific Railway Commission, and the message of the President of the United States transmitting the same to Congress, but not including the testimony accompanying said report.

Mr. ARNOLD of Pennsylvania. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute for the original resolution.

The substitute was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused the engrossment and third reading of House bill No. 3826 on yesterday.

Mr. DINGLEY. This is simply a motion entered to reconsider, without any action now?

Mr. KNOX. That is all.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House the following House bill with Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7395) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to reconvey to the former owners a certain tract of land in Valverde County, Tex.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I have called for the regular order. That can not be the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the regular order is the consideration of House bills with Senate amendments.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CRISP. Certainly, if the Chair holds that they come immediately after the reading of the Journal—

The SPEAKER. Unless a special order intervenes. But when the special order is executed, then this business is in order.

But the gentleman from Maine moves that the House do now adjourn.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 2936) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River, in the town of Lewiston, in the county of Niagara, State of New York—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 1860) for the relief of John M. Guyton, late postmaster at Blacksburg, S. C.—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1288) for the relief of John Stull—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 65) for the relief of J. E. Gillingwaters—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 3853) granting a pension to Armina Stucker, of Gallatin, Mo.; when the Speaker signed the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEELE, for one week, on account of business.

To Mr. WATSON of Indiana, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. OVERSTREET, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MADDOX, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

The motion of Mr. DINGLEY was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. McRAE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 119) to protect public forest reservations, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1593); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. EVANS, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8582) to allow the bottling of distilled spirits in bond, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1595); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. WILLIAMS: Petition of Rev. H. Patton and others, against the appropriation of public moneys for sectarian undertakings and for a constitutional amendment against making appropriations for ecclesiastical purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 4, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on motion of Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

JAMES DUKE.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 572) for the relief of James Duke. It is a House bill, with a favorable report from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the naval record of James Duke, who enlisted in the United States Navy February 21, 1862, and served as a first-class fireman on board the Baron de Kalb and Maria Denning up to July 6, 1863, by removing the charge of desertion from the record and granting him an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MUSCOGEE, OKLAHOMA AND WESTERN RAILROAD.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1741) to authorize the Muscogee, Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a line of railway through Oklahoma and Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "one," and in line 7, before the word "feet," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty"; so as to read:

That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, telegraph, and telephone line, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said allotted lands and through said Indian Territory, both for its main line and branches thereof, and to take and use a strip of land 100 feet in width, with a length of 2,000 feet in addition to the right of way, for stations for every 10 miles of said railroad, with the right to use such additional ground where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed, not exceeding 50 feet in width, along said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cuts or fills.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 6, line 7, before the word "company," to strike out the words "or said."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 6, line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "seven hundred and fifty"; so as to read:

That said railroad company shall pay to the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of the particular nations or tribes through whose lands said railway may be located, the sum of $75, in addition to compensation provided in this act, for property taken and damages done to individual occupants by reason of the construction of the railway, for each mile of railway that it may construct in the Indian Territory, said payments to be made in installments of $750 as each 10 miles of road is graded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of section 8 the following proviso:

Provided further, That this act shall not be so construed as to give or grant said company any right, title, or interest in or to the wagon-road approaches to the nearest public highways which it is authorized to construct from the ends of the bridge, or to charge or collect toll fees for traveling over said wagon-road approaches.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Arkansas if the bill contains the usual clause reserving the right of Congress to repeal, alter, or amend?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is in the usual form. The last section of the bill provides "that Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act."

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Amendment numbered 284: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 284, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "ten"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 290: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 290, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Sec. 11. That at any time when, in the opinion of the marshal of any district, the public interest will thereby be promoted, he may appoint one or more deputy marshals for such districts, who shall be known as field deputies, and who, unless sooner removed by the district court, as now provided by law, shall hold office during the pleasure of the marshal, except as hereinafter provided, and who shall each, as his compensation, receive three-fourths of the gross fees, including mileage, as provided by law, earned by him, not to exceed $1,500 per fiscal year, or at that rate for any part of a fiscal year; and in addition shall be allowed his actual necessary expenses, not exceeding $2 a day, while endeavoring to arrest, under process, a person charged with or convicted of crime: Provided, That a field deputy may elect to receive actual expenses on any trip in lieu of mileage: Provided, That in special cases, where in his judgment justice requires, the Attorney-General may make an additional allowance, not, however, in any case to make the aggregate annual compensation of any field deputy in excess of $2,500 nor more than three-fourths of the gross fees earned by such field deputy. The marshal immediately after making any appointment or appointments under this section shall report the same to the Attorney-General, stating the facts as distinguished from conclusions constituting the reason for such appointment, and the Attorney-General may at any time cancel any such appointment as the public interest may require. The field deputies herein provided for of the districts of California, Colorado, Washington, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nevada, Oregon, Wyoming, and Idaho shall, for the services they may perform during the fiscal year 1897, receive double the fees allowed by law to like officers in other States for performing similar duties, but neither of them shall be allowed to receive of such fees any sum exceeding the aggregate compensation of such officer as provided herein."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 291: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 291, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "twelve"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 293: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 293, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 295: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 295, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "fourteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 296: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 296, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "fifteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 299: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 299, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "seventeen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 303: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 303, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "eighteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 311: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 311, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "6 to 23"; and on page 127 of the bill, in line 10, strike out the words "June 30" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the 1st day of July"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 312: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 312, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "6, 8, or 15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 19, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 33, 108, 109, 142, 144, 233, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 313, and 314.

S. M. CULLOM,
H. M. TELLER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
JNO. E. MCALL,
ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. This bill has been once before in conference. This is the second conference report. It will be observed that the conferees on the part of the two Houses have agreed to a number of amendments and disagreed to others. There is one item of agreement as to which the conferees on the part of the Senate have, since agreeing, come to the conclusion that is not correct. I therefore ask the Senate that the conference report be disagreed to, so that we may correct that item and make a further report, perhaps during the day.

I should take time now to explain the items to which we have heretofore agreed; but as the conference report will probably come back directly, I shall not do so at present, but simply ask that the report may be disagreed to, so that the item to which I refer may be corrected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. CULLOM. I now ask that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to a further conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference, and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

CORPORATE INFLUENCE IN POLITICAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill (S. 581) for the relief of the legal representatives of Hiram Somerville, a small bill that will not lead to debate.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will postpone the request for a little while. I have had a resolution lying upon the table for a long while, and which I have unanimous consent to call up at any time for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska. Will the Senator from Florida indicate the resolution to which he refers?

Mr. CALL. It is a resolution relating to the influence of corporations on elections in Florida and providing for the appointment of a select committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution indicated by the Senator from Florida has gone to the Calendar, the Chair is advised.

Mr. CALL. It was by unanimous consent laid on the table, and the privilege was given to me to call it up at any time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution indicated by the Senator from Florida.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL December 17, 1895, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate, who shall be charged with the duty of investigating the subject of organized efforts of corporations, or of the president and directors thereof, to control the election of members of Congress, or to influence the legislation of Congress; also to investigate and report to the Senate whether corrupt means, bribery, or free transportation have been or are being used to influence such elections; also to inquire and report to the Senate whether the use of such influences or means is consistent with the preservation of the Republic of the United States and the rights and liberties of the people, and to report a bill for the punishment or suppression of such practices.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be read again.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand that the first question is on taking up the resolution.

Mr. CALL. It was agreed by unanimous consent that I might call it up at any time. It has been lying on the table for some time.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not remember any agreement of that sort. I do not think the Senate has any power—

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] made the suggestion, and it was agreed to. It has been lying on the table. As it appears from the RECORD, instead of calling it up every morning it was suggested that I should have the privilege of calling it up at any time, and that was agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. FAULKNER. If there was a unanimous agreement that the resolution should be laid before the Senate when called for, I have nothing further to say, but I opposed the resolution, for I did not think the Senate had the power to authorize the investigation provided for.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the resolution is again called for. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that there is an amendment pending, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1 strike out the words "a special," before the word "committee," and after the word "committee" strike out "of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate, who" and insert in lieu "on Privileges and Elections"; so as to read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections shall be charged with the duty of investigating, etc.

Mr. CALL. The Secretary has read the wrong resolution. I introduced a resolution subsequently which proposes a select committee of five Senators.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator kindly indicate the resolution to which he refers?

Mr. CALL. It is a subsequent resolution, and it is on the table.

Mr. BERRY. My recollection is that the amendment substituting the Committee on Privileges and Elections was adopted and the resolution was then passed and afterwards reconsidered with that amendment in it.

Mr. CALL. And a new resolution offered.

Mr. BERRY. I do not know anything about a new resolution, but I have stated my recollection of the matter.

Mr. CALL. There is a new resolution lying on the table, which I ask be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution indicated by the Senator from Florida will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL December 24, 1895, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate, who shall be charged with the duty of investigating the subject of the efforts of corporations in the State of Florida, or of the president and directors thereof, to control the election of members of Congress from the State of Florida, or to influence the legislation of Congress; also to investigate and report to the Senate whether corrupt means, bribery, or free transportation have been or are being used to influence such elections in the State of Florida; also to inquire and report to the Senate whether the use of such influences or means is consistent with the preservation of the Republic of the United States and the rights and liberties of the people, and to report a bill for the prevention of such practices.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SEWELL. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey, to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I ask if the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. TURPIE. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. I vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I desire to inquire whether the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Idaho, with whom I am paired, were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEAR. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. He has not voted, and I therefore refrain from voting.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—21.
Baker,	Cannon,	McMillan,	Vilas,
Bate,	Daniel,	Mills,	Walthall,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Platt,	Wetmore.
Brown,	Gray,	Quay,
Burrows,	Jones, Ark.	Sewell,

Clark,	Hawley,	Pritchard,	White,
Cockrell,	Hill,	Proctor,	Wilson,
Davis,	Hoar,	Pugh,	Wolcott.
Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Shoup,

So the Senate refused to lay the resolution on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, to refer the pending resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this resolution has been by a small vote once referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and reconsidered, and the chairman of that committee informs me that the committee do not desire to have this reference made.

Mr. GRAY. That will not do. That is for the Senate to decide.

Mr. CALL. It will occupy more time than that committee can give it, and I hope the motion will not be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CALL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. McBRIDE. I inquire whether the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. McBRIDE. I am paired with that Senator and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. WALTHALL. I desire to announce a pair between the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. I ask that this announcement may apply to all the yea-and-nay votes taken during the day.

Mr. MARTIN. I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Bacon,	Cannon,	Irby,	Platt,

So the resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

Mr. TURPIE. I move that the Senate take up the resolutions with respect to the title of Henry A. Du Pont, esq., to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware; and upon the motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, I am a little surprised at the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. GORMAN. I raise the point of order that this question is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the motion of the Senator from Indiana is not debatable. It can be debated only by unanimous consent.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. GORMAN. I object to debate.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask unanimous consent, as chairman of the committee having the matter in charge, to make a statement in opposition to the motion.

Mr. GORMAN. If we are to enter into a debate—

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No debate. I wish to make a statement, not to exceed two minutes.

Mr. GORMAN. I withdraw my objection for that purpose.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, I reported the resolution as chairman of the committee of which I happen to be a member. I have charge of the case. There has been no disposition on my part, as chairman of the committee, and I think no disposition on the part of any Senator on this side of the Chamber, to delay a vote on that resolution. It was my intention, as soon as the river and harbor bill could be disposed of and two or three speeches made on the proposition, to press the matter to a vote; and why it should be taken out of my hands in this way at this time, when there has been no indication, so far as I know, on this side to delay a vote, I am at a loss to understand.

I can assure the Senator from Indiana, and I can assure every Senator on that side of the Chamber, that I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution, and intended to do so as soon as the river and harbor bill was out of the way. I did not wish to interfere with that bill, but so soon as that is disposed of I shall seek the first opportunity, if permitted, to call up the Du Pont case, and shall insist that we proceed with it to final disposition.

Mr. TURPIE. The honorable Senator from Oregon, I think, has made too much of an assumption. He speaks of being in charge of the resolution. I did not move to take up the resolution of the honorable Senator from Oregon or the resolution at all for present consideration. I moved to take up the resolutions upon that subject for consideration, one of which, and the first of which to be considered, is the one offered by myself in the negative, and being in charge of that resolution first to be considered, without any interference at all with the duty of the honorable Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the committee, and I may say without the slightest consultation with him, I have made this motion this morning.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, one word in reply. The Senator understands that he does not represent the committee. He represents the minority of the committee. I represent the committee, and the resolution referred to by the Senator from Indiana is a resolution reported by the minority, which the Senator now seeks to take up in advance of the resolution reported by the committee.

If there had been any disposition to delay this matter, Mr. President—and there has not been from the first, I think, the Senator will agree—then I should have nothing to say; but in view of the statement I have made, in view of the fact that there has been no intention upon our part to delay or postpone a final vote, it does seem to me that it is rather out of the ordinary for the Senator to move to take up the minority report at this time.

Mr. TURPIE. I wish to say to the honorable Senator from Oregon that he has furnished me a useless piece of information in saying that he is the chairman of the committee. I think that is known, and that he is in charge of the resolution reported by the committee. I, or the minority of the committee here, have charge of the resolution reported by the minority, which is first to be considered. Both resolutions are questions of the highest privilege and are entitled to preference over everything else unless the Senate shall otherwise order.

In order to test the sentiment of the Senate with respect to the immediate consideration of this question, I make the motion, and call for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the distinguished Senator from Oregon in connection with the matter suggested by the Senator from Indiana. Will the Senator from Oregon agree that this case shall be taken up one week from to-day, immediately after the routine morning business, and voted on the next day by 4 o'clock—to-morrow week?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will agree substantially to that. I will agree to this, that immediately on the conclusion of the river and harbor bill by the Senate—

Mr. GORMAN. No.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That may be this week.

Mr. GORMAN. Let us have a specific day. Will the Senator agree to that?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will state that there are one or two speeches to be made on the Du Pont case when taken up, and for that reason I do not wish to interfere with the river and harbor bill.

Mr. GORMAN. This will be a week from to-day, which will give ample time for all speeches, that we proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 333—

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. When does the Senator suggest?

Mr. GORMAN. Immediately after the conclusion of the routine business on Monday morning next that the resolution be taken up, and that at 4 o'clock on Tuesday, to-morrow week, the final vote shall be taken.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am perfectly willing to hasten a vote, and have been from the first to have an early vote. Senators on the other side are no more anxious for a vote than I am.

Mr. TURPIE. This is the first time the honorable Senator has intimated that wish.

Mr. GORMAN. Will it be agreeable to the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] if I make that request?

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, sir; perfectly.

Mr. GORMAN. Then I make the request that the resolution in relation to the right of Mr. Du Pont to a seat in the Senate, being Order of Business 333, shall be taken up immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business on Monday next, and shall be voted upon and finally disposed of at 4 o'clock on the following day, Tuesday—to-morrow week.

Mr. VILAS. I suggest that the request include the resolution of which the Senator from Indiana speaks—the minority resolution.

Mr. GORMAN. As a matter of course, the whole subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I beg leave to submit to the Senate that there is already a resolution on the Calendar which is the unfinished business, and it will come up properly, before taking up anything else, until it is disposed of. I mean, we can not properly take up anything else by unanimous consent that will interfere with the proper disposition of the bond resolution.

Mr. GORMAN. I will suggest to the Senator that that does not interfere with his resolution. By unanimous consent we are to take up the resolution at 2 o'clock, and we will dispose of it, if not to-day, to-morrow.

Mr. PEPPER. I so understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. This does not interfere with it at all.

Mr. PEPPER. In case the bond resolution should not be disposed of at the time to which unanimous consent would carry the Senate, it would place the bond resolution in a precarious position.

Mr. GORMAN. It can not possibly interfere with the Senator's resolution, which comes up at 2 o'clock, and I hope will be disposed of to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. PEPPER. I am willing to take the risk of it.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from Maryland understand that the bond resolution has a unanimous consent to be called up at 2 o'clock any day?

Mr. GORMAN. It has the unanimous consent of the Senate to be taken up as unfinished business at 2 o'clock, and the Senator from Kansas gave way for its consideration until after the disposition of the naval appropriation bill, with the distinct understanding that it was to be proceeded with to-day at 2 o'clock; and, as a matter of course, if the Senate desires, it can be taken up and disposed of immediately.

Mr. FRYE. Then the river and harbor bill is put back an indefinite length of time.

Mr. PEPPER. I have given way three times.

Mr. FRYE. It is exceedingly important that the river and harbor bill should be acted on.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I do not quite agree with the statement in its whole breadth of the Senator from Maryland. There was no understanding, as stated, that the bond resolution was to be taken up to-day at 2 o'clock. The bond resolution is the unfinished business, and comes up as a matter of course every day at 2 o'clock.

Mr. GORMAN. It does not lose its place.

Mr. HILL. Oh, no; it does not lose its place, but there is a general understanding, which the RECORD shows from time to time, that the bond resolution would not be taken up until the appropriation bills were disposed of, and the Senator from Kansas has very courteously each day so expressed himself. There is a general understanding that it shall not lose its place as unfinished business, but not be taken up to-day at 2 o'clock any more than at any other time.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to understand what that unanimous consent was, the nature of which precludes me at 2 o'clock from moving to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill?

Mr. HILL. Not the slightest, I will say, if the Senator addresses me. It was well stated by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] the other day, when he said unanimous consent simply made the bond resolution the unfinished business. The Senator from Maine can, if he sees proper, and the public business so requires, move to take up the river and harbor bill, which undoubtedly I suppose will be necessary because of the general understanding that the resolution is not to be brought up and lead to a political debate until after the appropriation bills are disposed of. Undoubtedly the Senator from Kansas would yield, as I suppose we all understood and expect him to yield, to this appropriation bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Now I renew my request, and I trust there will be no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Maryland. Is there objection?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. What is the request?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the Chair inform us of his own opinion as to the understanding in regard to this matter. What was the agreement?

Mr. PEPPER. It is in the RECORD.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the opinion of the Chair, and he can, if he chooses, consult the RECORD, which shows the exact status.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will examine the RECORD, so as to state it accurately. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that it be again stated.

Mr. GORMAN. I will again state it. It is that immediately after the disposition of the routine morning business on next Monday, one week from to-day, the Du Pont case shall be taken up for consideration, and the final vote upon the resolution shall be taken at 4 o'clock on Tuesday, the next day.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I object to that, and I submit as a counter proposition this: That at the conclusion of the river and harbor bill in the Senate I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the Du Pont case, or I will ask unanimous consent now that we proceed at that time to its consideration and stick to it until it is concluded; until a final vote is taken. Otherwise we shall have the vote right now.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator objects, I will withdraw my request and let the vote be taken.

Mr. TURPIE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana, to proceed to the consideration of the Du Pont case, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

Mr. CHANDLER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], so as to enable the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] and myself to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DUBOIS. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. BRICE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I understand he has not voted and I withdraw my vote, as I am uncertain how he would vote on this question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I transfer my pair from the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and ask that my name be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The name of the Senator from New Hampshire will be called.

The name of Mr. CHANDLER was called, and he voted "nay."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and as he is not present, I withdraw my vote. I should vote "yea," if he were present.

Mr. McBRIDE. Has the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi has voted.

Mr. McBRIDE. Then I vote "nay."

Mr. PRITCHARD. I desire to transfer my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 31; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, February 18, 1896, as follows:

Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1893.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, when I left the Chamber a few moments ago I supposed the matter of taking up the Du Pont case was about settled by agreement. However, I was informed when in the cloakroom that it had failed.

I desire to state, before going further into the matter, that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], in charge of the measure so far as the committee is concerned, has been so liberal to me and, I think, to all others on this side of the Chamber with reference to the discussion of this subject that I am disposed to extend a like courtesy and a like liberality to him. Of course I desire that this case shall be disposed of at the present session of the Senate, and not be passed over; but I think it would be well and it would suit me if some arrangement could be made for the taking up of the case which would be agreeable to the Senator from Oregon and at the same time would not amount to a postponement of the final decision of the matter to the next session. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In the seventeen years I have been in the Senate I think I have never seen such an unwarranted procedure as we have just witnessed. If there had been any disposition manifested on behalf of the majority of the committee reporting the case to postpone unreasonably a final vote, then there might have been some reason for proceeding in this summary manner upon the part of the minority of the committee. But even then it does seem to me that at least some intimation should have been given, some consultation should have been had, out of common courtesy, and because of the comity that exists between minorities and majorities and between Senators individually, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was any disposition upon our part to bring this matter to an early conclusion. But no. With several Senators on this side of the Chamber absent and unpaired, without any intimation whatever of a desire upon the part of the minority of the committee (although it may be a majority of the Senate for anything I know; that will be determined by the final vote), a motion is made by those representing the minority of the committee to proceed to the consideration of the case.

I can look upon it in no other light than a discourtesy to the majority. Had those representing the minority of the committee come to me or to any member representing the majority of the committee, they could have been advised and would have been advised at any time within the last two weeks that so far from there being any disposition on the part of the Republicans to postpone action, we were ready and willing and anxious, so far as that is concerned, to take the matter up at some convenient and proper time, when it would not interfere with pressing appropriation bills, and bring the matter to a final vote. It has been understood on both sides of the Chamber that there were at least two further speeches to be made, one by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], who announced on several occasions that he desires to be heard, and the other by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who wishes also to submit some remarks. It was our intention, as I said before, as soon as the river and harbor bill was out of the way to move the consideration of this case, and to continue it until all speeches were concluded and then to take a vote.

There has been no other disposition, no other intention, upon this side of the Chamber, no other intimation so far as I know, and therefore it is, in view of all these circumstances, that I can not look upon the proceeding of this morning, emanating as it did from the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], for whom I have the highest respect, except as an act of discourtesy to the majority of the committee, and toward this side of the Chamber moreover. From the fact that this is an important matter, a matter upon which every Senator, I have no doubt, whatever may be his views, would have been glad to have been present and to have submitted his vote in accordance with his convictions, I suggested this morning, when the Senator from Indiana submitted his motion, that as soon as the river and harbor bill was out of the way, I would move to proceed to the consideration of this case with the understanding that we should proceed until all the speeches were made and a final vote was reached. But that did not suit the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who insisted that we must fix a day, we must fix an hour, something unreasonable in view of the status of the case and all the circumstances.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course I am not going to indulge, for I do not have any such feeling, in criticism against anybody for his action in this matter. I speak only for myself as one of the humblest members of this body, one who never assumes to have any control over the procedure of the body. However, I can not help feeling under some obligations to the Senator from Oregon for what I regard as the very unusual courtesy extended to me in the debate. I remember that after my distinguished friend, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], had made on this subject one of the ablest law arguments I ever listened to in this body, or anywhere else, so far as that is concerned, it was expected on my side of the Chamber that very soon thereafter I should occupy the floor on the same side of the question. I was in a condition in which I could not comply with that expectation. I went to the Senator from Oregon and told him the situation and asked him for delay. I believe he gave me all the delay I asked him for. After a while, getting the delay I did ask for from the Senator from Oregon, I was enabled to make my speech.

I wish to state now that up to this point the debate in the Senate on this very important question has been conducted in a spirit and on a plane which are very gratifying to me. We have had several elaborate speeches on both sides, and leaving out all consideration of anything I may have said, speaking alone of the remainder of the speeches, I must say that the debate has been characterized by an ability very unusual, by fairness, by deference to the wishes of others, and, I almost might say, with an absolute refraining from anything like partisan expression. So I began to hope, and it is a hope I shall not willingly surrender, that when this judicial question, a very important one, in my humble judgment, involving not only the constitution of Delaware, but the construction of the Federal Constitution, came up finally to be decided we should have the judicial judgment of this body upon those important questions.

Now, in view of all this I wish to say to my friends on this side of the Chamber that I think we ought to credit the statement of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] that there is no disposition on his part or on the part of his side of the Chamber unduly to delay the decision of this question, and allow him and the other side the same liberality which was extended at least to me. I hope now that some agreement will be made. I understand the Senator from Oregon to say that he is perfectly willing to agree that the case shall be taken up on the final disposition of the river and harbor bill, and that is the next appropriation bill to be taken up by the Senate, leaving several others unfinished; and I hope my friends on this side of the Chamber will agree to that suggestion, so that this case may in its ending, as it has been heretofore, be characterized by liberality upon both sides, by putting the great question involved in the report of the committee upon that high plane of nonpartisanship which I think ought to characterize the proceedings of the Senate upon a question of this sort.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Oregon and to the other Senators having the Du Pont matter in charge to allow the regular appropriation bills to proceed in their order and be passed before taking up the election case.

Mr. GRAY. No, no.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it is the wish on both sides of the Chamber that the Du Pont case shall be disposed of during the present session. If that can be the understanding, I hope a time will be fixed for its consideration after the appropriation bills—three of which are still in committee—shall have been considered in the Senate. I hope, also, that when the time is fixed for the consideration of the Du Pont case, at the same time an hour and a day will be fixed for a vote, because if it is the intention of both sides of the Chamber to have a vote on the case, it can be arranged for at the same moment, giving ample time for all of those who wish to speak on the subject to do so.

I hope, therefore, that the Senator from Oregon will suggest the postponement of the consideration of this case until the appropriation bills have passed the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. All of them?

Mr. ALLISON. All of them. It will then take two weeks, probably, to dispose of the appropriation bills in conference. I observe the intimation of the Senator from Mississippi that if all of the appropriation bills are disposed of it will also dispose of the Du Pont case at this session. But I understand it is the wish and purpose on both sides that the Du Pont case shall be voted on at the present session. Therefore any agreement that is made upon the subject can involve that understanding also.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me for a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. There is no bill among the appropriation bills, unless it be the deficiency bill, which can have any operation before the 1st day of July, the beginning of the next fiscal year, and therefore I hope my distinguished friend, the Senator from Iowa, will not insist on disposing of all of the appropriation bills first, because there is really no necessity for disposing of everything before the 1st day of July. The suggestion is made by my distinguished and liberal friend, the Senator from Oregon—I am bound to say that—that when we get through with the river and harbor bill, and that to be the next bill, we shall proceed to dispose of the Du Pont case. I ask as a personal favor, to enable me to repay in part a debt which I owe to the Senator from Oregon for his courtesy to me in this matter, that no member on this side of the Chamber will object to that proposition.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I appreciate very much what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has just said, and thank him for his consideration. I still hope that my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will consent that my original proposition may stand.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the original proposition—the one that the Senator agreed to and he then backed out of and substituted another for?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The one I agreed to?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I beg pardon. The Senator from Missouri wholly misunderstood me if he thought for a moment that I agreed to any proposition except the one to take up the Du Pont case at the conclusion of the river and harbor bill and then proceed with it to a finish.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understood the Senator distinctly to say, and I think every other Senator on this side of the Chamber so understood him, that he would gladly accept that proposition.

Mr. GRAY. We so understood it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Every Senator on this side understood that.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. We were trying to come to an agreement. The distinct proposition I made was that we should take up this case at the conclusion of the river and harbor bill. There will then be still three or four appropriation bills to pass, and there will be no danger of breaking a quorum if Senators are afraid of that. We will all be here; we will all have notice and all have a chance to vote. I therefore suggest again, so far as I am concerned (I am only one Senator and one member of the committee), that I will be willing to take this case up immediately after the river and harbor bill is disposed of, and I am also willing to fix a time for voting at a certain time beyond that.

Mr. CHANDLER. The peculiarity of the present situation, about which it is not best to get excited, is that the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] came upon this side of the Chamber with two Republican Senators absent and unpaired. When the Senate adjourned on Saturday it was with the expectation that the river and harbor bill would be taken up and proceeded with to-day. The motion of the Senator from Indiana was one entirely unexpected on this side of the Chamber, and if there is any such thing as Senatorial courtesy operating between the two sides of the Chamber the resolution ought not to be proceeded with at the present time.

I find no fault with the minority of the committee for raising the question whether or not this case is to be disposed of by vote before the Senate adjourns. I have never myself had any expectation that it would not be so voted upon. For some reason or other the idea seems to have prevailed on the other side of the Chamber that there was to be no vote upon this case. I see by the newspapers that they resolved in caucus that there should be a vote before the Senate adjourns. The only answer that I have made to a suggestion of that kind was that there was no intention on this side of the Chamber to avoid a vote before the end of the session. There never has been certainly so far as I am concerned.

Mr. President, while the minority, if they had that feeling of distrust of the majority, had a perfect right to make the motion to proceed to the consideration of this case, it was fairly required of them that they should give us notice that they intended to take a test vote upon the question. The test motion was made without the least idea on this side of the Chamber that it was to be made, without any expectation that there would be any division of the Senate upon a partisan question or any question approaching partisanship until after the appropriation bills were disposed of, certainly not until after the river and harbor bill was disposed of. Therefore, I recognize the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] as entirely in accord with the general spirit that pervades in this Chamber. I do not mean to say by any means that the Senator from Indiana intended to precipitate this question prematurely or unfairly. He had a right to make the motion. It did not occur to him perhaps that we ought to have had the notice, either public or private, which I think should be given at all times and under all circumstances when a vote of this kind is to be brought up.

Mr. GORMAN. I regret that the Senator from Oregon took exception to the proceedings here this morning. I do not think on reflection that he will have the slightest right to complain. The resolution was first reported by the distinguished Senator from Oregon on the 18th day of February, and he gave notice to the Senate that he should press the resolution to a speedy conclusion. However, delays did occur and the matter has dragged along, having been discussed from time to time.

On the 15th day of April, after the matter had been considered and debated for quite a length of time, as the appropriation bills were pressing, I took the liberty to suggest to the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from Oregon, that he then agree to a time when the case could be disposed of, and I suggested a week or ten days. But then as now the Senator from Oregon objected. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] suggested that the naval appropriation bill was about ready for consideration and the matter went over until that bill was disposed of. The general understanding from the tenor of remarks, although the Senator then as now refused to fix any time positively, was that when the naval appropriation bill was out of the way the matter was to come up and be disposed of. I had that impression, but there was no agreement. So this morning when the distinguished Senator from Indiana moved to take up the resolution, the naval appropriation bill having passed this body and no appropriation bill pressing except the one from the Committee on Commerce, I suggested again to the Senator as a matter of fairness that we fix one week from Tuesday, that we take up the matter and discuss it on Monday of next week, and on Tuesday until 4 o'clock, so that notice could be had by everyone that at that time we would have a vote upon the resolution, which is the great privileged question before the body.

Now comes my distinguished friend from Iowa, and he presses all the appropriation bills before we shall have an agreement in this case. Mr. President, that is perfectly well understood. It is a way by which you can postpone a matter for all time, for when we pass the appropriation bills nothing upon the face of the earth will hold Congress here.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I coupled with that proposition the suggestion that there should be a final vote upon this question before the adjournment of Congress at the present session.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand the Senator from Iowa; but we all know it will be almost impossible to hold Congress here after the appropriation bills are out of the way.

Coming back, now, to the main proposition, for I do not want anything but an opportunity to vote on the question with a full Senate, will the Senator from Oregon agree that this case shall be taken up immediately after the passage of the river and harbor bill; that two days shall be devoted to its discussion, and that on the second day after the passage of the river and harbor bill, at 4 o'clock, the final vote shall be taken upon this question?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator make it the third day and fix an hour?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; I will make it the third day.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. At 4 o'clock; not later than 4?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly, I will.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. At 4 o'clock, so that there may be two full days' debate, and on the third day at 4 o'clock, not later than 4, the vote shall be taken.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to make a suggestion as respects the hour fixed for a vote. Unless the Senators know it is the desire of Senators to speak upon the question, I hope three days will not be occupied in its consideration.

Mr. GRAY. It need not be.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not think it need be. I know of only two Senators who desire to speak.

Mr. GORMAN. Then let us make it the second day, giving one day's full debate.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is, giving two full days, and voting at 3 or 4 o'clock on the third day.

Mr. GRAY. That will be understood.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to say, if the Senator will allow me, that we know of only one or two speeches to be made on each side.

Mr. GORMAN. I think not more.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is known that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] desires to speak. He gave notice of that desire. It is known that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] desires to speak. I do not think there will be any considerable debate upon the question.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I understand that under an agreement of such a kind the matter is to be taken up immediately upon the conclusion of the river and harbor bill, and that then, upon the third day thereafter, at a certain hour, a vote is to be taken—

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Not later than 4 o'clock.

Mr. GRAY. I understand that such an agreement does not compel the whole time to be occupied with this case, if no one is ready to speak on it or cares to speak.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly not.

Mr. GRAY. But two days ought to be given, so that Senators may have notice that at a certain hour the vote is to be taken.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes; so that Senators can be here.

Mr. ALLISON. It can be just as well understood that the hour for the vote shall be at 5 o'clock on the second day as at 5 o'clock on the third day.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it to be the consensus of both sides of the Chamber that we are to have a vote upon the Du Pont case.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Make it 5 o'clock on the second day.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well; I suggest 5 o'clock on the second day.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. All right.

Mr. GRAY. Let us understand what the "second day" means. If the matter is taken up at the conclusion of the river and harbor bill on Monday, for instance, does that mean that Tuesday or Wednesday will be the second day?

Mr. CULLOM. Tuesday.

Mr. GRAY. But is it the second day?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. What does the Senator say?

Mr. GRAY. I say Tuesday; but let us have no misunderstanding about it.

Mr. GORMAN. What I mean is that when the river and harbor bill shall have been disposed of, immediately thereafter we shall proceed to the consideration of the resolution and debate it that day and the next day until 5 o'clock.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Suppose, however, that the river and harbor bill is concluded at 5 o'clock in the evening and then this resolution is taken up?

Mr. GRAY. We can adjourn immediately, if we choose.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; we can adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. It is my experience, as respects appropriation bills, that they are always finished about the last thing in the evening. I am perfectly willing for one that two full days of debate shall be given to the Du Pont case.

Mr. GORMAN. If anyone wants to debate it.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore I suggest that at the conclusion of the river and harbor bill it be understood that the next day—

Mr. GORMAN. Very good.

Mr. ALLISON. Immediately after the routine business the Du Pont case shall be taken up.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is better.

Mr. ALLISON. And when it is taken up, that on the second day at 5 o'clock or sooner we shall take the final vote.

Mr. GORMAN. That is perfectly agreeable.

Mr. CULLOM. Suppose nobody wants to speak?

Mr. ALLISON. We can then go right on and vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I make the suggestion simply because Senators who desire to vote may understand that at any time after the resolution is taken up debate may cease and we will come to a vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. They must be here.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well. Leave it that way.

Mr. GORMAN. I then make that request of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. CHANDLER. Let it be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland will restate his request.

Mr. GORMAN. It is, that upon the passage of the river and harbor appropriation bill, the next morning, immediately after the routine business, the resolution proposing to seat Mr. Du Pont shall be taken up and continued under consideration, and that the vote shall be taken not later than 5 o'clock on the second day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAY. I would suggest that the unanimous request be modified so as to read that the vote be taken at 5 o'clock on the second day, that everyone may be advised of the precise hour he should be here to vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Yes; Senators may have other business.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well; at 5 o'clock on the second day.

Mr. PEPPER rose.

Mr. GORMAN. This is not to interfere with the bond resolution, of course.

Mr. PEPPER. I am perfectly willing to give my consent with the understanding that this unanimous-consent proceeding shall not in any wise interfere with the bond resolution.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 7977, being the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Before the vote is taken on the motion, I suggest to the Senator from Maine that when the hour of 2 o'clock arrives I shall insist upon proceeding with the regular order, the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that as it is read the committee amendments shall be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, on page 2, line 15, after the word "April," to insert "seventeenth"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Portland Harbor, Me., according to the report of the Chief of Engineers dated April 17, 1896, and continuing improvement of Back Cove, according to existing project, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 6, after the word "Maine," to strike out "$10,000"; and in line 7, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by the Chief of Engineers" and insert "February 6, 1895, $10,000"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Carvers Harbor, at Vinal Haven, Me., in accordance with plans submitted February 6, 1895, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 16, after the word "sum," to strike out "shall" and insert "may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War"; and in line 19, after the word "sum," to strike out "shall" and insert "may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War"; so as to read:

Improving harbor at Boston, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $70,000: Provided, That this sum may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used in the preservation and improvement of said harbor other than the project for improving the main ship channel, and that $7,000 of this sum may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used in improving Chelsea Creek.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he would have any objection to striking out, in line 18, the words "other than" and inserting "including"; so as to read:

Including the project for improving the main ship channel.

Mr. FRYE. None at all.

Mr. LODGE. I move that amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 21, after the words "Chelsea Creek," to insert:

And so much thereof as the Secretary of War, in his discretion, shall direct to be expended for the protection of Great Head, Winthrop, to prevent the further washing away by the action of the sea.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for continuing improvement of Boston Harbor, on page 4, line 2, after the word "out," to strike out "such improvement, submitted" and insert "the revised project of"; so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry out the revised project of August 11, 1892, such contracts to provide that said ship channel shall be widened to a minimum width of 1,000 feet and a minimum depth of 27 feet, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, in the aggregate not to exceed $1,145,000, exclusive of amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 9, on page 4.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for a joint special committee to inquire into the condition of the Congressional Library, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 129) for the relief of Capt. George H. Perkins;

A bill (S. 661) to amend section 2880 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fixing time for vessels to unlade;

A bill (S. 1846) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate condemned cannon to Custer Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Leavenworth, Kans., and Mathies Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Burlington, Iowa; and

A bill (S. 1872) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange in behalf of the United States the tract of land at Choctaw Point, Mobile County, Ala., now belonging to the United States and held for light-house purposes, with the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad Company for any other tract or parcel of land in said county equally well or better adapted to use for light-house purposes.

The message further announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes; agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. McCALL of Tennessee, and Mr. DOCKERY managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

A bill (S. 2997) to provide for the fulfillment of the stipulations of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed at Washington on the 8th day of February, 1896;

A bill (H. R. 145) for the relief of J. J. Lints;

A bill (H. R. 1191) to provide for the disposal of public reservations in vacated town sites or additions to town sites in the Territory of Oklahoma;

A bill (H. R. 5853) granting a pension to Arminda Stucker, of Gallatin, Mo.; and

A bill (H. R. 7200) for the relief of A. T. Hensley.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution submitted by Mr. PEPPER, providing for a committee of five Senators to investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to know what the unanimous agreement was in relation to this matter, whether it was anything more than that the resolution should be the unfinished business. I would not violate for any bill in my charge a unanimous-consent agreement made by the Senate, but I desire to ask, first, unanimous consent to lay the resolution temporarily aside, and if unanimous consent is not given, I desire to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill, notwithstanding the unfinished business. I shall not do that if it is in violation of an agreement of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Maine. Is there objection?

Mr. PEPPER. I insist upon proceeding with the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas object to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. PEPPER. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. FRYE. Then I should like to know what the agreement was?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator from Kansas on that point.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to have the agreement read, because I wish to know positively whether I am in honor bound by the agreement to refrain from submitting a motion to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. PEPPER. I was going to request that the RECORD be produced. I am satisfied the Senator will find from it that when the Indian appropriation bill was about to be taken up, or was under consideration, the hour of 2 o'clock arriving, I insisted upon proceeding with the bond resolution; and by unanimous consent it was agreed that the bond resolution should be temporarily laid aside and that the Indian appropriation bill should be proceeded with, the understanding being that at the conclusion of the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill the Senate should then proceed to the consideration of the bond resolution. At the conclusion of the Indian appropriation bill—

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, we are unable to hear the Senator from Kansas on this side of the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas will suspend for a moment. There is complaint that Senators are unable to hear the remarks of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. GORDON. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to suggest that the reading of the RECORD of the understanding would settle this matter?

Mr. PEPPER. If the RECORD is ready to be produced let it be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has requested the clerks at the desk to find the RECORD.

Mr. PEPPER. I have forgotten the date. In the meantime I will proceed; and for the information of those Senators who did not hear the beginning of my explanation, I will restate that when the Indian appropriation bill was about to be taken up, or was under consideration, the Senator having the bill in charge asked unanimous consent that the bond resolution be temporarily laid aside in order that the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill might be proceeded with, and consent was granted. When that bill was disposed of, the next bill (I have forgotten now what it was; it was an appropriation bill) was brought before the Senate, and a like unanimous consent was given, and for a like purpose, that the bond resolution should be temporarily laid aside in order that the consideration of that appropriation bill might be proceeded with. Then at the conclusion of the consideration of that bill came the naval appropriation bill, which I believe was the last one, and a like consent was granted in that case.

Having given way for three different appropriation bills, I insist that the Senate ought now to proceed to execute the order granted by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to have a statement from the Senator specifically as to what he understood the agreement to be.

Mr. PEPPER. My understanding was that at the conclusion, first, of the Indian appropriation bill we should proceed to the consideration of the bond resolution. When that time was reached, unanimous consent was again asked that the next appropriation bill, whatever it was—I forget now what it was—should be proceeded with, and that the bond resolution should be temporarily laid aside for that purpose. It was so agreed. Then came the naval appropriation bill, and a like unanimous consent was asked for the same purpose. My understanding has been all along that at the conclusion of the then pending appropriation bill the bond resolution would be in order to be proceeded with. Consent was only asked, from time to time, for the disposition of the particular appropriation bill then in hand; not for all of them, but for one.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Kansas insists upon his unfinished business at the most inopportune time that is possible. It would have been a great deal better to have insisted as against the naval appropriation bill or any of the regular appropriation bills. The river and harbor bill may be obliged to lie practically unfinished for ten days after it passes both Houses, and it is important to have it pass the two Houses as soon as it possibly can be done. I wish the Senator would consent that the unfinished business might be laid aside until the river and harbor bill is finished.

Mr. PEPPER. I think that something is due to the Senate—

Mr. GORDON. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to suggest that the statement of the Senator from Kansas does not make a case of unanimous consent to take up the bond resolution? It simply means that we have given unanimous consent to lay it aside and leave it as the unfinished business. As I understand the Senator from Kansas, there is no unanimous-consent agreement whatever to take up the bond resolution.

Mr. PEPPER. The unanimous-consent agreement applied from time to time to the pending appropriation bill only, and the effect and the understanding of the unanimous agreement was each time that, upon the conclusion of the appropriation bill then pending, the Senate would proceed to the consideration of the bond resolution.

Now, I have yielded three different times, and although it may not seem so important in the mind of the Senator from Maine and some other Senators, yet, Mr. President, this resolution proposes an investigation of one of the most important transactions that have ever occurred in the history of the American Republic, a subject that all Senators agree and that all citizens agree is one of surpassing importance. It is now urged with great vigor upon the part of a great many persons here and elsewhere, and if the resolution is agreed to and a special committee is appointed it will be necessary for a great deal of preliminary work to be performed before the committee could go into active work. A great many active plans will have to be advised, a great many different subjects will have to be examined, so that the investigation may proceed orderly and decently and ably, so as not to bring scandal upon the committee. In addition to all that, if the resolution is adopted it will have to be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, in order that the necessary machinery for carrying on the work of the committee may be provided by the Senate.

Taking all these things into view, I frankly say I am of the opinion that the resolution at this particular time is more important than the river and harbor bill, because as soon as it is disposed of (it surely will not occupy more than a day or two; it ought not) the river and harbor bill can be taken up. As I said, if the resolution is agreed to, it will take some little time for the Presiding Officer to consider the subject of the appointment of the committee, and after the committee has been appointed there must be consultations and time again in order to lay out a plan of appropriate procedure.

So, Mr. President, I insist upon proceeding with the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kansas if the original unanimous consent asked by him and agreed to by the Senate went any further than to make his resolution the unfinished business?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes, Mr. President; it did.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the exact point about which I wanted information. If it went beyond that let it be shown exactly what the agreement meant, and I take it for granted that no Senator will violate it.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator from Kansas will permit me, I will read from the RECORD, to which I have turned, on this subject.

Mr. PEPPER. Let it be read, so that it can be heard.

Mr. ALLEN. On page 3719, April 8, 1896—there may be something since then—the RECORD shows the following:

Mr. PEPPER. Before the motion to adjourn is put I desire to state that the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] and myself had a conversation this afternoon with respect to the resolution proposing to investigate the bond issue, of which I have been talking to the Senate several times lately. The Senator from New York is obliged to leave the city to-morrow and is not going to return until probably next Tuesday. I ask unanimous consent for an agreement that next Tuesday, at fifteen minutes past 2 o'clock, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bond resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CALL. At what hour? Fifteen minutes past 1?

Mr. ALLEN. No; fifteen minutes past 2.

Mr. CALL. Why not take it up after the routine business?

Mr. HILL. Then it would be cut off by 2 o'clock.

Mr. CALL. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Then the RECORD shows that the Senate adjourned.

Mr. PEPPER. That, however, was the first. It does not relate to the unanimous consent that was given for making the resolution the unfinished business after that time. I think I can find that in a little while. I will look for it. We can trace it if the clerks will get the time when the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration. My copy of the RECORD that contained it, I think, has been taken over to the Maltby Building.

Mr. HILL. While the Indian appropriation bill was before the Senate, with a prospect of several days' continuance, I was obliged to leave the city, and I made a suggestion to the Senator from Kansas that I hoped the resolution would not be called up in my absence. The Senator said he would have it set down for some later date, fixing it for the next Tuesday at 2 o'clock and 15 minutes. If I had not been obliged to go away the Senator, of course, could not have very well taken up his resolution during the pendency of an appropriation bill. When afterwards some question was made in regard to it I raised none, and was entirely willing to proceed with the resolution. We did proceed. We took it up and proceeded with it. Subsequently appropriation bills were brought forward.

I think it was the naval appropriation bill which was under consideration when the question arose as to which measure should have the right of way. I had spoken. The resolution had been considered; the unanimous agreement had been carried out, and debate had been had upon it. Then the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]—I do not find the precise words—made a statement in the Senate, when he asked to displace the resolution. The question then arose as to what had previously occurred in making an agreement. Then the Senator from Kansas distinctly stated that the resolution was the unfinished business without prejudice to the appropriation bills. The Senator from Iowa expressly stated: "I want it understood that it shall not be to the prejudice of taking up the appropriation bills." That was the precise language he used. Then we proceeded with the appropriation bills. Then from time to time the resolution has simply been laid aside by unanimous consent for the taking up of various appropriation bills.

One day the Senator from Kansas, when an appropriation bill had been taken up, wanted a new agreement. I objected to any new agreement, to any new unanimous consent, because we were standing upon the old arrangement, such as it was, which was the right to make the resolution, as the Senator expressly said, the unfinished business. It is the unfinished business to-day. It has no priority over anything else, with the distinct understanding that it must give way, as was stated by the Senator from Iowa, to appropriation bills. The language of the Senator from Kansas was that it was always rutable. I can not find the precise date. He says that it had been formally ruled, and with that understanding we have proceeded. All there is about it is that the resolution is the unfinished business. There is no solemnity in the matter, nothing about it that concerns the question of unanimous consent. The Senate has a perfect right to take up any appropriation bill that it wants to. It can do it with the consent of the Senator from Kansas or without his consent.

So far as I am concerned, it is immaterial to me what disposition shall be made of the bond resolution. I propose to submit some remarks, and others propose to submit remarks upon it. If it comes up there will be an extensive debate. The wisest course for the Senate to pursue, it strikes me, is to proceed, especially in view of the last agreement made, to take up the river and harbor bill. That will expedite the business of the session. There is nothing about the bond resolution which is urgent. It is a political, financial, semipartisan matter which can wait. The committee to be appointed, if one ever is appointed, can not dispose of this business before the session is over. The Senator from Kansas says he wants it considered immediately. It can not be done. Senators are all engaged in the transaction of public business and they have got to be here. If this investigation means anything at all, it means that the committee is to send for persons and papers and go to New York; it means to take expert testimony, and it will be a long investigation.

I am not going to discuss the bond resolution or to anticipate it. I quote from the RECORD of April 20, 1896, as to what heretofore occurred on this subject:

Mr. HILL. The resolution is temporarily laid aside, is it not? There is no other understanding or agreement on the part of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the proposition. The Senator from South Dakota asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. To that I do not make any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

As is suggested by the Senator from Georgia, it was unanimous consent in relation to temporarily laying aside the unfinished business; that was all.

I also read from the RECORD of April 20 what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] said:

Mr. ALLISON. I can say without hesitation to the Senator from Colorado that the resolution of the Senator from Kansas must be the unfinished business until laid aside by a majority vote of the Senate for the consideration of other business. I hope that we shall not be put to the hazard of a contest, and I trust the Senator from Kansas will not enter into a contest whereby the resolution shall go on indefinitely in debate, as we see around us evidence that it is likely to do, to the exclusion of appropriation bills. The Senator has now absolute control of the Senate as respects his resolution, appropriations bills only intervening.

"Appropriations bills only intervening." That was the precise arrangement; and this bond resolution was to be kept as unfinished business until the conclusion of the appropriation bills, when we were to take up and proceed with the bond debate to whatever extent the Senate might desire to have it debated.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have always felt that whenever an understanding has been had by the Senate it should always be observed without regard to consequences. It is only in that way we can dispatch the public business. I have a very clear opinion that the Senate agreed to take up the bond measure and dispose of it, it holding its place always as against everything else except appropriation bills. The appropriation bills could only be taken up by a vote of the Senate or by a unanimous agreement. Under the circumstances, I think we ought to proceed to dispose of the bond resolution, because a question of this kind is always in the nature of a privileged question. When the Senate proposes to examine the conduct of an Executive Department of the Government by inquiring into the sale of bonds, or anything of that kind, such an agreement ought to be always strictly observed. Such a resolution as this, proposing to appoint a committee to examine into the circumstances of the sale of Government bonds, is one which ought to be always favored and acted upon promptly, so that the Senate may get the necessary information in regard to the subject. I do not think the Secretary of the Treasury or any other executive officer would object to such an investigation. Indeed, the natural feeling of an executive officer, if he were the one at whom such a resolution was aimed, would be that the matter should be at once examined into. It seems to me that this proposition for a committee to examine into the circumstances connected with the bonds which were recently sold ought to be at once acted upon. It ought not to take twenty-four hours to act upon it; it ought not to take us more than a single day's session.

I do not see anything in the resolution itself but what is respectful in character. It simply seeks information as to the policy and propriety of the issue of bonds at a particular time, and I think it ought to be disposed of and not take any time, because whenever an inquiry is demanded by a Senator into the conduct of an executive officer it is in the nature of a privileged question, and ought to be promptly acted upon. I hope, therefore, the resolution may be taken up and disposed of to-day. If that is not done, then the resolution will be constantly in the way of all other business except appropriation bills.

Mr. FRYE. I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that every time he mentions it he excepts appropriation bills. Where is the authority for not recognizing the river and harbor bill as an appropriation bill, and one of the most important?

Mr. HILL. And a pretty big one.

Mr. SHERMAN. The agreement was not to take up appropriation bills, but that they were liable at any time to be moved to be taken up. I think, though, that as the bond matter is now before us, we had better dispose of it immediately, and I hope that the Senator from Kansas will ask that a time be fixed, a reasonable time, a short time, when the vote may be taken upon the adoption of the resolution. That will clear the way for appropriation bills and for other business which is very important.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the words of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] at the time this agreement to postpone the consideration of this resolution and to take up the appropriation bill was made. The language of the Senator from Iowa, of which I will only quote a paragraph, is this:

Of course, by securing unanimous consent, and the Senator has secured it, impliedly he may have a claim upon the Senate, but surely it can not last a great while to the exclusion of appropriation bills.

The Senator from Iowa seemed to recognize the fact that at that time the Senator from Kansas might, if he insisted on it, rely on the unanimous consent of the Senate which had been theretofore given for the consideration of his resolution, and he was appealed to at that time to yield to an appropriation bill, which was then pending; but he gave up nothing of the rights he had before. It seems to me that it can not be used now to set aside the consideration of the resolution except by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the language of the Senator from Iowa, found on page 4158 of the RECORD, about halfway down the page, which is as follows:

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to make a suggestion to the Senate and the Senator from Kansas. I understand that the bond resolution is here not by vote of the Senate, but by the unanimous consent of the Senate. I understood at the time that consent was given that it was not to displace appropriation bills when they were ready, but I agree that the phraseology used by the Senator from Kansas would perhaps not imply thoroughly that he was willing, or that consent was given, to allow the resolution to be laid aside temporarily for the consideration of appropriation bills.

Then he proceeded to make an appeal in the polite and persuasive manner for which that Senator is famous.

Mr. HILL. I desire to call attention to the discussion had on page 4158, in which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] made a statement, in which he said:

If the appropriation bills can then be got through, the Senator from Nevada must see that all the moral support of the Committee on Appropriations, to which we have cheerfully yielded, must come to our aid in assisting us in securing the final consideration of the bond resolution.

Here is the last utterance upon the matter by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations:

Mr. ALLISON. Besides that, the bond resolution has the exclusive right of way except for appropriation bills.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from New York allow me to interrupt him one moment?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems to me there was a debate between the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] as to whether the unanimous consent was to proceed absolutely to the consideration of the bond resolution, or whether it was to proceed to the consideration of the resolution subject to appropriation bills, the Senator from Kansas contending that there was no agreement that the resolution should be considered subject to the prior rights of appropriation bills, but should have absolutely the right of way. An appeal was then made to the Senator from Kansas to consent to agree to a unanimous consent of the Senate that the rights he had for the consideration of his resolution under the unanimous consent of the Senate should not be pressed to the prejudice of the appropriation bill which was then proposed to be considered. That was the point of difference between the two.

Mr. HILL. As to whether it should not only yield to that particular appropriation bill, but should yield to the other appropriation bills. Every word that has been stated refers to appropriation bills, and not to a particular appropriation bill. It was stated that there were other appropriation bills coming and that it was not wise to take up the bond resolution; and the Senator from Iowa so understood it, for he said:

Besides that, the bond resolution has the exclusive right of way except for appropriation bills.

I have stated the circumstances under which the resolution was originally taken up. We did then proceed at the time named to take it up. We discussed it on two different days. Then it was displaced, under the circumstances stated, by the appropriation bills. There was then an understanding reached that it should remain the unfinished business.

Mr. President, the Senate, of course, is competent to take either course it sees fit. No unanimous consent is violated by simply taking up another matter after there has been a debate for two days. That does not even state the case so broadly as it is claimed by the other side, that originally there was unanimous consent to take up the resolution. The resolution has been taken up; it was discussed for two days; and then it was set aside by an appropriation bill. If there had been unanimous consent to take up and proceed to vote upon the resolution that would have been an entirely different thing. Ordinarily, when we give unanimous consent, we expressly reserve the point that the subject is not only to be taken up for consideration, but that we shall proceed to a vote upon it. There has been no such reservation made in this case.

It has therefore been stated that the agreement related to only one appropriation bill, and that the Senate, of course, could not refuse to take up the resolution after having once consented to do so by unanimous consent without a violation of the agreement. But after the resolution was taken up and laid before the Senate and debated on two different days, the Senate had a perfect right to take up any other order of business, for that would be held to be a simple taking up, as, for instance, where a Senator offers a resolution in the morning hour and asks unanimous consent to take up the resolution. Does that mean that it must be proceeded with to a vote on that day and that it can not be supplanted by another resolution? Does it mean that it can not go over? It is within the power of the Senate. The unanimous consent referred to is to the taking up of the subject at that time. That unanimous consent has been carried out in its full spirit and effect and we have had two days' debate on the resolution. So when it came up again the Senator could not hold the resolution over the Senate.

I listened particularly to the agreement that was made when the Senator stated that there should be excepted appropriation bills, not the particular bill then pending. Then the Senator had his resolution made the unfinished business, subject only to the right to take up appropriation bills. Therefore I think the Senator from Maine has a perfect right to insist that the river and harbor bill has the right of way, irrespective of a vote. That is the way it has been done, and there has been no objection to it until now. I do not know what has occurred that leads Senators to refuse further unanimous consent to lay the bond resolution aside.

Mr. PEPPER. Does not the Senator from New York remember very well that, upon the close of the consideration of every one of the appropriation bills since this unanimous-consent agreement has been talked about, I have asked to have the unfinished business, the bond resolution, laid before the Senate?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. And that, upon the request of the Senator in charge of the appropriation bill that the resolution might be temporarily laid aside in order that the bill might be proceeded with, I agreed to it?

Mr. HILL. That does not change the question.

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his question of order.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Chair what is now before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that at the hour of 2 o'clock the Chair laid before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bond-sale resolution, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] requested that it should be laid aside temporarily to proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor bill. The Chair submitted the question to the Senate, and the Chair understands the Senator from Kansas to object. That is the status of the case at present.

Mr. LODGE. Then, as I understand it, the bond-investigation resolution is now before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is now before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. And we are passing our time in discussing a unanimous-consent agreement to see what we agreed to—the usual method?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has laid the unfinished business before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The actual business before the Senate is the bond resolution. Until that is disposed of there is nothing else, is there?

Mr. HILL. The discussion arose because the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] desired to know the precise status of the resolution. He asked for information, and it has been read; the Senator from Kansas read it; and we have been discussing that question because the Senator from Maine said he felt reluctant to move to set it aside if there had been any unanimous agreement which precluded any such motion. That is all there is of it. I ask the Senator from Kansas if, in answer to one of the questions put to him by the Senator from Iowa as to whether he would yield for appropriation bills, he did not say, "Yes, that is rutable," and upon that we went on?

Mr. PEPPER. I ask that the question as to agreeing to the resolution may be put to the Senate. The resolution, I understand, is now before the Senate, and I ask that it may be put to a vote.

Mr. HILL. To have a final vote upon it, does the Senator mean?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. Not quite yet.

Mr. MILLS. What is the decision upon the question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No question has arisen for the determination of the Chair.

Mr. FRYE. I have been reading what has occurred and have listened to the statement. The unanimous agreement was nothing more nor less than this, that the bond question should be regarded as the unfinished business, and the statement generally made when the appropriation bills have been up was that it should be the unfinished business as against everything but appropriation bills. The river and harbor bill is an appropriation bill. A unanimous consent that any measure may be made unfinished business is not unanimous consent that the question of consideration shall not be raised against it; that is entirely clear, else we might stay here in the Senate without doing anything for months under a general discussion of such a measure. I wanted to know whether the unanimous consent precluded me from making a motion to consider the river and harbor bill. In my judgment it does not. Of course it is immaterial to me very largely whether the river and harbor bill is proceeded with or not. If the Senate think it is better not to have any river and harbor bill, I am content; if they think it is better to postpone it for a week, I am content; but in order to settle this question and not waste any more time about it, and not caring at all myself, although in charge of the bill, what the vote of the Senate may be, I ask a vote of the Senate upon a motion to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent, although I know it is not debatable, just to make one statement in regard to this matter. I am very anxious to have the river and harbor bill considered; but believing, while I am opposed to the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, that the general understanding, at least my understanding, was that he should have a day in court for his resolution after the conclusion of the then pending appropriation bill, I can not now vote to take up the river and harbor bill.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK (when his name was called). I desire to announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. I do not see him in the Chamber and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PUGH. I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but I feel satisfied that upon this motion we are agreed, and I vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Burrows,	Hansbrough,	Morrill,	Sewell,
Caffery,	Hill,	Nelson,	Shoup,
Cullom,	Lindsay,	Palmer,	Squire,
Davis,	McBride,	Pasco,	Thurston,
Elkins,	McMillan,	Platt,	Vilas,
Faulkner,	Mills,	Proctor,	Wetmore,
Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Quay,	Wilson.

NAYS—39.

Allen,	Carter,	Kyle,	Stewart,
Bacon,	Chilton,	Lodge,	Teller,
Bate,	Cockrell,	Mitchell, Wis.	Tillman,
Berry,	Daniel,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Dubois,	Peffer,	Vest,
Brice,	George,	Perkins,	Walthall,
Brown,	Gorman,	Pettigrew,	Warren,
Butler,	Harris,	Pugh,	White,
Call,	Irby,	Roach,	Wolcott.
Cannon,	Jones, Ark.	Sherman,

NOT VOTING—23.

Aldrich,	Clark,	Hale,	Murphy,
Allison,	Frye,	Hawley,	Pritchard,
Baker,	Gear,	Hoar,	Smith,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	Jones, Nev.	Voorhees.
Cannon,	Gordon,	Mantle,
Chandler,	Gray,	Martin,

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I did not vote because I stated the exact fact when I said that it was indifferent to me what was done, and I prefer to be instructed by the Senate as to my duty. I now understand myself to be instructed to make no more attempts to take up the river and harbor bill for consideration until the bond resolution is disposed of.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I suggest that the country would breathe very much more freely if the Senator from Maine would fail to present his bill, with these millions and millions of dollars for rivers and harbors, until the country understands something as to how many bonds are to be issued from time to time, and how frequently, imposing additional burdens upon the people of the United States.

Mr. HILL. And all the information the Senator from Colorado will get from the investigation will not relieve his mind at all.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President—

Mr. HILL. Wait a moment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from New York permit me to interrupt him?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HILL. Not now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York declines to yield.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the Senate has seen fit in its wisdom to virtually displace a bill containing appropriations for rivers and harbors in the United States in order to take up a senseless, uncalled-for, and mischievous resolution. The idea or argument that a Senator is to get any information from the resolution of investigation as to how much money he ought to vote for in the river and harbor bill will scarcely stand scrutiny. It is a new claim only just now put forth that Senators want light on the subject of the circumstances under which bonds have been issued by the present Administration in order to vote for appropriations for rivers and harbors. I think the river and harbor bill, when it comes to be read in the Senate, will indicate that Senators have been very vigorous and diligent in their efforts to obtain appropriations for their respective localities, without much regard to the information which they are going to receive from the proposed investigation.

Does the Senator from Colorado expect to withhold this river and harbor appropriation bill until, perchance, the committee of investigation has reported? Is he so much in need of enlightenment that he requires this investigation report to be prepared and presented before he is ready to vote? I think, if I may venture a little prophecy, he will be ready to cast his vote upon one side or the other of these appropriations without waiting for the report of the investigation committee.

It answers, of course, for the time being—for the exigencies of the occasion—to say that Senators need time in order to prepare themselves to vote properly on the appropriations. That argument, however, will not impress the country very much. The appropriation bill is unquestionably to be taken up at the conclusion of the arguments on this subject. Senators who ask for the investigation will vote upon one side or the other of the question. The hearing before the committee, if it is to be substantially ex parte or summarily had, will carry no weight. The hearing, if it is to be completed hastily, will be without influence and without effect. Those who seem to expect that a result upon the hearing is to be completed this session will be disappointed. It will require much time, and must inevitably be postponed to a later date to reach a conclusion.

No, Mr. President, this proposed investigation is part of an effort made for political effect. It is a scheme upon the part of some persons proposing it to throw mud upon their political adversaries. It is the part of a scheme by others, who expect it is going to aid in some way in the solution of the silver question. Never will men be more completely fooled. The investigation will throw no light upon the silver question proper. It will add no argument to one side or the other. This investigation, so far as throwing light upon the great financial subject, will be useless. It will amount to nothing.

The last suggestion made is that the investigation is wanted for the honest, bona fide purpose of ascertaining where we are going to get the money to meet our extraordinary appropriations. Can not Senators read for themselves? Have they not read the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury? Do they not get a report as to the condition of the Treasury every single day? Does not each Senator here know every morning the precise condition of the Treasury? Does he not read the monthly reports? Has he not read the President's message giving all the circumstances under which the bonds were issued? Have not Senators read the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury? Are they ignorant of the financial situation of the Treasury? Do they really want information to aid them as to how much money they ought to vote for in the river and harbor bill, and for other appropriations?

That claim is simply ridiculous, utterly unworthy of distinguished Senators, whom I am compelled to believe know better. There may be, perchance, good reasons for the adoption of the resolution; but the last reason stated—the lack of information—is not one of them. There may be some other reasons existing which have not been developed in the argument. I have not heard them. But the last reason stated is as thin and transparent as the cause it represents.

Having had no debate upon this question for some time, undoubtedly the Senate was very anxious to proceed to take up something more interesting than an appropriation bill. I will resume the discussion where it was left off a week ago last Friday, when the Senate had vindicated its honor by taking up and discussing the resolution under an alleged unanimous-consent agreement. I commence now where it was left by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who, I regret to say, is not present. I stated at the time that I intended to comment upon the remarks which he made on the afternoon of the last day of the debate.

I understood the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, while not committing himself to the details of the particular resolution, to express the general purpose of supporting some resolution providing for an investigation. I am going to analyze just what he said, because, with all due deference to the Senator, there was more misinformation supplied, more untenable arguments presented in that fifteen minutes' speech than I have heard in the Senate in many a day. First, he said substantially that the resolution ought to be passed as a matter of courtesy to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] because—I quote him now—"It is the ordinary case of a proposal by a Senator;" and he said it never had been denied. He said it is an inquiry which "never was refused in any previous Congress to any Senator who had asked it, and I do not think it ought to be refused to the Senator from Kansas."

In other words, he desires to place the opponents of the resolution among those who are unreasonably refusing a courtesy to the Senator from Kansas. If I should offer a resolution to-morrow to investigate any Department of the Government it would be discourteous to me to refuse the investigation. That is the claim presented. I suppose he would be willing to carry out his argument to its legitimate conclusion, namely, that the investigation when proposed should be had either by a special committee or by a standing committee, as I might prefer.

The ground of courtesy to a Senator is a new ground upon which to ask for an investigation. Whenever a Senator offers a resolution for an investigation it must be granted to him no matter what the expense, no matter how mischievous, no matter how troublesome, no matter how unnecessary. It must be granted to him because he asks it. Are there good reasons for it? No matter whether there are or not. Are there any good grounds for it? No matter whether there are or not, he must have it. That is a new-born theory upon which it is sought to here to pass the present resolutions. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in his new-born zeal for Senatorial courtesy confuses a request for information from the Departments with resolutions for investigations of Departments. There is a clear and well-defined distinction. No question of courtesy is involved. It is merely a question of propriety, the creation of a good or a bad precedent.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has not always had the high regard for Senatorial courtesy which he now manifests. On August 23, 1893, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER], always alive, as his friends say, to the public interests, introduced a resolution calling for information from the Secretary of the Treasury in reference to what some banks in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia were doing in violation of law. I want to read the resolution to the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate—
First. Whether, and in what respect, the national banks, or any of them, in the cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia are being now conducted in violation of law.

Second. Whether said banks are paying depositors' checks promptly in lawful money.

Third. Whether said banks, or any of them, are demanding rates of interest higher than those provided by law for the loan of money or in discounting notes and bills.

The Senator from Massachusetts, who now says that the pending resolution should pass as a matter of courtesy, that such requests are never refused, on that day immediately upon the introduction, not of a resolution of investigation, but simply a resolution of inquiry from a Department, said:

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution go over. I object to its consideration at this time.

The next day, August 24, the resolution was called up and debated until 2 o'clock pending the motion to refer to the Finance Committee, the extremely courteous Senator from Massachusetts moving to refer it. That little resolution, simply asking the Secretary of the Treasury if he had any information in his possession as to whether banks in New York City, Boston, and Philadelphia were violating the law, could not be considered at once, could not be passed, but must be referred, whereas the pending resolution, which is introduced for the investigation of great transactions of the Government, involving its credit and honor, must not be referred for consideration, but must be summarily passed.

I want to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that the Senator from Massachusetts at that time said he thought the bank resolution untimely; that he thought it was unwise to hold our national banks to the strict letter of the law in a great crisis like the panic of 1893. In other words, he thought it was unwise to prod the banks, to make them strictly comply with the law during that critical period. It had not occurred to him then that the Senator from Kansas was entitled to have the resolution passed as a matter of courtesy. It had not occurred to him, when the national banks were involved, that a common and simple resolution of inquiry could be passed without injury to anybody. Then, as now, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] was aided by the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], at least so far as taking up the present resolution for consideration is concerned. Both seemed to think that it would be very injurious to have this information given to the public at that time. Both of them opposed the resolution. Both advocated the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GEORGE. What became of the resolution to which the Senator refers?

Mr. HILL. I am going to trace it. Without speaking of myself any more than is necessary, I desire to say that I antagonized the Massachusetts and Maryland combination at that time as I antagonize it now. Both of the Senators opposed the resolution. I took the position then, sir, that the national-bank resolution was an ordinary, simple resolution calling for information, and that the Senate ought to pass it. On August 31 the resolution was taken up and not passed, as it should have been, but referred to the Committee on Finance. I refer to page 1102 of the RECORD, where it will be seen that the vote on the motion to refer was 35 yeas to 21 nays. It was not discourteous to the Kansas Senator then to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance. It was regarded as the proper thing to do. I simply cite that resolution for the purpose of showing the inconsistency of the position of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] asks me what became of the resolution. No report was made. On September 8, 1893, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] introduced the same resolution more elaborated. On the next day, September 9, the same was taken up and considered until 2 o'clock. Nothing was done with it. It went to the Calendar. The Committee on Finance never reported the original resolution referred to it. It has remained in the Committee on Finance from that day to this.

At the next regular session, no report having been made by this committee in the meantime, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] reintroduced the same resolution on December 21, 1893, at the second session of the Fifty-third Congress, and asked that it be referred to the Finance Committee. No report has ever been made. That resolution or resolutions were resolutions simply of inquiry. They were proper in every respect. They were resolutions upon which the claim of courtesy might avail something; they were entirely different from the pending resolution, and yet they were opposed by the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Massachusetts and other Senators in this body. The Finance Committee never has made any report. How discourteous to the distinguished Senator from Kansas!

Therefore I dispose of the first point made by the Senator from Massachusetts, that the alleged ground upon which the resolution should be passed is that of courtesy. It does not exist; it has been denied before upon simple, ordinary resolutions asking information from a Department, and denied at the instance of the Senator from Massachusetts. I am not one of those who invoke courtesy when it is in my favor and refuse to recognize it when it is invoked by others against me.

The Senator from Massachusetts then proceeded in his argument to give a reason why the present investigation should be had. He says in the last bond sale the bonds should have been advertised for sale at a fixed price, and that they were not. Of all the preposterous claims set up by the advocates of the pending resolution this is one of the worst. Suppose the Secretary of the Treasury had advertised the bonds for sale and had said: "I will accept a fixed price for them." A clamor then would have been raised all over the country and it would have been said: "Why does he not put up the bonds to the highest bidder? Why fix an arbitrary sum at which to accept bids?" It would have been said: "He has sought improperly to limit the price at a particular figure." It would have been said he was acting in the interests of certain sets of bidders. It would have been said that the proper way was to expose the bonds to the highest bidder in the market; that that was the regular and legitimate way to do business.

The truth is that there has been a disposition manifested to criticize Mr. Carlisle in reference to this transaction, not because there was anything wrong with it, not because there is anything irregular about it, but simply because gentlemen, upon principle, are opposed to the sale of any bonds whatever. That is another question. You do not need any investigation to determine a question of principle. Concede, if you please, that the gold theory, so called—the maintenance of the gold standard—requires incidentally the issue of bonds. That is one question. The mere fact that Senators do not believe in the gold standard, and the mere fact that Senators think that bonds ought not to be issued because the Government should have pursued a silver policy, furnishes no occasion or demand for an investigation. What do you expect the committee to report? An elaborate argument in favor of the free coinage of silver? Is that what the report is to contain? The bonds have been issued. They can not be recalled or repudiated. Do you expect to have a written treatise on the questions of law involved? Is that what is asked for or what is really expected?

Before proceeding to discuss the third ground I wish to say that if a certain price had been fixed for the bonds it would have led to a clamor of which we would not have heard the last for many months. What better could the Secretary of the Treasury do than to put up the bonds to the highest bidder and ask for bids? That was the wisest course. It was the best course; it was the honest course. Men who claim to the contrary want to criticize because they dislike Mr. Carlisle and dislike the gold standard. That is all there is of it. They may conceal their motives under other pretenses, but that is all there is of the matter.

The next thing the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] says is that $500,000,000 of gold was unnecessarily locked up pending the offer of these bids. All during the thirty days, he says, $500,000,000 of gold was unnecessarily locked up. A man need not necessarily lock up his gold simply because he made a bid. Of course if a man wants to make a bid for bonds, and has not the gold, he must be able to borrow the gold or get it from some source. Suppose the terms of the sale had been that every man upon making his bid should deposit a certain sum of gold for the purpose of showing his good faith. Then it might have been claimed that it unnecessarily locked up a large amount of gold. It would have been said, "Why should a man, in making a bid for Government bonds, be compelled to place on deposit a certain portion of the gold as security for his bid?" I am one of those who think that possibly some security should have been required of men who bid, but if there was any error committed at all, it was an error in the interest of all bidders—in the interest of increased competition. The poorest bidder who had not a dollar of gold with which to buy a bond, the merest adventurer in any part of the country who wanted to take his chances in getting bonds, had a right to put in his bid. The bidding was open to all the world and to all upon an equality. Morgan & Co., with their millions, were obliged to compete with the humble clerk who had not a dollar actually to invest.

Possibly it would have been wiser to have compelled men to show their good faith by giving bond. Yet if the Secretary had done that you would have heard this Chamber ring with charges that such a course was in the interest of the rich, in the interest of the millionaires of Wall street, in the interest of men who had gold, and not in the interest of the people. Sir, when the Secretary issued that call, which I have here and which said that the Treasury Department would accept bids for a period of thirty days and that the bonds would be sold to the highest bidder, any citizen of this Republic or any other country had a right to bid, and I say he faithfully discharged his duty in the premises, and any criticism of his conduct is simply captious. You want to investigate his conduct. What is there to investigate about it? If he had pursued the contrary course, if he had required gold to be deposited in advance as security, if he had required bonds to be given of every man who wanted to bid, then it would have been claimed that the proposal was for the benefit of the rich and of syndicates and of Wall street and of the bad men who live in New York. No, no. Mr. President, the trouble with these critics is that they act upon the principle of "damned if you do and damned if you don't." Nothing suits them. It is one grand tirade all the time against the finances of the country. You can not satisfy them with anything that is done. You can not expect to deprive them of their grievances, as that would be the greatest calamity that could befall them.

The next is the third ground. Before I quote parts of that I wish to read the popular loan call, beginning with the words "Treasury Department," which I will ask the Secretary to read. It shows just what the terms were, showing that they were open and free to everybody from Colorado to Florida, from Florida to Maine, from Maine to California. Any citizen, whether he had a dollar or expected to have, had a right to bid for the bonds—to bid any price he pleased for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). At the request of the Senator from New York, the paper will be read by the Secretary in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 6, 1896.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received at the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, at Washington, D. C., until 12 o'clock m. on Wednesday, the 5th day of February, 1896, for the purchase of $100,000,000 of United States 4 per cent or registered coupon bonds, in denominations of $50 and multiples of that sum, as may be desired by bidders. The right to reject any or all bids is reserved.

The bonds will be dated on the 1st day of February, 1895, and be payable in coin thirty years after that date, and will bear interest at 4 per cent per annum, payable quarterly in coin, but all coupons maturing on and before the 1st day of February, 1896, will be detached, and purchasers will be required to pay in United States gold coin or gold certificates for the bonds awarded to them and all interest accrued thereon after the 1st day of February, 1896, up to the time of application for delivery.

Payments for the bonds must be made at the Treasury of the United States at Washington, D. C., or at the United States subtreasuries at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, or New Orleans, or they may be made at San Francisco, with exchange on New York, and all bids must state what denominations of bonds are desired, and whether coupon or registered, and at what place they will be paid for.

Payments may be made by installments, as follows: Twenty per cent upon receipt of notice of acceptance of bids, and 20 per cent at the end of each ten days thereafter; but all accepted bidders may pay the whole amount at the date of the first installment, and those who have paid all installments previously maturing may pay the whole amount of their bids at any time, not later than the maturity of the last installment.

The bonds will be ready for delivery on or before the 15th day of February, 1896.

Notice is further hereby given that if the issue and sale of an additional or different form of bond for the maintenance of the gold reserve shall be authorized by law before the 5th day of February, 1896, sealed proposals for the purchase of such bonds will also be received at the same time and place, and up to the same date and upon the same terms and conditions herein set forth, and such bids will be considered as well as the bids for the 4 per cent bonds herein mentioned.

J. G. CARLISLE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the statement just read shows the care with which the Secretary of the Treasury hedged around the proposals in order that the bonds might bring the largest sum possible. I have no patience, sir, with the self-constituted financiers and critics who attempt to pick out here and there a flaw in some proposals for the purchase of $100,000,000 of bonds. Of course they would have done it differently. Men who never made a loan of $5,000 in their lives are perfectly confident of their ability to dictate the precise terms in which a great Government proposal should be made. I have heard men say that the Secretary of the Treasury should do this and the Secretary of the Treasury should do that. These men would solve the great financial problem without any trouble, without any difficulty, without any experience.

Mr. President, the proposal which has been read here was fair; it was in accordance with the statute; it was in the interest of public bidders; it was in the interest of the great public; it was in the interest of every man, no matter how poor or humble, who imagined that he had some money that he wanted to invest in bonds.

The next question to which I want to call the attention of the Senate is that the Senator from Massachusetts says that the resolution ought to be passed, so that we may know what has been done with the proceeds of bond sales.

In the few remarks I made the other day in answer to the Senator from Massachusetts I stated then, and I repeat it, if you really want such information read the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, read the daily financial statements made. I am tempted to say that a Senator who does not know what has been done with the proceeds of the bonds is almost unworthy or incompetent to sit in the Senate. There are some men who are credulous enough to suppose the Secretary of the Treasury could take and dispose of a few million dollars and pocket them, and that nobody would discover it; that all this could be done under our Treasury system and no one would be the wiser. The reports of the Secretary of the Treasury show what has become of the avails of the bond sales.

Then, next, the same Senator doubts as to whether the Secretary has the right to use the proceeds for the current expenses. I am not going to thrash that old question over again. I have said before, and I repeat, the act of 1875, taken in connection with the act of 1878, requires the moneys in the Treasury to be paid out: it requires the greenbacks to be reissued; it requires them to be kept in circulation, and they can not be kept in circulation except by paying them out for the legitimate expenses of the Government. The Secretary of the Treasury can not keep greenbacks in circulation by hoarding them in the Treasury, nor can he legally place them in bushel baskets and give to every man what he wants. The theory of the act of 1878 is that the greenbacks are to be kept in circulation by using them for money in payment of legitimate expenses.

Mr. VILAS. Will the Senator from New York allow me to call his attention to a point that I do not think has been considered sufficiently in this part of the debate?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. VILAS. Whenever Congress makes an appropriation it enacts a law, and whenever Congress enacts a law directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay money out of the Treasury that law, as a later one, overrules the prior laws in respect to the manner in which the money is obtained. It is then a new and subsequent and, so far as is necessary, a repealing direction to him to pay out the money which may then be in the Treasury; and thereafter, whatever argument might be made upon those original laws, if limited to them alone in respect to the use of the money, is entirely changed when Congress enacts new laws directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out money for particular ends, which money he has in the Treasury.

Mr. MILLS. Not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. VILAS. Not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HILL. The position stated by the Senator from Wisconsin is the correct one. All he stated is undoubtedly true. But now, for the information of those who may read my remarks in the RECORD, and for the benefit of the country at large, I want to incorporate in my remarks a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury of date January 11, 1896, in response to a resolution of the Senate, showing the exact legal status of what is known as the gold reserve, which I will ask the Secretary to read. It is a document of the Senate, but Senators rise in their places and in debates make statements as though they had never heard of the very facts which have been put before them in official records time and time again. None are so blind as those who will not see; none so deaf as those who will not hear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1896.

STR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Senate resolution, dated the 3d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate if the sum of $100,000,000, or any part thereof, has at any time since the establishment of the so-called gold reserve been actually segregated or set apart from the other currency or money in the Treasury Department, in gold coin, or gold coin and gold certificates, or either, for the redemption of the legal-tender notes and different forms of paper money of the Government; and when and by what act of Congress, giving the title of the act and the date of its approval, said so-called gold reserve was established, and if not established by act of Congress, state by what authority, if any, it was established.

In reply thereto, the Senate is respectfully informed that at no time since the establishment of the so-called gold reserve has the sum of $100,000,000, or any other sum, been segregated or set apart from the general cash in the Treasury for the redemption of the legal-tender notes of the United States, or for the redemption of any other form of paper money for which the United States is liable. There is no provision of law requiring a separate fund or separate account to be kept, and all moneys received into the Treasury, from whatever source, are deposited in the general cash. The fund for the redemption of United States notes was accumulated under authority of the act of January 14, 1875, which directed the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare and provide for such redemption on the 1st day of January, 1879. No specific sum was prescribed, but the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to use the surplus revenues from time to time and to sell certain descriptions of bonds to an extent necessary to carry the act into full effect.

In the exercise of the discretion thus conferred upon him, the Secretary sold for redemption purposes, in 1877 and 1878, United States 4 per cent and 4 1/2 per cent bonds to the amount of $3,500,000, and deposited the proceeds, $36,000,000 in gold, in the general cash in the Treasury. This, with other gold, which had been received as surplus revenues, constituted the fund prepared and provided by the Secretary of the Treasury for the redemption directed in the act of January 14, 1875.

The existence of the reserve fund was generally recognized from the time of its establishment, as above stated, and one of the measures adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent its unnecessary depletion was the discontinuance of the issue of the gold certificates authorized by the act of March 3, 1883. This act authorized, but did not direct, such issue.

Some inconvenience resulted from this discontinuance, and by section 12 of the bank act of July 12, 1882, the Secretary was authorized and directed to receive deposits of gold coin and bullion and to issue certificates therefor; but it was provided "that the Secretary of the Treasury shall suspend the issue of such gold certificates whenever the amount of gold coin and gold bullion in the Treasury reserved for the redemption of United States notes falls below $100,000,000."

No other reference to the reserve fund is contained in the laws of the United States.

Very respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, that communication of the Secretary of the Treasury correctly states the condition of what is known as the gold reserve fund; it correctly states the law applicable to it, and the circumstances surrounding it. I need not reiterate the statement that no one has claimed any authority on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds for the purpose of realizing moneys to pay current expenses. Under the act of 1875 the Secretary of the Treasury has a right to issue bonds for the purpose of obtaining gold. The gold is placed in the Treasury. When greenbacks are presented, they are presented for redemption. The gold is paid out in redemption, and the greenbacks are thereby placed in the Treasury, and when Congress makes an appropriation of moneys the Secretary pays out whatever moneys there are in the Treasury and meets the appropriation. There is no other course left to him. No Senator has marked out any other practicable course.

The next ground stated by the Senator from Massachusetts is: Sixth, "We want to see what legislation may be necessary." Yet the resolution does not say anything about inquiring about legislation. There is no suggestion in the resolution to the end that a report by bill or otherwise shall be made. No one has suggested any legislation here. None is contemplated. It is an afterthought. According to the views of some Senators it is proposed to have this investigation over within ten days. No, Mr. President, no Senator can justify his conscience in voting for this resolution upon any theory that he wants information for the purpose of leading to additional legislation.

Seventh, he doubts "whether there has been any necessity for the issuing of bonds to support the gold reserve." He says that in his remarks to be found on page 4470 of the RECORD. He says sufficient revenue would have prevented any necessity for the issuing of gold bonds, but the difficulty with the situation is that there was not adequate revenue; there was not revenue sufficient to prevent distrust and the presentation of greenbacks and their redemption in gold.

Those who criticize the Secretary of the Treasury for issuing bonds have nothing to suggest as a practical remedy. Some venture to say that the Secretary should have redeemed in silver, and that involves the whole great question of the propriety of maintaining the parity of gold and silver. I am not going to waste words with those who criticize the Secretary of the Treasury because they think he ought to have paid out silver instead of gold.

Mr. President, the greenback dollar for ordinary purposes is kept as good as the gold dollar. I think that is so mainly because by the system of our present Administration its officials readily exchange the greenbacks for the gold dollar. They have kept by this system a parity between the currency. I do not know but such parity might have obtained if another course had been pursued. That is only a matter of speculation. I know of no other practical way to maintain the parity of currency except to be always ready to redeem your paper money issued with your standard money, or else your standard is repudiated.

In these remarks I am not to be led into a discussion of the whole course pursued by the Secretary of the Treasury during the present Administration. I can simply point to the fact that under previous Administrations, without regard to party, the parity of the currency has been maintained by always paying gold upon the presentation of paper. It may well be contended that the way to keep your currency with a standard is always to be ready to pay in standard money. If you are always ready to pay, people may not always want the standard; but the proper way to maintain the parity, in my judgment, seems always to be ready to pay in the standard money.

Mr. GRAY. What other way is there?

Mr. HILL. I do not know of any other way; perhaps some sort of legerdemain; perhaps pay in some inferior currency.

Mr. President. Senators forget what took place before 1879, before the resumption act went into effect. What made the difference in value in the markets between the old greenback currency and the gold dollar prior to 1879? The gold dollar was worth a large percentage more than the greenback dollar, or the greenback dollar was worth so much less, whichever way you put it. The way to make resumption a success was by the payment of your standard money in the place of your paper money.

Mr. MORGAN. Would the Senator from New York object if I should ask him what is the standard money of the contract as shown in our bonds and in all our public obligations? Is it the standard money of the law of the United States, or is it the standard money of the contract?

Mr. HILL. Standard money is fixed by law. You can make a contract, however, to pay in any other kind of money you please.

Mr. MORGAN. I am speaking of the contract as we made it, to pay in coin of the United States as it was of value on a certain date. Is that the standard money in which the payment is to be made, or is it some other standard?

Mr. HILL. That presents a mixed question of law and policy. The payment of bonds according to the strict letter of the contract is one thing, while the redemption of our paper currency is another. I hope to discuss that question more fully before I finish my remarks. I propose to show just what was the currency when our bonds were signed and what it was understood that those bonds would be paid in. The payment of bonds is one thing and the redemption of currency is another. I want now to discuss further the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts, and do not wish to be diverted from that point.

Mr. President, I do not have to convince the Senator from Massachusetts that under the act of 1875 the Secretary of the Treasury has authority to issue bonds. The Senator says the Secretary of the Treasury unquestionably had the power to issue bonds under the act of 1875, and then he goes further and claims that he had the same right to issue bonds under the law of 1890 to secure gold to redeem the Treasury notes issued thereunder; and he says—now I quote what the Senator from Massachusetts said:

I voted for the statute of 1890 on that ground, and on that ground alone, and should not have voted for what was known as the Sherman Act except that it gave that great and additional security, as I understood it, to the credit of the Government.

I have heard a great many reasons given why Republican Senators voted for the Sherman law of 1890. Some of them voted for it to prevent the passage of a worse statute; some of them voted for it for the purpose of preventing the free coinage of silver; some have given one reason and some have given another; but it remained for the Senator from Massachusetts to say that he voted for it because under the statute of 1890 the Secretary of the Treasury had the right to issue bonds for the purpose of procuring gold with which to maintain the parity of our money. There is considerable doubt about that, in my judgment. There is no express authority for it under that act; and if the Secretary of the Treasury has the right to issue bonds under the act of 1890 it must be done under the general authority to maintain the parity of the currency, and upon no other provision.

Mr. President, I am not intending at this moment to especially antagonize that position, but I am simply going to cite the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts for the purpose of showing how he was driven into this position in order to support the present resolution. There is considerable doubt, and I concede it, whether, under the statute of 1890, the Secretary of the Treasury has the right to issue bonds for the purpose of the redemption of the notes authorized under that statute. There is no express authority, and, if it can be done at all, it must be done under general authority, and yet the Senator from Massachusetts says it was because of that great additional authority under that act that he voted for the Sherman law of 1890. So much for that.

The Secretary of the Treasury has not issued any bonds under the act of 1890, and has not claimed to have the power to do so under that act, and he does not assert, as I understand, a general authority to issue bonds for the purpose only of maintaining the parity of the currency. I am not prepared to argue that he can go to that length. The Senator from Massachusetts says, however, that he can, and claims that that was the very ground upon which he voted for that act. It is an abstract question, it is true, and I note it simply for the purpose of showing that in his advocacy of this resolution he goes further than any man who has defended the bond issues has yet gone. When the Secretary of the Treasury has proceeded to issue bonds under the act of 1890 for the purpose of maintaining the parity of the currency, and that alone, then, sir, it will be time enough to discuss that question; it is now, however, premature and unnecessary.

Finally, the Senator from Massachusetts is going to vote for some such resolution as that of the Senator from Kansas because of the assurance of the Senator from Kansas that he intends no reflection upon the Secretary of the Treasury. When the distinguished Senator from Kansas first addressed the Senate he said he presented grave allegations of wrong, and his resolution insinuated that some of the officials of the Government had been doing something unlawful. If that were so, it presented some ground for action; but the other day during the discussion the Senator from Kansas assured the Senator from Massachusetts that he cast no reflection upon the Secretary of the Treasury and no reflection upon the President of the United States, and he struck out of the resolution those insinuations which really constituted the principal ground upon which the resolution for investigation was based. So now, Mr. President, having stricken out those offensive provisions, the investigation is to be had without any ground whatever for it, with no allegation of misconduct, and we are going to have an investigation simply for the purpose of an investigation, and that is all.

I commented the other day upon how ingeniously the Senator had worded the resolution so as to inquire as to whether any officer of the Government had received any commissions upon the bond sales, had received any moneys, or had any interest in the bond sales, and all that sort of thing. If any Senator here will rise in his place and give us some tangible charge, supported by some evidence against the Secretary of the Treasury, I shall then vote for the investigation. While I have a reasonable share of confidence in my brother Senators, I am not willing to establish the pernicious precedent, especially when a resolution comes from an antagonist of an existing Administration, of voting for whatever investigation may be suggested by any Senator. It is a precedent which will surely return to plague us.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAY. I have just listened to the assertion of the Senator that everything had been removed from the resolution of the Senator from Kansas that contained an aspersion upon the character of the officers of the Administration concerned in this matter of the bond sale.

Mr. HILL. How does it stand now?

Mr. GRAY. What does this language mean, beginning on line 21 of the second page of the resolution:

Whether any officer of the Government, or any person or persons for such officer, and on his behalf, and in his personal interest, and with his knowledge or consent, entered into any contract, agreement, or arrangement, directly or indirectly, with any person or persons, partnership, corporation, company, or syndicate, for the purpose of affecting the price offered or to be offered for said bonds, or any of them, with the intent and expectation to receive commission or personal reward by reason of such contract, agreement or arrangement; whether such contract or agreement had any and what effect on the prices offered for the bonds, what the effect was, and who, if any person, profited by it, and to what extent.

That seems to me a very grave aspersion, by indirection, on somebody; and, if it be so, clearly there is an impropriety in the Senate instituting an investigation which may lead to an impeachment, and ought to lead to an impeachment if the charges are sustained.

Mr. HILL. I will come to that in time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Delaware that that language is not in the pending resolution.

Mr. GRAY. I asked for information. I asked the Senator whether that was so or not.

Mr. HILL. Will the Secretary please read the words which have been stricken out, so that we may understand precisely what we are discussing? I think the Senator from Kansas has stricken out the only ground upon which it was possible to predicate an investigation. If he does not charge anything to reflect upon anybody, what do we want an investigation for?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. The following language has been stricken from the resolution:

And the profits made or to be made by such syndicate or any person or persons connected with such syndicate, directly or indirectly, whether any officer of the Government, or any person or persons for such officer, and on his behalf, and in his personal interest, and with his knowledge or consent, entered into any contract, agreement, or arrangement, directly or indirectly, with any person or persons, partnership, corporation, company, or syndicate, for the purpose of affecting the price offered or to be offered for said bonds, or any of them, with the intent and expectation to receive commission or personal reward by reason of such contract, agreement, or arrangement.

Mr. HILL. In other words, Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has stricken out of his resolution all the direct and indirect allegations of misconduct, and has eliminated from it the very insinuations which made it possible to desire or require an investigation, at least an intelligent investigation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I have read the resolution, and I did not know that that latter part had been stricken out.

Mr. HILL. I knew some change had been made in the resolution, and was not exactly certain of the precise words which had been stricken out.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have now the recent copy. To what clause in the resolution as it stands does the Senator from New York object?

Mr. HILL. The offensive part of the resolution has been eliminated during this debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then what is the objection to asking for this information?

Mr. HILL. The Senator was not here before when I proceeded in detail to discuss these offensive insinuations, as I claim they were, against officers of the Government. They have now been stricken out. I beg to inform the Senator from Ohio that this proceeding is not a mere "asking for information," but a proposition for a formal investigation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see, then, what objection the Senator can make to the resolution. I do not want to pass a resolution that is offensive to the Secretary of the Treasury or that charges him with any wrongdoing, because I do not believe he has committed any, except, perhaps, in the manner of doing business. But I do not see any objection that anybody can have to an examination of the kind stated now, with the offensive provisions eliminated.

Mr. HILL. Then, Mr. President, I will simply congratulate the Senate and the country that this debate has led to the elimination of the objectionable features contained in the resolution. It looked at one time as though the Senate was anxious to throw mud; it looked at one time as though the Senate did not seem to care what this resolution contained, provided it was only an attack upon the Secretary of the Treasury. Therefore I say it is the debate, and nothing else, which has caused these words to be stricken out; no one has attempted to defend them. The Senator from Kansas himself made a few remarks at the outset, and other Senators also, when they discussed the resolution as it originally stood indulged in all sorts of loose and general charges; and the Senator from Kansas has eliminated those offensive provisions during this discussion.

I have no objection, so far as I am personally concerned, to having my personal conduct in this Senate investigated, and the Senator from Ohio would have no personal objection if some Senator should rise and ask to have his conduct investigated. I have no particular objection to my private letters and papers being examined by anybody, so far as having any fear of any reflection being cast upon me; but, sir, I am not going to permit my private letters and papers to be examined at the instance of every man who comes along who wants to know about them. What is true about one's private affairs is also true about public affairs. Investigation should not be instituted for the mere asking.

I do not concede that it is the duty of this Senate to make this investigation; and before I get through I am going to show that the Senate should treat John G. Carlisle as a Democratic Congress treated JOHN SHERMAN of Ohio. When information was wanted about bond sales they courteously invited him to appear before them. He accepted their invitation and went before them; he explained the matter properly and fully. I am coming to all that before I get through.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say that a resolution did impugn the conduct of the then Secretary of the Treasury, myself, at that time. I deemed it my duty not only to meet the charge or imputation made in the resolution, but demanded that the proper committee should investigate it, and I went before that committee. The Senator probably is not aware that the Secretary of the Treasury, by a law which has existed from the time of Alexander Hamilton, can be summoned before either House of Congress and may be brought here into our presence and examined orally, and he is required to appear in case he is so summoned, as he has been over and over again summoned before committees of Congress.

Mr. HILL. I am aware of that custom; I am aware of that power, substantially as stated by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. That law is still standing.

Mr. HILL. And I am going to argue before I get through that that is the course the Finance Committee of this Senate should have pursued. It is proposed here to usurp that function which properly belongs to the Committee on Finance, who have charge of the finances of the Government, and also to ignore the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, who have charge of such questions there, and where a proper investigation could be made more appropriately than here under our Constitution; and it is proposed to dignify this investigation with a special committee appointed by the Senate.

We have witnessed the principle of evolution since this debate began. What was the first resolution introduced? The Senator from Ohio has not forgotten it. It provided for a special committee of five members appointed, two from each of the great parties, and a Populist member was to be recognized as one—that was all—a committee to be divided, two and two, and one Populist, the opposition to the Democratic party having the majority. That was the theory of this resolution. That has now been eliminated, leaving the investigation to be made by a committee of Senators to be appointed by the Vice-President.

I do not know whether the Senate proposes to pass the resolution in this form or not. I heard the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], when the resolution was first discussed, say, substantially, "I shall oppose every investigation here which seeks to have this matter investigated by a special committee." Then the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance, and that motion is now pending.

Now, Mr. President, I again assert—and I might as well speak of this question right here as at any other time—that if the Finance Committee of this body wants any information in regard to the affairs of the Treasury, let them send a respectful summons to the Secretary of the Treasury, and he will appear before them. If the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives desire any information on the subject, let that committee send a courteous note to the Secretary of the Treasury and ask him to appear.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I do not disturb the Senator, I will read the very significant language of the act of Congress, approved September 2, 1789, on this subject.

Mr. HILL. I will ask the Senator to read it, so that it may go into the RECORD.

Mr. SHERMAN. That act provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is—to make report and give information to either branch of the legislature, in person or in writing (as he may be required), respecting all matters referred to him by the Senate or House of Representatives, or which shall appertain to his office; and generally to perform all such services relative to the finances as he shall be directed to perform.

It was one of the peculiar features of the organization of the Treasury Department that it was to be subject to the two Houses of Congress, and that the Secretary of the Treasury might be summoned before the committees and summoned before either the Senate or the House of Representatives and be examined orally or in writing, and be required to give information pertaining to the affairs of his Department. I believe the Treasury Department is the only Department of the Government that is thus placed under the surveillance of both Houses of Congress.

Mr. HILL. Absolutely, and that is the very reason I intended to argue before I completed my remarks why this proceeding was an unusual and an extraordinary one, because ample power exists in the very method pointed out in the statute, namely, by asking for the information desired from this Department of the Government, an entirely different thing from formally authorizing a special committee to prosecute an investigation into the conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury, where he is to be examined on oath with Tom, Dick, and Harry on the questions involved.

Mr. GRAY. That is what I was going to remark, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. The law read by the Senator from Ohio does contemplate the closest and most intimate relations between the Secretary of the Treasury and the committees of both Houses of Congress, and that he may be called upon at all times for information in regard to the financial condition of the country; but the existence of that very law emphasizes the impropriety, the gross impropriety, of such a resolution as this. That law assumes in advance that a Secretary of the Treasury would be of such character as would make a communication from him to a committee, where a respectful request has been communicated, always sufficient to inform either House of Congress as to the exact point inquired about. This resolution passes by that law while it stands upon the statute book and assumes, and has to assume, that such an inquiry and such a request would be disregarded or would not bring a frank and honest answer, and therefore it is proposed to do what? To investigate; not to ask a question. "Investigate" is a term which carries with it a reproach in such a resolution as this.

Mr. HILL. They propose to investigate—

Mr. GORDON. Will the Senator allow me to make an additional suggestion?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. GORDON. This law contemplates not only that the Secretary of the Treasury may be called upon to make written communications, but he may be called in person. Surely it is ample enough in all of its provisions and in all of its bearings to meet every possible case that can arise.

Mr. HILL. I agree with the distinguished Senators who have just submitted remarks. But that was not the programme laid out for us here. We can not forget or overlook the features of this investigation as first proposed. It was a partisan scheme. There was to be just an equilibrium with each party, and the Populists were to have the additional odd man. The Democrats were to be in the minority.

As I was proceeding to remark, I have ordinarily no objection to a man's private or official business affairs being disclosed; but, sir, I would resent any attempt to compel a disclosure offensively. In the Senate, I know, Mr. President, there are Senators who argue to the contrary; I know there are Senators who say that everything should be investigated which anyone regards as suspicious; that it is cowardly not to do so. I repeat, on the other hand, it is moral cowardice when the Senate dares not stand up and say that there is no necessity for these senseless and unmeritorious inquiries.

If, I repeat, any Senator will rise in his place and make some definite, tangible charge about anything upon which the Senate needs information, then let us have the investigation; but having originally opposed this resolution in its first form, I do not propose, if I can help it, to have the authors of this resolution at the conclusion of this investigation say: "Well, we did not charge anything; we did not expect it to amount to anything; we did not say that the President had done wrong; we did not say that the Secretary of the Treasury had done wrong; we simply wanted an investigation, and that was all there was of it." I do not believe in that way of conducting official business. I believe that this Senate should not dignify the idle, loose talk that we hear in the Senate and on the streets and read in the newspapers by passing resolutions for investigations of such unfounded matters.

Secretary Carlisle believes in the gold standard. So do the majority on the other side of the Chamber. I need not say that the majority of the people are of the same view, but the Representatives, fresh from the people, in the other House of Congress, recently expressed their sentiments upon this subject and refused to vote for the free and unlimited coinage of silver under existing conditions. But because there are others who differ from Mr. Carlisle, and honestly differ, I concede, is it necessary to join in a crusade against him? Is he to be picked out as a subject of investigation in this offensive manner? We can imagine how this proposed investigation, if ordered, will be heralded in the headlines of the newspapers. I am not here to especially antagonize the newspapers; I am not here especially to condemn or criticize them, but they naturally like sensations.

What will the average reader understand when you pass this resolution? He will believe that the Senate thought there was something wrong in the issuance of those bonds, some fraud, some irregularity, some wrongdoing, something that has been sought to be covered up, something by which millions of dollars have been squandered, millions of dollars have been stolen, millions of dollars have disappeared, and that somebody has improperly made a great fortune out of the transaction.

Mr. President, it is against the imputations which such a proceeding inevitably implies that I protest. The proposed action is unworthy of the Senate.

As I said before, and I need not repeat it, I do not take this position because of any special relations I have with Secretary Carlisle. I have none. Those who know me in this Senate know I would take the same position if a Republican Secretary of the Treasury were involved. I favored the ordinary resolution of inquiry in regard to the national banks which the Senator from Kansas offered in 1893. The Senator from Massachusetts and other Senators opposed it. That was an ordinary, simple, courteous resolution which it was proper to pass, but which never has been passed, a resolution simply asking for information. I have always favored such resolutions and always will. That is one thing; but I do not believe in dignifying by an investigation a proceeding of this kind.

What is the idea associated in the public mind with an investigation? The idea is that there is something wrong, something suspicious, something irregular, something unlawful.

Mr. President, has it not been the custom of the Senate to refuse to authorize special committees? I so affirm. I have no doubt the President of the Senate would appoint a fair committee. I have no question about it. But that is not the point. You have the Finance Committee, which has charge of and is familiar with financial subjects. The statute already read by the Senator from Ohio shows that the Finance Committee has ample power to summon the Secretary of the Treasury before it in the usual and ordinary way provided by the statute. If you want any information the Secretary of the Treasury will cheerfully furnish it.

Speaking in reference to Mr. Carlisle, I simply say it ought not to be necessary to urge our Democratic party friends to treat a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury as we would treat a Republican Secretary of the Treasury. Disagree with him as we may about the financial question, that is another thing. But it is unwise, it is foolish, from a party standpoint, to pass the resolution.

It is seriously proposed to examine all the bond sales. The first two bond sales are to be investigated. What is the objection to the first two bond sales? They were substantially popular loans; the people were authorized to bid. Subscriptions were asked. The people bid. Syndicates were formed, as they had a right to be formed. A portion of the bonds went to what are called the people proper and a portion to the syndicate, so called. They were both virtually popular loans. There was no difficulty about them. Nobody makes any complaints against them. Yet they are to be investigated.

I do not see why, simply because some fault has been found with what is called the syndicate bond sale, there should be any attempt to investigate the two preceding bond sales. Why is this Administration singled out for investigation of all its bond sales? Why is not the proposal of Mr. Secretary Foster to sell bonds to be investigated? Why are not previous bond sales in the history of the Government to be investigated? If there is any yearning desire to know all about the transactions of the Treasury, let us go back to the bonds issued at the close of the war. Let previous Administrations be investigated. Let not the Senate proceed simply to investigate the present Administration as though bonds had never been issued before, as though the issue of bonds is a new thing, unprecedented in the history of the Government.

Therefore I say if you are going to investigate the two first bond sales of $50,000,000 each you will have to do it just because you want to do it, and not because anyone makes an allegation of irregularity. Nobody questioned them at the time. Some thought they were unnecessary. Some thought the Administration ought to have proceeded in a different way. They thought it was an effort for the maintenance of the gold standard, and that it was an impolitic thing to do. That is all right. No investigation is needed in regard to matters of that kind.

Next, we take the syndicate loan. There was nothing done secretly. The gold reserve was rapidly diminishing, and a crisis was at hand. Time was important. Concede, if you please, that the terms were harsh. What were the facts—the true intention? The President had sent in a special message informing Congress of the emergency, and Congress did nothing. That message is familiar to the people. The President concealed nothing from the country. He told the people that in his judgment the gold reserve should be replenished. He told them that the only way to do it effectually was by the issue of bonds. He told Congress that if it did not want bonds issued it should pass some legislation. But Congress did nothing. What was the President to do? In the absence of special legislation by Congress, in the absence of any direction upon the part of the lawmaking power, the President must proceed to execute existing law. I wish before I get through to read the special message, but I shall not stop now to do it.

The President not only sent a special message to Congress, calling its attention to the crisis that then confronted the country; but in his subsequent annual message he stated the whole financial situation. He accepted the full responsibility. He shirked nothing. He did his duty as he understood it. He may be wrong from the silver standpoint. That is a different question. But, under the responsibility of his oath of office, understanding his duty as he saw it, believing that the best interests of this country, as well as existing law, required the maintenance of the gold standard and its policy, he saw fit to have the bonds issued. We may differ with him as to the mere question of propriety. That does not present a question to be investigated. All the bonds could then have been floated at 3 per cent if Congress had so willed it. Congress seemed to be afraid of gold, although gold, whether rightfully or wrongfully, was conceded to be the only legal standard of value.

Whether the gold policy is wise or unwise is not the question. The fact of the legal existence of the single gold standard confronts us, and it will remain such until it shall be changed. Senators who differ with the President have a right to introduce bills to change that standard. Senators have a right to argue that it ought to be changed. Senators have a right to go to the national conventions and endeavor to induce their party friends to change it as the policy of the party; but until it is changed a duty confronts the officials of the Government, and that duty they must proceed to discharge. It is unwise, it is inexpedient upon our part to indulge in senseless criticism of their conduct simply because we happen to differ with them, as some Senators may, upon the vital question of the gold policy or the silver policy.

I need not read now the syndicate contract that was made with Morgan and others of New York. The syndicate contract was specially valuable to the Government, because under its terms one-half of all the gold was to be procured from abroad. What do the facts show? They show that under the first two loans the gold that was used for the purchase of bonds was drawn out of the Treasury on the presentation of greenbacks only a few days before. Therefore, when the bond sales were fully completed there was very little more gold in the Treasury than when they were started, because a large portion of the gold was drawn out of the Treasury with which to pay for the bonds. But the syndicate contract of February, 1895, was valuable to the Government because one-half of all the gold was to be procured from abroad. I need not argue how it benefits the country to have the gold come in from abroad instead of taking it from our own Treasury. It is desirable as far as possible to sell our securities abroad in order that more money may come into the country.

I know it is said that gold bonds ought not to have been issued. Yet, sir, we expect to pay in gold if gold is demanded, especially if any difference in value exists. As I understand it, the true friends of silver have never asked that the obligations of the Government or the creditors of the Government should be paid in depreciated currency. They expect—and that is their argument—that whenever the free coinage of silver shall be decreed, in the very near future there will be a parity in fact as well as in law. That is the true theory of the silver men. But until that shall occur there can be no objection to the Government issuing its bonds, and there can be no objection to the Government insisting upon it that while the present standard of value remains the greenbacks shall be redeemed in gold.

The syndicate bond sale took place in February, 1895. No investigation was then suggested. None was proposed. The country was then familiar with the syndicate transaction. Some speeches were made against it, but no Senator rose in his place and asked for an investigation. Nearly a year and a half has elapsed since the syndicate sale of 1895, and then all at once there is a zeal manifested for the passage of a resolution of investigation. If the bond sale of 1895 was so irregular, if there was anything improper about it, if there was anything wrong about it, why did not some Senator then propose an investigation when it was fresh in the minds of the people? No, Mr. President: it is an afterthought. It is an outcome for use in the approaching political campaign. It is an effort of a combination here in the Senate of Senators who want to throw mud upon this Administration.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment or two?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I have a little local bill which I should like to have considered. It will take but a moment.

Mr. PEPPER. I guess we had better proceed with the regular order.

Mr. NELSON. It is a little bill which the soldiers of St. Paul wish to have passed for Memorial Day.

Mr. PEPPER. I think it would be better to proceed with the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas objects. Mr. NELSON. I wish the Senator from Kansas would withdraw his objection.

Mr. PEPPER. I would then have to yield to some other Senator, and it would lead to confusion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas objects to the consideration of the bill asked for by the Senator from Minnesota. The Senator from New York is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, of course the public interests would be greatly injured and delayed by the passage of the little bill of our friend the Senator from Minnesota. Everything now revolves about the bond investigation. It is going to save the country. It is going to vindicate those who are urging it. The appropriation bills must give way. Private bills must give way. Everything must give way in the Senate for the urgency of the passage of this extraordinary resolution of investigation. Senators are so confident that the officials of the Government are to be ruined and injured that they can not wait even for a few minutes to have a private bill passed. The result of it will be a disappointment to those who are urging it.

Third. Then came the recent loan, which has been called a popular loan. I do not know what real and substantive criticism can possibly be made in regard to that loan. I have answered some of the trivial criticisms. I have read the notice of the Secretary of the Treasury showing the terms under which the loan was authorized. We have not forgotten the debate that took place on the Thursday preceding the issuing of the call for the popular loan. All that Senators then wanted was a popular loan. It was said the people were ready and eager to invest. It was represented over and over again that the bonds of the Government could be sold at a rate which would be equivalent to 2, 2½, or 3 per cent. I recently read the list of the bids to show how disappointed were the expectations of those who made such predictions. Now, there are to be investigated not only the syndicate loan but the recent one.

I have already answered the proposition that the bonds should have been sold at a fixed price. I have already commented upon the fact that if the Secretary of the Treasury had authorized the bonds to be sold at a fixed price there would have been a clamor that the Secretary of the Treasury had attempted to prevent bonds being sold to the highest bidder, to the injury of the Government. I have already commented upon the fact that if he had insisted upon gold being deposited as security for the bid, or some other security given, it would have been said he was injuring the poor man; that the poor man had a right to bid for bonds; that he ought not to be required to give any security. He could borrow the gold and get the bonds if he were so disposed.

Suppose the bond proposal or the call had provided that gold should not be procured from the Treasury. I am inclined to think, from one point of view, it would have been wise enough, and that bids should not have been accepted from any bidder where the gold could have been traced and shown to have come recently from the Treasury. Suppose he had put in such a clause. I think it would have been a benefit to the Government and saved it from the endless-chain operation. But if the Secretary of the Treasury had placed in the call for the bonds such a clause, what then would have been the charge? "Oh, it is unfair discrimination. A man who has his greenbacks placed away in his trunk locked up, or in his stocking, or in his safe has the right to take the greenbacks to the Treasury of the country and to get gold, and if he wants thereafter to buy bonds he has a right to do it." It would have been said that it was an unfair discrimination against the poor man; that the poor man had nothing but greenbacks; that those who had money stored away had only greenbacks, and greenbacks would enable them to get gold by going to the Treasury. It strikes me that upon the whole the Secretary of the Treasury pursued the wise course. He left it open for everybody, whether he had gold, whether he had silver, or whether he had to get his greenbacks, go to the Treasury, draw out the gold, and obtain the bonds.

Need I comment further upon the fact that everyone had a chance at the bonds? Those who predicted that the bonds would be sold at a rate equal to 2½ or 3 per cent interest were disappointed. The sum total of these bonds were sold at only a trifle less interest than the syndicate bonds, and under the syndicate contract one-half of the gold was to be procured out of the country.

Among other bids was the bid called the Graves bid. The newspapers were filled with charges about the Graves bid. It was a bid for $4,500,000 of bonds. It seems he did not have any money. He was an adventurer. But he made his bid. He made it under this "free-for-all" entry, under the call that let in any man, sane, insane, poor, blind, halt, Tom, Dick, or Harry. Everybody could come in, whether he had a dollar or not. That was fair, because it prevented criticism. Mr. Graves bid. He did not have a dollar of gold. He bid, and his bid was accepted. The Treasury notified him that on such a day, in accordance with the terms of the proposal, he was to produce his first installment of gold: I think it was 20 per cent. He did not fulfill. He did not respond. He was peddling his bonds, as the newspapers stated, all over Wall street. He was trying to get somebody to let him have the gold. But there happened to be a flurry in Wall street that day on account of the war scare, and down went the market value of the bonds and he could not get anybody to let him have enough money, and he forfeited.

Then what did he do? Messrs. Morgan & Co. had given a blanket bid to cover the whole amount. They were entitled, under the strict terms of that bid, to any bonds where the bidder failed. That is the legal, proper, and just construction of the Morgan bid. What took place? This man Graves made a fuss about it. He went into the newspapers, issued his charges that he was improperly shut out; that his bonds were irregularly given to the great syndicate formed by Morgan & Co.

I do not propose to unnecessarily drag into this matter any question of politics if I can avoid it. In the previous debate had here two months ago I explained to the country and to the Senate who Mr. Morgan is. There is not a member of his firm who is known to be a Democrat. They are strong Republicans and they aided the Republican cause in previous campaigns. They are business men. They are bankers; that is all. They deal in Government securities. They reorganize great railroads. They take railroads anywhere in this country—North, South, East, or West—and reorganize them. They are men who have accumulated their millions, and, so far as I know, they have accumulated them honestly and fairly. They are men of high standing. The charge or insinuation is that in some way or other there is an undue intimacy between the officers of the Government and this banking concern. I have alluded to the fact in the previous debates had two months ago that Morgan & Co. are of the same firm that helped to float our bonds during the time of the war. There is nothing new about them. Neither the President of the United States nor Mr. Carlisle has any peculiar relations with those bankers any more than with any other banker throughout the country.

Under the terms of the blanket bid, which covered all bids where there was a failure to take the bonds, Morgan & Co. obtained the $4,500,000 of Graves's bonds. Here is something tangible. If the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] had put into the resolution a clause for the investigation of that particular transaction, saying it has been charged so and so, there would have been something definite to act upon. Here was the $4,500,000 bid, and the bonds were given to Morgan & Co. The answer is plain enough. The other man failed to produce the gold, and they gave it to the next bidder who, in formal terms, was entitled to it. That is the answer to it. But the charge is enough, if it is made specifically and definitely, to warrant somebody examining it.

What did the House of Representatives do? On February 21, 1896, in the House, which I submit to the Senate is properly the body to investigate the subject, if an investigation is to be had, the resolution was offered which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas it has been charged by William Graves, in a statement made by him and given to the public press, that Hon. John G. Carlisle, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, has refused to deliver to said William Graves $4,500,000 in bonds of the United States at 115.331 after having accepted the bid of the said William Graves therefor at said figure, although the said William Graves has tendered the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of said bid for said bonds in gold at the subtreasury in the city of New York, and that the Secretary of the Treasury has awarded said bonds to J. P. Morgan & Co. at a sum $200,000 less than the amount bid and tendered by the said William Graves: Therefore

Resolved, That a committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker of this House to investigate said charge and report to this House, in writing, the result of the investigation.

The committee is given power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and such other powers as may be necessary in the course of the investigation hereby authorized.

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expense of making the investigation hereby authorized.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, that resolution is legitimate and proper in form. It charges something; it alleges something distinct; it specifies the precise ground that Mr. Carlisle refused to let Graves have the bonds. Although it says he has tendered gold to the Treasury, it does not say when he tendered it. The resolution has never been acted upon in the other House. It stands there ready to be acted upon. If Mr. Carlisle has refused, arbitrarily, willfully, improperly, to let a bidder have $4,500,000 of bonds, there is sufficient in that matter, of course, to justify the House of Representatives acting and taking cognizance of the matter.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from New York permit me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I take no special interest in these charges as to the integrity of the Secretary of the Treasury, nor have I paid any attention to them. I do not believe them. But there is a part of this transaction about which I have never been entirely satisfied. I mean as to the correct business relations between the parties, whether the Secretary of the Treasury construed the law correctly or not. As I understand the facts—possibly I am wrong—the firm of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., or this syndicate, made a bid for the whole $100,000,000?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. That bid was not accepted, I understand?

Mr. HILL. It was not accepted as a whole in the first instance, because there were other bids to the amount of about $60,000,000 which were more favorable to the Government—higher bids.

Mr. VEST. I understand the facts to be that a number of other bids were made which the Secretary of the Treasury found to be more favorable to the Treasury than the bid of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co.?

Mr. HILL. Yes; to the extent I have stated.

Mr. VEST. He then awarded these bids, and it turned out the parties were unable to furnish the gold for different reasons. Then the Secretary of the Treasury, under what is called by the Senator from New York this blanket bid, turned over all the unfilled bids to J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. Now, that seemed an extraordinary proceeding to me, unless there was a specific provision that all the bids not taken for any reason should be given to J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. I have always understood in regard to these Government biddings, and I think that obtains in all the Departments, that, when a bidder declines to comply with the terms of the bidding, it is then an option with the Government whether it shall award to the next bidder or, if the market has made it more advantageous to the Government, then to put up the same bid for other action by other bidders. I understand it is the fact that after these parties, for one reason and another, refused to take these bids the bonds went up. I have no personal knowledge on the subject, of course; I do not know any of the parties who bid; but I have understood that young men and women who did not have a dollar put in bids, and then either sold them or got other parties to put in the gold and divide the profits. But there were a large number of parties who could not furnish the gold, and in the meantime the market went up. Was it not the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, as the trustee of an express trust, an official under the Government, to take advantage of his right to put up the bonds to a better bid than that of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co.?

Mr. HILL. What would have been the situation if the other bids were only half the amount of the hundred-million-dollar bid?

Mr. VEST. He could then have gone on and put them up again until he sold the balance, unquestionably. If the Senator will permit me, I will make just one suggestion, because I am actuated by no feeling against the Administration nor the Secretary of the Treasury, as much as I differ with them in a great many respects. What would have been the result of the construction the Secretary of the Treasury has put upon this transaction? Suppose a man of immense means, like J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. or Vanderbilt, undertook to corner, you might say, $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 of bonds put up to the highest bidder by the Government? All that would be necessary would be to put in a blanket bid at a low figure, and then send a number of impecunious men to make bids at larger figures, knowing that they could not put up the gold, and then, when they had failed to do so, come in and say: "Here is my blanket bid; that covers it at a lower figure, and I want those bonds."

I do not say that was the case here by any means. I am speaking as a lawyer and as a legislator, not as an individual. If any practice could be guilty of such abuse as that it is a most dangerous one. I have always thought that the Secretary of the Treasury ought, when he found thirty-five or forty million dollars of bonds—I will not be accurate as to the exact amount—was not taken by the parties who had made bids that were accepted, he ought then to have availed himself of the rise in the market and obtained a larger price for those bonds; and that was the duty of any trustee, whether he was a private trustee or a public one.

Mr. HILL. I hope before this debate is over to put in the RECORD precisely the bid of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co.

Mr. VEST. Yes; I should like to see that.

Mr. HILL. From that it will appear that the bid was in the form usual in business transactions of that character whereby they bid for the whole hundred millions, which, of course, included any part thereof, and any bids not taken by other bidders.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, allow me to ask him a question right there, for that is the gist of this whole matter. Suppose when J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. put in those bids the bonds were worth 115. Suppose that $50,000,000 of them were not taken by the parties who had bid, for one reason and another, and in five days afterwards those bonds had gone up to 130. Does the Senator think that the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to make a donation of the 15 per cent to J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. because they had chosen to incorporate in their bids an offer to take all bids that were not taken? Now, that is the whole of this question.

Mr. HILL. The bid of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. was in the form usual in such transactions. I am not called upon to answer the hypothetical case of the Senator from Missouri. I will state further that of course the rejection of any and all bids is always reserved, and it was reserved here.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand the Senator from New York to state that that is the usual offer, to take all the bids that are not complied with?

Mr. HILL. Such bids are very frequent in large transactions. I do not say that Morgan's bid contained an express clause agreeing to take all bids not complied with. That, however, was its legal effect. It was the next highest bid, and the Government was in duty bound to give the forfeited bonds to the next highest bidder.

Mr. VEST. And the Secretary of the Treasury holds that bid open until he sees how many other bids are not filled, and then gives that bidder the advantage of the rise in the market?

Mr. HILL. No; he gives to each bidder just what he is entitled to in the first instance, and upon any forfeiture he then gives the next highest bidder the benefit of such forfeiture. That was legal as well as fair to everybody.

Mr. VEST. What I stated is just what was done in this case.

Mr. HILL. No; it is not what was done in this case.

Mr. VEST. The market had gone up.

Mr. HILL. The market had gone up on some days and was down on others. On the very day when the Graves bid was to be fulfilled by the payment of the gold the bonds in the market price were below what he bid for them.

Mr. VEST. They immediately went up the next day and continued to go up.

Mr. HILL. That is very true, of course. The stock market varies from day to day.

Mr. VEST. They of course went right up. It was only a temporary depression.

Mr. HILL. The stock market, of course, in New York is like a stock market elsewhere; it can be manipulated; the men who have large quantities of gold or bonds can manipulate it. The fact conceded by all those who have investigated the transaction, conceded by the newspapers at the time, which detailed it accurately, was that the day before Graves had to pay his money on his bid his bonds were being peddled around New York. On that day the market went below, so that those bonds in the market were selling for less than the Graves bid.

They might have kept going down. Of course the Secretary of the Treasury could have accepted the J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. bid, which was very near this amount, or he could have resold the bonds again at public sale. But in what a situation would the Secretary have been placed if he had refused the Morgan bid and then had readvertised and resold the bonds, and they had brought less than the Morgan bid in the market.

Mr. VEST. Graves's bid was not the only bid—

Mr. HILL. Graves's bid was not the only bid, of course. There was little or no complaint of any other bid.

Mr. VEST. I beg pardon, but can the Senator tell the amount of bids not filled that J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. took under this blanket bid?

Mr. HILL. Not very many. I will furnish the exact list tomorrow.

Mr. VEST. I have seen it stated that there was a much larger amount than $4,500,000.

Mr. HILL. Morgan & Co. had about $37,000,000 in round numbers awarded to them in the first instance, and then they obtained $4,500,000 (the Graves bid) and about $237,000 more; that was all. I have read the resolution of the House of Representatives for the purpose of showing that the real branch of the Government whose duty it is to investigate these matters, if there is any duty at all, proceeded with it. A resolution was introduced for this investigation. It never has been considered worthy of consideration. It never has been brought up. It never has been discussed. It never has passed the body that has the power to act on the question with more propriety than we have.

Now, Mr. President, what is the situation? Do we want to aid a lawsuit? A short time since Mr. Graves brought suit against the Secretary of the Treasury in this District. Mr. Carlisle appeared, put in his answer, put in his affidavit, and detailed this whole transaction. Not expecting this debate to be resumed this afternoon, I was in hopes of getting a copy of the affidavit and that answer. The answer was put in and verified. The attorneys for Mr. Graves have been investigating the subject, and I am informed that this afternoon they withdrew the suit. It was wholly unfounded; they could not maintain it anywhere.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest a call of the Senate. I suggest that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The motion does not require a quorum, the Chair will state.

Mr. MILLS. A motion to adjourn has preference.

Mr. LODGE. Then I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded? [A pause.] A sufficient number have not seconded the demand.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire calls for a division on the motion to adjourn.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 13, noes 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas have it, and the Senate stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Mr. MILLS. It does not require a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is not required to adjourn. The Chair has declared the motion agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MILLS. That has been refused.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays were not ordered, one-fifth of the Senators present not having seconded the call. The vote has been taken by a division and carried, and it has been declared by the Chair that the Senate stands adjourned until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The Senate thereupon (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 5, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 4, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read, corrected, and approved.

CAPITAL RAILWAY COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report. I submit the conference report on Senate bill No. 888.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the Senate bill No. 888, an act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Capital Railway Company," approved March 2, 1895, having met, after full and free conference agree to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In section 1, line 7, strike out the word "for" and insert "have"; so that the phrase shall read "have a common seal"; and that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the second and fourth amendments of the House and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the third amendment of the House, and agree to the same with the addition of the following proviso:

"Provided further, That neither the Capital Railway Company nor any other street railroad company in the District of Columbia shall be permitted to run cars over any underground electric or cable road by a route or routes not specified in the charters of the respective roads and the amendments thereto except by authority of Congress hereafter to be granted."

And that the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the fifth amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment, so that section 4 shall read as follows:

"That the portions of the company's routes from Congress or Penceote Heights to Shepherd's Landing, and from Good Hope to the District line, shall be completed within two years from the passage of this act: Provided, That failure to complete the portions of the routes mentioned in this section, and also failure to complete the extension on Eleventh street east, shall operate to repeal the authority to build said portions and shall not repeal the charter of said company."

GEO. M. CURTIS,
JAS. D. RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
JAS. McMILLAN,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The amendment to the first amendment merely corrects a verbal error. The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the second and fourth amendments.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the third amendment, and it is further provided that all street railroads be kept to routes authorized by their individual charters.

The fifth amendment is agreed to with the proviso that if the minor extensions are not completed within two years then the routes of such extensions, but not the entire franchise, shall be forfeited.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this matter a question.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to ask whether the amendment proposed in the conference report whereby these roads are limited to the use of the routes laid down in their own charters does not change very materially the legislation heretofore passed upon that subject? There is a provision of law that where these roads coincide as to a part of their route, in order to avoid the multiplicity of tracks in the streets, such of them as coincide shall be required to use the tracks already constructed. Under this amendment I think this very wise provision will be repealed. Is that so?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It will be modified in this way, as I understand: This is an amendment to the House amendment. The Metropolitan Company have put down an underground electric motive power, as required by Congress, and at very heavy expense. They claim that their connections are very delicate, being made of porcelain, and that the running of cars of other roads over their tracks, or any very heavy cars, would break the connection, and their engineer certifies in writing that it would be impossible to permit that without very serious injury. Therefore it is proposed that they must ask Congress for that authority if it is to be given. That is as I understand it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the legislation that is sought to be repealed in this peculiar way was secured only after a very earnest contest with the railway companies of this city. It was regarded at the time by the House as a matter of very great importance.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is already arranged for. It does not interfere with prior arrangements where they have that right already.

Mr. HEPBURN. It repeals that section.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not where they have that right, as I understand it.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman will have that provision read again, I think he will find that my statement is correct.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does not interfere with them where they have it in their charter.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; but there is a general provision enacted by the last Congress giving a road that coincides with another road the right to use the tracks of that road, instead of duplicating the tracks in the streets of the city.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This amendment provides that they may still do it if Congress consents to it.

Mr. HEPBURN. In every instance it makes it necessary to come to Congress, instead of using the legislation which we have now.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I remember the legislation to which the gentleman refers, and I do not object to it, but I will say to him that some of the roads are equipping themselves, or proposing to equip themselves, with a very heavy motor, known as the compressed-air motor. The Eckington Company, for instance, are doing this. I mention that as one company which has already given notice that its purpose is to use that motive power. It was thought that that company ought to submit the right to do that to Congress before it could run upon these tracks, and Congress simply reserves the right in this amendment to give them the permission hereafter or to withhold it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then the gentleman does understand that this is in effect a repeal of the existing legislation?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think it would provide that they must come to Congress for the authority.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then it does repeal present legislation?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I say it is a modification of it.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is a repeal, is it not? If they have to get legislation hereafter, when they do not have to get it under present legislation, it certainly is a repeal of existing statutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not understand that it repeals it totally, but modifies it. It does not interfere with them where they have that right already, but hereafter if they want that right they must get it through Congress. That is the idea.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is not the language of this amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think you will find that it is.

Mr. HEPBURN. I hope the House will not adopt this portion of the conference report. It is wrong. These companies fought very vigorously against this legislation, under the leadership of the gentleman, in the last House.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask to have the amendment again reported.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that portion of the amendment be again read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the second and fourth amendments of the House and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the third amendment of the House and agree to the same with the addition of the following proviso:

"Provided further, That neither the Capital Railway Company nor any other street-railroad company in the District of Columbia shall be permitted to run cars over any underground electric or cable road by a route or routes not specified in the charters of the respective roads and the amendments thereto, except by authority of Congress hereafter to be granted."

And that the House agree to the same.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is the provision that I refer to.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to call attention to the fact that the conference committee have evidently exceeded their jurisdiction in undertaking, upon an act relating to a single railroad, to annex legislation in conference relating to all the railroads in the District. They have clearly exceeded their jurisdiction.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This amendment provides that the Capital Railway Company, the company we are chartering, and other companies shall not use the roads or shall not run their cars over the roads already chartered, the idea being of protecting the Metropolitan road because of the delicate machinery by which it operates its system.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman has reference to one particular road. Was not this a charter in reference to one particular road?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; not exactly. It provides that this road shall connect with the Metropolitan and also with the Capital Traction Company, which is the old Washington and Georgetown Company, and that there shall be a free system of transfers between them, but that they shall not run their cars on either of the other roads.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him there? There is no provision for "connection" with either one of those railroads.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). And connection is not contemplated. They are to approach each other, and at the points of approach there is a free-transfer system, but there is no connection. There is no authorization in this bill for the Capital Company whereby its cars may be used upon either of these other roads. This provision is absolutely gratuitous. It has no connection whatever with the subject-matter of the bill, and it is an attempt in this insidious way to repeal useful legislation that this House struggled over for days during the last Congress.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise a point of order which will lie against this report. The committee of conference, in a bill having relation to the charter of one railroad has included legislation affecting all the other railroads. I do not know whether that was done by the conference committee or in an amendment of the Senate.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is by a Senate amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not done by the committee of conference?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is done on an amendment to a House amendment in conference.

Mr. DINGLEY. The question is, is this amendment, whereby legislation is undertaken to apply to all the railroads in this District, an amendment put on by the Senate or proposed to be included by the committee of conference?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was put on in the conference as an amendment to a House amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. In the conference?

Mr. RICHARDSON. In the conference.

Now, I do not think the point of order is well taken, if the gentleman will pardon me. This road, when built, connects with these other roads. I do not agree with my friend from Iowa as to the effect of the bill. These roads do not coincide—that is, they do not run on each others' lines; but they connect, all three of them, with the Capital Railway Company—that is, the Capital Traction Company, which is the old Georgetown and Washington, and the Metropolitan Company are mentioned as connecting with that road; and the object primarily was to keep that road and all others off the Metropolitan road on account of the delicate apparatus by which it is operated.

Now, I do not understand that it interferes with the charter rights of the companies, but provides that hereafter the authority must be given by Congress. It does not interfere with those roads now, but it simply provides that hereafter the running of heavy cars over this delicate machinery shall not be granted on those roads without special authorization of Congress. I think that is right, Mr. Speaker, and the gentleman from Iowa will pardon me—I think it is right because under the legislation which the gentleman refers to this company has been required to expend $2,550,000 to put in this underground electric system, which is a very delicate system, as it is explained to us.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. RICHARDSON. In a moment. The motive power is the underground electric current, and the connection that is made, as the engineer explains it to me, is by porcelain. It is a connection which is brittle and may be easily broken by the shock of these heavy cars, such as would be necessary for transporting the compressed air batteries; and it was thought that they ought to be protected in the use of this service by Congress.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa referred to the legislation of the last Congress. I remember it very well. I was on the committee, and it passed unanimously. If I remember the matter correctly, an amendment was reported which was put on in conference. That amendment provided for this reciprocal trackage arrangement; and it is not the intention that this shall break that down where we already have it. I have the report here of the engineer. I do not know these matters of my own knowledge, but I think I will quote it correctly. However, we provide that hereafter Congress shall pass upon the matter and decide whether it is right and proper that the road being chartered should run over the Metropolitan road, with the heavy motive power they will have, heavy enough to crush this porcelain connection, which is a delicate apparatus that they have put in there.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] for a question.

Mr. TERRY. In view of the fact that Congress had expressly provided that when one of these railroads laid its tracks in the streets it would be liable to have other companies run over those tracks, what right had the Metropolitan Company to construct its roads with such delicate machinery as to make that law of Congress practically of no effect?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will answer the gentleman by saying that it was the express requirement of Congress that the Metropolitan Company should equip its road with underground electric power, and that company has done so, and has expended $2,500,000 in doing it, under the direction of the very best experts.

Mr. TERRY. But I understand you to say that in doing it they have used a kind of porcelain or some material so delicate that other cars can not run over the track.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas and I would not differ about the method of constructing the road, because neither of us would know how to do it, but this company has expended this money, and the gentleman will understand that their object was not to do what he says, nullify an act of Congress. Their object was to get the very best apparatus and equipment for the purpose, and that is what they have provided. I want to call attention also to the fact that it is a thing of joy to ride on the cars propelled by this new system, and it seems to me we ought to protect this company as far as we can after having required them to make this large expenditure.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. If I understand the act in question, it simply permits the cars of the Capital Railway Company to come up to a point where transfers are issued from that road to the Metropolitan and to the Capital Traction roads. The cars of this company are not proposed to be run over the tracks of either of those lines, and if that be so, what is the necessity for the provision that is creating this discussion?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Because they may get an amendment and obtain the right to run on this track.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But they have not got it now, and it is not proposed by this bill that they shall have it.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do I understand the gentleman from New Hampshire to say that this particular company does not propose to avail itself of the benefits of that provision of the statute?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It has no right under this charter to proceed one foot on the tracks of either of these other companies, and consequently this provision that has been injected here is not germane to this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that there are two roads to occupy the new line to be constructed. The Capital Railway is the name of the new one, and the other is the old Anacostia line, which now occupies the track and runs its cars now over the Metropolitan track not only at this point of connection, but clear on down to Ninth street, up Ninth to G street, around G street, and back down on the Metropolitan track. Now, the Anacostia road may change its motive power; it hopes to do so, and the line is to be used by that company in common with the company that is chartered under this bill, the Capital Railway Company, and therefore they will connect and run their cars on this track, and this provision is designed to prevent the abuse of the tracks of this new line.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Does the gentleman claim that the present company will have any right, by virtue of this bill, if it shall become a law, to run on the tracks of either the Metropolitan or the Capital Traction Company?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at present; but they may get it by some arrangement with the Anacostia Company, which connects with it.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But they can not do it under this bill, so there is no need for dealing with that question now.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, on this point of order allow me to read the amendment of the House to the Senate bill. This is the amendment over which there was disagreement:

Provided further, That the line of said railway company shall be commenced within three months and completed within one year from the date of the passage of this act, with the exception mentioned in section 4 of this act.

That was all the matter of disagreement between the two Houses. Now two amendments have been introduced not by the Senate, but by the conference committee—

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is not the gentleman mistaken about that? Is not this amendment added to the one which provides where connection is to be made with the Capital Traction Company and with the Metropolitan Company?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; here is the conference committee's amendment:

Provided further, That neither the Capital Railway Company nor any other street-railroad company in the District of Columbia shall be permitted to run cars over any underground electric or cable road, by a route or routes not specified in the charters of the respective roads and the amendments thereto, except by authority of Congress hereafter to be granted.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Where do you get that? That is not in the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. This is the amendment that the conference committee have added to the amendment of the House to the Senate bill. Here was a private charter. The subject-matter of the bill that was before the House was confined to this one road. There was no authority in the bill to use the tracks of either of these other roads. They do not in fact connect, any further than that they come together; in one case they do not even do that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will not the gentleman state again that amendment of the conference committee?

Mr. HEPBURN (reading)—

Provided further, That neither the Capital Railway Company nor any other street-railroad company in the District of Columbia shall be permitted to run cars over any underground electric or cable road, by a route or routes not specified in the charters of the respective roads and the amendments thereto, except by authority of Congress hereafter to be granted.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a word at this point, for the purpose of making this matter plain as I understand it? The House amendment which was in conference contained, I believe, this provision (referring to the Capital Traction Company)—

Provided further, That the line of said railway company shall be commenced within three months and completed within two years from the date of the passage of this act, with the exception mentioned in section 4 of this act.

Now, that amendment of the House having been disagreed to by the Senate and having gone to conference, the Senate, by the conference report, recedes from its disagreement to that amendment. Then the conferees take up, as the gentleman says, an entirely new subject and report the matter which the gentleman has read, which was not in conference.

Mr. HEPBURN. I thank the gentleman for his explanation. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if this conference committee were authorized to do what they have done, then there is no limitation whatever upon the power of such a committee.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me a question? As I understand, the various charters or acts of Congress heretofore passed authorizing the occupation of the streets by street railways have all provided that the companies should permit other street-railway companies to occupy their tracks.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And if this amendment which the conference committee has embodied in this bill should become a law, it will have the effect of repealing that provision in the various charters, so that hereafter no street-railway company may occupy the tracks of any other street-railway company, if it be either a cable or an electric underground road, without an act of Congress.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir. Now, Mr. Chairman, the unwisdom of this proceeding must be apparent to everyone.

Mr. CANNON. Before the gentleman proceeds further, let us get at the facts. I want to see whether I understand them. As I understand from the gentleman's statement, the conferees appointed by the House and the Senate to meet and adjust the differences between the two Houses met and adjusted the difference by an agreement that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment. Then the conference committees of the two bodies took up an entirely new matter, one which had never been considered by the House and never considered by the Senate, and proceeded to write into the bill legislation with reference to a matter about which there had been no difference between the two Houses. Is that the gentleman's contention?

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman is absolutely correct in that statement.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is understood that I made the point of order that the conferees have exceeded their jurisdiction in this matter, and that therefore the conference report can not be received.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendments, in the way in which they are numbered, are misleading. The point at which the amendment excepted to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and other gentlemen should come in is where it is proposed that the Capital Railway Company (the new company now being chartered) shall issue free transfers with the Capital Traction Company (that is, the old Washington and Georgetown Company) and the Metropolitan Company. Here, then, is a charter dealing with the Metropolitan Company, with the Capital Traction Company (or the old Washington and Georgetown Company), and this new Capital Railway Company, which is being chartered.

Now, the bill goes into conference in that condition. As it goes into conference it requires that the three companies, the two old ones I have named and the new one which we are now chartering, shall issue free transfers at their points of connection. Then this amendment comes in. The action taken in this matter is coupled with the knowledge that the Anacostia road, the old road now in existence, which connects with the Washington Traction

Company and also with the Metropolitan Company, and is to-day running its cars along its line, the old line of that road, which is to be the new line of this new road, the two lines coinciding—

A MEMBER. Oh, no.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Indeed they do, from half a mile beyond the Anacostia Bridge which crosses the Eastern Branch. They are to run their cars upon that line. And to-day the Anacostia road is running its cars a mile or more over the Metropolitan tracks, up as far as G street on Ninth, and, as the gentleman knows, around on Ninth and back over the Metropolitan road, and out to Anacostia.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is the Anacostia road mentioned in this bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then why are you mentioning it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Because the tracks of that road coincide with the new tracks of this new road for nearly half a mile; and that company is already running its cars over the Metropolitan road.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the conferees on the part of the House thought, and I still think, dealing with the three roads at the connecting point where they are required to make their transfers, in view of the fact that the line to be used in common, namely, the Anacostia road, coincided with the tracks of the proposed new road, that we had the right to provide that before they could run over or cross the tracks of that road, the Metropolitan, or any other, that Congress should be called upon to pass on this question.

Now, if I have been able to make myself understood, I have stated clearly the position that I take in regard to the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what that has to do with the matter in dispute between the two Houses?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Nothing, Mr. Speaker, except that the question in dispute—one of the matters in dispute between the two Houses—was the amendment put upon the Senate bill by the House.

There was, the Chair will remember, no provision when the bill came here from the Senate for this connection with the Metropolitan road, and the House itself, in considering the Senate bill, put on the amendment which carried the new company from Eleventh street east up to Lincoln Park, where it connected with the line of the Metropolitan Street Railroad Company, and says so in so many words. That was the way of it; that was the way the matter originated; and the Senate having agreed to it with an amendment, that amendment was submitted by the House conferees as a part of the report, being the only matter in controversy. The Senate, in other words, agreed to the House amendment with an amendment of their own. They agreed to the amendment of the House making the road connect with the other lines by adding the provisions which the gentleman objects to.

Now, it seems to me to be strictly in order.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman from Tennessee is in error in this matter. Now, in order to make the proposition germane he attaches it to another part of the bill—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I said that there might be some mistake of the numbers which would mislead the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. But section 3—there was no disagreement there. The only amendment by the House was to insert the words "Metropolitan Railway Company," and the Senate did not disagree to that. So that section was not a subject of difference between the Houses, and was not therefore a matter for conference. It was not even before the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think not. The Senate agreed to that amendment of the House, as I understand it, and there was, it seems to me, no possible ground upon which the action of the conference committee could have been taken. The gentleman from Tennessee does not improve his case, therefore, by the statement he made.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in supposing that section 3 was not in controversy.

Mr. HEPBURN. It was amended by the House, but there was no disagreement, as I understand it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, yes; the Senate nonconcurrent in all of the House amendments. It disagreed with that particular amendment with the others; and they were all in conference.

Mr. HEPBURN. Did it disagree to the insertion of the words "Metropolitan Railroad Company"?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly. Every one of the amendments were disagreed to and went to conference.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. But suppose that to be true, did the words inserted in section 3 by the House, "Metropolitan Railway Company," even if attached to the section, make this germane to the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at all; this matter is not germane.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think it is germane; and if the gentleman from Maine will give me his attention a moment I think I can convince him. This matter is germane because we required this connection to be made. It is made by the House amendment adding the words "Metropolitan Railway Company," the Senate having already made the connection with the Capital Traction Company.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But does not that relate to transfers only?

Mr. CANNON. That is all.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There seems to be no question that that is the only point, merely the exchange of transfer tickets. It does not mean that they are to run over the same tracks. Where is there anything in the bill that was put on in the Senate or has any relation to the provision that no other company shall run on the tracks except by a right of way granted by Congress?

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman from Tennessee is in error in regard to the insertion of the provision relating to the connection of these three roads. There is no connection in fact between them. In reference to the line on Eleventh street the provision is as follows:

Also continuing from said Eleventh and M streets north on Eleventh street to the south building line of A street south.

That comes within a half a block, and a half a block only, from the line of the Metropolitan Railway track.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No—

Mr. HEPBURN. There is still a space there of a full half block. I am confident that the gentleman is in error. They do not coincide. They do not approach nearer than a half block. And again, with regard to the other connection—

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HEPBURN (reading)—

Thence west on M street to a point to be located by the District Commissioners near Eighth street east, connecting with the lines of the Capital Traction Company.

But there the authority to build ends. They can not go a foot farther than that. The Capital Traction Company tracks are on Eighth street, and the Capital Railway Company only reaches Eighth, and does not traverse it a foot. So, again, as to the provision for transfers. These two points preclude the idea that it was the purpose of the bill that the two companies should jointly use the same tracks. Why should there be transfers if the journey was not to be interrupted at that point? The gentleman is in error in every one of these propositions, and this is new legislation, repealing that which was secured last year. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it ought not to be tolerated. Members do not scrutinize reports of this kind. They do not expect this kind of action. They do not expect committees to attempt new legislation in matters of this character.

My attention had been called to this report. I had opposed some of the amendments of the Senate, and I was told as to certain matters of agreement, with which I was perfectly content, but this was not one of them. This was entirely new to me, and it was only through an accident that I heard this part of it read. I supposed that the report would be upon matters that had been agreed upon and not this method of securing the coveted legislation.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, on the point of order, that while I have no interest in the particular matter that is now in dispute, I do have an interest, as a member of the House, in the jurisdiction of conference committees. It is exceedingly important that conference committees should not overstep their jurisdiction. That jurisdiction is confined, under the rules, to matters in dispute between the two Houses that have been committed to the conference, and in reconciling those disputes. They have no business to go outside and legislate on any matters that do not refer to the particular matter in dispute.

In this case the particular matter that was in dispute related to the time of the construction of this particular road. Now, any amendment that related to the matter in dispute between the two Houses as to that particular railroad, as a proviso, would have been in order, but when it is proposed to add to that a proviso legislating generally as to all railroads in the District, the conference committee exceed their jurisdiction. Therefore they ought not to do that as a matter of precedent for other cases. Conference committees, as has been frequently decided by the House, must confine themselves to the matters that are in dispute, and not undertake to legislate outside of those matters. Otherwise you will have conference committees bringing in all kinds of legislation on minor matters of dispute.

It will be remembered that in the Fifty-second Congress this matter was carefully debated in the House, and the Speaker, in a case precisely like this, ruled out the report of a conference committee, holding that the conferees must confine themselves to the matter or matters in dispute, and that no amendment not germane to that particular matter in dispute can be included in the report of a conference committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I concur quite fully with the gentleman from Maine in his statement about introducing foreign matter into a conference report. I know that can not be done; but the point with me was, while the margin I can see is narrow and close, it occurred to me that, dealing with the three lines, providing this method of connection, providing that there should be free transfers between the three lines, providing that the connection should be made between the lines of the two old companies and the line of this company, that it would be in order to provide these terms upon which the union might be made.

Mr. DINGLEY. But it will be noticed that the only point in dispute to which you attach this proviso, as the report says, is the third amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The amendment may be wrongly numbered, I will suggest to the gentleman, because there is a typographical error in which one word is changed, and it may be that in making that change the numbers may be inadvertently placed.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, the gentleman's case is much worse if it is confined to the third section. Notice all there was in dispute between the two Houses. The original bill read:

That the Capital Railway Company and the Capital Traction Company are hereby required to issue free transfers at the point of intersection of their respective lines.

Now, that was amended by inserting the words "the Metropolitan Railroad Company." That is the only point in dispute, whether or not the Metropolitan Railroad Company shall be added to the Capital Railway Company and the Capital Traction Company for the purpose of issuing free transfers. To that you attach an amendment providing general legislation for all the railways in the District. Obviously that is not germane.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but I know he intends to be entirely fair—

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to know what connection that has with the amendment—

The Metropolitan Railroad Company?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was just coming to the point. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has well said that that is the only amendment in the third section, but that amendment in the third section was made necessary because of a previous amendment that the House put on the Senate bill. The provisions of the amendment related to the Metropolitan Railroad, and provided that cars should be run by this new company over Eleventh street east to the Metropolitan road and to the south boundary of Ninth street, where, I understand, the Metropolitan tracks are already laid, and upon which the railroad runs its cars; and inasmuch as these two amendments related to this road this amendment would apply to that road.

Mr. DINGLEY. I can not see the distinction. I submit the point of order to the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The point I desire to submit to the gentleman is that it was desirable legislation.

Mr. DINGLEY. It may be desirable legislation, but it was not included in the point of difference which was referred to the committee of conference.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the Chair is of the opinion that it should not be there, I can withdraw it, if it is desired. I will confer with the gentleman who presented the report. [After a pause.] If the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment would not be germane, I will ask leave to withdraw the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks leave to withdraw the report.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS ILLINOIS RIVER, NEAR GRAFTON, ILL.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7973) to establish a railroad bridge across the Illinois River, near Grafton, Ill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the St. Louis, Perry and Chicago Railroad, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, are hereby authorized and empowered to erect, construct, establish, and maintain a railway bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Illinois River, in the State of Illinois, between a point to be selected by said railroad, or its successors or assigns, within 5 miles from and above the upper limits of Grafton, in the county of Jersey, in said State, and a point in Calhoun County, in said State, to be selected by said railroad, or its successors or assigns, opposite or nearly opposite the point so selected as aforesaid in said Jersey County, which said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river, and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to free navigation of said river, the proceeding shall be instituted in and determined by the district court of the United States for the southern district of the State of Illinois.

SEC. 2. That the bridge authorized by and constructed under this act shall be a pivot drawbridge, the drawspan on the Jersey side to commence at the abutment of the approach on that side of the river, which abutment on the Jersey side shall be within the low-water mark, and the bridge shall have a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, with spans of not less than 175 feet in length on each side of the center of the pivot pier of the draw, and the span next the drawspan on the Calhoun side of the river shall not be less than 200 feet in length, and the remaining span of such length as shall be necessary to reach the approach on that side of the river, which will be beyond low water on the Calhoun side. All spans to have a clear headroom of 10 feet above high water; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river when said bridge shall be erected.

SEC. 3. That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be known and recognized as a post route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post route, and it shall enjoy the same rights and privileges as other post-roads in the United States upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for their transportation over the railroads leading to said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for a postal telegraph across said bridge.

SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railroad trains over the same and the approaches thereto, and in the use of the machinery and fixtures thereof, upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the railroad companies, or any of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid as such compensation, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, or either of said matters, then all matters in dispute or at issue between them or any of them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

SEC. 5. That the structure herein authorized shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War for his examination and approval a design and drawings of said bridge and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built, and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the process of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; and the said construction shall be at all times so managed and kept as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and to secure the safe passage of vessels at night there shall be displayed on said bridge, from the hour of sunset to that of sunrise, such lights as may be prescribed by the Light-House Board; and the said structure shall be changed, at the cost and expense of the owners thereof, from time to time, as the Secretary of War may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river.

SEC. 6. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within five years from the date hereof.

SEC. 7. That Congress shall have power at any time to alter, amend, or repeal this act so as to prevent or remove all hurtful obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of said bridge and its accessory works: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers or to exempt the bridge from the operation of the same.

SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all of section 1, after the word "county," in line 14, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That the location selected shall be suitable to the interests of navigation."

After the word "with," in line 7 of section 2, insert "two equal draw."

And after the word "spans," in the same line, insert "one on each side of the central or pivot pier, each giving a clear width of waterway."

In line 8 strike out "seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof "sixty."

Strike out all of line 8 after the word "feet," and all of line 9 to the word "and."

In line 20, section 5, strike out the word "construction" and insert in lieu thereof "bridge."

In line 24 strike out the word "displayed" and insert in lieu thereof "maintained." Insert after the word "bridge," in said line, "at the expense of the owners thereof."

Insert after line 22, section 5, "and such aids to the passage of the draw in the form of pile or crib guides as the Secretary of War may deem necessary shall be constructed by the said company."

In section 6, line 3, strike out "two years" and insert in lieu thereof "one year," and strike out "five" and insert "three."

Strike out all of section 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Strike out section 8.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONTESTED ELECTION—KEARBY VS. ABBOTT.

Mr. BELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Elections No. 3 to present the report in the case of Kearby vs. Abbott, and I ask that the report be printed.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire immediate action?

Mr. BELL of Texas. I ask first that an order be made that the report be printed, and then I will ask for action.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be ordered printed, and the Clerk will report the resolutions on which the gentleman asks for action.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That J. C. Kearby was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Sixth Congressional district of Texas, and is not entitled to the seat as such Representative.

Resolved, That Jo Abbott was elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Sixth Congressional district of Texas, and is entitled to retain his seat as such Representative.

The resolutions were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BELL of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were agreed to was laid on the table.

TERMS OF COURT AT BEAUMONT, TEX.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2708) to constitute a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for the holding of terms of court at Beaumont, Tex., and for the appointment of a clerk for said court.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Jefferson, Orange, Newton, Jasper, Hardin, Liberty, Tyler, Angelina, San Augustine, Sabine, Polk, and San Jacinto shall constitute a division of the eastern judicial district of Texas.

SEC. 2. That terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the said eastern district of the State of Texas shall be held twice in each year at the city of Beaumont on the first Mondays in June and December.

SEC. 3. That all civil process issued against persons resident in the said counties of Jefferson, Orange, Newton, Jasper, Hardin, Liberty, Tyler, Angelina, San Augustine, Sabine, Polk, and San Jacinto, and cognizable before the United States courts, shall be made returnable to the courts, respectively, to be held at the city of Beaumont; and all prosecutions for offenses committed in either of said counties shall be tried in the appropriate United States court at the city of Beaumont: Provided, That no process issued or prosecution commenced or suit instituted before the passage of this act shall be in any way affected by the provisions hereof.

SEC. 4. That the judge of the eastern judicial district of the State of Texas shall appoint a clerk of said court, who shall reside at the city of Beaumont, in the county of Jefferson, State of Texas.

SEC. 5. That so much of all acts or parts of acts as are in conflict herewith shall be repealed.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all of section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "SEC. 4. That the clerks of the circuit and district courts for said district shall maintain an office in charge of themselves or a deputy at said city of Beaumont, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of said division."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GEORGE W. FREEMAN.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I forward to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5280) for the relief of George W. Freeman.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the military record of George W. Freeman for the removal therefrom of the charge of desertion, and that he issue to the said George W. Freeman an honorable certificate of discharge from the military service of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I reserve the right to object, pending the reading of the report, which I ask for.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk, then, will read the report.

The report (by Mr. BISHOP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5280) for the relief of George W. Freeman, respectfully report the same back to the House, with the recommendation that such bill do pass.

The facts upon which this soldier relies for the relief sought by this legislation are as follows:

The soldier enlisted December 20, 1861, in Company H, Thirteenth Michigan Infantry; served faithfully until December 31, 1861, when he was captured at the battle of Stone River, Tennessee; was exchanged and returned to duty; reenlisted as a veteran January 18, 1864; was severely wounded in right hip at Bentonville, N. C., March 19, 1865, and was honorably discharged July 15, 1865, by reason of wound of right hip received in line of duty.

He was at once pensioned for his wound, but in 1867 he again enlisted in Company C, Forty-third United States Infantry, and thereby surrendered his pension. Subsequently he deserted.

Your committee, therefore, are of the opinion that the meritorious service of such soldier, and his severe wound received in line of duty, should condone his subsequent lapse from loyalty in time of peace.

Your committee further recommend that the bill be amended by adding as follows: "To date July 12, 1868, no back pay, bounty, or other emoluments to become due and payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The military record of this soldier is as follows:

"RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,

"Washington City, March 7, 1896.

"SIR: Referring to your letter of yesterday, received to-day, in which you request a statement of the military record of George W. Freeman, late of Company C, Thirteenth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you that the name mentioned has not been found on the rolls on file in this office of Company C, Thirteenth Michigan Infantry Volunteers.

"It appears from the records, however, that one George W. Freeman was enrolled December 20, 1861, at Portage, Mich., and mustered into service January 17, 1862, at Kalamazoo, Mich., as a private in Company H of that regiment, to serve three years; that he was captured by the enemy in the battle of Stone River December 31, 1862; that he was paroled at Murfreesboro January 3, 1863; that he reported at Detroit Barracks May 13, 1863, and was sent to Camp Chase, Ohio, May 14, 1863; that he reported at Camp Chase, Ohio, during the week ending May 16, 1863; that he was again sent from Detroit Barracks to Camp Chase, Ohio, June 24, 1863; that he reported at Camp Chase June 26, 1863; that he was arrested September 17, 1863, at Hilliard Station, by the provost guard, while absent from Camp Chase, Ohio; that he was sent to his regiment between October 20 and October 31, 1863; that he reenlisted as a veteran volunteer January 18, 1864; that he was promoted corporal in January or February, 1865; that he was wounded at Bentonville, N. C., March 19, 1865, and that he was discharged the service July 15, 1865, at Harper United States Army General Hospital, Detroit, Mich., because of a gunshot wound of the right hip, received while in the line of duty.

"He is reported on the bimonthly muster rolls of his company as follows: March and April, 1862, and May and June, 1862, absent, sick at Savannah, Tenn., April 7, 1862; July and August, 1862, present; September and October, 1862, absent, left sick at Liberty, Ky., October 23, 1862; November and December, 1862, present; January and February, 1863, missing in action at the battle of Stone River, December 31, 1862; from May and June, 1863, to September and October, 1863, absent, officially reported missing in action; from March and April, 1864, to January and February, 1865, present; March and April, 1865, and May and June, 1865, absent, wounded at Bentonville, N. C.

"Very respectfully,

"F. C. AINSWORTH,

"Colonel United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office."

"WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,

"Washington, March 10, 1896.

"Respectfully returned to Hon. A. MILNES, House of Representatives.

"The records of this office show that Private George W. Freeman, Company H, Forty-third United States Infantry, enlisted November 28, 1867, for three years, deserted July 12, 1868, and never returned to his command.

"At his own request he was, on August 23, 1893, furnished a deserter's release under General Orders, No. 55, Adjutant-General's Office, 1890; copy inclosed. This protects him from arrest and trial by court-martial, but does not remove the record of desertion. The Department has no power to remove the record of desertion.

"J. B. BABCOCK,

"Assistant Adjutant-General."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the Committee was read, as follows:

Add to the end of the bill the following words: "To date July 12, 1868. No back pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due and payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MILNES, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

IRA POWERS.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5061) to pension Ira Powers, of Henderson County, Tenn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Ira Powers, late of Company A, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry, of Henderson County, Tenn., on the pension roll of the United States, to receive $12 per month, from September 1, 1890.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out the following words: "To receive $12 per month, from September 1, 1890," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "And pay him a pension of $12 per month."

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, pending the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5061) granting a pension to Ira Powers, late private Company A, Second Tennessee Cavalry, and Companies A and C, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers, having examined and carefully considered the facts and circumstances presented, respectfully report as follows:

Ira Powers enlisted August 14, 1862, and was honorably discharged, after faithful service, August 7, 1865. He filed a claim for pension under the act of June 27, 1890, on August 18, 1890, alleging hernia, nervous debility, and spinal affection. His claim was rejected December 5, 1891, on the ground of "no pensionable disability under act of June 27, 1890."

He filed affidavit March 21, 1893, which alleges existence of hernia (right side), spinal affection, general debility, disease of eyes, and piles; and in affidavit of March 23, 1893, in addition to above, alleged disease of heart.

In support of his claim he filed, March 25, 1893, the affidavit of M. M. Grimsley, to the effect that he had been a neighbor for four years, and claimant had not been able to do a whole day's work in five years.

Also, affidavit of Dr. P. W. Austin that claimant has spinal affection, sore near hip, headache, does not see well, subject to piles, and has had hernia. Disability from spinal affection, one-half; from eyes, one-fourth; from piles, one-sixteenth.

Also, affidavit of W. B. Ruten that he is suffering from spinal affection—disabled one-half; seriously affected with heart disease, from which disabled one-fourth; also hernia, piles, premature old age, and loss of sight, one-fourth.

Soldier has a hospital record in service of diarrhea, catarrh, and variola, and was twice in hospital with catarrh and diarrhea. He was almost constantly in hospital from March 3 to July 3, 1865, with catarrh, fever, variola, and diarrhea.

The board of examining surgeons at Savannah, Tenn., rated him, May 6, 1891, at six-eighths for incomplete hernia and four-eighths for rheumatism. The board at same place, April 11, 1894, reported "No disability," and the claim was again rejected June 11, 1894, on the ground of "no ratable disability found under act June 27, 1890."

Dr. R. A. Dickson files with the committee an affidavit dated February 24, 1896, saying he—

"Finds on examination that claimant is suffering with chronic inflammation of the left kidney, irregular valvular action of heart, unable to rest on left side; also find a hernia of right side. I have known Mr. Powers and been his family physician since 1874 up to this date, and here testify his total disability for physical labor of any kind."

Rev. T. Rogers and John H. Rogers testify they served in same company with Ira Powers, and believe him entitled to the full benefits of the act of June 27, 1890 ($12 per month), from the date of filing his claim.

A petition signed by 108 neighbors certify to personal acquaintance with Ira Powers for over five years, and believe him entitled to $12 per month since date of filing his claim.

Your committee believe this soldier justly entitled to the maximum pension under act of June 27, 1890, and therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the word "States," in line 7, and insert in lieu thereof "and pay him a pension of $12 per month," and as amended that the bill do pass.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the gentleman from Tennessee asks this special legislation to override a ruling of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Then why was the claim rejected under the act of June 27, 1890?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. It seems that his claim was rejected when he was rated by the board of examining surgeons at twelve-eighths disability. The case was reopened, and the same board rated him as no disability and the case was again rejected. The physicians that rated him at twelve-eighths disability also rated him at no disability and the Commissioner in both cases disallowed his claim. I know this gentleman and know his condition.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Did he serve in the war at all?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. For three long years.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Was he ever in battle?

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. He was.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ERDMAN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McCALL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman for that purpose at present.

CHOCTAW POINT, MOBILE BAY.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1872) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange in behalf of the United States the tract of land at Choctaw Point, Mobile County, Ala., now belonging to the United States and held for light-house purposes, with the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad Company for any other tract or parcel of land in said county equally well or better adapted to use for light-house purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to exchange in behalf of the United States the tract of land at Choctaw Point, Mobile County, Ala., belonging to the United States and held for light-house purposes, with the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad Company for any other tract or parcel of land in said county which it may offer in exchange therefor and which shall be approved of by the Light-House Board as equally well or better adapted to use for light-house purposes and of equal value. And, upon making such exchange, the Secretary of the Treasury shall execute and deliver to said company a quitclaim deed for said Choctaw Point tract, and shall take from it a proper conveyance vesting in the United States title to the tract or parcel of land to be taken in exchange, together with delivery of possession of such tract, such title to be passed upon by the Attorney-General of the United States in the usual manner. And said tract or parcel of land so taken in exchange shall be held and used for light-house purposes: Provided, That the exchange herein provided for shall be without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I take it for granted that this has been recommended by the Light-House Board.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. It has.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that it would be well to put the report into the RECORD in explanation of this bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. I will do so.

The report (by Mr. CORLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred House bill 5364, beg leave to report, and recommend that Senate bill 1872 be substituted therefor and do pass.

The report upon the Senate bill contains the facts with reference to this measure, to which report reference is made.

The Senate report (by Mr. McMILLAN) is as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1872) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange in behalf of the United States the tract of land at Choctaw Point, Mobile County, Ala., now belonging to the United States and held for light-house purposes, with the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad Company for any other tract or parcel of land in said county equally well or better adapted to use for light-house purposes, make a favorable report thereon.

The reasons for seeking the exchange are set forth in the following letter:

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

"Washington, D. C., February 1, 1896.

"DEAR SENATOR: I inclose a bill with the request that you will at once introduce it and have it referred to the proper committee, and then facilitate its passage as quickly as possible. The facts are that the Light-House Board is about to erect wharves, bridges, buildings, and other portions of a plant necessary for the lighting of the channel of Mobile Bay upon a tract of land at Choctaw Point which belongs to the Government and is devoted to use for light-house purposes. It is really not well adapted for use in this particular project, as the water is very shallow in its front and the wharf to be built will be a very long one and very much exposed. It is surrounded by property belonging to the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad Company, which is just commencing to construct its road from Mobile by way of Jackson, Miss., to Kansas City.

"The road is very anxious to secure this particular tract for use, in connection with its other property, as a terminal, and has been for some little time in communication with the Light-House Board, offering to secure and convey to the Government in exchange for the Choctaw Point site a tract of land which will be acceptable to the Light-House Board as better adapted for the purposes of the project than the site now owned. While the Board has not yet passed upon any site offered as being preferable to the one now held, I have no question that one can be agreed on which it will wish to take in exchange. It will not have authority to accept it without a special act in the nature of the accompanying bill. It is my desire to secure the passage of the bill upon two grounds, first, that it will result in securing to the Government a site for the necessary plant for lighting the channel upon which the cost of construction and that of maintenance will be less than that upon the present site; and secondly, because I regard the construction of the railroad as of great public importance, as it will certainly largely increase the commerce of our port, and therefore I wish to see it secure this tract, which is a necessary part of its terminal facilities, provided it can do so without the Government being in any way injured thereby.

"You will observe that the bill does not require an exchange, but simply authorizes one approved of by the Board. Of course the bill will first be referred to the Board, and it will doubtless make a report in accordance with the facts as I have stated them.

"Asking your assistance in the matter, I am,

"Yours, very truly,

R. H. CLARKE.

"Hon. JAMES L. PUGH,

"United States Senate, Washington, D. C."

The bill having been referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, was reported on as follows:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 6, 1896.

"SIR: The letter from your committee, dated February 5, 1896, inclosing Senate bill 1872, authorizing an exchange of the light-house land at Choctaw Point, Mobile County, Ala., for another parcel in said county for light-house purposes, has been received.

"In reply I have to inform you that the matter was referred to the Light-House Board, which reports that it knows of no objection to the passage of the bill.

"Respectfully, yours,

S. WIKE, Acting Secretary.

"The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
"United States Senate."

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a report from the Committee on the Library.

The report was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives and one other member of the Joint Committee on the Library, to be selected by the two chairmen aforesaid, be, and they are hereby, constituted a joint special committee with authority to sit in Washington, D. C., during the recess of Congress, for the purpose of inquiring into the condition of the Congressional Library and to report upon the same at the next session of Congress, with such recommendations as may be deemed advisable; also to report a plan for the organization, custody, and management of the new Library building and the Congressional Library; that the said joint special committee is also authorized to employ a stenographer whenever necessary during the course of the inquiry, and that the necessary expenses of the sittings of the joint special committee, including the pay of the stenographer, be taken equally from the contingent funds of the two Houses of Congress.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:

"That the Joint Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives and of the Senate be authorized to sit in Washington, D. C., during the recess of Congress, for the purpose of inquiring into the condition of the Library of Congress, and to report upon the same at the next session of Congress with such recommendations as may be deemed advisable; also to report a plan for the organization, custody, and management of the new Library building and the Library of Congress.

"The said joint committee is also authorized to employ a stenographer whenever necessary during the course of the inquiry. The necessary expenses of the sittings of the said joint committee, including the pay of the stenographer, are to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives and Senate, on vouchers approved by the chairmen of said joint committee."

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have an explanation of this.

Mr. QUIGG. This is a resolution that has passed the Senate unanimously, the purpose of which is completely stated in the resolution itself. The amendment that is proposed by the House Library Committee differs from the Senate resolution in that it provides that the commission shall consist of the two Library Committees for the purpose of providing for minority representation on the commission, and also for the purpose of preserving the equilibrium between the two Houses. The amendment provides also for the audit of the expenses of the committee, and puts the resolution in the form of other concurrent resolutions of the same kind.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask the gentleman why, in reference to every subject of legislation, we should not have the various committees of the House sitting during the recess of Congress, employing stenographers and taking testimony? Why is an exception made in this case? If the Library Committee, in their wisdom, or the Joint Library Committee, have conceived some new plan of legislation, why not bring in a bill and let us dispose of it here? Why is this special inquiry needed?

Mr. QUIGG. For the reason that the Library building is about to be completed and it is proposed very shortly to remove the Congressional Library into that new building, and it was thought that before Congress takes action upon that matter it would be well to inquire into the custody and management of the new building, the space that the library will need to occupy, and the other matters that are related to the removal of so great a public institution into so great a building. It was thought that an investigation of that matter before Congress is called upon to act would be a very suitable thing. I may say to the gentleman, further, that before submitting this matter to the House I have consulted with various members of the Committee on Appropriations, including its chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], and with other members of the House, with regard to the form of the resolution as well as with regard to its subject-matter, and I think I may say they agree with me that the resolution is a very necessary one. I have not proposed it of my own motion.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I should like to ask my colleague [Mr. QUIGG] this question: In the event of the nonpassage of this resolution, what will happen? Will the new Library building be untenanted?

Mr. QUIGG. Either the library will not be removed to the new building when it is completed or action will have to be taken by the next Congress looking to such removal without the information which we conceive to be necessary.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Does the gentleman mean to say that there will be no power to make the removal from the present building to the new Library building without special legislation?

Mr. QUIGG. I think not.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Then the new building will remain for all time untenanted unless we pass such an act as this?

Mr. QUIGG. I think some act of this kind will be necessary. Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman from New York allow an interruption? When the legislative bill was under consideration by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. Spofford submitted to the subcommittee an outline of his suggestions as to the transfer—the necessary additional force and all the details pertaining to the transfer of the library to the new building. General Casey, when he came before the committee, also went into considerable detail; and he stated that it was his purpose that the transfer be accomplished about the middle of February of next year. The whole subject having been gone over, the subcommittee reached a conclusion that the subject-matter should be taken up at the next session of this Congress and that any action on the subject should form a part, so far as appropriations might be necessary, of the next legislative appropriation bill. But as I now understand upon consultation with the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG], the Committee on the Library, before submitting this concurrent resolution, went into an investigation of the details of this subject, so as to be prepared to submit to the Committee on Appropriations an outline as to what should be our procedure in appropriating in the next bill for the transfer of the library, as well as for its personnel.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Does the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] mean to assert that the Committee on Appropriations were not qualified to make such an inquiry, but deemed it necessary to have authority delegated to the Committee on the Library?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not doubt about the Committee on Appropriations being fully qualified, for the reason that we have the recommendations of Mr. Spofford and General Casey; but there certainly can be no objection to a committee of this House, the Committee on the Library, passing judgment on the administration of this matter in the future and making recommendations in connection therewith.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I wish to inquire whether the subject of copyrights is affected by this inquiry?

Mr. QUIGG. It is not.

Mr. BINGHAM. Not at all.

Mr. COX. Does this inquiry involve the question of the conduct of the Librarian?

Mr. QUIGG. It does not.

Mr. BINGHAM. Not in any way.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that the resolution be amended by adding these words: "that the expenses incurred under this concurrent resolution be reported to the second session of this Congress."

Mr. QUIGG. I accept that amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

SPECULATION IN CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HENDRICK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, together with the favorable report of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 6834) to prevent the purchasing of or speculating in claims against the Federal Government by United States officers was read.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I reserve the right to object, but I will not make objection if the provision with reference to ousting persons from office be struck out. I refer to the final clause of section 2, following the words "five thousand dollars."

Mr. HOPKINS. This bill can be presented under a suspension of the rules. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HENDRICK. I am willing to accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. HOPKINS. I withdraw the call for the regular order, but I object to the bill.

Mr. HENDRICK. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think this matter ought to be looked into.

Mr. HENDRICK. It has been looked into by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BINGHAM obtained the floor.

Mr. HENDRICK. I move to suspend the rules, and pass the bill I have sent to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has been recognized.

JOSEPH R. WEST.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 673) granting a pension to Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major general, United States Army Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major-general, United States Volunteers, at the rate of $100 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 7, strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty"; so as to make the rate of pension $50 per month.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHARLES HENTZ.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1345) to amend the military record of Charles Hentz, late private of Company C, Eleventh Regiment Connecticut Infantry Volunteers.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing on the records of the War Department against Charles Hentz, late private of Company C, Eleventh Regiment Connecticut Infantry Volunteers, and to issue him an honorable discharge.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Let us have the report read in that case.

The report (by Mr. WOOMER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1345) to amend the military record of Charles Hentz, having examined and considered the same, report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

John Shields, a comrade, testifies that Hentz was captured by the Confederates in December, 1864, while on picket.

Wesley and Martha Vanover and Bettie Phipps, residents of Clintwood, Dickenson County, Va., testify that in February, 1865, Hentz came to the house of Dr. Cornelius Vanover, exhausted and worn out with disease and wounds, and was treated for erysipelas in the head.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Is that all of the report?

Mr. PATTERSON. That is all.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Does it not recommend anything?

Mr. PATTERSON. It recommends the passage of the bill, the gentleman will observe.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the entire report has been read.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PATTERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CAPT. GEORGE H. PERKINS.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 139) for the relief of Capt. George H. Perkins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Capt. George H. Perkins, who was retired as captain after forty years' faithful service upon the active list of the United States Navy, as provided by section 1443, Revised Statutes, and who had honorable service in the late civil war, shall be placed on the retired list with the rank of commodore, without the corresponding increased pay, but receiving only the retired pay of captain of the Navy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a special stipulation that this shall not increase the pay of this officer. May I inquire, then, what the purpose of the bill is, except merely to increase the rank?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The purpose is to increase the rank. This gentleman, I will state, is so fortunately situated that he does not care for the additional pay. His friends ask this as an appropriate recognition of his services.

Mr. BAILEY. If it costs the Government nothing I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

NEW HAVEN NATIONAL BANK, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call up now the bill (S. 1365) for the relief of the National Union Bank of the State of Connecticut, which was considered the other morning and laid aside for the purpose of preparing an amendment. That amendment has been prepared and accepted by the gentleman on the other side who made the objection. I ask the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill and the amendment will be reported.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the National New Haven Bank of the State of Connecticut the sum of $3,519.15 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the proposed amendment to the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the Senate bill as follows: "Being the amount found to be due John W. Griffiths, as appears from a report dated February 27, 1877, made by a board of constructors appointed by the Bureau of Construction and Repair of the Navy Department, which report is on file in said Bureau."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment proposed by Mr. SPERRY was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, it was passed.

On motion of Mr. SPERRY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MRS. AMANDA WOODCOCK.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6037) granting a pension to Mrs. Amanda Woodcock.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Amanda Woodcock, of Richmond, Ky., widow of Robert Woodcock, deceased, late a private in the Fourth United States Volunteer Infantry in the Mexican war.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, is there any report accompanying the bill? If so I would like to have it read.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. There is a report. I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. COLSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6037) entitled "A bill granting a pension to Mrs. Amanda Woodcock," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass with an amendment:

The claimant herein is the widow of Robert Woodcock, who served from October 28, 1847, to July 5, 1848, in the Mexican war. He was pensioned at $3 per month under the act of January 29, 1887, and this was subsequently increased to $12 per month under the act of January 5, 1893, upon his proving his indigent circumstances and his inability to earn a support by manual labor.

The soldier died September 6, 1894, and his widow, the beneficiary, filed an application for pension, but notwithstanding the fact that the soldier's claim for pension and bounty land had been allowed, her claim was rejected on the ground of no service in Mexico, the soldier having been prostrated by typhoid fever, for months, at Louisville, Ky., while en route to Mexico after his enlistment.

There is, however, no question of the service having been rendered, the soldier's discharge certificate and other papers on file establishing the same beyond question.

Mrs. Woodcock is 70 years old and in dependent circumstances, being dependent on her son-in-law for support. These facts are fully substantiated by the gentleman who introduced this bill in the House and who has known her (the beneficiary) personally for many years, and also by her written statement regularly signed and filed with the committee.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Strike out, in lines 4 and 5, the words "subject to the limitations of the pension laws," and insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of $12 per month."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, the amendment recommended by the Committee on Pensions was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SAMUEL M'KEE.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 467) for the relief of Samuel McKee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Samuel McKee the sum of $1,718, for expenses incurred by him in a contest for his seat in the Fortieth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PITNEY. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear the report or some statement concerning the bill.

Mr. COX. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. COLSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 467) to pay to Hon. Samuel McKee the sum of $1,718 for expenses incurred by him in a contest for his seat in the Fortieth Congress, from the Ninth Congressional district of the State of Kentucky, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

Your committee find that said McKee's right to a seat in the Fortieth Congress was contested by Hon. J. D. Young; that issues were joined, evidence was taken, and a hearing was had before the Elections Committee of the House, and that the seat was awarded to said McKee.

The committee further find from the proofs in the case that the said McKee in his said contest incurred, necessarily, expenses amounting to the sum of $1,718, as appears from the itemized account of the said McKee duly verified. It further appears that no part of said sum has ever been paid.

The committee also find that Hon. John D. Young has been paid the sum of $2,500 for his expenses incurred in said contest.

This claim was before the Committee on Elections of the House in the Forty-eighth Congress, and was favorably acted upon by said committee, but no action was had by the House.

Your committee would therefore report back the bill and recommend that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the right to object.

Mr. EVANS. I should like to explain the bill, because I want everybody to know what it is. I think there will be no objection when the bill is understood.

In the Fortieth Congress the Hon. John D. Young held a certificate of election as a member of this House from the Ninth district of Kentucky, but was never sworn in. McKee contested his right to the seat and was given the place. He presented at the time no account for expenses of contest. Mr. Young was, by resolution of the House, on the 11th of May, 1869, directed to be paid $2,500 for expenses of contest. The Committee on Accounts paid him $1,500. June 24, 1874, an act was passed giving him $1,000, the difference between $2,500 and the $1,500 paid by the Committee on Accounts. Again, on March 3, 1880, by action of that date, he was paid $6,865, his salary as a member of the House up to the date McKee was awarded the seat, although he (Young) had never served. He was never admitted to the Fortieth Congress at all, and on the contest it was held that McKee had a majority of the votes legally cast.

In 1881, Mr. McKee's attention being called to the fact that Mr. Young had been paid the salary and $2,500 for expenses of the election contest, he made out his account and presented it, and it was referred to the Committee on Elections. It was thought that it ought to go to a different committee, and at the next session it was presented to the Committee on Claims. From that date to this, in several Congresses, committees of one House or the other have reported this claim favorably, always recognizing the justice of it.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman inform the House how it was that Young was not awarded his seat, and yet afterwards received pay as a member? What was the ground of his rejection?

Mr. EVANS. Young was not awarded the seat originally because he did not take the test oath and could not take it. On the subsequent contest McKee was held to have received a majority of the votes.

Mr. MILES. Why could not Mr. Young take the oath?

Mr. EVANS. Because he had given aid and comfort to the rebellion. It was shortly after the war. He was therefore not admitted on the prima facie certificate, and when the contest was subsequently determined it was decided that he was not elected.

Mr. PITNEY. What was the date of this election?

Mr. EVANS. To the Fortieth Congress. It was shortly after the war.

Mr. PITNEY. That would be thirty years ago, now?

Mr. EVANS. But this bill has never been paid.

Mr. PITNEY. And he never presented any claim until 1881?

Mr. EVANS. He has been presenting this claim ever since the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. PITNEY. I think it is too stale, and I shall have to object.

Mr. EVANS. I hope the gentleman will not do that. It is a perfectly just claim. I know this man well. He lives in my town, and he needs the money.

Mr. PITNEY. He made no statement of the claim at the time?

Mr. EVANS. He presented his claim as soon as he knew the other man had been paid, who was not entitled to the seat at all.

Mr. PITNEY. Because a previous Congress has passed a wrong bill that is no reason why we should.

Mr. EVANS. This is the only case where the expenses of a contestant have not been paid. I sincerely hope that my friend will withdraw his objection, because this is clearly a perfectly just and proper claim against the Government. The fact that it has not been paid for a long time by no manner of means diminishes the force of the claim.

Mr. MILES. What is the amount of the claim?

Mr. EVANS. About $1,700. I speak with assurance when I say this gentleman is entitled to this money and needs it, and I do sincerely hope no member of this House will object.

Mr. PITNEY. I shall have to object. I do not think the statement is satisfactory.

Mr. BAILEY. I assume from the fact that the committee recommend this bill that the claimant filed properly certified vouchers showing that he incurred this expense.

Mr. EVANS. Perfectly satisfactory to the committee, and the claim has been established satisfactorily to committees of one or the other of the two Houses ever since the Forty-seventh Congress.

Mr. PITNEY. But he never presented his claim until fifteen years after the election. How could he present properly certified vouchers?

Mr. EVANS. It was perfectly satisfactory to those who investigated it.

Mr. PITNEY. Does the gentleman know that he has filed certified vouchers?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I will answer that. Mr. Speaker, this claim comes from the Committee on Claims. Under the law as it exists now, no party contesting an election is entitled to more than $2,000. It requires that the itemized expenses shall be filed with the committee. The trouble in this claim grows out of the delay, and that is all. But that this man incurred these expenses there is no question about that.

Mr. MILES. He filed his vouchers?

Mr. COX. He has filed a statement of his expenses. Of course he can not file the vouchers—that is, vouchers in the proper shape—but he filed his claim with an itemized statement of the expenses that he incurred, and it passed the Committee on Claims upon that idea entirely.

Mr. TERRY. I would like to ask the gentleman if this gentleman drew $6,000, and that the same amount was also paid to John Young Brown?

Mr. EVANS. He was paid the salary like any other member.

Mr. TERRY. There was a time during which he did not occupy his seat here, and neither one of them occupied the seat. Now, when this man came in did he draw the money for all that time?

Mr. COX. While in the seat he drew the money.

Mr. TERRY. He drew it for a period when neither one was in the seat.

Mr. EVANS. Like every other contestant, he got his pay back to the time when Congress began.

Mr. TERRY. Now, I have had a case of that kind before Congress for several years, and they never paid the man a dollar.

Mr. PITNEY. That is the trouble with such claims as this. We ought not to pay one of them, because it would establish a precedent for the payment of others.

Mr. COX. Now, hold on one minute and let us get it straight. When a man has a contest for his seat and it is decided in his favor that he is entitled to his seat, would it not be right to pay him the salary?

Mr. TERRY. I say it would. I have no objection to that, but the point I am making is this: That here is a man who did not have a seat more than a few months and drew pay for the whole time; and I have one here who occupied the seat half of the time, and is not allowed any pay and has been knocking at the doors of Congress for years.

Mr. EVANS. I am not objecting to his being paid.

Mr. PITNEY. Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Evans] may have an opportunity to move to suspend the rules and pass this bill, but I am not willing to give consent to its consideration. It is too stale.

Mr. EVANS. If I am in order I will move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must follow the order of business that has been proceeding.

Mr. EVANS. Do I understand the gentleman to insist on his objection?

Mr. PITNEY. Yes, sir; I am constrained to object.

FRANCES E. WICKWARE.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7983) to pension Frances E. Wickware.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll of the United States the name of Frances E. Wickware, widow of Lieut. Charles Wickware, late of Company I, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $17 a month.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask for the reading of the report and reserve the right to object.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7593) granting a pension to Frances E. Wickware, widow of Lieut. Charles Wickware, late of Company I, Sixth Vermont Volunteer Infantry, having fully examined and considered the facts in support thereof, respectfully report:

Charles Wickware enlisted as private in Company I, Sixth Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and served faithfully in said company as private and corporal until discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability February 6, 1865. He reenlisted as second lieutenant of Company B, Forty-third United States Colored Infantry, and served until mustered out October 20, 1865, and was honorably discharged at Philadelphia, Pa., November 30, 1865.

Charles Wickware was wounded at the battle of Savage Station, Va., June 29, 1862, the ball entering the left side and passing through the body in the lumbar region, just above the kidneys, made exit on the left side. He was left for dead upon the battlefield, taken prisoner, and sent to Libby Prison, where his wound was illy treated. He was exchanged, and after several months' treatment, returned to duty, and at the battle of the Wilderness, Virginia, May 5, 1864, he received another severe gunshot wound of left arm, which was amputated near the shoulder joint in field hospital, and for which he was discharged in February following.

He was pensioned from discharge—at various sums, between $3 and $20, for loss of left arm, which he was receiving at time of his death—May 4, 1893. His death cause was certified from public records as due to "inflammation of the bowels; duration of disease, four days."

Dr. C. I. Eberle, the attending physician, testified April 11, 1895: "I attended Charles Wickware during his last illness, and his death was caused by paralysis of the bowels, superinduced by a gunshot wound through the lumbar region, or immediately above the kidneys. The plastic exudation, formed by cicatricial tissue in the region of the bowels, caused a constant inflammation or irritation of the nerves of the bowels, causing paralysis of the same. No other cause existed that would have resulted fatally. Paralysis existed from the time he was first taken sick; being complete, caused death."

Claimant was married to soldier September 29, 1838, and four children, Elsie L., born May 31, 1873; Hattie B., born July 17, 1881; Katie E., born April 10, 1884, and Milton D., born November 3, 1888, were the fruits of the marriage.

The testimony presented shows that claimant is in feeble and delicate health, being a sufferer from rheumatism and disease of the heart, and has been confined to her bed for several months from said diseases, and her family physician certifies "she is not likely to live until the time her pension is allowed, if taken up in regular order."

Her claim for pension was rejected February 3, 1896, on the ground that "death resulted from disease of bowels, not due to cause which has been legally accepted"; although the record shows that the chief of the special examination division and the legal reviewers accepted the gunshot wound of back as the death cause. The special examiner who investigated the case and the history of soldier's life and ailments since discharge says:

"I can not help but believe that the wound of back contributed, perhaps largely, to the death cause, and I believe the claim to be meritorious."

In view of all the facts presented your committee recommend the passage of the bill with amendments, striking out the word "seventeen," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifteen," and also by adding after the word "month," in line 8, "and $2 per month for each minor child until they severally arrive at the age of 16 years."

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa to give some explanation of this bill.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The beneficiary is sick in bed, and her doctor testifies that she is likely to die. For that reason I have asked the consideration of the bill; and I do not care to discuss the matter further.

Mr. LOUD. Of course the gentleman knows that, having died thirty-one years after having received this wound, it is doubtful whether his death was the result of the wound. I notice, further, that this woman married the soldier many years after the war, and was probably quite familiar with the fact that he was a sufferer, and why, I would like to ask the gentleman, could not every other woman for the same reason now come to Congress and ask for an increase of pension.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will say to my friend that this is a widow of a soldier who lost his arm at the shoulder. In addition, he was shot through and through, and was nursed by this woman for nearly twenty-five years. He died, as this testimony shows, and as I think there can be no doubt, by reason of the effect of the gunshot wounds received in action. She is sick in bed, with four or five minor children dependent upon her, and without means of support. Therefore I confidently submit her claim to the good will of the House.

Mr. LOUD. I will ask the gentleman if he thinks we ought to extend our charity to all the women in the country who are widows of soldiers in this way?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I do not bring this case before the House as a matter of charity.

Mr. LOUD. That seems to be the strongest claim in the case.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The Pension Department have found that it was not shown beyond a doubt that the soldier's death was caused by his wound. I am informed by those who attended him that he died of inflammation of the bowels, and it is shown by the physician who attended him and admitted by the experts of the Pension Office that there can be little doubt that his death was due to that disability, but it is not demonstrated; but it is so fully proven that it is a fair and proper case for the interposition of a special act of Congress.

Mr. LOUD. Is there not the testimony of some medical experts that he did not die as the result of wounds received in the service?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Not at all.

Mr. LOUD. Then, in God's name, if all the testimony, medical and lay, goes to show that this man died as the result of his service in the Army, why has not the Pension Office granted him a pension?

Mr. DOLLIVER. The examination made by the Pension Office was a special examination, and no medical testimony was taken except that of the physician who attended the soldier, and while that physician gives it as his opinion that death resulted from the wound, the testimony, in the opinion of the Pension Office, is not entirely conclusive. In my judgment it is. At all events, that was the only testimony of a medical character that the office took; but the testimony of the man's wife and of his nurses and of the neighbors all agrees that he died as the result of the wound. I have known him for ten years, and I know that he was unable to perform his duties as clerk of the court except standing upon his feet. If he did his work sitting he suffered from pain and difficulty as the result of this wound, and it is on account of my personal knowledge of the case that I have felt constrained to bring this bill here. The Pension Office, finding it impossible to say with absolute certainty that he died of that wound, have felt bound to reject his claim.

Mr. LOUD. Why did the committee reduce the pension from $17 to $15?

Mr. DOLLIVER. When I introduced the bill I thought he had been a lieutenant. The committee found that he was a second lieutenant, and they have recommended the amount named in their amendment to correspond with the rate allowed by the general law.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 7542) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 3544) empowering and directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish not more than four pieces of condemned cannon to the village of New Rochelle, N. Y.; and

A bill (H. R. 572) for the relief of James Duke.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, asked a further conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. CULLOM, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1904) to regulate marriages in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had notified the Senate that he did, on the following dates, approve and sign acts and joint resolutions of the following titles, to wit:

On January 21, 1896:

An act (S. 30) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," approved March 2, 1893.

On April 6, 1896:

An act (S. 494) constituting Stamford, Conn., a subport of entry;

Joint resolution (S. R. 99) authorizing the immediate use of a portion of the unexpended balance of appropriations made for construction of canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River in construction of protecting walls necessary to the opening of said canal and locks to navigation; and Joint resolution (S. R. 103) directing the Secretary of War to submit estimates of cost of further improvement of Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island.

On April 14, 1896:

An act (S. 2132) for the relief of settlers upon lands within the indemnity limits of the grant to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company.

On April 18, 1896:

An act (S. 344) granting a pension to Mary A. Hall;

An act (S. 345) granting a pension to Catherine R. Jardine, widow of Brig. Gen. Edward Jardine;

An act (S. 1271) granting a pension to Elizabeth Moore English;

An act (S. 640) to increase the pension of Joseph W. Fisher;

An act (S. 507) to pension Mollie Crandall;

An act (S. 626) providing for disposal of lands on abandoned portions of the Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation, in Montana, and for the relief of certain settlers thereon;

Joint resolution (S. R. 104) directing the Secretary of War to transmit to Congress a report on survey of the waterway connecting the waters of Puget Sound at Salmon Bay with Lakes Union and Washington, and to submit an estimate of the cost of constructing said waterway; and Joint resolution (S. R. 123) directing the Secretary of War to submit a plan and estimate for the improvement of the Nebraska side of the Missouri River, opposite Sioux City, Iowa.

On April 20, 1896:

Joint resolution (S. R. 116) authorizing the Public Printer to print the Annual Report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey in quarto form and to bind it in one volume.

On April 24, 1896:

An act (S. 2141) to amend an act approved August 24, 1894, entitled "An act to authorize purchasers of the property and franchises of the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company to organize a corporation, and to confer upon the same all the powers, privileges, and franchises vested in that company";

An act (S. 69) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle the claims of the legal representatives of S. W. Marston, late United States Indian agent at Union Agency, Ind. T., for services and expenses;

An act (S. 1317) to grant certain lands to the city of Colorado Springs, Colo.;

On March 26, 1896:

An act (S. 2419) to authorize the leasing of lands for educational purposes in Arizona.

On April 9, 1896:

An act (S. 136) granting an increase of pension to Horace Townsend.

On April 15, 1896:

An act (S. 100) for the relief of the estate of John R. Bigelow; and

An act (S. 1203) granting an increase of pension to Mary Doubleday, widow of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Abner Doubleday.

FORT SULLY MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7324) to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation, in said State, as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands situated in the Fort Sully Military Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, may be selected at any time within one year after the passage of this act, or the approval of the survey of said reservation by the Secretary of the Interior, by the State of South Dakota as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands; and when said lands are selected as herein provided the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents to be issued therefor to the State of South Dakota.

The report (by Mr. BOWERS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands have had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7324) entitled "A bill to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation in said State as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes," and report as follows:

Amend said bill by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That the State of South Dakota shall have a preference right over any person or corporation to select said lands, subject to entry by said State, granted thereto by the act of Congress approved February 22, 1889, for a period of sixty days after the foregoing lands have been surveyed and duly declared to be subject to selection and entry under the general land laws of the United States: Provided further, That such preference right shall not accrue against bona fide homestead or preemption settlers on any of said lands at the date of filing of the plat of survey of any township in any local land office of said State.

Under the act of July 5, 1884, it is provided that whenever in the opinion of the President the lands or any portion of a military reservation have become useless, he may by order so declare and place the same under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. Under this act the reservation in question was placed under the control of the Interior Department by Executive order of date November 5, 1894.

The reservation is unsurveyed and contains about 28,000 acres, as shown by letter dated March 24, 1896, from the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, which is made a part of this report. The State of South Dakota has so far been unable to make selections of lands to the full amount donated to the State for the purposes designated under the enabling act admitting the State into the Union.

The provisions of this bill are substantially the same as the act passed by the Fifty-second Congress (U. S. Stat. L., volume 27, page 593), permitting the State to make selections of land from the Fort Randall Military Reservation, located in said State, for the same purposes.

Your committee see no objections whatever to the passage of the bill, and believe the State should be permitted to make the selections sufficient to satisfy the amount of lands donated by the Government to it, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill, with the foregoing amendment.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,

Washington, D. C., March 24, 1896.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter dated March 18, 1896, stating that on the 17th instant you introduced a bill in Congress to allow the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation for school indemnity lands, and for the purpose designated in the act admitting the State in the Union, and you ask to be informed as to the extent of the reservation, whether it is surveyed, and whether it is now in charge of the War Department, or has been turned over to the Interior Department.

In reply I have the honor to state that the former Fort Sully Military Reservation in South Dakota is unsurveyed. It was placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior for disposal under the act of July 5, 1884, by President's order dated November 5, 1894.

The estimated area of the abandoned reservation, as given in the report of this office for 1895, is 28,800 acres.

Very respectfully,

E. F. BEST,

Assistant Commissioner.

HON. ROBERT J. GAMBLE,

House of Representatives.

Mr. LOUD. Let me ask the gentleman why these lands should not be open to settlement the same as other public lands?

Mr. GAMBLE. For the reason that the State of South Dakota so far has been unable to select sufficient lands to cover the amount donated to it under the enabling act.

Mr. LOUD. Is not that the condition of every State?

Mr. GAMBLE. I think not.

Mr. LOUD. My own State is from sixty to ninety thousand acres short.

Mr. GAMBLE. The gentleman is aware that in South Dakota we have a large area of Indian reservations, something like 8,000,000 acres, and the State has been unable so far to select sufficient lands to supply the amount donated under the enabling act. This bill only allows a preference right to the State for sixty days, and that is allowed under the general law.

Mr. LOUD. Of course the gentleman understands how this lieu land law throws the lands into the hands of speculators and corporations. If you are working for the interest of your State, why not seek to throw these lands open to bona fide settlers?

Mr. GAMBLE. In answer to that I will say to the gentleman that we are anxious to have our full quota of land that was donated to the State for educational purposes. The land will be certified to the State and then it will be opened to actual settlers by the State.

Mr. LOUD. Of course the gentleman understands the working of the new law. If I were one of those land sharks and knew that this bill was going to pass, I would cover that land in an hour.

Mr. SAYERS. How?

Mr. LOUD. Why, I would cover it through the State, by making an application. There is not one of these land agents who has not applications on hand.

Mr. PICKLER. Under our constitution this land can not be sold at less than $10 an acre.

Mr. SAYERS. I understand that this bill passes the land to the State for educational purposes.

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. And I suppose that the State has already passed laws looking to the protection of the lands given to it for that purpose?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir; they are protected in every way; so that it would not be possible for "land sharks" or anybody else to get them, as suggested by the gentleman from California.

Mr. LOUD. How many acres are there in this body?

Mr. GAMBLE. Twenty-eight thousand.

Mr. LOUD. Will that exceed the amount given to the State?

Mr. GAMBLE. No, sir; we are short eighty or ninety thousand acres.

Mr. PICKLER. I will say further that under our constitution this land can not be sold to anyone until it brings $10 an acre for the benefit of the State.

Mr. LOUD. Does the gentleman mean 80,000 acres after this?

Mr. GAMBLE. Without this.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GAMBLE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNLOADING OF VESSELS.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 661) to amend section 2880 fixing time for vessels to unload.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2880 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2880. Whenever any merchandise shall be imported into any port of the United States from any foreign port, in any vessel, at the expiration of ten working days if the vessel is less than 500 tons register, and within fifteen working days if it is of 500 tons register and less than 1,000, and within twenty working days if it is of 1,000 tons register and less than 1,500, and within twenty-five working days if it is of 1,500 tons register and upward, not including legal holidays and days when the condition of the weather prevents the unloading of the vessel with safety to its cargo, after the time within which the report of the master of any vessel is required to be made to the collector of the district, if there is found any merchandise other than has been reported for some other district or some foreign port, the collector shall take possession thereof; but with the consent of the owner or consignee of any merchandise, or with the consent of the owner or master of the vessel in which the same may be imported, the merchandise may be taken possession of by the collector after one day's notice to the collector of the district. All merchandise so taken shall be delivered pursuant to the order of the collector of the district, for which a certificate or receipt shall be granted."

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. The report of Senator FRYE on this bill is at the desk, if any gentleman desires to hear it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill is all right.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. This bill has been submitted to the leader of the majority. [Laughter.] It is a public bill, and it has received the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Navigation.

Mr. PICKLER. I reserve the right to object until we hear the report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following report of the Senate Committee on Commerce:

The Committee on Commerce, to which was referred Senate bill No. 661, report as follows:

The object of this bill is to provide sufficient time for vessels from foreign ports, especially sailing vessels, to discharge their cargoes.

Its enactment has become necessary on account of the increase in the tonnage of vessels since the passage of the present law.

The present statute was enacted in 1790, when vessels of 800 tons—the maximum named in the law—were of extreme size. Since then, however, vessels have more than trebled in tonnage. Ships of 2,500 tons are common, and many exceed 3,000 net register. For such vessels the fifteen days allowed by law for the discharge of their cargoes is entirely inadequate. This bill provides the needed remedy.

This bill is moreover an improvement upon the present law, in that it substitutes for the word "burden" the term "register" to denote the official tonnage, which is fixed when the vessel is built, and is not only stated in her papers but indelibly carved upon her main beam, as required by law.

The bill moreover remedies the indefinite language "working days" in the present law, substituting therefor the more precise expression "excepting legal holidays and days so cold or stormy that they absolutely prevent the unloading of the vessel with safety to the cargo." The law of 1790, now in force, excepts only "Sundays and the Fourth of July," the only holidays then authorized. Treasury regulations have since excepted "rainy days and holidays," but it would manifestly be better to avail ourselves of the present opportunity and have them covered by Congressional enactment.

The provision as to weather is necessary, as certain cargoes can not be safely exposed while the temperature is below the freezing point.

The enactment of the bill is needed particularly for large sailing vessels loaded with coarse, bulky cargoes, which can not be discharged within the time now allowed by law, such as nitrates, etc., which are usually discharged at the rate of about 100 tons per day.

Its enactment into law, therefore, will be for the benefit of the commerce of the country at large, without detriment to the interests of the United States. The committee recommend an amendment, and as amended that it pass.

Mr. PICKLER (before the reading was concluded). I do not ask for the further reading of the report.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTLETT of New York, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 3538, corresponding with the Senate bill just passed, be laid on the table.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. TRACEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2) disposing of two condemned cannon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to supply the First Regiment of Infantry of the Illinois National Guard with two condemned cannon, to be placed at the entrance to their armory at Michigan boulevard and Sixteenth street, Chicago, Ill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs to strike out in lines 5 and 6, the words "mounted on wheels," was read.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1846) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate condemned cannon to Custer Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Leavenworth, Kans., and Mathies Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Burlington, Iowa.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate two condemned cannon to Custer Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Leavenworth, Kans.; and that two condemned cannon be donated to Mathies Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Burlington, Iowa: Provided, That the condemned cannon herein mentioned are available for the purposes stated and can, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, be spared without detriment to the public interests: And provided further, That the Government shall not incur any expense in handling or transporting said cannon.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATHERINE S. M'CARTNEY.

Mr. GROW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4528) granting a pension to Katherine S. McCartney, widow of William H. McCartney.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Katherine S. McCartney, widow of William H. McCartney, late captain First Massachusetts Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read, as follows:

In the last line of the bill strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty."

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I ask for the reading of the report in this case.

The report (by Mr. Wood) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4528) granting a pension to Katherine S. McCartney, beg leave to submit the following report, and to recommend that the bill do pass, with an amendment striking out the word "fifty," in line 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The soldier enlisted April 19, 1861, and was honorably discharged October 19, 1864, as captain Battery A, First Massachusetts Light Artillery. The proof shows that he was in the artillery brigade hospital of the Sixth Army Corps from June 14 to June 23, 1864, with acute rheumatism. One of his comrades in the service states he suffered with rheumatic attacks after that time during his service, and after his return home. His associates in business and acquaintances testify to his having frequent attacks from 1880 to 1893 of severe rheumatic pains in his limbs and in the region of his heart, and the physicians that attended him in his last illness in May, 1894, testify that he was suffering from indigestion complicated with rheumatic gout and valvular trouble of the heart, which was the direct cause of his death.

Appended is a statement as to his service.

Military record of William H. McCartney, captain Battery A, First Massachusetts Light Artillery, late of Wilkesbarre, Pa.

When the rebellion came he was a Boston lawyer and Lieutenant of the Boston Light Artillery, a volunteer battery which had been in existence many years. It went into the three months' service, at one hour's notice, April 19, 1861, and reenlisted for three years, and was honorably discharged October 19, 1864.

Captain McCartney served in Franklin's Division and in the Sixth Corps in the battles of West Point, Mechanicsville, Gaines Mill, Charley City Cross Roads, Malvern Hill, Second Bull Run, Crampton's Gap, Antietam, Fredericksburg (December, 1862, and May, 1863), Marys Station, Mine Run, Saunders House, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Weldon Railroad, Winchester, Fishers Creek. He was frequently commended in general orders for gallantry.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 23, 1896.

It gives me great pleasure to state that I have known Captain McCartney's military history personally since the fall of 1861, and that I have served in the Sixth Army Corps with him three years. During our service in the Sixth Corps I have seen Captain McCartney's battery engaged in every battle of the Army of the Potomac. The intelligence, skill, and bravery with which it was served by him elicited the admiration of all his superior officers and rendered the battery a favorite one in the corps. At the battle of Salem Heights Captain McCartney was under my command and was assigned to the most exposed part of the line. The coolness and skill of Captain McCartney that day saved our line from being broken, when to break any portion of it was sure defeat to the entire corps.

On the occasion he won and received the warmest praise from the division commander, General Brooks, and from the lamented General Sedgwick. On all occasions his battery could be relied upon as being always ready for action or review. I believe Captain McCartney to be worthy of any reward for his services during the war that the Government can bestow on him.

JOS. J. BARTLETT.

Late Brevet Major-General U. S. V.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 18, 1896.

It affords me pleasure to bear testimony to the services of Capt. W. H. McCartney, formerly of the First Massachusetts Battery of Light Artillery, who was attached to the Sixth Corps, Army of the Potomac, during the eventful campaign of 1864, from the Wilderness to Petersburg. Being frequently detailed to act with my division (Third, of the Sixth Corps), I had ample means of witnessing his ability as an officer, which was such as to render his battery one of the most efficient, while his gallantry secured him the confidence and approval of his superior officers. It was while acting with my division at Spottsylvania Court-House, May 9, 1864, Major-General Sedgwick was killed in his battery, and Brig. Gen. W. H. Morris, commanding First Brigade, was wounded. I would also add my high personal regard for Captain McCartney, with my best wishes as a brother soldier.

JAMES B. RICKETTS,

Major First Artillery, Brevet Major-General of Volunteers.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST DIVISION, SIXTH CORPS,
Winchester, Va., September 20, 1864.

GENERAL: I take peculiar pleasure in commending to your favor Capt. W. H. McCartney, Battery A, First Massachusetts Artillery, whose conspicuous gallantry and meritorious services in every battle in which the Sixth Corps has been engaged since 1861 has earned for him the highest respect from his commanders. His eminent services at the battle of Winchester, September 14, 1864, where he gallantly fought and disabled a battery that, by a gallant flank fire, seriously impeded the advance of this command, are specially deserving commendation.

During the campaign of 1864, commencing with the battle of the Wilderness, Captain McCartney's services were most marked and meritorious, and by the lamented Generals Sedgwick and Russell, who were both killed at his battery, were always referred to in terms of the highest praise. I consider that the valuable and continuous services of Captain McCartney entitle him to prompt promotion and reward. I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANK WHEATON,

Brevet Major-General, United States Volunteers, Major Second United States Cavalry.

THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL, ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I trust the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] will give us some explanation in regard to this bill. What special reasons are there for its passage?

Mr. GROW. This soldier left his widow barely property enough to pay his debts, and she needs this pension in order to save what little remnant of property she can from sale. As the report shows, this man was a gallant soldier.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Would not the widow be entitled to anything under the general law?

Mr. GROW. This bill proposes to grant her the pension to which she would be entitled under the general law by reason of the rank of her husband. Her claim was rejected at the Pension Office on the ground that the evidence did not show conclusively that the soldier had not rheumatism before entering the service. Yet he served gallantly for three years, was in every battle of the Potomac, and was honorably discharged. In 1862, while in the service, he was in hospital five days with an acute attack of rheumatism; and his death, according to the testimony of the surgeon, was caused by rheumatism of the heart.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. When did he die?

Mr. GROW. Two years ago.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Twenty-nine years after the war he died of the disease which confined him to the hospital five days during the war?

Mr. GROW. He died of rheumatic disease of the heart.

Mr. LOUD. I wish to inquire whether this woman is now receiving any pension?

Mr. GROW. No, sir.

Mr. LOUD. Why not?

Mr. GROW. Her application for pension was rejected at the Pension Office on the ground that the testimony was not conclusive that the soldier was not subject to rheumatism when he entered the service.

Mr. LOUD. Was not this claim rejected at the Pension Office because the woman had too much property to entitle her to receive a pension?

Mr. GROW. She did not apply under the act of 1890, but under the general law, for the pension to which she would be entitled in accordance with the rank of her husband.

Mr. LOUD. Why did she not apply under the act of 1890?

Mr. GROW. Because under that act she could only receive a pension of $8 a month.

Mr. LOUD. And are there not four or five hundred thousand widows in the country who can get only that?

Mr. GROW. As her husband died of disease contracted in the service she was not obliged to apply under the act of 1890.

Mr. LOUD. But she could not prove that her husband's death was the result of disease contracted in the service?

Mr. GROW. I have already stated that this man, according to the testimony of the physician who attended him, died of rheumatic trouble of the heart; and two of his comrades testify that he was troubled with rheumatism at the time of the battle of Fredericksburg and was in the hospital for five days in 1862 with an acute attack of rheumatism. Allow me to repeat, that he served during three years of the war, and was in every battle of the Potomac.

Mr. LOUD. Permit me to say to the gentleman that I was in the hospital for four weeks during the war with an attack of rheumatism, and if there is a doctor on the face of this earth, if I were to die to-morrow, who would undertake to say that my death was the result of that army service then he ought to be incarcerated in an insane asylum.

Mr. GROW. But if the doctor found that the cause of the gentleman's death was from injury to his vital powers resulting from that service he would have no ground for complaint.

Mr. LOUD. This very assumption, thirty years after the service was rendered, that every soldier who dies at this late day dies from the results of disease contracted in the Army or from his army service is a simple absurdity.

Mr. GROW. In this case the gentleman should remember that his own companions, the associates of this officer, testified that he was suffering with this disease; that he had an attack of it frequently every few years apart, but they were gradually growing worse and worse on each occasion. The result was that finally he died of that trouble; and it is traced back through his own companions, by their testimony, to his service in the Army.

Mr. LOUD. I shall not object to the consideration of the case. It has probably as much merit as hundreds of others that have been passed in this House. But it is a bill that ought not to be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a few remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. No; I do not object, but simply desire to discuss it briefly.

As I understand it, this is another claim for pension to an officer not of the rank of brigadier-general or general, but as low down as a captain. It seems that legislation will after a while reach the privates, if any are left. I would just like to know if there are any privates left in the Union Army at all. Is it a fact that every private who ever served in the Union Army has been brevetted as an officer? It certainly seems so from the cases that are brought before this House. We might fairly judge that to be a fact from the records that were made here. But few have descended so low yet as to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill to raise the pension of a private soldier or the widow of a private soldier. All of the efforts seem to be for the officers and their widows; and I am very much surprised that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has got so low in the scale as captain. I wonder that he, too, did not make the application in behalf of some more distinguished officer; for instance, a colonel or general.

But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to some legislation that was passed here during this session in reference to this very subject. No longer ago than last week, I believe it was, a bill was brought up here and considered to place on the retired list a lieutenant of the Navy, named Quackenbush, and I would like to call your attention, and the attention of the House, to the record which has been presented and made a part of the official records of this House as a reason for placing him on the retired list. I am not surprised, in view of the reasons that have been submitted in this case, that enormous pensions should be asked for officers and widows on equally flimsy grounds. As to the bill under consideration, I have no particular objection; at the same time, it may not be entirely deserving or meritorious.

Mr. GROW. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? Do I understand the gentleman to make objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. No; I have made no objection to the consideration as yet, but only wished to call attention to a specimen of Republican legislation.

But, Mr. Speaker, I started to cite some of the reasons why this lieutenant was placed upon the retired list as I gather them from the records in the case. In the first place, we find right at the very threshold of it that he was dismissed from the Naval Academy for drunkenness. That is one reason, I suppose, why he should be placed on the retired list. That is, at least, given as one of the reasons in the report, or at least it appears in the RECORD.

In the second place, he was appointed a lieutenant in the Navy at the outbreak of the war. That of course might be a good reason to put him on the retired list. In the third place, including many other different orders, eight in all, as shown by the record, he was put on waiting orders at eight different times during the war. That is, he was found to be incapable, or utterly worthless, or something of that sort, and he was put on waiting orders until something was found that he was capable of doing. Now, what do sensible men think of such recommendations?

The fourth reason for putting him on the retired list was that there was no evidence before the committee that he was ever in a battle or received honorable mention during the war, or at least this appears as a part of his record and should have prevented it. Yet that is a strong reason for putting him on the retired list! There is not a word of evidence that he ever smelt powder or heard a gun fired in battle or ever saw the smoke of battle. And yet by an overwhelming vote he was put on the retired list. If you regard that as a good reason you are welcome to it, and welcome to the responsibility for such action.

In the fifth place, upon an examination for promotion, he failed to pass before two successive and independent examining boards. It seems that he had great merit because he failed to pass two successive examinations for promotion. That is another reason why you seem to have retired him, I suppose. In the sixth place, under the general law he was finally put on the retired list. Then comes a seventh reason for putting him on—Congress intervenes and had him restored to the active list.

Congress had to come along and exercise its power to put him on duty. In the eighth place, he was again dismissed for drunkenness. That is another good reason, apparently, why the claim is brought up here and, under whip and spur, the application is granted to put him on the retired list. In the ninth place, Congress again restored him to the active list, and then put him on the retired list. I only call your attention to these facts—that you are moving like greyhounds to pass such claims as this while you are neglecting the claims of the honest soldiers and the widows and orphans of the old soldiers. You are neglecting that great mass of claims existing against the United States that come from your War Claims Committee, claims that are costing the Government twenty or thirty thousand dollars a year, but they are never brought forward. There is no relief for such claimants.

Now, I do not know but what the claim that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] has brought forward here is a meritorious one. I do not propose to even vote against it, because I do not think he has ever stood up here in advocacy of a claim unless it possessed some merit. But I just want to call the attention of the House again to the fact that it seems to be the paramount object of the sitting of this Congress to grant pensions to bummers, deserters, and coffee coolers, if the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me that remark, and to pass by meritorious claims. I just wanted to show the spirit which actuated you, it seems, in putting this Lieutenant Quackenbush upon the retired list. Here is the bill of fare. It is in the RECORD. You can look at it. He has never been in a battle. He has several times been dismissed for drunkenness. He has never passed an examination for promotion; was put under waiting orders eight times, and yet you come here with great big crocodile tears in your eyes and ask that this great, grand man be put on the retired list. If you can stand it, I can. That is only a sample of Republican legislation.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will ask the gentleman why he was not here to make that speech against the Quackenbush bill when it came up, instead of making it after the bill passed?

Mr. TALBERT. I was here, but as usual the gag law was applied, and the previous question was ordered, just as you Republicans do things to keep men from expressing their views. That is the reason why I did not do it, and that is the reason why I rose in my seat to-day to say what I have said. It is a bitter dose. You would not swallow it the other day, and you have got to swallow it now, however nauseating it may be, and I hope it will so purge you as to beget some fairness and justice into you.

Mr. GROW. There has been no gag law on this bill. The gentleman has not opposed this bill, and I am very much obliged to him. I ask for a vote.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROW, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JOHN CASTER.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest that we commence on privates. We have come down as low as a captain.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I have a bill pensioning a private. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5854) granting a pension to John Caster.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Caster, late a private in Company A, Thirty-third Missouri Enrolled Militia Cavalry.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5854) granting a pension to John Caster, having carefully examined and considered the facts presented, respectfully report as follows:

John Caster enlisted July 25, 1861, as a private in Company A, Thirty-third Missouri Enrolled Militia Cavalry, and served with such organization until November 25, 1864, when discharged.

He filed a claim for pension July 18, 1874, alleging gunshot wound of left thigh received in battle near Camden Point, Platte County, Mo., July 3, 1864.

The War Department records fail to show that the organization to which claimant belonged was ever mustered into the United States service, and the claim for pension was rejected on that ground and on the ground that the evidence in the case, completing it, was not on file before July 4, 1874, the claim having been completed November 10, 1874, as shown on the brief of the claim.

The adjutant-general of Missouri says the muster-in roll shows John Caster, private, Company A, Thirty-third Enrolled Missouri Militia, mustered in at Breckenridge, Mo., July 23, 1862. The Third Auditor reports that John Caster, jr., is borne upon the rolls of Company A, Thirty-third Enrolled Missouri Militia, as enrolled July 23, 1862, ordered into service September 26, 1864, and returned from duty November 24, 1864.

Maj. S. P. Cox, of same regiment, testified (filed September 5, 1890) that he was present when John Caster received wound, and saw the wound soon after he was shot, July 3, 1864, in left hip, in a battle with bushwhackers under Thrallkill and Thornton.

Capt. Daniel Lebo filed affidavit December 7, 1874, that he was in command of Company A, Thirty-third Enrolled Missouri Militia, at the time, and John Caster received a gunshot wound in left hip. John V. Johnston and Levi M. Mullins, comrades, also testify to the incurrence of the wound as alleged.

Dr. William H. Polmsbee, Gallatin, Mo., filed affidavit November 10, 1874, that he treated John Caster for gunshot wound of left hip, received while a member of Company A, Thirty-third Missouri Enrolled Militia.

Dr. McDonald testified March 21, 1896:

"I have known John Caster about fourteen years and treated him for catarrh and heart affection. The heart's action very weak and irregular; slight exercise produces dyspnea. He suffers from nasal catarrh, which has affected and changed his voice. He has had gunshot wound of left hip at junction of sacrum and ilium. The ball passed downward in an oblique direction and out at a point 10 inches from point of entrance, causing adhesion at both points and limitation of motion of leg as result of injury to gluteal and femoral muscles. The disabilities have been permanent since I have known him and totally disable him for performing manual labor of any kind.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment, adding, after the word "Cavalry," in line 7, the words "and pay him a pension of $12 per month"; also amend by spelling the name "Caster" instead of "Castor," in line 6, and also amend title of bill by spelling the name "Caster" instead of "Castor."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee, set forth in the report, were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, the title of the bill was amended, so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to John Caster."

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed was laid on the table.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I move to take up the naval appropriation bill as reported from the Senate, with the Senate amendments, and that the House disagree to the Senate amendments entire and request a conference; and that the bill, with the Senate amendments, be printed.

Before asking for a vote on that I desire to make a few observations to the House in connection with this bill. I will not state in detail the character of the amendments, which are quite numerous, but I desire to call the attention of the House particularly, in my request for a disagreement with the Senate, to the action of that body in reducing the provision for battle ships from four to two. The members of the House will remember very well the circumstances, and the condition of the public mind, and the conditions prevailing in the Senate and House of Representatives at the time when the naval appropriation bill was brought into the House, where provision was made for the construction of 4 first-class battle ships and 15 torpedo boats. I desire to emphasize at this time the very remarkable change of attitude on the part of our coordinate legislative branch, which has resulted in the cutting down of one-half the provision for the strengthening of the Navy made in the bill as it passed the House.

At the time the four battle ships were ordered, were voted for by the House, we found ourselves in a situation in which the public mind had been very greatly inflamed and excited by the discussion of "wars and rumors of wars" in various directions; and it is only fair to say that the Senate of the United States by action and speeches had probably contributed as much as any element that affected public sentiment or excited the public mind in regard to the strained character of our relations with several of the great nations of the earth.

It is within easy recollection of the members of this body that great excitement was produced by a message of the President of the United States in regard to Venezuela, which contained some very remarkable expressions as affecting our possible future relations with the greatest maritime power on the globe. The action of this House will be remembered in support of that message, and also the fact that the Senate of the United States, after some deliberation, followed the action of the House in what seemed to be a very strong indorsement of the most emphatic expressions of the President's message in the line of aggressive assertion of the duty and disposition of the United States to exercise its power in regard to the disposition of matters on this hemisphere outside of our own territory.

So strong was that disposition, so strong seemed to be the purpose of Congress, that our country should take a more prominent and aggressive attitude in the disposition of the great international affairs of the world that, one after another, remarkable propositions were introduced in either branch of Congress, all of them looking toward a more strenuous declaration of our military position among the nations of the earth than had ever before been assumed; and, as I say, in that direction the Senate of the United States took a very conspicuous part. I found in looking over the RECORD and public documents of this session a number of extraordinarily warlike measures brought before that body, seeming to show the earnest desire of the Senate that we should put ourselves in a position to maintain the unwontedly aggressive attitude to which it seemed the desire of so many people to commit our Government. Among them, on December 18, 1895, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] introduced a bill (S. 1043), which was read twice and referred to the committee, providing—

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strengthen the military armament by adding thereto, equipped for use, 1,000,000 infantry rifles, 1,000 guns for field artillery, and not exceeding 5,000 heavy gun for fortifications, to be procured by manufacture in the arsenals, or by contract for manufacture, or by direct purchase in this country or elsewhere, according to the discretion of the President, who shall conform, when practicable, without undue delay, to the methods prescribed for making contracts and purchases by existing laws.

Sec. 2. That the sum of $100,000,000 is hereby appropriated to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

And so exigent was the matter apparently regarded by the framer of this bill that the President was authorized to procure this war material—$100,000,000 worth of war material—either in this country or "elsewhere," if we could not produce it fast enough by domestic manufacture to meet what seemed to be regarded as the exigency of the situation of this country at that time.

On the 8th of January, 1896, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] introduced a bill (S. 1404) which came with a recommendation from the Navy Department, which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, providing that the President of the United States should be authorized, whenever in his judgment an exigency should arise that warranted it, to enlist an unlimited number of men in the Navy of the United States for the term of two years and to appoint an unlimited number of officers not above the grade of lieutenant, who should be found necessary to command the men thus brought into the service. It provided further that the President should authorize the Secretary of the Navy to call into requisition the Naval Militia, and to charter "any private vessel or vessels which may be required for the transportation of troops or other purposes, at such rates of compensation and upon such terms and conditions as may be deemed proper for the protection of the public interest."

On the same day the public records show that the Naval Committee of the Senate addressed a communication to the Secretary of the Navy, asking him if he thought that "six battle ships" should be authorized at the present session. It was in this form:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether, in his opinion, it would be advantageous to the naval service to now contract for six battle ships instead of for the two at present authorized, on the basis of the bids now before the Navy Department, modified as might be, in the opinion of the Department, to the public interest.

In pursuance of the Secretary's affirmative reply, Mr. HALE, on the 19th of December, introduced a bill (S. 1058) providing for constructing "by contract 6 seagoing coast line battle ships" of about 11,000 tons each, and 25 torpedo boats.

On the 29th of January Senator MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted an elaborate report in regard to our relation to the conditions existing in the Island of Cuba, accompanying which was a concurrent resolution, No. 19, providing as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the present deplorable war in the Island of Cuba has reached a magnitude that concerns all civilized nations to the extent that it should be conducted, if unhappily it is longer to continue, on those principles and laws of warfare that are acknowledged to be obligatory upon civilized nations when engaged in open hostilities, including the treatment of captives who are enlisted in either army, due respect to cartels for exchange of prisoners and for other military purposes, truces and flags of truce, the provision of proper hospitals and hospital supplies, and services to the sick and wounded of either army.

Resolved further, That this representation of the views and opinions of Congress be sent to the President; and if he concurs therein that he will, in a friendly spirit, use the good offices of this Government to the end that Spain shall be requested to accord to the armies with which it is engaged in war the rights of belligerents, as the same are recognized under the laws of nations.

On the 20th of February Senator CALL submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute:

That the United States recognize the independence of the Republic of Cuba, proclaimed at Jimaguayua under the Presidency of Cisneros, and under the provincial constitution and form of government proclaimed at Jimaguayua in May, 1895.

Senator WHITE submitted another amendment, as follows:

That the Senate contemplates with solicitude and profound regret the sufferings and destruction accompanying the civil conflict now in progress in Cuba. While the United States have not interfered and will not, unless their vital interests so demand, interfere with existing colonies and dependencies of any European Government on this hemisphere, nevertheless our people have never disguised and do not now conceal their sympathy for all those who struggle patriotically, as do the Cubans now in revolt, to exercise, maintain, and preserve the right of self-government. Nor can we ignore our exceptional and close relations to Cuba by reason of geographical proximity and our consequent grave interest in all questions affecting the control or well-being of that island. We trust that the executive department, to whose investigation and care our diplomatic relations have been committed, will, at as early a date as the facts will warrant, recognize the belligerency of those who are maintaining themselves in Cuba in armed opposition to Spain, and that the influence and offices of the United States may be prudently, peacefully, and effectively exerted to the end that Cuba may be enabled to establish a permanent government of her own choice.

On March 2, 1896, resolutions were reported by the committee in lieu of these, which provided as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That, in the opinion of Congress, a state of public war exists in Cuba, the parties to which are entitled to belligerent rights, and the United States should observe a strict neutrality between the belligerents.

Resolved, That Congress deplores the destruction of life and property caused by the war now waging in that island, and believing that the only permanent solution of the contest, equally in the interest of Spain, the people of Cuba, and other nations, would be in the establishment of a government by the choice of the people of Cuba, it is the sense of Congress that the Government of the United States should use its good offices and friendly influence to that end.

Resolved, That the United States has not intervened in struggles between any European governments and their colonies on this continent; but from the very close relations between the people of the United States and those of Cuba, in consequence of its proximity and the extent of the commerce between the two peoples, the present war is entailing such losses upon the people of the United States that Congress is of opinion that the Government of the United States should be prepared to protect the legitimate interests of our citizens by intervention, if necessary.

During the discussion of these various propositions the expressions called out in the Senate were also of a remarkably aggressive character. I find that on the 27th of February the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], in an argument as to the duty of the United States in regard to the insurrection in the Island of Cuba, used language which was reported by the newspapers to have caused great excitement throughout Spain, where it was said to have been interpreted by the press and in Government circles as indicating serious hostility on the part of the legislative branches of the Government of the United States toward a nation with whom we were and still are holding amicable relations. He said, as reported in the RECORD:

Of all those vast dominions won by blood, won through torture and fire, there remains to-day to this toothless old wolf—the single Island of Cuba. And Spain to-day, like Giant Despair in that wonderful picture of Bunyan, almost helpless, sits at the door of the dark cave of despotism and grins with impotent rage at the procession of splendid Republics that march on in the progress toward civilization and liberty.

Meaning Spain—

A little later, in the same debate, he is reported as saying:

We, Mr. President, are confronted now with one overwhelming, overruling, absolute, and determinate question in this debate. Shall we, the great exemplar of republican institutions throughout the world, declare that in our opinion the people of Cuba are able to maintain their independence and have achieved it? Are we to wait until that island is desolated by fire and sword? Are we, a Christian and God-fearing people, to stand silent and dumb while the Spanish governor, called a general, declares that he intends to pen up the people of Cuba and butcher them into subjection to the Spanish throne? Sir, if we do it, God will curse us. If we do this thing and stand here until a desert has been made of that splendid island, you may be certain that the time will come when there will be retribution upon us as a people, because we have not been true to the task assigned us by Providence, because we have not cherished the legacy of self-government as bequeathed to us by our fathers. [Applause in the galleries.]

Perhaps if it were parliamentary, Mr. Speaker, I might say that the RECORD shows that following this remarkable declaration the Senator from whom I have just made this quotation voted to strike out half of the provision made by the House bill for strengthening the Navy of the United States to help to maintain that dignified attitude of our Government which he seemed to be so desirous of asserting.

Senator ALLEN of Nebraska offered a resolution providing—

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to issue a proclamation recognizing the Republic of Cuba as it exists under the constitution and form of government proclaimed at Jimaguayua, under President Cisneros, in the month of May, A. D. 1895, as a free and independent nation, and according the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of said Republic all the rights and privileges accorded to the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Government of Spain.

In advocating it he went on to say:

Mr. President, I would go further than these resolutions propose to go. I would not only recognize the belligerent rights of Cuba, but I would establish her as one of the republics of this earth. If need be, I would muster every man in the United States and every war vessel necessary to the accomplishment of the task, and I would erect on the ashes and ruins of Spain's control of that island a republic modeled after the institutions of our own. Sir, I would not only do that, but if I had it in my power I would admit the minister of the Republic of Cuba, feeble as it may be, unimportant in the eyes of the world as it may be, to the diplomatic circles at this capital upon terms of equality with the minister from Spain.

Mr. President, one word more. It is said that the action proposed is liable to involve us in war. We can not shirk responsibility because war may follow as a consequence of the discharge of our duties. The rule of Spain over Cuba has not been actuated from motives of humanity to those people, but simply for lust and gain. When Spain becomes convinced that republican institutions upon this continent mean more than mere empty declarations; that it means the United States of America will unfold its flag broad enough to cover the aspirations of the people of Cuba and adjoining countries, then the question of the independence of that people will be settled, and we shall have nothing to do but to adjust the financial results.

And, Mr. Speaker, after quoting that utterance, if it were parliamentary I might go on to say that in the line of "mustering every man and every war vessel of the United States" that Senator is reported to have voted to strike out all the provisions for battle ships in the House naval appropriation bill. [Laughter.]

On the 28th of February Senator SHERMAN of Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, one of the most distinguished and venerated statesmen of the Republic and a Nestor in the halls of legislation, in a speech in favor of the resolutions declaring the duty of our Government in regard to insurrectionary disturbances within the dominion of a foreign power, namely, Spain, among other seemingly aggressive suggestions, used the following language:

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I would not engage in this debate but that I, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, wish to share in the responsibility of the members of that committee for the consequences that may come from the adoption of the resolution which I hope is about to pass. I do not disguise the dangers, the possibilities of hostile movements into which our Government may be drawn. I know that the people of Spain are a sensitive, a proud, a gallant people, and will not submit to what they consider to be an injustice without resentment and resistance. At the same time my convictions are strong, made stronger every day, that the condition of affairs in Cuba is such that the intervention of the United States must sooner or later be given to put an end to crimes that are almost beyond description.

Mr. President, we have seen that this actual tragedy has already commenced. I read in a morning paper—it is open to all—the account of about the first battle which has been fought there since the arrival of this general, and the murder of unoffending prisoners. I wish to say upon my own responsibility that if this line of conduct is pursued by Spain in Cuba, and the people of the United States are informed of its conditions as they are narrated daily in the public papers, there is no earthly power that will prevent the people of the United States from going over to that island, running all over its length and breadth, and driving out from the little Island of Cuba these barbarous robbers and imitators of the worst men who ever lived in the world. [Applause in the galleries.]

Sir, whatever may be the result of the adoption of this measure, I desire to take my share of responsibility in connection with it, and with a confidence in the judgment of the Almighty Ruler of the Universe, I believe it will be wise if we can assist, and all the other nations of America concur, in securing to the people of Cuba the same liberties we now enjoy. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. SPEAKER, if it were strictly parliamentary, I would say that the RECORD shows that the Senator voted to strike out two of the battle ships from the provision made by the House to enable the United States to maintain an aggressive attitude, if it should be necessary to do so, in the affairs of the world.

On the 23d of March, 1896, the Senator from Texas, Mr. MILLS, introduced a joint resolution in these words:

That the President of the United States is hereby directed to request the Government of Spain to authorize the people of Cuba, subject to the sovereignty of Spain, to institute such local government as they may wish, and invest it with such powers as they may think necessary to secure to the people of Cuba the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

SEC. 2. That in case Spain shall refuse to grant to the inhabitants of Cuba the rightful power of local self-government, then the President of the United States is hereby directed to take possession of the Island of Cuba with the military and naval forces of the United States, and hold the same until the people of Cuba can organize a government deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed, and arm and equip such military force as may be necessary to protect them from invasion.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I make the point that the debate in which the gentleman is indulging is obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is the rule?

Mr. QUIGG. The rule which provides that the members of one House of Congress shall not criticize the proceedings of another.

Mr. BOUTELLE. When the gentleman from New York shall have served here somewhat longer than he has, he will have learned that in order to escape all possible strictures under that rule it is only necessary for me to say that "if" such a thing as I was about to present to the House had transpired somewhere, and "if" it should prove that in the Senate of the United States or in any other legislative body of that high character on a certain occasion some Senator from a State, even from Texas, had introduced a measure of this kind, then I could state to the House that the measure read somewhat in this form—proceeding to read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has made the point of order. Has the gentleman from Maine anything to say with regard to it?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to state that it is a very familiar point of order, one which is very frequently made here, but almost always made by very new members. [Laughter.] And I desire to say to the Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the impression that the point of order is well taken. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Very well. Then I will suggest to the Chair that all that it is necessary for me to do, as has been the practice ever since Congress was first organized, is to state a hypothetical case, which I will proceed to do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the reason of the rule—

Mr. BOUTELLE (interposing). I ask a ruling as to whether I am not entitled to read from the RECORD anything that has transpired in either branch of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not; but he will hear the gentleman from Maine on that point.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the Speaker rule that a member of this House, in debate, has not a right to read from the printed record of the debates in the Senate what has been stated in that body? I would like to have a ruling, and I wait for the Speaker to decide.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will not be a ruling for a moment or two.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio on the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the matter is to be debated I want to say a word myself.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I take the ground that so far the gentleman from Maine has not transgressed the rule of the House. I can not put my hand on the rule at this instant, but my recollection of it is that the criticism of another legislative branch of the Government, or of a coordinate branch of the Government, which the rule contemplates, does not consist, and can not be construed to consist, in merely reading the action of the other body and quoting the utterances of the members of that body. I understand that the criticism must be something that would provoke personal reply, something that is in the nature of a criticism, either of the whole body or of the individual members of the body.

Now, I do not like to have it ruled, unless it is right, that we may not say on this floor that the Senate has defeated some bill of the House or that the Senate has put some amendments upon some bill of the House. As I understand the logic of the argument of the gentleman from Maine—and certainly he made it very clear—he was pointing out that the Senate at one time seemed to concur in a certain line of opinion in regard to the necessities of the military arm of the Government, and at another time had receded from that position. I hope that that may not be held to be an improper line of criticism.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But, Mr. Speaker, was not the gentleman personally criticising certain members of the Senate?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did not think so.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I did.

The SPEAKER. This is a matter of considerable importance and one which should be very carefully presented.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is a matter that has been presented a great many times. The idea that a bill can be passed by this House, sent to the Senate, acted upon in the Senate and amended there, sent back to the House, and that we in discussing that bill are estopped from citing the record of the votes in the Senate and the recorded expressions of Senators in debating the measure, is so monstrous a proposition that I will not dignify it by discussing it. I simply say that in any debate in which I hold the floor I have a right under the rules as a member of the House to read from the records of any legislative body on the face of this earth, and peculiarly the right to read from the records of the legislative body which is coordinate with this; and that no possible point of order can be made except upon such an assault on the motives or the integrity of a member of the coordinate branch as would involve, under well-understood parliamentary usage, the liability of provoking personal animosities or recriminations. The rule is perfectly plain.

Why, Mr. Speaker, this infantile point of order would preclude me from quoting from a President's message or from a decision of the Supreme Court. I am amazed that such a proposition should occupy the attention of the House for a moment.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, if I am correct in my view, the members of one House can not refer to proceedings pending between the two Houses in the way of comment. Proceedings, however, of either House as printed in the RECORD become history; and any member may refer to them as history, but without commenting upon them or discussing the reasons why a member of the other body uttered certain sentiments at one time and certain other sentiments at another. The record is history and may be referred to; but comments upon it are, I think, excluded by parliamentary law.

The SPEAKER. The principle involved in the matter now brought to the attention of the House is contained in a statement of Jefferson's Manual which will be found on page 132 of the Digest of the second session of the Fifty-third Congress:

Where the complaint is of words disrespectfully spoken by a member of another House it is difficult to obtain punishment, because of the rules supposed necessary to be observed (as to the immediate noting down of words) for the security of members. Therefore it is the duty of the House, and more particularly of the Speaker, to interfere immediately, and not to permit expressions to go unnoted which may give a ground of complaint to the other House and introduce proceedings and mutual accusations between the two Houses which can hardly be terminated without difficulty and disorder.

If the Chair understood the remarks of the gentleman from Maine, they were, in addition to the reading of matters in the RECORD, criticisms with regard to the personal action of members of the other House and in regard to their votes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to state that the Chair is entirely in error on that point; and I think perhaps he may have been misled by the fact that he was paying more attention apparently to somebody else than he was to the speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine is right. When the gentleman commenced to read, the Chair was paying attention to some other business of the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then if the Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The impression of the Chair was that an expression was used with regard to the vote of a Senator, comparing his vote on a portion of this bill with utterances in which he had indulged in the Senate.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the Chair will be kind enough to refer to the language used, he will find that "the gentleman from Maine" very carefully, very specifically, and very parliamentarily stated that "if it were parliamentary," he might call attention, "if the fact were so and so," to the fact that the gentleman had voted "so and so."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is precisely the same thing.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is for the Chair to decide. I believe I was strictly within the rules. If the Chair does so decide, it is entirely a different ruling from any other decision that I have ever known to be made upon the question.

The SPEAKER. That is the opinion of the Chair, and the thing to be kept in mind by the House and by gentlemen in addressing this body, not for our own sakes particularly, but for the sake of orderly proceedings in public bodies, is that principle which is laid down in this Manual—the principle that there should be in such bodies no such criticism or reference to the members of another and a coordinate body as would be liable to lead to recriminations or disputes.

The reason for this is simple and plain, on reflection. It is that all legislation, in order to become law, must receive the sanction of both Houses. Anything, therefore, which means misunderstanding between the two Houses, like criticism of the person or manner by the members of either branch of those of the other, would be likely to create friction and have a very bad effect upon public legislation. At least that is the theory on which the rule and the construction of the rule to which attention is called is based. And I think everybody will see the soundness and wisdom of it.

The Chair has the impression that the rule certainly goes as far as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a former Speaker of this House [Mr. Grow], and possibly it goes even further under the usages of the House. So far as my personal recollection is concerned, my impression is that allusion to the acts, and especially to the motives, of members, or the criticism of members of the other House, is not permissible here, nor is a criticism of us permitted over there, and the purpose of it is that we may avoid unnecessary ill feeling between the two bodies in the interest of the country and the advancement of legislation. Because where criticism is made of a man where he can not reply it is more irritating than criticism of a man where he can reply. And so the motive for establishing a proper rule to govern our relations with the other body is even stronger than it is for establishing proper relations among ourselves. Now, I have no doubt that the gentleman from Maine will proceed in order. But I think that the remark which came to the attention of the Chair was not strictly in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the Speaker be kind enough to indicate the remark to which he refers?

The SPEAKER. The remark in which the gentleman had undertaken to quote language used in debate in another body and had referred to certain actions of its members.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What?

The SPEAKER. Where the gentleman quoted language used in debate in the Senate and proceeded to compare the language used with the action of a member of that body to show a conflict between them.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What I said was that if it was permissible to do so I should say so and so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman said that if it were parliamentary he would characterize it as so and so.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That if it were parliamentary, I would state how he voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the general rule is plain, and the gentleman will see that that language comes within the spirit of the rule.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman from Maine be permitted to proceed in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania very much, but I do not wish any such privilege to be extended to me. If I can not proceed in a manner that I believe to be strictly in order I do not desire to proceed at all.

Mr. GROW. If the House does not give you permission to proceed you can not proceed anyhow. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no desire to proceed unless I can proceed in what I recognize to be my right under the rule.

If it is ruled by the Chair—and while I recognize all of the fluency and skill of the admonition the Chair administered to me, I do not yet quite catch the idea the Chair had in mind—but if the Chair rules that I am estopped from proceeding, that I have made any infraction of the rules of the House by simply reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a public report of the proceedings of the Senate, then I have no desire to address the House further.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to be a question of what the gentleman from Maine really did say. I ask if it would not be in order to have the stenographer's report read, in order to set the matter clear before the House. Let us have the report of what he did say, and not undertake to argue this question on probabilities, but let us take the facts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too late now to have the words taken down.

Mr. QUIGG. The Speaker has ruled on the point of order, and I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order—

Mr. BOUTELLE. I asked the Speaker to inform me, as a matter of parliamentary inquiry, if the Chair holds that I am forbidden here on the floor of the House to read the language of a joint resolution introduced in the Senate and made a part of the public records of that body?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman is entitled to read it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, that is what I was doing, Mr. Speaker. That is exactly what I was doing, and all that I was doing. Now, I want to have this understood, if the Chair please— [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman— Mr. BOUTELLE. This may be a very laughable matter to some of you gentlemen, but there are some serious aspects of the case which involve the rights of a member on the floor, and I ask the Chair if I may be heard on this question of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already passed upon the question of order, and the Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Maine that all these matters can proceed without difficulty, provided the gentleman bears in mind, as the Chair has no doubt he will, the principles which have been invoked here, and which have been quoted from Jefferson's Manual; and the Chair hopes that the gentleman will proceed in order, under that, as he understands it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I want to ask the Speaker if any man can properly rise under the rules of this House and call a member to order for anything except that which he is saying at the time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that in a case like this, where a matter has been going on in a particular direction, or such criticism as has already been alluded to, and it seems to be going on still further in that direction, if a member rises and asks the judgment of the Chair upon the general topic, that it is the business of the Chair to give it, and the Chair has done so.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then the Chair holds, as I understand—

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made its ruling.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, I desire to find out what I may—

Mr. QUIGG. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow], that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I decline to accept that. I rise to a question of personal privilege, and I desire to ask the Chair if he holds that I am not in order in continuing to read from the bill or joint resolution, from which I was reading verbatim when called to order by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg]?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not hold that the gentleman was out of order in doing that.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then I will proceed to read the rest of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may proceed in order, provided the House so votes on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow].

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Chair stated that I was in order. I was reading from this joint resolution when the gentleman from New York [Mr. Quigg] called me to order. Now, if the Chair says that I have no right to read it I will refrain from reading it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made his ruling, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] moves that the gentleman from Maine be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE (interrupting). I ask the Speaker if I have a right to read—

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will say aye; those opposed, no. The ayes seem to have it; the ayes have it, and the gentleman will proceed in order. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, will the Chair be kind enough to inform me—

The SPEAKER. The Chair sincerely hopes that gentlemen will conduct themselves with regard to this matter in such manner as may conduce to a proper understanding between the two bodies and a proper understanding among ourselves.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the Chair will not admonish the members on my account at all, for I am entirely content with the record made. I want to ask the Speaker now, in order that I may escape the superserviceable zeal of some member on one side of the House or the other, who may think he can distinguish himself by bobbing up in the record of my speech—I want to ask the Speaker (and the Speaker is fully advised upon this matter, because he has ruled on portions of it) whether I am entitled to read the remainder of this concurrent resolution offered in the Senate of the United States?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has liberty to proceed in order.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask the question of the Speaker whether, if I state to the House that I would say a thing—

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, was it voted that I should proceed in order?

The SPEAKER. It was.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If so, I desire to retain the floor. I do not yield to the distinguished gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I retain the floor, Mr. Speaker. I decline to be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the Speaker will be as capable—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to do his duty if he may be permitted to do it.

Mr. BOUTELLE (continuing). As capable of administering the rules with reference to one member as another of the "unruly" delegation from Maine.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do not extend that beyond yourself.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I will continue the reading of the concurrent resolution introduced in the Senate on the 23d of March, 1896, which proceeded as follows:

That the President of the United States is hereby directed to take possession of the Island of Cuba with the military and naval forces of the United States, and hold the same until the people of Cuba can organize a government deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed, and arm and equip such military forces as may be necessary to protect them from invasion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am entirely desirous, in perfect good faith, of adhering to the rules of this House, not only as I understand them but as they may be expounded by the present Speaker of the House; and I ask if there is anything in the rules or in the Speaker's recent holding that precludes or renders it improper for me to read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD language used in the Senate of the United States, which I now purpose to read unless precluded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. On the 30th of March, 1896, the RECORD reports Senator MILLS of Texas as using the following language:

I say again that wherever there are rights there are corresponding duties, and I say the people of the United States owe it to the oppressed and down-trodden people of Cuba to say to Spain: "The time has come when you must take your heel off the necks of the people of Cuba. We are responsible for their slavery; we are responsible for the despotism in that island; we are responsible for every drop of blood that you shed; we are responsible for every dollar's worth of property that your mercenaries have stolen; our consciences and our character as a people are involved in this crime. Cuba has a right to appeal to us, and we intend that you shall give her just government."

Having the responsibility which even an equitable right would give, we should demand of Spain that just government should be given to Cuba. If necessary we should enforce the demand with the whole military strength of the nation.

I would say to Spain: "You can give her local self-government, you can keep your paramount sovereignty over her, but you must protect her people and give them the power to control their domestic affairs. If you do not do it, then I will take possession of the island, and with the armed forces of the United States I will see that they have the opportunity to organize a government and arm themselves for its security, and I will hold it until they are able to stand alone." If Cuba says: "I can not stand alone. I want to go with you. All these powers are ready to spring upon me. Spain will invade me. Perhaps a combination of European powers will combine and assail me. I do not want to stay alone. I want your help—if she says—

"Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried; the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me."

Then, sir, I would say to her in the language of that sweet Irish poet:

"Come, rest in this bosom, my own stricken deer,
Though the herd have fled from thee, thy home is still here;
Here still is the smile that no cloud can o'ercast,
And the heart and the hand all thy own to the last."

"Thou hast called me thy angel in moments of bliss,
And thy angel I'll be 'mid the horrors of this—
Through the furnace, unshrinking, thy steps to pursue,
And shield thee, and save thee, or—perish there too."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask, with every deference to the ruling of the Speaker of the House and to my sensitive friends here, whether it would be in order for me to state that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that the Senator from Texas voted to strike out the two battle ships? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the answer will be found in paragraph 1710 of Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies:

It is irregular also to refer to or introduce the proceedings or debates of the other House, though there is no question pending at the time, for the purpose of making them the subject of comment, whether in the way of answer, explanation, commendation, discussion, or animadversion, and whenever any such allusion is made in any form in which it can be brought within the control of the House as disorderly, it is immediately checked by the Speaker, though, perhaps, the matter itself might with strict regularity be introduced into the debate, were it not for the impropriety of referring for it to the other House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then, Mr. Speaker, if there be a possibility of doubt, while I have none in my own mind, I will refrain from reading from the RECORD the vote of Senator MILLS as stated in my hypothetical question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments entirely and refer them to a committee of conference, with an opportunity hereafter, of course, for the House to act on the results of that conference; and I ask also that a conference with the Senate may be requested.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the bill with Senate amendments I believe has not been ordered to be printed, with the Senate amendments numbered.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will ask that my request may be modified so that the Senate amendments may be numbered and the bill printed, the amendments disagreed to, and a conference requested.

Mr. CANNON. I have no desire to interfere in any way with the management of the bill as may seem best to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs; but there are one or more amendments, one especially, in the bill, that at some stage of the proceedings I think the House ought to have a chance to vote upon, and I suppose, from what little I know of the way these matters are managed, as to one of the amendments that I have in mind, later on I hope we will have a chance to take some action. I refer to the amendment of the Senate striking out two of the battle ships. I hope the House will have an opportunity to express its opinion upon that Senate amendment, as to whether it shall insist on or shall recede from its disagreement to the amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, it is entirely within the power of the House to determine that question for itself. I do not know how the conferees can keep it from coming up here. I will state very freely and frankly that, so far as I am concerned, as chairman of the committee, and so far as I can speak for the committee, I know of no possible reason why any amendment will not be submitted to the separate action of the House if desired.

Mr. CANNON. I suppose that would come afterwards, as it is not convenient to do it now, because the bill has not yet been in conference, and really the time for action will come after it has been in conference. Then I hope an opportunity to test the sense of the House will be given as to certain of the amendments. I have no desire to interfere with the management of the bill, and could not if I would, on the part of the gentleman from Maine; and I only made the remark for the purpose of saying that I hope an opportunity will be given to the House later on to pass upon this amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I entirely agree with the gentleman from Illinois. My judgment is that members are not present in very large numbers to-day, and all of the members are entitled to act upon a question of this kind; and I think it is desirable that the information and the debates to which I have called attention to-day, as well as the bill, shall be printed for the perusal of the House, to enable members to form better judgment after reading what I have said this afternoon, and reflecting upon what I probably intended and desired to say that they may be able to deal in the most judicious manner with this subject when it comes up. I am the more convinced it should take this course because I have observed the latent remnant of that excitable and bellicose disposition which manifested itself so violently at the early stage of the session, that I think perhaps it would be well to have the bill printed and have these extracts from the public records of the Government printed, and let members have the whole matter before them and try to recognize in so far as they can the desirability (which I am glad to be able to say I recognized from the earliest days of the session, in which I had very little sympathy on this side) of looking at this question deliberately and calmly.

I think that when gentlemen read the record of some measures that have been introduced in this Congress, and which I had the temerity, not being aware of the presence of my vigilant friend friend New York [Mr. QUIGG], to quote, I think there are members who will recognize that probably no such excitable or extravagant propositions as some of those would be likely to be introduced to-day. I think the public mind is in a calmer state, and that we have reached a greater degree of equilibrium, and therefore I move that the amendments of the Senate be nonconcurrent in and that a conference be requested.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] for himself, I do not wish to interfere with the progress of this bill, but I do wish to have from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]—who will probably be at the head of the conference committee, as he is entitled to be—the assurance that the House shall have an opportunity to vote upon the Senate amendment reducing the number of battle ships from four to two separately and independently from other propositions contained in the bill. If the gentleman will give the House that assurance, I shall not object to his motion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not know how I can accede to any request made prior to the conference, as I do not know what the conferees will agree to.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas is along the line of precedents. Where amendments are nonconcurrent in by wholesale, as upon a general appropriation bill, it is not unusual for a request to be made similar to the request of the gentleman from Texas, and, so far as I recollect, such requests have always been conceded. The method would be when you go into conference that whatever may be done by way of agreement as to other amendments, this amendment will be reported back to the House by way of disagreement, so that the House, or any member of the House, will have an opportunity to test the sense of the House on a motion to concur with the Senate or on a motion to instruct the conferees.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, that amendment is the most important matter for which the conference is desired. I do not see how I can agree to exclude from conference the most important matter involved.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Suppose the Senate recedes from its disagreement, what then?

Mr. CANNON. It makes no difference whether it recedes or does not recede.

Mr. CUMMINGS. If it recedes there is nothing before the House. That settles it.

Mr. CANNON. You could still report the disagreement.

Mr. CUMMINGS. There would be no disagreement.

Mr. BOUTELLE. You could not report what was not true.

Mr. CANNON. It is to be presumed, primarily, that the Senate will not recede.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In other words, does the gentleman from Illinois propose to exclude that particular amendment from the conference?

Mr. CANNON. Not at all.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then we must confer upon it.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order now to move to concur in the amendment of the Senate which reduces the number of battle ships from four to two?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I move that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate which reduces the number of battle ships from four to two.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, while that motion would, of course, be in order at this stage, would it not be better to have the bill go into conference with an understanding that the paragraph fixing the number of battle ships shall be reserved for the House to act upon under any motion that may be made here?

Mr. SAYERS. That was my proposition to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]; my idea being that the House ought to have an opportunity to vote upon a motion to concur in the amendment of the Senate reducing the number from four to two.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The House will have an opportunity to vote upon the conclusion reached by the committee of conference on that question.

Mr. DINGLEY. If my colleague will pardon me, suppose the conference—

Mr. BOUTELLE. The only possible object of this must be a desire on the part of this House—and if so it may just as well be expressed at one time as another—that its conferees shall not endeavor to enforce the action of the House in this matter.

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Senate has cut down our House appropriation by one-half. We ask that the House disagree to that amendment. If the House want to agree to the amendment, that settles it. They will vote down their own bill and accept the amendment of the Senate. If the House propose to stand by their own action, they will send the bill to conference and instruct their conferees to get the best agreement they can.

Now, if the House is negative rather than affirmative in this matter, that alters the case entirely. All of my remarks have been predicated upon the idea that the conferees on the part of the House would be intrusted with the duty of upholding the contention of the House. The House voted upon the question whether there should be six battle ships or four, and they voted by a majority to authorize four. There was a very large disposition on the part of this body to authorize six, but they did authorize the smaller number, four.

Now, I have had no intimation from anybody until this moment that the House desired to retreat from that action. If they do, of course it is perfectly competent for them to so declare; but to send the bill to a conference with the understanding that the House conferees are not to confer upon the most important provision in the bill seems to me extraordinary.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that we can not reach any definite understanding on this question; and I now move that the House concur in the Senate amendment reducing the number of battle ships from four to two; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, I will withdraw the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. If there is no other separate vote demanded, the question will be first taken on nonconcurring in the other amendments of the Senate.

The question being taken, the amendments were nonconcurring in.

The SPEAKER. The question now before the House is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] to concur in the amendment of the Senate relating to a reduction in the number of battle ships.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is not that question debatable?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. I believe I have the floor on the motion and control the time. Do I not, Mr. Speaker, under the rule?

Mr. BOUTELLE. How can the gentleman control the time as against the chairman of the committee having control of the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. It is a parliamentary question presented to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not quite sure about it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The idea of the gentleman controlling the time on both sides of the question! [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], being in charge of the bill, moved to non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate. Thereupon the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] moved to concur in a particular amendment. That is a privileged motion as compared with the other, and supersedes it; but it does not change the control of the matter. The Chair thinks that the gentleman—

Mr. SAYERS. Just one moment, if the Chair please. Does the Chair rule—

The SPEAKER. The Chair was stating his impression. Perhaps the gentleman from Texas can give the Chair some light on the subject.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know that I can give the Chair any light. What I mean to say is that, according to my recollection, upon a motion to concur made by any member of the House the member making the motion is entitled to one hour, and that at the end of the hour or before the lapse of the hour he can, if he chooses, move the previous question. If the motion for the previous question be voted down, then of course anyone opposed to the motion to concur is entitled to an hour; but up to the expiration of one hour, if the gentleman making the motion does not yield, he has control of that hour, and at the end of the hour or before it he can move the previous question.

Mr. DINGLEY. Pardon me a moment. I should like the attention of the gentleman from Texas on another matter. This is individual suspension day, and there are several matters which members desire to bring up. The pending question has come up unexpectedly, and if the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman in charge of the bill will agree, I will ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of this matter be postponed until to-morrow morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. SAYERS. And the question occupying its present status.

Mr. BOUTELLE. No; I can not consent to that. I can not consent to have this matter go over with the understanding that the gentleman from Texas can get up here and move to concur in an amendment and occupy all the time himself—allow no one else to be heard except such members as he sees fit to select.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the proposition is that the matter go over subject to a decision to-morrow morning—

Mr. SAYERS. Whatever rights or privileges the rules of the House and parliamentary law, under the decision of the Speaker, give to me I shall be certain to assert.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is very lucid and graphic.

Mr. SAYERS. All right; I hope the gentleman understands it.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair can have the attention of the gentleman from Maine a moment—

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should like to know whether the Chair has ruled upon the extraordinary point of order.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Maine will give the Chair his attention one moment—

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will say to the Chair that I was listening to gentlemen around me who, as I understood, were trying to adopt some arrangement—

Mr. MILES. We can not hear what the Chair is saying.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is that this matter shall be resumed, just where it is now, to-morrow morning, after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And the pending status is a motion to concur in the Senate amendment regarding the battle ships?

The SPEAKER. That is the motion. And the Chair, to-morrow morning, will decide the question of the right to the floor on the motion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, Mr. Speaker, in deference to what seems to be a general desire all around me, I have no wish to press the matter this evening; and if we can let the matter go over until to-morrow morning, I shall not object.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman from Maine will permit me a moment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, well, I am not so anxious that it shall go over that it would require very much of an objection to stop it.

Mr. SAYERS. I am not objecting. The only question is this: Should unanimous consent be given, at the proper time to-morrow will I be recognized with my motion to concur? I submit the inquiry to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion to concur is now pending.

Mr. SAYERS. The motion to concur is pending? Then, will I be recognized as having possession of the floor?

The SPEAKER. That the Chair will determine hereafter.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to know what that "possession of the floor" may include. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Texas has indicated that the possession of the floor includes the right to control all debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request. Is there objection that this matter shall go over until to-morrow morning, the status to remain as now?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. A single moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HENDERSON. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. Before that I ask unanimous consent—and I think it will be given if gentlemen will wait a moment—that an order be made that the amendments of the Senate be numbered and printed with the bill, so that we may have the bill on our desks in the morning.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is proper, and I hope it will be done.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made. There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, before the regular order is proceeded with, I desire to state that the Senate has sent back to the House the conference report on the legislative bill, nonconcurring in the action of the House, and asking another conference. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to amendments of the Senate on that bill, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On April 30, 1896:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 170) to provide for the proper distribution of the publication entitled Messages and Papers of the Presidents.

On May 1, 1896:

An act (H. R. 2265) to provide for reimbursement of the expense of constructing a sewer upon the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark.

On May 2, 1896:

An act (H. R. 2224) granting an increase of pension to Lewis C. Schilling; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 85) relative to the medal of honor authorized by the acts of July 12, 1862, and March 3, 1863.

On May 4, 1896:

An act (H. R. 951) to amend the military record of Dan S. Place, first lieutenant, Eighteenth Indiana Volunteers;

An act (H. R. 3549) authorizing the Aransas Harbor Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Corpus Christi Channel, known as the Morris and Cummings Ship Channel, in Aransas County, Tex.

An act (H. R. 5488) to provide for the incorporation and regulation of medical and dental colleges in the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to Eliza Wilson;

An act (H. R. 3112) granting a pension to Josephine Foote Fairfax;

An act (H. R. 7905) to establish and provide for the government of Greer County, Okla., and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. 4781) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Union Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River," approved February 18, 1883.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 145) for the relief of J. J. Lints;

A bill (H. R. 1191) to provide for the disposal of public reservations in vacated town sites or additions to town sites in the Territory of Oklahoma;

A bill (S. 2997) to provide for the fulfillment of the stipulations of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain signed at Washington on the 8th day of February, 1896; and

A bill (H. R. 7200) for the relief of A. T. Hensley.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. McCALL of Tennessee, and Mr. DOCKERY as conferees on the part of the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN YACHT OWNERS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8038) for the protection of yacht owners and shipbuilders of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4216 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4216. Yachts belonging to a regularly organized yacht club of any foreign nation which shall extend like privileges to the yachts of the United States shall have the privilege of entering or leaving any port of the United States without entering or clearing at the custom-house thereof or paying tonnage tax: Provided, That the privileges of this section shall not extend to any yacht built outside of the United States and owned, chartered, or used by a citizen of the United States, unless such ownership or charter was acquired prior to the passage of this act."

SEC. 2. That section 11 of an act entitled "An act to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1886, so far as the same exempts any yacht built outside of the United States and owned, chartered, and used by a citizen of the United States from the payment of tonnage taxes, is hereby repealed.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I demand a second on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. BARTLETT of New York and Mr. PAYNE as tellers.

The tellers reported, on a division of the House—ayes 85, noes 2. So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York, Mr. PAYNE, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. BARTLETT, to control the time, respectively, on the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, under the present law an American citizen, contrary to the well-understood purpose of the registry law for American vessels, a law which was passed for the protection of American shipbuilders, can join a foreign yacht club and have a yacht built on the Clyde or wherever he chooses, pay for it with American money, employ British laborers and British builders and use British materials in its construction, and bring the yacht to America and have it registered, with all the privileges that he would have if he had employed American shipbuilders, American workmen, and used American materials.

Under this provision of the law there have been built some 26 of these yachts, varying in tonnage from 500 to 3,000 tons. There are now under contract, building on the Clyde, 4 other yachts to cost somewhere about one and one-half millions of dollars.

Now, what we propose in this bill is to subject all yachts that are contracted for and built under these circumstances to the same tonnage taxes and the same dues for clearances and entrances at the custom-houses that every other vessel belonging to an American citizen having the like privileges, even to floating the American flag, has to pay. In other words, we propose to end this discrimination in favor of yachts which are steam yachts, used exclusively for pleasure purposes, as against vessels which are engaged in tonnage trade, and answering some useful purpose besides the pleasure of the owner, and to compel these people who desire to use these pleasure yachts to come into the American shipyards and have them built there.

I believe that under the interpretation which must be put upon it they will also be required to pay a tariff duty upon such yachts. I know that proposition is disputed in some quarters, and I believe that will be the result of this bill. It will result in carrying out our policy of requiring American ships and American vessels, all of them, to be built within American yards. There is no reason why this should not be done. We have the best shipyards in the world. Our American liners are as good as any that cross the ocean. Our men-of-war are as good as those produced in any other country, and ever since the memory of any of us the English have been trying to take away from us a certain cup for the best sailing yacht that can be produced.

That is all there is of the bill, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the passage of this bill, for two reasons. In the first place, I believe it will be detrimental to the interests of American labor, and in the second place, I believe that it will be destructive of all true sportsmanship, that is, of the true yachting spirit, as now shown by the investment in large steam yachts.

I think it is rather objectionable, in the closing hours of this session, to attempt to rush through without consideration an amendment to the Revised Statutes, to a provision of law which was enacted some twenty-six years ago and has remained in force ever since, in all the tariff agitations through which we have passed. I call the attention of the House to the provisions of the act of 1870, which will be found in section 4216 of the Revised Statutes. That provision does what? It extends a privilege to foreign-built yachts. It gives certain privileges to the gentlemen who invest their money or have invested large sums of money in steam yachts built abroad. It is as follows:

SEC. 4216. Yachts, belonging to a regularly organized yacht club of any foreign nation which shall extend like privileges to the yachts of the United States, shall have the privilege of entering or leaving any port of the United States—without entering or clearing at the custom-house thereof, or paying tonnage tax.

Without doing what?—

This proposed bill is special legislation of a most objectionable kind, because, although it comes before us in the guise of an attempt to benefit American shipbuilders or yacht builders, it really strikes a blow at some eight or ten or twenty gentlemen in the United States who have invested hundreds of thousands of dollars in the purchase of their yachts under the guaranty of existing law.

Now, as to the first question, the interest of American labor, you must bear in mind that the cost of running a yacht is far more than the initial cost. The man who gives a hundred thousand dollars for his yacht abroad and brings it into our waters keeps it here season after season, spends hundreds of thousands of dollars on repairs to the yacht, on the equipment of the yacht, and on the cost of the manning and continuous running of the vessel. So I say that if you pass this bill you will have no plausible excuse, no specious excuse even, before your constituents. You will tell them, "We have stopped the building of these yachts abroad"; but you can not say to them that these yachts will be built here. The reason is that the yards abroad are especially equipped for the construction of these steam yachts to-day.

I have no doubt that within a few years the time will come when we shall build them just as well here, just as satisfactorily to the owners, and at an equal cost—that is, not at the excessive cost that would be imposed upon the yacht owner to-day. But in the meantime I tell you that it can not be done, that the men whose ownership of these yachts built abroad you stop, and whom you force to give up the purchase of yachts abroad, will not go into your yards in Maine or elsewhere and buy a yacht, because the cost is too great, because the delay is too great, and they will virtually be compelled to give up their whole interest in steam yachting. So I say to you that this will be a mistake even from that standpoint, and I believe as much as any man in the United States in the due protection of the interests of American labor. I do not think I have ever cast a vote which has not been in favor of American labor or the interest of the American mechanic.

Now, let us see what will be the effect on the interest in yachting, on steam yachting in the United States, if you pass this measure. You will strike a serious blow at that interest, because the interest in steam yachting, as in every kind of yachting, as in every sport which commends itself to the American people and to manhood throughout the world, depends largely upon emulation and competition. It is a noble thing to have these yachts, built in foreign yards, come into our waters and stimulate our American builders. If no English yacht had ever crossed the Atlantic, if no English yacht had ever entered the port of New York, you would have no yacht races to-day, you would have no general widespread interest in the spirit of yachting. So it has been with the introduction of steam yachts built abroad. They have stimulated the interest in steam yachting; and had those yachts not been permitted to enter our ports without the imposition of onerous and destructive charges I tell you that there would not be one-half or one-quarter or one-tenth of the number of steam yachts in this country to-day.

I should like to have a portion of this article read, or I shall read it, because it presents the view of a true American who is interested in these steam yachts much more forcibly than I can:

That such a bill would in the end result in any benefit to American designers and builders is a matter of serious doubt, and as applied to steam yachting it would work decided detriment to the sport for a long time to come.

The yachtsman who contemplates the investment of several hundred thousand dollars in a steam yacht has only to look into the matter superficially to make sure of some very important facts. On the one hand, by going abroad he can secure in a comparatively short time a steam yacht of the highest possible class, designed, for instance, by Mr. Watson, whose long list of successful boats—Maria, May, Rona, Sapphire, and others larger and finer—is a most satisfactory guaranty of the performance of a new vessel. The yacht will be built in a yard where such work is a specialty and by workmen familiar with all its details, and a thorough carrying out of all guaranties as to time of delivery and quality of work may be confidently looked for.

If, on the other hand, the order be placed at home with the recognized builders of steam yachts, there is no guaranty as to who will design the vessel, when she will be completed, or that she will be other than a flat failure when nominally ready for delivery. If anyone is inclined to dispute this, there is ample evidence of its truth in two of the largest and most expensive of the recently built American yachts: one a failure in appearance, speed, accommodation, and all the qualities that a steam yacht should have; the other even a worse example, and only accepted by her owner after a long litigation.

The passage of this bill will make a square issue for American yachtsmen to consider, either to have no steam yacht or to pay an excessive price for one that is practically useless.

There are reasons which need not be quoted now for the unfortunate condition of steam-yacht building in America to-day, a condition closely identical with that of the building of sailing yachts in 1880. That these latter conditions were so altered as to lead in a few years to the design and construction of such American yachts as Puritan, Mayflower, Volunteer, Gloriana, Defender, and Niagara is due almost entirely to the introduction into America of a few English yachts—Madge, Maggie, Stranger, and Clara—and the visits of Genesta, Galatea, and Thistle.

And now I submit, gentlemen, that for these reasons you ought not, without due and careful consideration, to pass any such measure as this. I believe that a fair spirit of emulation and competition is best subserved by allowing a few of these English steam yachts to come in. There is no great danger. It does not affect the people at large to exempt these yachts. This bill will not bring in any revenue to us. Its purpose is not to bring revenue. Its purpose is to force an American who wants to invest $100,000 in a yacht to have it built in an American yard, at a maximum cost, and at the greatest possible risk. Now, whether you be in favor of protection, free trade, or tariff for revenue only, it seems to me that this sort of legislation is unwise, that it is unsportsmanlike, and that it should not receive the approbation of the dominant majority.

Mr. LOW. Will the gentleman explain what he means by "risks" of being built in an American yard?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I mean this: That any man who invests $100,000 in a yacht wants to be at liberty to buy where-soever and whensoever he pleases. In the first place, the risk that is taken in having it built in an American yard in the matter of design; in the second place, in the cost, and third, in the matter of celerity of delivery of the yacht.

I claim that we ought not to legislate in this small way. If you want to pass a measure and apply it to all vessels of every kind of construction in this country, go on and do it; you have the power; but do not amend a provision of the Revised Statutes which was conceived in a somewhat large and liberal spirit, and which has worked admirably for a quarter of a century; do not amend it in the closing days of a session without due consideration and without some argument in its favor and support.

I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a few words in answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTLETT]. In the first place, the proposition which the gentleman has laid down is entirely untenable, for the reason that these vessels are exclusively for pleasure purposes, and everyone knows that whenever a man enters the field of luxury it is only a question of whether he wants the article, not whether he is going to pay $100,000 or $125,000 for it. Therefore, whenever a man comes to the conclusion that he wants a pleasure yacht he is going to have it, whether it costs him $100,000, $125,000, or even $150,000, and every penny of it should be paid out to American labor, and not to foreign mechanics.

Now, I desire to answer the gentleman as to whether these yachts can be built in this country. He says the work will be done at a great risk here. Does the gentleman mean to state that Mr. Nixon, who has designed a large number of the ships composing the White Squadron, is incapable of designing a pleasure yacht? Everyone at all familiar with the shipbuilding of the world knows that Mr. Nixon now stands at the very head of designers, and fast becoming one of the first builders as well. Within the past six months he has taken a contract to construct the finest pleasure yacht in the world. Therefore there is absolutely nothing in what the gentleman has said on this point.

The gentleman further argues that it would be in behalf of American labor to build these ships abroad, because the sailors would not be employed unless the boats are built abroad, as otherwise they will not be built at all. The gentleman must know, as does everyone at all familiar with the subject, that practically all the men employed aboard these boats are foreigners and not Americans; therefore his solicitude for American labor is a mere pretense.

In conclusion, I desire to say—

First. That whenever a man wants to buy a pleasure yacht, the difference in cost due to the increased wages paid to American labor will not stand in the way.

Second. That Mr. Nixon, in my own district, at the Crescent Yards, as in all other large yards in this country, is prepared to build as fine yachts as can be built anywhere in the world.

Third. That if there is any class of labor that should be protected, it is that employed in the manufacture of luxuries which are used and consumed by the rich in our own country. I sincerely hope this bill will pass, and that hereafter every pleasure yacht sailing under our flag will come from our own shipyards, and represent so much money paid to American labor.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have only a word to say. No other class of vessels receive this exemption, and there is no reason under heaven why a millionaire should receive your favor rather than the man who earns his living by trying to transport a cargo of goods in a little vessel. I do not think any man in this House will oppose this bill, unless it be my colleague from New York, and I scarcely think he will.

Mr. CANNON. Let me see if I understand the gentleman. Do I understand him to say that under the law as it now is, if a man buys a vessel for service, say, between Fall River and New York, that there is one rule as to that vessel as to where it shall be built and as to the dues it shall pay, and another rule as to a yacht which an individual may purchase for his pleasure?

Mr. PAYNE. That is correct. An American citizen who wants an American register for a vessel to ply between Fall River and New York is obliged to have that vessel built in American shipyards, but a man who wants a yacht to sail where he pleases throughout the world can by an evasion—for it is nothing more nor less than an evasion of the law, as the courts have decided—that man, under a rule which extends certain courtesies to yacht clubs abroad, can join a foreign yacht club, get into English society, and sail with the Prince of Wales or some other royal personage, and at the same time can employ a shipyard on the Clyde to build his yacht under the auspices of the foreign club, and though he may be the full owner and controller of that yacht she can enter the port of New York and even fly the American flag without his paying anything to the Government of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Well, if that is so and this bill will cure that state of things I am quite sure that the gentleman's colleague from New York [Mr. BARTLETT] does not understand it or he would not object to the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know about that. My colleague did understand it last Saturday. He had another objection to the bill as printed; he did not think it should be retroactive and apply to vessels already built. I did not agree with him, but some other gentlemen did, and I have now amended the bill so that it is not retroactive in its operation. I understood my colleague to say that with amendment he would favor the bill, or at least would have no objection to it; but, for some reason or other, I do not know what—he may have heard from swelldom [laughter]; he may have heard from these poor men in New York, like the Vanderbilts, who go to the other side of the ocean and get a yacht built at a cost of half a million dollars or more, but who are not willing to be subjected to the operation of a bill which would place them on a par with our merchant marine, and require them to pay these tonnage dues; he may have interviewed those gentlemen, I do not know—but, whatever the reason may be, a change has come over the spirit of my colleague, and he stands here to-day, he says, in the interest of American labor to oppose the passage of this bill. He says that the people who get their yachts on the other side of the ocean come over here and spend a few dollars for supplies.

Now, I want to say to my colleague that they never buy a dollar's worth of supplies here if they are going to the other side, because they can get them there; and if their yachts were built here and they were cruising in our waters, certainly they would buy as much supplies here as if the yachts were built abroad. Let me say further to my colleague that I have heard from the yacht owners and the yacht builders of this country in regard to this matter, and I want to assure him that there have been built recently in our shipyards steam yachts for some of the people who are willing to spend the money that they have made in this country among the workmen of this country—yachts built in American shipyards at least equal to any that are foreign built, although they are not "English, don't you know." [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, it was somewhat refreshing to me to hear a few moments ago from a gentleman from New Jersey, I believe, that there was nothing in my argument. It is so delightful, after having been in the House for several years, to be assured that there is nothing in your arguments, and, of course, as the gentleman has said it, that settles it.

Now, in answer to the gentleman from New York, my colleague [Mr. PAYNE], I will frankly state that I know of two or three steam yachts built in this country, each of which, I believe, is the equal of any steam yacht abroad. But what protection do you want? Everything that enters into the construction of a steam yacht now comes in free of duty.

Now, let us look at this matter with reference to the interest of American labor. These boats come in here and, in so far as the purchase of goods and supplies is concerned, all the supplies are purchased here, because the yachts are run throughout the season, summer after summer, in our waters. The crews of the vessels, too, are made up of American labor, men from Connecticut, Maine, and the other seaboard States. So that nearly all the money expended upon these yachts, either in the way of supplies, equipment, or the manning of the vessels, is spent in the interest of American labor.

Mr. McCORMICK. Does the gentleman know that statement to be true that these yachts are manned entirely by American labor? I have been told that most of these English yachts have English crews, who are brought over and retained in this country from year to year. I do not contradict the gentleman, but I would like to know whether he knows of his own knowledge that the fact is as he states?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Of course I can not answer for all of these boats, but I can answer for a number of them; and I am informed by men who are owners of yachts and who are familiar with the subject that on almost all of these yachts the crews are American.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have heard just the opposite statement.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Well, of course I can not enter into the question of the manning of every boat of this kind.

Mr. FOWLER. Let me ask the gentleman whether he has ever noticed when he has been aboard these yachts of what nationality the men were who manned them?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Yes; I have noticed.

Mr. FOWLER. Of what nationality have they been almost invariably?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I have noticed a great many Americans among them.

Mr. FOWLER. A great many? Would the gentleman think there was a majority of Americans?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. A majority on the yachts I have been aboard. I have not been on all or many of them.

Now, let me add a word. Because a man who owns a yacht is rich, that is nothing in favor of a proposition of this kind. I have become a little tired of this talk against men because they are rich. A man who is poor to-day may, under our system of government, become rich next year. Is it anything against a man that he has amassed a fortune by industry and thrift? And is such a man to be persecuted by legislation in a petty spirit? Even if a man be a millionaire, is that fact anything against him? Is it a crime? All our millionaires are, in a large sense, simply trustees for the people, because the proportion of their wealth which they can spend upon themselves is very small. Almost the whole income of our men of wealth is distributed through thousands of channels and goes to the benefit of the people throughout the country.

Now, I ask my colleague [Mr. PAYNE] whether he will not accept this amendment in place of his—

Mr. DINGLEY. Under a motion to suspend the rules, no amendment is in order.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. This is the amendment which I should like my colleague to accept:

Provided, This law shall go into effect on January 1, 1897: And Provided further, That it shall not apply to any yacht owned on January 1, 1897, by an American citizen exclusively, and which, on said date, is enrolled in the list of yachts of any reputable yacht club of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. I can not accept that amendment for two reasons. One is, that my motion is a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill; the other is, that in making my motion I have amended the printed bill so as to accomplish the object which the gentleman desires in a much better way than his amendment would do.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PAYNE to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Wednesday, May 6, 1896, and Wednesday, May 13, 1896, immediately after the reading of the Journal on each day, the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of such bills as are in order on the sessions of Friday evenings; and that in the consideration of such bills under this resolution ten minutes' debate shall be allowed on each bill, with the amendments thereto, such time to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded on the motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. ERDMAN. I demand a second.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. ERDMAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers, on seconding the motion, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN].

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 16. So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question being then taken on the motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution, there were on a division (called for by Mr. ERDMAN)—ayes 81, noes 21.

Mr. ERDMAN. No quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 44, not voting 198; as follows:

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the report of the Commissioner of Patents for the year ended December 31, 1895, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Patents.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BARNEY, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7415) for the protection of American labor and to establish additional regulations concerning immigration to the United States, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1597); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of California, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6398) to define the rights of purchasers under mortgages authorized by an act of Congress approved April 20, 1871, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1598); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7868) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Boonville, Mo., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1599); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. PICKLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 8427) granting an increase of pension to John Doeblor. (Report No. 1600.)

The bill (S. 140) entitled "An act granting a pension to Mary A. Wise." (Report No. 1601.)

The bill (S. 1902) entitled "An act granting a pension to Jennie E. Burch." (Report No. 1602.)

By Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 6091) granting an increase of pension to Joseph S. Dixon, and for other purposes. (Report No. 1603.)

By Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 1295) to pension Sophronia Bailey. (Report No. 1604.)

By Mr. WOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 4184) granting a pension to Nancy Hollenbank, formerly Nancy Boaz, formerly Nancy Yeley, a hospital nurse during the war of the rebellion. (Report No. 1605.)

By Mr. POOLE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: The bill (H. R. 7421) increasing the pension of James B. Skinner. (Report No. 1606.)

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 5, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. ALLEN, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The signature of the Vice-President was announced to the following enrolled bills; which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

A bill (S. 2997) to provide for the fulfillment of the stipulations of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed at Washington on the 8th day of February, 1896;

A bill (H. R. 145) for the relief of J. J. Lints;

A bill (H. R. 1191) to provide for the disposal of public reservations in vacated town sites or additions to town sites in the Territory of Oklahoma;

A bill (H. R. 5353) granting a pension to Arminda Stucker, of Gallatin, Mo.; and

A bill (H. R. 7200) for the relief of A. T. Hensley.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF HIRAM SOMERVILLE.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up and consider at this time the bill (S. 581) for the relief of the legal representatives of Hiram Somerville. It is a small bill, and will not lead to any debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $505 to the legal representatives of Hiram Somerville, deceased, late of Marion County, Ill., for supplies furnished by him to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4456) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the cemetery association in the city of St. Paul, Minn., to be used at or near the foot of the soldiers' monument in said cemetery.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KYLE. I present a resolution adopted by the South Dakota Immigration Association, favoring the application of a reading and writing test for all immigrants between the ages of 14 and 60 years, and stating that illiterate immigrants are not desired as colonists in that State. Inasmuch as a bill on this subject has been reported from the Committee on Immigration, I move that the resolution lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE presented a petition of the board of managers of the Florida Society of Sons of the Revolution, praying for the publication of the records and papers of the Continental Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. BATE presented a petition of the Baptist Church of Brownsville, Tenn., praying that Rev. A. J. Diaz be given a speedy and fair trial and granted the recognition of his rights as a citizen of the United States engaged in missionary work in the Island of Cuba; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NELSON presented the petition of Peter Engel and 19 other citizens of Collegeville, Minn., praying for the adoption of the metric system of weights and measures; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HILL presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Newark Valley, N. Y., praying that the age of consent be raised to 18 years in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PASCO presented a resolution of the legislature of the State of Florida, praying that an appropriation of $35,000 be made for improving the navigation of Orange Creek; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House resolution.

Whereas Orange Creek, one of the beautiful tributaries of the Caloosahatchee River, situated in the county of Lee, State of Florida, passes through and enters into one of the richest and most fertile districts of the State; and

Whereas said district is now settled and occupied by a class of enterprising and progressive farmers, vegetable and fruit growers, and said district is rapidly increasing in population and wealth, and justly deserves the fostering hand of the General Government; and

Whereas said Orange Creek is of ample depth of water and width to admit floatage for transports to pass up and down said stream; and

Whereas the said stream is seriously obstructed by snags, sunken logs, overhanging trees, etc.: Therefore

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Florida, That our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States be requested to secure an appropriation of $35,000 for the purpose of improving the navigation of Orange Creek, by removing the above-mentioned obstructions to navigation.

Approved May 30, 1896.

STATE OF FLORIDA, Office of Secretary of State, ss:

I, John L. Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct copy of a house resolution asking the Congress of the United States for an appropriation for improving Orange Creek, as passed the house of representatives at the regular session of the legislature of the State of Florida, 1895, and as filed and of record in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida, at Tallahassee, the capital, this 2d day of May, A. D. 1896.

JNO. L. CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PASCO presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of the State of Florida, relating to an appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of Peace River and Charlotte Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A senate concurrent resolution relating to an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the mouth of Peace River and Charlotte Harbor.

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Florida (the house of representatives concurring), The Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States from the State of Florida are hereby requested to urge upon Congress the necessity of appropriating $50,000 for the purpose of deepening and improving the mouth of Peace River and Charlotte Harbor as may be deemed best.

Congress has already appropriated $20,000 during the year 1894 for such purpose. This amount is too small to accomplish much good. Through these waters there were shipped in 1892 about 50,000 tons of phosphate; in 1893 about 80,000; in 1894 over 100,000 tons. The commerce through this harbor is rapidly increasing, approximating in 1894 $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 in value.

The secretary of state is requested to forward a copy of this resolution to each of the Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States from this State.

Approved June 1, 1895.

STATE OF FLORIDA, Office of Secretary of State, ss:

I, John L. Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a Senate concurrent resolution relating to an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the mouth of the Peace River and Charlotte Harbor, as passed the regular session of the legislature of Florida, 1895, and as filed and of record in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida, at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 2d day of May, A. D. 1896.

JNO. L. CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PASCO presented a petition of the legislature of the State of Florida, praying that an appropriation be made for improving Santa Lucia, or Prospect Inlet, east coast of Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial to Congress asking an appropriation for improving Santa Lucia or Prospect Inlet, east coast of Florida.

Whereas great necessity exists for the improvement of Santa Lucia or Prospect Inlet, east coast of Florida, which is the regular outlet of the St. Lucia River, and to that extent so that vessels drawing 10 feet of water may pass over the bar; and

Whereas the commercial prosperity of this part of Florida is greatly impeded for want of proper bar improvements at the entrance of this inlet to utilize the value of navigation on the St. Lucia River: Therefore

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Florida, That our Representatives and Senators in Congress are hereby requested to take proper steps toward securing the passage of a bill providing for a sufficient appropriation by Congress to deepen the bar of the St. Lucia River outlet so that vessels drawing from 10 to 16 feet of water may enter said river in safety; and

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby requested to furnish each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State with a copy of this memorial.

Approved May 14, 1895.

STATE OF FLORIDA, Office of Secretary of State, ss:

I, John L. Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a memorial to Congress asking an appropriation for improving Santa Lucia or Prospect Inlet, east coast of Florida, as passed the regular session of the legislature of Florida, 1895, and as filed and of record in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida, at Tallahassee, the capital, this 2d day of May, A. D. 1896.

JNO. L. CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PASCO presented a memorial of the legislature of the State of Florida, praying that an appropriation of $50,000 be made for deepening the channel at the mouth of Carrabelle River, up to the town of Carrabelle, and for the improvement of Carrabelle Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A memorial to the Congress of the United States, asking an appropriation of $50,000 for the deepening of the channel at the mouth of Carrabelle River, up to the town of Carrabelle, and for the improvement of Carrabelle Harbor.

Whereas the town of Carrabelle, being at the mouth of Carrabelle River, one of the tributaries of the Gulf of Mexico, with a population of some 1,500 and rapidly increasing, depending largely upon the timber, lumber, and naval stores trade, the supply of which comes from the forests of Florida, Georgia, and Alabama, and which timber, lumber, and naval stores find a market in both foreign and domestic lands. To carry this large and increasing trade requires many vessels of large tonnage and deep draft of water. The Government of the United States by a small appropriation will materially aid in the transportation of the timber, lumber, and naval stores shipped from and passing through the Carrabelle Harbor and channel of Carrabelle River, where vessels of deep draft of water can load from the wharves, thus concentrating all the carrying trade of the territory above mentioned at Carrabelle, one of the best harbors on the Gulf of Mexico:

Be it resolved by the legislature of the State of Florida, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their utmost endeavors to secure the passage of a bill appropriating $50,000 for the purpose of improving and deepening the channel of Carrabelle River up to the town of Carrabelle, and to improve the harbor of Carrabelle.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be directed to supply each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress with a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State of Florida.

Approved May 25, 1895.

STATE OF FLORIDA, Office of Secretary of State, ss:

I, John L. Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a memorial to the Congress of the United States asking an appropriation of $50,000 for the deepening of the channel of the mouth of Carrabelle River up to the town of Carrabelle, and for the improvement of Carrabelle Harbor, as passed at the regular session of the legislature of the State of Florida, 1895, and as filed and of record in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida, at Tallahassee, the capital, this 2d day of May, A. D. 1896.

JNO. L. CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PASCO presented a petition in the form of resolutions adopted by the board of managers of the Florida Society of Sons of the Revolution, praying for the publication by the Government of the records and papers of the Continental Congress, which comprise the official documents of the Revolutionary period, in the custody of the Secretary of State; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. TURPIE presented a petition of Local Union, No. 215, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Lafayette, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to secure Government ownership and control of the telegraph lines; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. BLANCHARD presented a petition of the First Baptist Church of New Orleans, La., praying for the release of Rev. A. J. Diaz; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the New Orleans Credit Men's Association, of New Orleans, La., praying for the passage of the so-called Torrey bankruptcy bill as amended; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of district council, Carpenters and Joiners' Union of America, of New Orleans, La., praying for the free and unlimited coinage of silver; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pineville, La., praying for the enactment of legislation giving to second-class mail matter, such as religious tracts, full advantage of the act of July 16, 1894; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the New Orleans Board of Trade, Limited, of New Orleans, La., remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 7250, to amend "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues," approved June 10, 1890; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DANIEL presented a petition of the Great Bridge Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, of Norfolk, Va., praying for the publication of the records and papers of the Continental Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Resolved, That the bill (S. 2633) entitled "A bill for the relief of Nimrod D. Keneaster," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate the facts in the case in accordance with section 14 of said act.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2877) granting a pension to Hiram Santas, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KYLE, from the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2708) authorizing the purchase by the United States and the making free of the toll roads passing over the Yosemite National Park, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 3064) authorizing the purchase by the United States and the making free of the toll roads passing over the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1572) for the relief of W. L. Hall, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1035) authorizing the Sioux City and Omaha Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation in Thurston County, Nebr., and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2913) granting a pension to Nettie A. Cheeks, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

- A bill (S. 2439) granting a pension to Jackson Lucas;
- A bill (S. 2880) granting a pension to Charles E. Mann;
- A bill (S. 2879) granting a pension to Charles A. Hutchings; and
- A bill (S. 2433) granting a pension to William F. Gowdy.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon; which were agreed to, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

- A bill (S. 2648) granting a pension to George F. Burrage;
- A bill (S. 922) to increase the pension of Graham McClosson;
- A bill (S. 2651) granting a pension to William Herriott;
- A bill (S. 2647) granting a pension to Robert J. Miller;
- A bill (S. 919) granting a pension to Christian White; and
- A bill (S. 2831) granting an increase of pension to John Fletcher.

Mr. PASCO submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 2962) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims, in the case of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South against the United States, heretofore reported by him; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. McBRIDE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 525) for the relief of Thomas Guinean, of Oregon, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LODGE (for Mr. HOAR) introduced a bill (S. 3050) to validate the appointments, acts, and services of certain deputy United States marshals in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 3051) defining the rights and privileges of mixed-blood Indians under the treaties and statutes of the United States, confirming the title of said Indians to their lands, allowing the same to be alienated under certain circumstances, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WETMORE introduced a bill (S. 3052) to correct the military record of and grant an honorable discharge to Peter Rourke, late of Company C, Seventh Regiment of Rhode Island Infantry Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3053) granting a pension to Mary R. Dean, widow of Amos G. Thomas, late captain in the Eleventh Regiment of Rhode Island Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3054) granting a pension to Margaret McTighe, mother of Michael McTighe, alias John Smith, late boatswain's mate on the U. S. S. C. P. Williams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3055) granting a pension to Dr. Charles G. McKnight, late lieutenant and assistant surgeon from Rhode Island in the war of the rebellion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3056) to correct the naval record of and grant an honorable discharge to Thomas H. Holden, of Pawtucket, R. I.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GEAR introduced a bill (S. 3057) granting a pension to Adolph Schrei; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon introduced a bill (S. 3058) to increase the pay of letter carriers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. VILAS introduced a bill (S. 3059) granting a pension to William Soden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3060) to furnish old equipments to the Illinois Naval Veterans' Association of Chicago, Ill.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LINDSAY introduced a bill (S. 3061) to amend an act entitled "An act to correct the enrollment of an act approved March 3, 1887, entitled 'An act to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from the State courts, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1875," approved August 13, 1888; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 3062) for securing costs accrued in State courts when suits are removed to the courts of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 3063) for the purchase of a site and the construction of a suitable school building for a school for the Croatan Indians in Robeson County, N. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. McBRIDE introduced a bill (S. 3065) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Hayburn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DANIEL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3066) for the relief of Adel Virginia Spangler, of Frederick County, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3067) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Fox Hill, Elizabeth City County, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LODGE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 142) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to dispose of the Force School property on Massachusetts avenue and to obtain another site for that school; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DANIEL submitted two amendments intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT UPON NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed 10,000 copies of the report made by Messrs. Ludlow, Endicott, and Noble, of date October 31, 1895, upon the Nicaragua Canal, together with all the appendixes, maps, plans, and profiles accompanying the same, as submitted by them; 6,000 of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 4,000 for the use of the Senate.

CAPTURE OF SCHOONER COMPETITOR.

Mr. CALL. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to protest against the execution of the citizens of the United States captured on board the schooner Competitor by a Spanish cruiser, and to request and demand of the Government of Spain that they shall not be subjected to cruel treatment, but be held only as prisoners of war, unless it shall be established that they were engaged only in carrying merchandize which was contraband and for which they were subjected to no punishment other than the confiscation of the property.

Mr. CALL. I hope there will be no objection to the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What has been done with the resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submitted whether there was objection. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand that this is a question about which the United States is asked to protest against the action of some country, I do not know what. I think I would rather see the resolution in print.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will go over.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not object to the resolution. I trust there will be no objection to it. The United States should ask that citizens of this country captured on board a vessel carrying contraband of war should not be summarily executed under trial by court-martial. We are informed by the newspapers that this is threatened, and the relatives of these people are in a state of extreme anxiety.

I submit to the Senate that there is no reason either in the law of nations or in the customs of civilized war why the resolution should not be promptly passed. These people were on a vessel of the United States that had a right to go to Cuba under our treaty relations. In England similar questions have arisen. The premier of Great Britain, Lord Palmerston, said on one occasion when protest was made against allowing vessels carrying contraband of war, "Your only remedy is to capture them, if you can capture them; they are not subject to any other punishment than the loss of property."

Our citizens have a right to take munitions of war and goods of any description into the Island of Cuba, and when in Spanish waters they are subject to capture, and capture alone, or the confiscation of the property, and the men on board the vessels are not subject to punishment. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not object to the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate, Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am entirely unfamiliar with the subject-matter of the resolution except as explained by the Senator from Florida. As I understand the explanation of the Senator, it is the manifest duty of the President of the United States to interfere in this case, under the statement made by the Senator from Florida. If that be so, I think we should consider the phraseology of a resolution to be passed by this body requesting the President to do his duty. I think the resolution should go over for a day at least, that we may see how it looks in print.

Mr. CALL. If the objection is insisted upon, of course the resolution must go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under objection.

SUGGESTION OF ABSENCE OF A QUORUM.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senate adjourned yesterday afternoon pending a suggestion by me of the absence of a quorum. The Presiding Officer, the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] then being in the chair, decided that a motion to adjourn "does not require a quorum, the Chair will state." I will only detain the Senate now by offering a resolution, which may go over until tomorrow. I shall then ask to have it taken up and acted upon.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the suggestion of the absence of a quorum, requiring a call of the Senate, may be made pending a motion to adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

ELECTIONS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie over and to be printed:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators shall be appointed, who shall be charged with the duty of investigating and reporting to the Senate whether there are any influences affecting the elections of members of Congress in the State of Florida which are properly the subject of action by Congress, and without interfering in any way with the exclusive right and power of the States to regulate the same, except as to time and place.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GEAR. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2735) for the relief of Enoch Davis.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa has asked unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of a bill.

Mr. FRYE. I will yield to the Senator from Iowa after the river and harbor bill is taken up. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Cockrell,	Martin,	Sherman,
Bacon,	Cullom,	Mills,	Shoup,
Baker,	Daniel,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Stewart,
Bate,	Dubois,	Morrill,	Teller,
Berry,	Frye,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Palmer,	Tillman,
Blanchard,	Gear,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Brown,	Gordon,	Peffer,	Vest,
Burrows,	Gorman,	Perkins,	Vilas,
Butler,	Harris,	Pettigrew,	Walthall,
Call,	Hill,	Pritchard,	Wetmore,
Cannon,	Kyle,	Quay,	White,
Carter,	Lindsay,	Roach,	Wilson,
Chandler,	Lodge,	Sewell,	Wolcott.

Mr. FRYE. While the clerks are making up the record I simply desire to state that I regard myself as instructed by the vote of yesterday and that I have no intention of moving again at 2 o'clock to proceed with this bill until after the bond resolution is finally disposed of. I merely want to improve the time there is between now and 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Maine to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Several Senators desire to call up some bills for present consideration, and as I do not wish to be invidious in the matter of objecting, I will allow the river and harbor bill to be suspended until a quarter of 1, and I shall object to anything after that time.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to call up House bill 3018, which is a short bill.

Mr. GEAR. I beg to remind the Chair that I have already been recognized to call up a bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Colorado that the Senator from Iowa had been recognized.

Mr. TELLER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me suggest that we take up by unanimous consent unobjected House bills and dispose of them as a class. We can run through them. There is quite a number of Senators who want to have those bills passed, and such a course will save any trouble. That can be done inside of the time. If the Senate will agree to this course we will dispose of all the unobjected House cases. I ask that that may be done, and I hope the Senator from Iowa will consent to it.

Mr. GEAR. I will consent. The bill I wish to call up being the first in order, of course I will not object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Missouri restate his request?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is that the Senate consider the unobjected House bills that are upon the Calendar which have been reported favorably.

Mr. ALLISON. After my colleague gets through.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] ought to have an opportunity to call up his bill.

Mr. GEAR. It is a House bill, and I make no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none. The first House bill on the Calendar will be stated.

ENOCH DAVIS.

The bill (H. R. 2735) for the relief of Enoch Davis was announced as the first House bill on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Government to liquidate and settle the claim of Enoch Davis, late a member of Company G of the Sixth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, for pay and bounty, and appropriates $300 for the payment of the amount that may be awarded to him on account of the claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bills be called in their order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be called in their order. That is the unanimous agreement.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING BILLIARD TABLES, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 5490) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been heretofore read. The pending question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, section 4, after the word "Columbia," strike out:

To sell or to allow to be sold in the same room or a room connected with and opening out of or adjacent to such room spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors.

And insert:

To allow any person under the age of 21 years to play at any game of billiards, pool, shuffleboard, or any game that may be played on such tables or boards, or play at bowls on said alleys, or permit such person to come into or remain in their pool or billiard rooms, saloons, or bowling alleys, where spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors are sold.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That it shall not be lawful for the proprietors of billiard tables, pool tables, bagatelle tables, jenny lind tables, or other tables of the kind mentioned in the first section of this act, shuffleboards, and bowling alleys, kept for public hire and gain in the District of Columbia, to allow any person under the age of 21 years to play at any game of billiards, pool, shuffleboard, or any game that may be played on such tables or boards, or play at bowls on said alleys, or permit such person to come into or remain in their pool or billiard rooms, saloons, or bowling alleys, where spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors are sold; and all such places shall be closed during the entire twenty-four hours of each and every Sunday, and also during the hours that bar-rooms are required to be closed.

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine of not less than five nor more than forty dollars, and shall in addition forfeit his or her license, in the discretion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has the bill been read at all?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read, the Chair will state to the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was read on a former occasion.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right, then.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF SYRACUSE, N. Y.

The bill (H. R. 6) constituting Syracuse, N. Y., a port of delivery was announced as the next House bill in order on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, objection being made.

MERCHANT MARINE ENGINEER SERVICE.

The bill (H. R. 3013) to amend section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to improve the merchant marine engineer service, and thereby also to increase the efficiency of the Naval Reserve, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FRYE. That does not require reading. It has been read once. The amendment of the Committee on Commerce, which is a substitute for the bill, has been adopted, and the question is simply on ordering it to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4131. Vessels registered pursuant to law, and no others, except such as shall be duly qualified according to law for carrying on the coasting or fishing trade, shall be deemed vessels of the United States, and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining to such vessels; but no such vessel shall enjoy such benefits and privileges longer than it shall continue to be wholly owned by a citizen or citizens of the United States or a corporation created under the laws of any of the States thereof, and be commanded by a citizen of the United States. And all the officers of vessels of the United States who shall have charge of a watch, including pilots, shall in all cases be citizens of the United States. The word 'officers' shall include the chief engineer and each assistant engineer in charge of a watch on vessels propelled wholly or in part by steam; and after the 1st day of January, 1897, no person shall be qualified to hold a license as a commander or watch officer of a merchant vessel of the United States who is not a native-born citizen or whose naturalization as a citizen shall not have been fully completed."

SEC. 2. That all licenses issued to such officers shall be for a term of three years, but the holder of a license may have the same renewed for another three years at any time before its expiration: Provided, however, That any officer holding a license, and who is engaged in a service which necessitates his continuous absence from the United States, may make application in writing for one renewal and transmit the same to the board of local inspectors with a statement of the applicant verified before a consul, or other officer of the United States authorized to administer an oath, setting forth the reasons for not appearing in person; and upon receiving the same the board of local inspectors that originally issued such license shall renew the same for one additional term of such license, and shall notify the applicant of such renewal.

No master, mate, pilot, or engineer of steam vessels licensed under Title LII of the Revised Statutes shall be liable to draft in time of war, except for the performance of duties such as required by his license; and while performing such duties in the service of the United States every such master, mate, pilot, or engineer shall be entitled to the highest rate of wages paid in the merchant marine of the United States for similar services; and if killed or wounded while performing such duties under the United States they, or their heirs, or their legal representatives shall be entitled to all the privileges accorded to soldiers and sailors serving in the Army and Navy under the pension laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed. But this shall not be construed to modify or repeal that provision of the act of June 23, 1884, which reads as follows: "In cases where on a foreign voyage, or on a voyage from an Atlantic to a Pacific port of the United States, any such vessel is for any reason deprived of the services of an officer below the grade of master, his place, or a vacancy caused by the promotion of another officer to such place, may be supplied by a person not a citizen of the United States until the first return of such vessel to its home port; and such vessel shall not be liable to any penalty or penal tax for such employment of an alien officer."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment was agreed to when the bill was formerly under consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to improve the merchant-marine engineer service and thereby also to increase the efficiency of the Naval Reserve, and for other purposes."

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. FRYE, Mr. SQUIRE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

The bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to make a brief statement concerning the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have the bill go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think when I make the statement it will satisfy the Senator from Nebraska.

The bill was once up for consideration and was objected to by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. The Senator from Florida informs me that he will not object if I ask unanimous consent at some future time for the consideration of the bill, except that he desires to be heard on the bill, and as it will consume some time, I ask that it may go over without prejudice, retaining its place. I desire to state that at the earliest possible opportunity, as I regard this as being a very important bill, I shall ask consent for its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will go over without prejudice. The next House bill on the Calendar will be announced.

ALASKA FUR-BEARING ANIMALS.

The bill (H. R. 3206) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska," and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRYE. That bill may as well be passed over, because it will provoke discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice. The next House bill on the Calendar will be announced.

F. L. TAYLOR.

The bill (H. R. 1889) granting an honorable discharge to F. L. Taylor from December 2, 1864, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to correct the military record of Capt. F. L. Taylor, late of the Thirty-fourth New Jersey Volunteers, and to issue to him a certificate of honorable discharge as of December 2, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE STORAGE BUSINESS.

The bill (H. R. 3462) to regulate the business of storage in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under objection.

LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

The bill (H. R. 5819) to provide for the examination and classification of certain lands in the State of California was announced as the next House bill in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over without losing its place. It will probably lead to discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 6505) to revive and reenact an act to authorize the construction of a free bridge across Arkansas River, connecting Little Rock and Argenta, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRYE (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, the quarter of an hour has expired.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will not the Senator from Maine extend the time a little, so as to get rid of bills Senators are calling up every morning?

Mr. FRYE. I wish to get rid of the important river and harbor bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Give us a quarter of an hour more.

Mr. GORDON. I hope we will go forward with the river and harbor bill.

Mr. FRYE. I guess I shall have to ask the Senate to take up the river and harbor bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill on page 4, line 10. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 4, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Lynn, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator from Maine to have the kindness to explain to me why the reduction is proposed.

Mr. FRYE. The committee on investigation found that $20,000 would practically complete all of the works as laid out by the Engineer Department up to the present time, and therefore they propose to reduce the appropriation from $30,000 to $20,000, and placed in the bill a provision for the survey of another project.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 4, after line 21, to insert:

Improving Stage Harbor at Chatham, Mass.: Completing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 16, after the word "Massachusetts," to strike out "$20,000"; in line 17, after the word "project," to strike out "approved by Chief of Engineers" and insert "submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1895, $20,000"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Woods Hole Channel, Massachusetts, in accordance with project submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1895, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 23, after the word "to," to strike out "make a resurvey of Manchester Harbor" and insert "cause a survey and estimate of cost of improvement to be made"; in line 25, after the word "between," to strike out "its" and insert "the"; and in the same line, after the word "mouth," to insert "of Manchester Harbor"; so as to make the clause read:

Manchester Harbor, Massachusetts: The Secretary of War is directed, out of the appropriation on hand, to cause a survey and estimate of cost of improvement to be made with a view of straightening the channel between the mouth of Manchester Harbor and Proctors Point, removing obstructions at the mouth of the channel and at the point of rocks, dredging the channel for its entire length between its mouth and the town wharf to a width of from 200 feet narrowing to 150 feet and a depth of 8 feet, and providing turning basins and anchorage for boats by the dredging of the flats for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 11, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Maj. D. W. Lockwood, in House Document No. 59, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session," and insert "November 29, 1895"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving New Bedford Harbor, Massachusetts: Continuing improvement, with a view of securing an increased area for anchorage in the upper harbor in accordance with report submitted November 29, 1895, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 16, after the words "Rhode Island," to strike out "$10,000"; in the same line, after the words "report of," to strike out "Chief of Engineers"; and in line 18, after the word "ninety-five," to insert "$40,000"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor, Great Salt Pond, Block Island, R. I., in accordance with the report of November 29, 1895, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Newport, R. I.: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 21, after the words "Rhode Island," to strike out "$6,300"; in line 22, after the word "project," to strike out "of September 4" and insert "submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for"; and in line 24, after the word "ninety-five," to insert "$6,300"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Wickford, R. I., in accordance with project submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1895, $6,300, which said sum the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to expend from the balance on hand heretofore appropriated for entrance to Point Judith Pond.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 2, to insert:

Improving harbor at Block Island, R. I., $5,000, in accordance with the approved modified project of December 14, 1895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 8, after the word "improvement," to strike out "$18,000"; and in line 9, after the word "project," to strike out "for the improvement thereof" and insert: $28,000, $10,000 of which shall be expended upon Yellow Mill Pond for constructing a channel 12 feet deep and 200 feet wide from the main channel to the causeway, conditioned upon the city of Bridgeport constructing a drawbridge at the causeway.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Bridgeport, Conn.: Continuing improvement in accordance with the modified project, $28,000, $10,000 of which shall be expended upon Yellow Mill Pond for constructing a channel 12 feet deep and 200 feet wide from the main channel to the causeway, conditioned upon the city of Bridgeport constructing a drawbridge at the causeway.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 9, after the word "improvement," to strike out "$8,000"; in line 10, after the word "modified," to strike out "and approved," and in the same line, after the word "project," to insert "$8,000"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Coscob and Mianus River, Connecticut: Continuing improvement in accordance with the modified project, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 12, after the word "Connecticut," to strike out "$10,000"; in line 13, before the word "modified," to strike out "approved," and in the same line, after the word "project," to strike out "for the improvement thereof" and insert "$10,000"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Norwalk, Conn., in accordance with the modified project, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 16, after the word "with," to strike out "approved project for the improvement thereof." The "and insert" project submitted November 29, 1895, $3,000, which said sum the "in line 19, after the word "expend," to strike out "the sum of $3,000 out of the balance unexpended" and insert "from the balance on hand heretofore appropriated"; and in line 22, after the words "Rhode Island," to strike out "for the improvement of said harbor at Westport, Conn.," so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Westport, Conn., in accordance with project submitted November 29, 1895, $3,000, which said sum the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to expend from the balance on hand heretofore appropriated for entrance to Point Judith Pond, R. I.

Mr. FRYE. In line 18, all after the word "dollars" may be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 18, page 8, it is proposed to strike out all of the remainder of the paragraph down to and including line 23.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 8, after line 23, to insert: Improving Greenwich Harbor, Connecticut, according to the plan submitted by the Chief of Engineers in House Executive Document No. 25, Fifty-third Congress, third session, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 12, after the word "line," to strike out:

At a cost not exceeding $35,000, and that the northerly section of said extension to Stony Point and the sand-catch pier extension shall first be constructed.

And in line 17, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And provided further, That the unexpended balance of former appropriations is hereby made available for this work and the care of existing harbor structures in addition to the amounts herein named: And provided further, That the rough stone and gravel required in the building of the breakwater may be brought from Canadian waters and shores free of duty.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Buffalo, N. Y.: Improvement by extending the breakwater southerly to Stony Point: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry out such extension and the plan of such improvement as modified in the report of the Chief of Engineers for the improvement of that harbor for 1895, such contracts to provide that the sand-catch pier be extended to the bulkhead line, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, in the aggregate not to exceed $2,200,000: And provided further, That the unexpended balance of former appropriations is hereby made available for this work and the care of existing harbor structures in addition to the amounts herein named: And provided further, That the rough stone and gravel required in the building of the breakwater may be brought from Canadian waters and shores free of duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "two"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Canarsie Bay, New York: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Wilson, N. Y.: For dredging and maintenance, $5,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 22, after the words "Bay Ridge," to strike out "Gowanus Creek, Red Hook, and Buttermilk channels, and removing triangular area between Red Hook and Bay Ridge channels" and insert "channel, the triangular area between Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels and Red Hook and Buttermilk channels"; on page 11, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty" and insert "two hundred"; in line 5, after the word "others," to strike out "northerly, until completed" and insert "in the order named, until each, as the work advances northerly, is completed in turn"; in line 13, after the word "whole," to strike out "or any part"; in line 16, before the word "hundred," to strike out "seven" and insert "six"; and in the same line, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-seven" and insert "thirty-seven"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Bay Ridge Channel, the triangular area between Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels, and Red Hook and Buttermilk channels, in the harbor of New York, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $200,000: Provided, That the work shall be begun at the southerly end of Bay Ridge Channel and continue through it and the others, in the order named, until each, as the work advances northerly, is completed in turn, so that each shall have a uniform mean low-water depth of 20 feet and width as recommended for each: And provided further, That out of said sum $5,000 shall be expended in dredging Gowanus Canal from Percival street to Hamilton Avenue Bridge: And provided further, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War, for the completion of the whole of said work, to be paid for as appropriations may be made from time to time by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $637,300, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 4, on page 12.

Mr. HILL. There is a statute of New York which limits the distance between pier bulkhead lines to about 70 feet, I am informed. I have some papers in regard to it at my house. I did not suppose the bill was coming up this morning. I would therefore suggest to the Senator from Maine that this item be passed over for the present.

Mr. FRYE. It need not be passed over, but the Senator from New York, after the committee amendments are attended to, can investigate the matter and see whether or not anything should be done. My judgment is that the law of Congress is preeminently powerful in arranging the matter of piers.

Mr. HILL. I may desire to offer an amendment to the effect that nothing herein shall conflict with the statute of New York. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from New York to offer the amendment hereafter.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 12, after line 4, to strike out:

For the purpose of straightening the channel of Gowanus Bay, the harbor line of the northerly shore of Gowanus Bay, instead of extending from a point on the easterly side of Court street (as said Court street existed and was laid out May 20, 1875), distant 500 feet southerly from the intersection of the said easterly side of Court street with the southerly side of Bryant street (as said Bryant street existed and was laid out May 20, 1875), running thence westerly parallel with said Bryant street and 500 feet therefrom, 380 feet, and thence southerly and at right angles to the last-mentioned line and parallel with Clinton street 393 feet, to the exterior sea wall as at present established, shall extend from the point first above described in a straight line in a southwesterly direction to said point where the above-described line parallel with Clinton street and 393 feet in length intersects the above-mentioned exterior sea-wall line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 1, after the word "submitted," to strike out "in report of Maj. H. M. Adams, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, dated March 24," and insert "March 25"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Newtown Creek, part of the harbor at New York: Continuing improvement in accordance with modified project submitted March 25, 1896, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 19, after the word "improvement," to insert "and $15,000 thereof may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used in the repair of the breakwater"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Oswego, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $90,000, in accordance with the modified project for its improvement, and $15,000 thereof may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used for the repair of the breakwater.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "ten," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "out of which sum $5,000 shall be used in dredging Lemon Creek, on Staten Island"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving channel between Staten Island and the New Jersey shore, New York and New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 14, to strike out: Improving harbor at Larchmont, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 22, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Col. G. L. Gillespie, Corps of Engineers, November 26" and insert "December 1"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Peekskill, N. Y., in accordance with report submitted December 1, 1894, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 1, after the word "the," to strike out "approved project for the improvement thereof" and insert "project submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1891"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Mattituck, N. Y., according to the project submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1891, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 5, after the word "the," to strike out "approved project for the improvement thereof," and insert "project submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1889"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Cape Vincent, N. Y., according to the project submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1889, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five"; and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That two-thirds of said amount shall be expended between South Amboy and Great Beds light, in accordance with report in House Executive Document No. 238, Fifty-third Congress, third session.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Raritan Bay, New Jersey: Continuing improvement in accordance with modified project, $75,000: Provided, That two-thirds of said amount shall be expended between South Amboy and Great Beds light, in accordance with report in House Executive Document No. 238, Fifty-third Congress, third session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 19, before the word "to," to strike out "resurvey" and insert "survey"; in line 20, after the word "Pennsylvania," to strike out "out of" and insert "and the cost of improvement to be estimated, the expenses of the same to be paid from"; and in line 22, after the word "unexpended," to strike out "money" and insert "balance of funds"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Erie, Pa.: The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause a survey to be made of the harbor at Erie, Pa., and the cost of improvement to be estimated, the expenses of the same to be paid from the unexpended balance of funds heretofore appropriated for the improvement of said harbor.

Mr. QUAY. In relation to the amendment made in the item with reference to the improvement at Erie, I do not desire, of course, to contest the amendment of the committee, but to mention the fact that the amendment I offered to the bill some two or three weeks ago at the suggestion of the Board of Trade of the city of Erie has been abandoned in deference to what seems to have been a preliminary report of the Engineer Department, and with the expectation that after the resurvey is made the appropriation asked for will be granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 16, line 10, after the word "appropriated," to insert:

Provided further, That in making such contracts the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than 25 per cent of the whole amount authorized to be expended.

So as to make the clause read:

Constructing harbor of refuge, Delaware Bay, Delaware, in accordance with plans submitted by the Chief of Engineers, January 29, 1892, $5,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such material and work as may be necessary to complete said harbor of refuge, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $4,600,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That in making such contracts the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than 25 per cent of the whole amount authorized to be expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 16, after the word "improvement," to strike out "$20,000"; and in line 17, after the word "project," to strike out "for the improvement of the same" and insert "$20,000"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Wilmington, and Christiana River, Delaware: Continuing improvement, in accordance with the modified project, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 2, after the word "Delaware," to strike out "Continuing improvement"; so as to make the clause read:

For maintenance and repairs of iron pier, Delaware Bay, near Lewes, Del., $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 3, to insert:

Improving deep channel in Baltimore Harbor, Maryland, in accordance with the project submitted December 1, 1894, $400,000: Provided, That this sum may be used in the discretion of the Secretary of War, under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, for deepening the present channel to a depth of 30 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 13, after the word "Craighill," to strike out "in House Executive Document No. 200, Fifty-third Congress, third session," and insert "Corps of Engineers, January 7, 1895"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Rock Hall Harbor, Maryland: Completing improvement, in accordance with report submitted by Gen. William P. Craighill, Corps of Engineers, January 7, 1895, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 16, to insert:

Improving inner harbor at Rock Hall, Md., in accordance with report submitted by Chief of Engineers in House Executive Document No. 200, third session, Fifty-third Congress, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 20, to strike out:

Improving Queenstown Harbor, Maryland: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 24, after the word "report," to strike out "of Col. Peter C. Hains, dated" and insert "submitted"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor of Southwest Baltimore (Spring Garden), Md., in accordance with report submitted March 7, 1896, for constructing channel 100 feet wide on the bottom, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 3, to strike out: The proviso relating to the appropriation of $10,000 for continuing the improvement of harbor at Cape Charles City, Va., and its approaches, as contained in the act of July 13, 1892, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and ten" and insert "seventy-five"; and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,996,250, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Winyaw Bay, South Carolina: Continuing improvement, $75,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 21, to strike out:

Harbor of Savannah, Ga.: Continuing improvement, $5,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the project of further improvement recommended by Capt. O. M. Carter in his reports of December 7, 1894, and July 1, 1895, and to complete the project for the steamboat channel between Beaufort, S. C., and Savannah, Ga., recommended by Capt. O. M. Carter in his report of December 4, 1895, and mentioned in that report as route 2, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed the amounts recommended in said reports, the aggregate of which for both projects is $1,093,950, exclusive of amount herein or heretofore appropriated.

Mr. GORDON. After conference with my colleague [Mr. BACON], not now in the Chamber, I ask that this item may be passed over for the present, and a little later in the progress of the bill we will ask the Senate to restore the House provision.

Mr. FRYE. It may be passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be passed over as indicated by the Senator from Georgia.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 20, line 2, after the word "made," to insert "personally under the supervision of the Secretary of War," and in line 4, after the words "Secretary of War," to insert:

And that when said C. P. Goodyear, his heirs and assigns, have procured a 200-foot channel of a minimum depth of 23 feet at mean high tide, $30,000 shall be paid therefor; and when he has secured a channel 300 feet wide, of 23 feet depth at mean high tide, an additional $30,000 shall be paid therefor; and when he has secured a channel 200 feet wide, 24 feet deep at mean high tide, an additional $40,000 shall be paid therefor; and when he has procured a channel 300 feet wide, 24 feet deep at mean high tide, an additional $40,000 shall be paid therefor; and when he has procured a channel 200 feet wide, 25 feet deep at mean high tide, an additional $50,000 shall be paid therefor; and when he has procured a channel 300 feet wide, 25 feet deep at mean high tide, an additional $50,000 shall be paid therefor. And that the words "and not otherwise" be stricken from the twenty-fifth line of the fifth page of the river and harbor act of 1894, in the item providing for deepening the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga., and that the words "and removing material therefrom" be added after the word "bar," in the twenty-sixth line of said item of said act; and that all of said deepening of said bar shall be completed within four years from the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That no payments shall be made to said Goodyear or his legal representatives except upon a certificate of the Secretary of War, made after personal survey by an experienced officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey selected by him for that purpose, that such depths and widths have severally been obtained by him or them;

So as to make the clause read:

Improving the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga.: C. P. Goodyear, the contractor with the Government of the United States to deepen the outer bar of Brunswick, Ga., under the river and harbor act of 1894, shall be paid the sum of $30,000 for a 23-foot depth when he shall receive a certificate that a 24-foot depth has been obtained under said act, together with the $40,000 to which he will be entitled for such 24-foot depth, out of moneys heretofore appropriated by said river and harbor act of 1894. The survey provided for in said act shall be made personally, under the supervision of the Secretary of War, by an experienced official of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, to be designated by the Secretary of War. And that when said C. P. Goodyear, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 17, to increase the appropriation for improving Cumberland Sound, Georgia, from $1,641,500 to $2,345,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, to increase the appropriation for improving the harbor at Pensacola, Fla., from $100,000 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 8, to increase the appropriation for improving the entrance to the harbor at Key West, Fla., from $80,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 10, to increase the appropriation for improving Charlotte Harbor and Pease Creek, Florida, from $16,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 14, to insert:

Improving Mobile Harbor, Alabama: For maintenance of the channel by dredging, $60,000, $10,000 of which may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used for engineering and contingent expenses connected with the superintendence and inspection of the work of dredging carried on under the provisions of the joint resolution of Congress approved March 16, 1896.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty"; and on page 23, line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifteen"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving mouth and passes of Calcasieu River, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $20,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $315,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 9, to insert:

For dredging the bar at Galveston, Tex., $5,000.

Mr. MILLS. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that there is a mistake there. The word "five" ought to be "fifty." It says, "For dredging bar at Galveston, Tex., $5,000." Fifty thousand dollars is what the committee allowed.

Mr. VEST. That is right. It should be $50,000 instead of $5,000.

Mr. MILLS. It is printed wrong.

Mr. FRYE. This is the outside bar at Galveston.

Mr. MILLS. It says, "For dredging the bar." I suppose it is.

Mr. VEST. Yes; it is.

Mr. FRYE. Here is a clause, "For improving and maintaining ship channel in Galveston Bay, $50,000." Was it also $50,000 for Galveston?

Mr. VEST. For dredging the bar.

Mr. MILLS. It was.

Mr. FRYE. I am inclined to think the Senator from Texas is right.

Mr. VEST. I know he is.

Mr. MILLS. Let the change be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out "five" and inserting "fifty"; so as to read:

For dredging the bar at Galveston, Tex., $50,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 23, after line 14, to insert:

For the purpose of ascertaining the character and value of the improvements made at the mouth of the Brazos River, Texas, by the Brazos River Channel and Dock Company, a board of engineers, one of whom shall be a civil engineer, to be appointed by the President, one a member of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, to be selected by the Secretary of War, and one a member of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, to be selected by the Superintendent of the Survey, shall personally make examination of the work done by said company for the purpose of deepening the channel and removing the bar at or near the mouth of said river. It shall be the duty of the board so constituted to report the depth of water upon the bar at the time of their examination, the character of the work done and the cost of the same, together with the value of said work to the Government of the United States, and such other information as they may deem essential. Said board shall report the result of their investigation to the Secretary of War on or before the first day of the next session, and the Secretary shall immediately transmit the report to Congress, and $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of the said board and for the services of the said engineer, the amount of such compensation for said services to be fixed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out the words "the first day of the next session" and insert "the first Monday in December next." The paragraph as it stands is susceptible of the interpretation that the report shall be made by the first day of an extra session, if one should intervene. It says "the first day of the next session." To make it certain I move to strike out those words and to insert "the first Monday in December next."

Mr. FRYE. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, page 24, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out "the first day of the next session" and insert "the first Monday in December next."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] propose to discuss the next item, relative to the improvement of the harbor at Sabine Pass, Tex.?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; a little.

Mr. FRYE. Then I guess we had better pass it over for the present.

Mr. MILLS. Why can we not settle it now? I am going to take but a few minutes. In fact, I think the chairman of the committee ought to withdraw the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. FRYE. The chairman of the committee has not authority from the committee to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MILLS. We may as well determine it right now. It will not take long.

Mr. FRYE. I am entirely willing.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 24, line 15, before the word "fifty," to insert "one hundred and," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,403,856, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Sabine Pass, Tex.: Continuing improvement, $150,000.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I ask that the question be first put on agreeing to the amendment increasing the amount of the appropriations from $50,000 to $150,000. I have no objection, of course, to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment referred to.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, line 15, before the words "fifty thousand," it is proposed to insert "one hundred and"; so as to read:

Improving harbor at Sabine Pass, Tex.: Continuing improvement, $150,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been read.

Mr. QUAY. If the clause from line 15 to line 22, which the committee reported to strike out, is to be reinstated, then I think the amendment of the committee, in line 15, increasing the amount of the appropriation, ought to be voted down, because the increase of $100,000 there was based upon the supposition that this work was to be put under a continuing contract.

Mr. FRYE. The amendment which the committee reported should not be agreed to at present.

Mr. MILLS. Then I propose as a compromise that we let the bill stand as it came from the other House, and let the sum appropriated stand at $50,000 and the proviso stand for the continuing contract.

Mr. FRYE. The motion of the Senator is that the second amendment of the committee be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment of the committee will be disagreed to.

Mr. MILLS. Let the whole of it be disagreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to understand the matter. As I understand, the effect of the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, if adopted, will be to leave the item as it stood in the bill as it came from the House. If the $150,000 is appropriated it would not be desirable to provide for a continuing contract.

Mr. QUAY. The entire amendment, then, Mr. President, in this clause should be voted down, including the insertion of the words "one hundred and," in line 15, and the amendment striking out the remainder of the clause after the word "dollars," at the end of line 15, down to and including line 22. Is that the understanding?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. FRYE. Is it understood that that is agreed to?

Mr. MILLS. I propose to let the bill stand as it came from the other House.

Mr. FRYE. I understand exactly what the Senator wants.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator wants the Senate to vote down the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. What I want to know is whether the Senate agrees to the proposition of the Senator from Texas?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BROWN. Let the question be again stated.

Mr. FRYE. If the Chair will allow me, I will state it. The House appropriated for Sabine Pass $50,000 and placed it under the continuing contract clause. The Senate committee struck out the continuing contract clause and increased the appropriation from $50,000 to $150,000. The Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] desires the Senate to disagree to both of those amendments, so that it will stand $50,000 and with the continuing contract clause.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to have the question on these amendments separated. I ask the Senator, first, as to whether the committee consent to the appropriation of $50,000 or $150,000?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator has a right to demand a separate vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair, according to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. BROWN], will submit to the Senate the question of agreeing to the first amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, line 15, before the words "fifty thousand," it is proposed to insert "one hundred and"; so as to read:

Improving harbor at Sabine Pass, Tex.: Continuing improvement, $150,000.

Mr. GRAY. I would ask the Senator from Texas are not both of those amendments so connected that they are not divisible?

Mr. MILLS. That was the understanding of the committee. If we are to give up the $100,000 additional, we want to be sure that we shall have our work under the continuing contract system.

Mr. TELLER. There is so much noise in the Chamber that I do not hear a word the Senator from Texas is saying, and we are over here absolutely without any knowledge as to what the Senate has done.

Mr. MILLS. I should like to hear the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I was saying that in this part of the Chamber we do not know what is going on and can not hear a word the Senator from Texas says; and it is not the fault of the Senator, either.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair requests Senators to be seated and to refrain from conversation.

Mr. MILLS. I simply state that it is but fair, if we are going to disagree to one part of the amendment, that we should disagree to the whole of it. Of course we should be glad to have the $100,000 additional appropriation, but I say that is a part of the amendment striking out the continuing contract system from the bill, and if we are to have the benefit of one of them taken away we ought to have the advantage of the other. Therefore I ask the Senate to disagree to both of the amendments of the Senate committee and to let the bill stand as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. TELLER. I only want to say a word about the harbor at Sabine Pass. It is undoubtedly the best place on the whole coast for a good harbor, and it can be made so with very much less expense than can a harbor be made at Galveston. It is the natural outlet for the Northwest, the section of country which I in part represent, and it is about the only thing in this bill in which we have the slightest possible interest, except, of course, as we have a general interest in the whole country. It seems to me that if any port ought to have the benefit of the continuing contract system this is one of the places that ought to have it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The improvement of Sabine Pass has been going on now for the last twelve or fifteen years, and it is time that it should be brought to a conclusion. It is the nearest deep-water port, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says, not only to his State, but to Kansas and those States north of Kansas and the States immediately west of Kansas. It presents the best conditions on the Texas coast for a deep-water harbor. It is the dividing line between Texas and Louisiana, though Texas has always claimed the improvement.

In addition to that, Mr. President, there is a railroad called the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf Railroad, which has started from Kansas City, Mo., and has been constructed to Shreveport, La., where I live, and has 1,500 men at work now between Shreveport and Sabine Pass. It will reach Sabine Pass in the course of the next twelve months. This railroad company has already purchased and laid off a town in the Sabine Pass, which is to be a city in the near future, and this improvement ought to be speedily constructed and finished by the Government. So far as it has gone, the results have been very satisfactory. It is one of those projects which ought to go under the continuous contract system.

As the Senator from Colorado has said, I know from long experience in the other Chamber, in reference to this improvement, that the people of the Northwest, particularly north of Sabine Pass, have taken more interest in the development of that harbor and that of Galveston than in any other harbor upon the South Atlantic or Gulf Coast. Those States up there do not ask for anything themselves outside of an appropriation for the Missouri River, but they are interested in a deep-water port both at Galveston and at the mouth of Sabine River, and they ought to have it.

I think this amendment, taking this improvement from the contract system, should be voted down, and this project thereby restored to the continuous work or contract system, and, as the Senator from Texas has said, let the amount stand at $50,000 as the House has placed it.

Mr. FRYE. I very freely admit the importance of this improvement at Sabine Pass, and the committee have been exceedingly friendly to the improvement ever since I have been on it. We have appropriated annually from one hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. I have no doubt it has been well expended, but this bill came here from the House of Representatives with some thirty continuing contract clauses. The Senate was desirous of putting on some others, and our committee examined with great care to see where it could economize to a certain extent by striking out some of the clauses which the House had put in. We had executive sessions, and the committee was understood to be perfectly silent in regard to what we had done, but the moment we touched a little House appropriation or a continuing clause in less than an hour from that time there was a procession from somewhere else marching into the committee room, earnestly opposing any change whatever, and when arriving there not only opposing any change to cut off appropriations, but immediately proposing changes to increase. When the improvement of Sabine Pass was struck out, I said to the committee myself that must not be known, because we shall be overwhelmed; and yet in less than an hour from that time a telegram was received from Mr. Kountz, who is away up in Colorado somewhere, informing us that that had been stricken out, that it was an outrage, and that it ought to be retained. The birds of the air carried everywhere every proposition that we made for the slightest reduction in the bill, and we have been compelled to put back item after item until, my recollection is, that of the continuing clauses only three are now left, one at Sabine Pass, one at Yazoo, and one at Savannah, and the distinguished Senators from Georgia are going to make a furious onslaught on the Senate of the United States to have Savannah restored, and I have no doubt they will succeed.

Mr. BACON. On the contrary, we are going to throw ourselves on the sense of justice of the committee and ask them to consent to it.

Mr. FRYE. You will fail in that utterly. You will have to appeal to the Senate.

I do not suppose that the committee is concerned particularly about this amendment. I do not suppose they care particularly whether they are overruled or not. This is a good improvement, and the committee all so understand it, but the Senate must understand if this is done the others will be restored, and in conference there will be nothing left to confer about, except Senatorial amendments.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I do not see any reason why this should not be restored as the others have been. The Senator from Maine has given a very strong argument in favor of that, when he says that so soon as the committee struck out Sabine Pass he was telegraphed to from the great Northwest in opposition to it. Mr. President, that whole population has been looking for years to going through Texas to the sea. Their railway systems are pointing toward the coast of Texas. We all want all the open ports we can get on the Gulf in order to stimulate competition and reduce freights. The thing which is eating up the produce of the Northwestern people is the enormous freights they have to pay to get to the seaboard, and Texas is, I suppose, a thousand miles nearer to Colorado than the city of New York. I therefore ask in all earnestness that the Senate will not agree to the amendment proposed to the House bill striking out this continuing contract system for Sabine Pass.

Mr. GORDON. I want to say to the Senator from Texas, although not living in Texas, and with a constituency which has no interest in Sabine Pass whatever, that I have been applied to from as far west as Nebraska to help Sabine Pass. I trust, therefore, the motion of the Senator from Texas will prevail.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the first amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the second amendment proposed by the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 24, after the word "dollars," in line 15, it is proposed to strike out:

Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,403,856, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Commerce, which has just been stated.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, at my suggestion the chairman of the committee kindly consented to pass temporarily the amendment of the committee in reference to the harbor of Savannah. I now ask the Senate to disagree to the committee's amendment on page 18, beginning at line 22.

I think it hardly necessary to detain the Senate on this matter. The report of the engineers demonstrates that this additional improvement at Savannah will save to the Government in maintenance not less than $200,000 per annum, which is the interest upon a very large sum of money. This amendment of the Senate committee strikes out all of the appropriation made for that great port, which I think now has some $150,000,000 of commerce and which is rapidly increasing. I trust the Senate will disagree to the amendment of the Senate committee striking out this item.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Commerce reported to strike out, on page 18, beginning at line 22, as follows:

Harbor of Savannah, Ga.: Continuing improvement, $5,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the project of further improvement recommended by Capt. O. M. Carter in his reports of December 7, 1894, and July 1, 1895, and to complete the project for the steamboat channel between Beaufort, S. C., and Savannah, Ga., recommended by Capt. O. M. Carter in his report of December 4, 1895, and mentioned in that report as route 2; to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed the amounts recommended in said reports, the aggregate of which for both projects is $1,003,950, exclusive of amount herein or heretofore appropriated.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not design that there shall be any such onslaught made upon the Senate as was suggested or anticipated by the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I do think, however, that proper and careful consideration of this matter would induce the committee itself to consent to restore the provision as it came from the other House. We are not here asking any amendment to be put upon the House appropriation. We are simply asking that the Senate will agree to that which the other House has already adjudged to be the proper appropriation in this matter, and not an appropriation, either, as I will suggest a little further on.

I want to call the attention of the Senate, Mr. President, to the fact that this is not a local matter in its broadest sense. Savannah is a port from which are shipped the products of a very large section of country. While this matter was under investigation by the Senate committee, or rather after the Senate committee had acted, there was in session in Charleston what was known as the South and West Grain and Trade Congress, composed of delegates from almost all the Southern and Western States, and during the session of that congress I received a telegram which I ask the Secretary to read from the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 30, 1896.

Senator A. O. BACON, Washington, D. C.:

The South and West Grain and Trade Congress now assembled in third annual session at Charleston, S. C., composed of delegates from the Southern and Western States, and especially engaged in formulating and maturing plans for the active utilization of the ports of the Gulf and South Atlantic for the direct foreign shipment of the grain and other products of these sections, have learned with profound disappointment that your Committee on Commerce recommend that the appropriation in the House river and harbor bill for completing and making permanent the improvement of the Savannah River and Harbor be stricken out, and therefore the South and West Grain and Trade Congress do most earnestly appeal to the Senate of the United States in the interest of international trade and commerce to restore to the House bill the appropriation for Savannah River and Harbor which your Committee on Commerce recommend be stricken out from said House bill.

H. S. POTTER, President.
JNO. A. SMITH, Secretary.

Mr. DUBOIS. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUBOIS. I have not a copy of the bill before me, but do I understand the Senate committee propose to strike out the House provision, and that the Senator desires to have the bill amended so that it will be the same as it came from the House of Representatives?

Mr. BACON. That, and that only; and the main feature of the provision is not an appropriation at this time, but simply the authorization of a contract to be appropriated for in the future. I trust that the Senate will restore the bill to the condition it was in when it came from the other House.

Mr. FRYE. I supposed the Senator would ask that all of this provision might be restored, except that which relates to the completion of a project for a steamboat channel between Beaufort, S. C., and Savannah, Ga.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, in answer to the chairman of the committee, I would say that we greatly prefer to have the provision retained in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. But if it is a matter of great moment to the committee, and if it will prevent the consumption of time in debate, I would rather agree to the portion being left out to which the Senator has just referred.

Mr. FRYE. I should be more vigorous and aggressive in my defense of the action of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the other House if that provision was to remain in the bill. The idea of putting a 7-foot channel between Beaufort, S. C., and Savannah into a continuing contract clause, which is going to cost about $120,000, is utterly absurd. It has been simply smuggled into the bill elsewhere, and never ought to have been placed there at all. I never heard of such a case before. I suggested to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] that if he was going to make a proposition of this kind and he did not expect to meet with a pretty vigorous defense of the action of the Senate committee, he should not ask that on page 19 the words between line 3 and line 9 should be retained.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine was kind enough to make that suggestion to me in the interest of what possibly might conduce to an understanding on the part of the Senate favorable to the Savannah project. I have had some telegraphic correspondence with the people of Savannah since upon that subject. They say, of course, that if the Senate of the United States is unwilling that the channel shall be opened they must necessarily submit, but that they are extremely anxious that this change shall not be made.

In that connection, I desire to say that the work already done by the Government in the opening of the Savannah River has obstructed the very channel which it is now sought to reopen; that is, the channel between the town of Beaufort, in South Carolina, and the city of Savannah. I am not prepared to say to the Senate exactly how this has been done; but a very large portion of this appropriation, if made, will be devoted to removing the obstruction that the Government itself has put in that channel. In other words, in the work of opening the Savannah River the Government has obstructed this other channel. Of course I do not pretend that all of this money is for that purpose.

Mr. GORDON. If my colleague will permit, he refers to the money appropriated for that particular channel.

Mr. BACON. For that particular channel only.

Mr. GORDON. And not for the whole improvement.

Mr. BACON. It amounts to $105,000. This is a separate enterprise, although these provisions are put in the bill together, but the two works are entirely separate. The work, so far as it concerns the Savannah River, is confined in this bill to a provision for a contract, and not for an appropriation, except to the amount of $5,000. The work that is to be done on the channel between Beaufort and Savannah is independent of that, and embraces, if I am correctly informed, about $105,000 of this total amount.

Mr. President, it does look like a matter of simple justice. It is not only the people of Savannah who are interested in this work, but also the people of South Carolina; and the Government in the prosecution of a great work, a very important work, in opening the harbor of Savannah, has obstructed another channel, and should remove that obstruction. If in the removal of that obstruction it is found necessary to go still further in order to open the channel, it would be the part of economy to do the whole thing at once, rather than do a little piece now and undertake the rest in the future.

The distinguished Senator from Maine speaks of this feature of this appropriation as having been smuggled into the bill. Of course the Senate will understand that the Senator has no reference to anything that has occurred in the Senate, because that feature of the bill, as well as the other features of it, came from the House of Representatives in that shape, and has not been in any manner modified by the Senate or by the Senate committee, except to strike the whole thing out. I do not know to what the Senator refers when he speaks of the provision being smuggled in.

Mr. FRYE. This Senator is not at liberty to say.

Mr. BACON. I understand that the Senator from Maine is not at liberty to say; but the Senator from Georgia is at liberty to say that it has no reference to anything which has occurred in the Senate, because it came from the other House in that shape.

Mr. FRYE. If it had occurred in the Senate I should not have mentioned it.

Mr. BACON. Probably it is not necessary for me, then, to press that point, but take it for granted. I thought it due, however, in view of the statement of the Senator from Maine, to make this explanation as to the character of these two branches of this great work. It is not an extravagant appropriation for this particular feature to which the distinguished Senator from Maine, the chairman of the committee, now objects. While it is a comparatively small matter in amount, it is really an important matter, in that it is the great water highway between two of the principal cities in the South. I trust the distinguished Senator may not oppose any part of it, and that not only the Savannah River scheme but the Beaufort channel project improvement also be allowed to go through. It is certainly modest compared with a great many other appropriations in this bill.

Mr. FRYE. There is no more reason why that channel should be put under the continuing contract clause than there is why every river and channel in the United States should be put under the continuing contract clause. No reason can be given. Every river in the South where the improvement is not going to cost over $100,000 with the same propriety could go under the continuing contract clause, and every river in the North and Northwest. I certainly shall not consent to the restoration of the clause with that proposition remaining there.

Mr. GORDON. I doubt whether the Senator from Maine is informed of the fact that this river, which that small appropriation is designed to open, carries a very large amount of local trade. I say "local," because it is trade between the ports of South Carolina and Georgia.

Mr. FRYE. Only $600,000 worth in a year. That is not a very large amount to go under the continuing contract clause.

Mr. GORDON. It is an inside channel.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. FRYE. I ask if the Georgia Senators still insist upon keeping that channel in the bill?

Mr. GORDON. I will ask the Senator from Maine if we consent to that coming out, will he, as chairman of the committee, consent to the other portion of the clause being restored?

Mr. FRYE. I have no right to do so.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, let me say this: I feel exceedingly kind toward this improvement at Savannah. I think I understand it. It has been before the Commerce Committee frequently while I have been a member of that committee, and I must say to my friends from Georgia that if this precedent is adopted of interjecting into this great improvement this little side improvement from Beaufort down to Savannah, as the chairman of the committee has properly said, we must apply the continuing contract system to every other improvement in the bill. The remainder of us can not stand here and see this thing done in justice to our constituents without demanding that the same legislation shall apply all along the line; and instead of having a bill of $70,000,000 upon the continuing contract system you will have a bill of $170,000,000 or $270,000,000. I think those Senators ought to be satisfied, for I believe I can assure them, if they take out this inside arrangement from Beaufort to Savannah there will be no trouble about the continuing clause.

Mr. GORDON. Then we assent to that portion of it coming out; and I move to amend by striking out lines 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, and including the words "said reports," in line 10.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us see what is stricken out.

Mr. FRYE. From line 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The words stricken out will be read. The SECRETARY. After the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-five," in line 3, strike out all of the paragraph down to and including the word "reports," in line 10.

Mr. VEST. That is right.

Mr. GORDON. The words "both projects," in line 10, are also stricken out.

Mr. FRYE. Strike out the word "both" and change the word "projects" so as to make it singular, and change the aggregate.

Mr. BACON. I suggest to my colleague that I have the paragraph marked as it would be amended, and I have handed it to the chairman of the committee. He will indicate to the clerks the words to be stricken out.

Mr. GORDON. That is all right.

The paragraph as proposed to be amended was read by the Secretary, as follows:

Harbor of Savannah, Georgia: Continuing improvement, $5,000: Provided, That a contract may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the project of further improvement recommended by Capt. O. M. Carter in his reports of December 7, 1894, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed the amount of $987,250 recommended in said report, exclusive of amount herein or heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paragraph having been perfected, the question recurs on the amendment of the committee to strike it out.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 23, page 24.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 25, line 1, after the words "according to a," to strike out "survey and recommendation approved in 1894" and insert "project submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1895"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Ashtabula, Ohio: Continuing improvements, $50,000, of which amount not less than $40,000 shall be applied toward the construction of breakwaters according to a project submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty"; in line 9, after the word "made," to insert "and the cost of improvement to be estimated"; and in line 10, after the word "to," to strike out "recommending such improvements as may be necessary to provide" and insert "providing"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Black River (Lorain), Ohio: Continuing improvements, including necessary dredging between piers, $30,000; and the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to cause a survey of said harbor to be made and the cost of improvement to be estimated, with a view to providing better access to said harbor and the safety of boats therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 15, after the word "also," to strike out "in accordance with the recent report and recommendation of the local engineer, Col. Jared A. Smith"; in line 21, after the word "depth," to insert "in accordance with report submitted March 25, 1896"; in line 23, after the word "That," to strike out "the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to enter into" and insert "contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Cleveland, Ohio: Continuing improvements, $80,000 to be used for extension of breakwater, according to plans heretofore adopted; also, for repair and rebuilding, as well as relocation, when desirable, of the piers and breakwater already constructed, and for widening and extending the channel between the piers and in the outer harbor and maintaining the necessary depth in accordance with report submitted March 25, 1896: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for the completion of the above projects, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, the cost not to exceed in the aggregate $1,354,000: And provided also, That the Secretary of War be directed to cause a survey to be made of the said breakwater as heretofore planned, with a view of determining the advisability of changing the plan thereof so as to abandon the proposed construction of the eastern shore arm, and in lieu thereof extending the said breakwater eastwardly in a general direction parallel with the shore; and the sums hereby appropriated, or authorized to be expended, may be expended in such manner as the Secretary of War may deem best for the improvement of said harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 18, after the word "the," to strike out "approved project for the improvement thereof" and insert "project submitted April 3, 1896"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Fairport, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $30,000, of which amount not less than $20,000 shall be applied toward the construction of a breakwater according to the project submitted April 3, 1896.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 4, after the word "harbor," to insert "and the cost of improvement to be estimated," and in line 5, after the word "to," to strike out "recommending such means as shall secure and maintain" and insert "securing and maintaining"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Sandusky, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $40,000; and the Secretary of War is directed to cause a survey to be made of the bar at the mouth of the harbor and the cost of improvement to be estimated, with a view to securing and maintaining a permanent navigable channel of sufficient depth next to Cedar Point.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "two"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Vermillion, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 20, after the word "the," to strike out "latest approved project recommended for the improvement thereof," and insert "project submitted March 24, 1896"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Conneaut, Ohio: For improvements under existing plans, $40,000, of which amount not less than $20,000 shall be applied toward the construction of a breakwater according to the project submitted March 24, 1896.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 2, to strike out: Improving outlet to Wolf Lake, Indiana, in accordance with the approved project for the improvement thereof, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 7, after the word "project," to strike out "proposed by Maj. W. L. Marshall, of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, under date of June 30," and insert "submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Calumet Harbor, at Chicago, Ill.: Continuing improvement, including the amended project submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1895, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 18, after the word "repairs," to insert "and providing a navigable depth of 18 feet"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Frankfort, Mich.: Continuing improvement and repairs, and providing a navigable depth of 18 feet, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 25, after the word "and," to strike out "for repairs, twelve" and insert "dredging interior channel, fifteen"; on page 29, line 1, after the word "dollars," to strike out "Provided, That" and insert "and"; in line 2, after the word "appropriated," to insert "for said improvement"; in the same line, after the word "now," to strike out "on hand"; and in line 3, after the word "may," to strike out "also be used in the same project" and insert "be used for dredging such interior channel, in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army: Provided, That the former requirements have been complied with"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Manistee, Mich.: Continuing improvements and dredging interior channel, $15,000; and all money heretofore appropriated for said improvement and now unexpended may be used for dredging such interior channel, in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army: Provided, That the former requirements have been complied with.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 8, to increase the appropriation for improving the harbor at Holland (Black Lake), Mich., from $8,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 6, to increase the appropriation for improving the harbor at Marquette, Mich., from $24,000 to $29,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 8, to increase the appropriation for improving the harbor at Ludington, Mich., from $20,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 15, after the word "dollars," to insert "for maintenance of channel and pier"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Menominee, Michigan and Wisconsin: Continuing improvements, $7,150, for maintenance of channel and pier.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 21, after the word "report," to strike out "of Chief of Engineers under date of" and insert "submitted," and in line 23, after the word "ninety-six," to strike out "in House Document No. 818, of Fifty-fourth Congress, first session"; so as to make the clause read:

Constructing harbor of refuge at Presque Isle Point, Marquette Bay, Michigan, in accordance with report submitted March 21, 1896, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. According to the agreement, I will not ask the further consideration of the pending bill at the present time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the third committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 19, 22, 23, 36, 37, 38, 83, 108, 109, 142, 144, 233, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 313, and 314, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. McCALL of Tennessee, and Mr. DICKERY managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, each with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 673) granting to Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major-general, United States Army Volunteers; and

A bill (S. 1365) for the relief of the National New Haven Bank of the State of Connecticut.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2) disposing of condemned cannon;

A bill (H. R. 1345) to amend the military record of Charles Hentz, late private of Company C, Eleventh Regiment Connecticut Infantry Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 2708) to constitute a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for the holding of terms of court at Beaumont, Tex., and for the appointment of a clerk for said court;

A bill (H. R. 4528) granting a pension to Katherine S. McCartney, widow of William H. McCartney;

A bill (H. R. 5280) for the relief of George W. Freeman;

A bill (H. R. 5854) granting a pension to John Caster;

A bill (H. R. 6037) granting a pension to Mrs. Amanda Woodcock;

A bill (H. R. 7324) to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation in said State as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 22, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7973) to establish a railroad bridge across the Illinois River near Grafton, Ill.;

A bill (H. R. 7983) to pension Frances E. Wickware;

A bill (H. R. 8038) for the protection of yacht owners and shipbuilders of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

JOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY, ETC.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the resolution passed by the Senate April 24, 1896.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Joint Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives and of the Senate be authorized to sit in Washington, D. C., during the recess of Congress, for the purpose of inquiring into the condition of the Library of Congress, and to report upon the same at the next session of Congress with such recommendations as may be deemed advisable; also to report a plan for the organization, custody, and management of the new Library building and the Library of Congress.

The said joint committee is also authorized to employ a stenographer whenever necessary during the course of the inquiry. The necessary expenses of the sittings of the said joint committee, including the pay of the stenographer, are to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives and Senate, on vouchers approved by the chairman of said joint committee: Provided, That the expenses incurred under this concurrent resolution be reported to the second session of this Congress.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. VEST. Is that a conference report?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is not.

Mr. VEST. What is it?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is a substitute for a resolution passed by the Senate some weeks ago, which is accepted by the Committee on the Library.

Mr. VEST. I should like to inquire what is the necessity for having a standing committee here upon the Library, which will not be finished, I understand, for a year. The committee is directed to assemble here, as I caught the resolution, in the vacation of Congress and to pass upon vouchers and make arrangements for the Library. It is an extraordinary proceeding, it seems to me. I want to be as good-natured and courteous as anybody on the floor, but it seems to me that this is rather stretching parliamentary precedent.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that the special committee now in existence pertaining to the Library was simply to look after the Library during the course of the construction of that building, and that the purpose of the work to be performed by the Joint Committee on the Library, in accordance with the resolution, pertains to the Library building after it is completed and accepted by the Government.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator be kind enough to tell us what his information is as to the time of completion of the building?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The resolution has nothing whatever to do with the building prior to its completion and acceptance.

Mr. VEST. But I understand the resolution provides that the committee shall sit here during the coming vacation?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. To formulate a plan for the future management of the Library of Congress when it occupies the new building, after the building is completed and accepted.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand the Senator to claim that the committee ought to be in session here to formulate that plan? It strikes me that it is rather singular that they can not formulate a plan for the government of the Library outside of Washington City as well as in it. It is an extraordinary proposition.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The resolution does not provide that the committee shall sit outside of Washington. It provides that it shall sit in Washington during the recess and examine—

Mr. VEST. That is the very point. I ask, why is it necessary to meet here in the recess to formulate a plan for the government of the Library? I am informed (I have no information about it except from the present Librarian) that the building will not be ready for occupation for a year at least; and that the committee shall be here during the summer months in advance of the completion of the building in order to formulate rules for its government is a little extraordinary.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I understand that the Library building will be ready for occupancy next February. It is not proposed that the committee shall sit during the entire recess of Congress. The understanding is that perhaps two or three weeks during the month of November will be occupied in formulating a plan for the future management and custody of the Library building and the Library of Congress.

Mr. VEST. That is almost a year from now. There is a difference of two months in the time. Is the resolution just introduced?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The resolution passed the Senate originally and the House amended it. The Committee on the Library accepts the amendment, and my motion is that the substitute sent here by the House be agreed to by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair laid before the Senate the amendment of the House. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from North Dakota, that the Senate agree to the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. When the Senate resolution was under consideration I asked that the words "in Washington" might be inserted so that by no possibility should we authorize a committee to make trips. The suggestion was at once accepted by the Senator from North Dakota. As I read the House provisions this morning they are very brief and simply authorize the joint committee to sit here in Washington during the recess and prepare such recommendations as may seem wise to them in reference to the transfer of the existing Library to the new building and any other recommendations that it would be proper for them to make. While I am opposed to any such extraordinary resolution as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] introduced the other day to banish to Alaska not an inconsiderable portion of the Senate during the recess, I regard this particular resolution as entirely conservative and in every way beneficial to the public service.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I should like to have the resolution read again for the information of Senators. I think the Senator from Missouri misunderstood the resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the amendment of the House be read. The Secretary again read the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota, to agree to the amendment. The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 2) disposing of condemned cannon;

A bill (H. R. 1345) to amend the military record of Charles Hentz, late private of Company C, Eleventh Regiment Connecticut Infantry Volunteers; and

A bill (H. R. 5280) for the relief of George W. Freeman.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 4528) granting a pension to Katherine S. McCartney, widow of William H. McCartney;

A bill (H. R. 5854) granting a pension to John Caster;

A bill (H. R. 6037) granting a pension to Mrs. Amanda Woodcock; and

A bill (H. R. 7983) to pension Frances E. Wickware.

The following bills were several read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 7973) to establish a railroad bridge across the Illinois River near Grafton, Ill.; and

A bill (H. R. 8038) for the protection of yacht owners and shipbuilders of the United States.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 2708) to constitute a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for the holding of terms of court at Beaumont, Tex., and for the appointment of a clerk for said court; and

A bill (H. R. 8110) to establish a uniform law on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

The bill (H. R. 7324) to authorize and empower the State of South Dakota to select the Fort Sully Military Reservation in said State as a part of the lands granted to the State under the provisions of an act to provide for the admission of South Dakota into the Union, approved February 23, 1889, and for indemnity school lands, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution submitted by Mr. PEPPER, providing for a committee of five Senators to investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I shall ask the Senate to remain in session to-day until the resolution is disposed of.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, have I not the floor? I believe I have the floor on the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from New York is entitled to the floor. The Chair did not know for what purpose the Senator from Kansas had risen.

Mr. PEPPER. I think it was a very proper purpose. I simply want to ask the Senate to remain in session until the resolution is disposed of.

Mr. HILL. I would have been entirely willing to yield the floor if the Senator from Kansas had asked me, but I do not wish to have the floor taken from me arbitrarily to make any sort of announcement.

Mr. GORDON. Will the Senator from New York yield to me one moment in order that I may offer an amendment to the pending resolution?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GORDON. I will state that the amendment simply proposes to change the words "a committee of five Senators" to "the Committee on Finance." I ask that the amendment lie on the table for the present. I shall call it up at the proper time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table as requested.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, during the debate of yesterday I was asked the question what objection I had to the passage of the present resolution, now that some of its especially offensive provisions have been eliminated. I said I would answer that question before this debate terminated. I might as well devote a few moments to that question now.

I am opposed to the resolution because I consider it wholly unnecessary and uncalled for, unprecedented in its character, and as establishing a most pernicious and unwise precedent. It is a sufficient objection to the passage of the resolution that it is unnecessary. The resolution, sir, must go, if it should pass, to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate before it can become operative. I will call the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the fact that that will involve still further delay, and will not permit us to secure that information deemed so necessary by some to enable us to vote on the river and harbor bill, which was the argument urged yesterday for the consideration of this resolution at this time.

Every single fact sought to be investigated by the resolution, with the exception of three, is before the Senate either in documents presented by the Secretary of the Treasury or in the form of other information now pending before us. I am opposed to the resolution because I want to protect the Senate from making itself ridiculous. It does that often enough without having any additional provocation or inducement.

I propose to analyze the resolution for a few moments. What facts are to be investigated? What is the information sought? To what points are the minds of the committee to be directed?

First. "To investigate and report specially what amount of available funds, classified, was in the United States Treasury and on deposit in other places, subject to the order of the Secretary of the Treasury at the time the bonds were sold or offered for sale."

Second. "Whether there was or was not coin enough on hand to meet all coin obligations of the Government due at the time said bonds were sold or when they were offered for sale."

Third. "What obligations were due at that time and the amount of each, stated separately."

Fourth. "Who purchased the bonds, in what amounts, and where, whether in the United States or in foreign countries, and in what proportions, and from what persons or classes of persons."

Fifth. "What was the market price of our Government bonds at the time."

Sixth. "To investigate and report as to the manner of disposing of said bonds; by what authority."

Seventh. "What contracts, advertisements, or proposals were made by the Secretary of the Treasury in relation thereto."

Eighth. "What agreements or contracts, and whether oral or in writing, were entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to the sale and purchase of the bonds."

Every one of these eight subdivisions of information has been fully explained by documents on file before the Senate, and I object to Senators rising here and attempting to justify their votes for the resolution upon the plea of ignorance upon these points. If Senators need information upon those eight distinct points let them read their own files. Let them read the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury. Let them read the very elaborate information which is subject to their disposal before they set up the plea that they want information. The suggestion that they want or need further information is uncomplimentary to themselves as well as to the Senate. I do not think that Senators can well vote upon the great public questions involved affecting the finances when they rise and say that they want information upon these eight distinct questions. No Senator has a right, in my humble judgment, to give his vote in regard to the great and important questions relating to our finances when he steps forward and says, "I want information upon eight distinct propositions," where the information is already at his disposal.

The amount of classified funds appears in every monthly statement of the Secretary of the Treasury. The amount of coin on hand and available appears in every daily statement of the Treasury. What obligations are due from the Government at any time can be seen in every report made by the Secretary of the Treasury. "Who purchased the bonds, in what amounts?"—that, it seems, is what they want to know; and where the purchasers live is also to be inquired into. Here in my hand and available to everyone is a special report of the Secretary of the Treasury, containing the names of the purchasers, the amounts of the bids, and where the purchasers reside. What more is wanted?

Mr. GRAY. Does anybody suggest that those reports are erroneous or mistaken?

Mr. HILL. No one has suggested it. They have not even read the reports. They admit they have not. The passage of the resolution is a complete confession of ignorance. I would not vote for such a resolution because it would stigmatize me as an ignoramus unworthy of a seat in this body, and, in my humble judgment, it is an admission on the part of every Senator who votes for it that he desires to be considered an ignoramus.

"Who purchased the bonds?" Read the reports, I answer. "In what amounts?" Here it is, clearly stated in Carlisle's special report. "Where do they reside?" Here it is, all set forth. Read it. This appears to be and is a foolish, a contemptible, an absurd resolution. There is no law against its passage, of course. You can pass the resolution if you have the power—if the majority desire it. There is no law against the Senate making a fool of itself if it is so disposed. "In what proportions and from what persons or classes," is one of the facts desired. All that appears in the report. "What did the bonds sell for?" That appears. The committee is to investigate and report "by what authority" the bonds were sold. That presents a question of law. Read the statutes of your country if you want to know. If you can not comprehend them, then resign your seats. "What contracts or agreements were entered into for the purchase of bonds?" They are all stated in the recent report, which I hold in my hand, and which every Senator has in his possession.

Mr. President, I have stated concisely the eight distinct facts about which the resolution purports to want information. What are the subjects which do not appear in any report upon which information is desired? "What was the reason for any unusual withdrawal of coin from the Treasury shortly before bonds were sold or offered for sale?" is one of these points. Who knows? If the committee is appointed, it may sit here until its members are gray-headed, and it will never obtain that information. Why does a person present greenbacks and ask gold for them? That is what the abettors of this resolution want to know. A man has a greenback and wants to get gold for it. He presents it at the Treasury. This inquisitive resolution wants to know why he presented it to the Treasury? Why? Because Congress way back in 1875 passed a law which says that the paper obligations of your Government, such as greenbacks, shall be redeemed in coin. When any person has one of these greenbacks he has a right under the law of the land to present it and ask gold or coin for it. But there are some Senators who want to know why he presents it. The inquiry is absurd and ridiculous upon its face. That is one of the facts, of course, about which the Secretary of the Treasury can not know anything. It is a fact that nobody can know anything about, except the person who presents the greenback for redemption. What their private motives were, what their private purposes were are immaterial for purposes of legislation. They are immaterial to any matter upon which we as Senators are called upon to act.

Now here is the second item. The information sought does not appear in any report and it can not of necessity appear in any report. What is it? We are to inquire—

What effect the bond sales had on the credit and business of the people of the United States.

That is a great problem. It involves no specific information to be readily ascertained. It involves more than a mere question of fact. It involves the whole gold and silver question. Is it seriously proposed that we are to have a special committee to investigate what effect the bond sales had on the credit and business of the people of the United States? Are not Senators competent to argue upon either side of that question without any more information? It is a question about which men will readily and continuously differ. The silver men will assert it had a bad effect on the credit of the United States, and the gold men will contend that it had a good effect. The great mass of the people will say it was absolutely necessary, because there was no other way to protect the honor and the credit of the Government. But you are simply investigating an abstract question. You are simply investigating what might be termed a hypothetical question. You are simply making an experimental investigation. "What effect have the bond sales had?" No one can definitely determine. I realize that this is a Presidential year, a campaign year, when every opportunity is sought to make political capital, but I do think it is unwise to appoint a special committee to investigate the general subject of the effect of bond sales on the credit and business of the people of the United States.

What is the next point? The authors of the resolution want to know the profits made—"made or to be made"—by the syndicate that purchased the bonds. "Profits made or to be made!" Who knows what prices the Government bonds are going to be to-morrow? Who can forecast the future? If I, as a member of the syndicate, purchased Government bonds, how can I know or any committee know what I am going to get for those bonds next week? What profits are to be made in the future by the syndicate? Who can tell? The other day a distinguished Senator rose in his place and objected to any law that allowed dealing in futures. He said it was gambling. Here is a proposition on the part of the Senate of the United States seriously to engage in the transaction of investigating what profits are "to be made" in the future sale of bonds. Of course the Secretary of the Treasury can not tell that. Nobody can tell precisely what the syndicate made or is going to make except by asking the syndicate itself.

The questions which I have mentioned, of course, are three questions which can not be determined by the printed record. They must be determined by outside investigation, if at all. I submit to the good sense of the Senate that these three items of information which are proposed to be obtained outside of the actual reports upon our desks are unworthy of inquiry. It is a speculative inquiry. It is a gambling inquiry. It is semipolitical, in its character, involving in one respect the whole question between the gold side and the silver side; and a report is seriously expected to be made upon the matter. How are you going to examine the syndicate? Will some Senator rise in his place and tell me how it is to be done under the resolution? I say you can not subpoena a single witness under the resolution as it now stands. I say you have no constitutional power under the resolution to compel a single member of the syndicate to answer any question relating to what he received for his bonds when he sold them to Tom, Dick, or Harry. I suppose the friends of the resolution will say, "We will determine that afterwards." Yes; run up against the Constitution. It will not be the first time they have done it. They propose to antagonize the laws. You have no power, you have no authority in the resolution for summoning witnesses; no power to subpoena witnesses, no power to compel answers to questions about the private transactions of syndicates or of men who buy bonds. I assert as a proposition of law that if I put in a bid for the purchase of bonds and receive an allotment of them, and I should voluntarily go before the committee, I could refuse to answer to whom I sold the bonds or what profits I made by such sale. The resolution is not based upon any allegation that the information is desired for future legislation. It is not based upon an allegation of misconduct against any member of the Senate. It involves no question of high privilege. Therefore it does not come within any of the decisions of the courts in which it is held that you can inquire into private transactions of individuals.

Mr. GRAY. We can not investigate as ground of impeachment. Mr. HILL. And, sir, we can not investigate for grounds of impeachment. The Constitution settles that question. But we ought to have an investigating committee to determine what the Constitution is, because some Senators do not seem to understand it. They are going to investigate by what authority the bonds were issued; a legal question. Why not investigate what the Constitution is?

Need I remind the Senate that under the Constitution of the United States the House has the sole power of impeachment? As a matter of propriety, if nothing else, it would be better that the Senate should wait. Let the House, fresh from the people, present its articles of impeachment against the Secretary of the Treasury, because if there is anything at all to investigate here it is simply a question which might or might not constitute a matter of impeachment, which the House should originate. Therefore I have answered the question put to me yesterday as to what objection I have now to the resolution in its amended form. It still retains the provision for a special committee, objectionable to all the traditions of this body. There is contained in it a proposed inquiry as to facts not needed or really demanded, and if any Senator here wants this information for any honest purpose, for the purpose of aiding him in casting his vote upon any public question involved here, he has only to read the records on file now before him.

When I was discussing this question yesterday just prior to the adjournment of the Senate, I was considering in detail the alleged grounds for the investigation so far as the last public sale of bonds is concerned. A great deal has been said in the public press and elsewhere in regard to what is called the Graves bid. I thought it undignified that the Senate should proceed to investigate what was the occasion or subject-matter of a lawsuit against the Secretary of the Treasury. I pointed out the fact that Mr. Graves had gone into court. I pointed to the fact that Mr. Graves had made serious allegations against the Secretary of the Treasury. I pointed to the further fact that in the litigation the Secretary of the Treasury had replied. I pointed to the fact that the plaintiff had abandoned the litigation. Is that not enough for the Senate? Do you want to invite Mr. Graves to go ahead? Are you not satisfied with his withdrawal of the litigation? Do you want to aid litigation against the officers of your Treasury by stirring up resolutions of inquiry? Are we retained to aid this litigation? No, no, Mr. President, it is unworthy of dignified Senators. Let the lawsuit stand upon its own merits. Let the lawyers of Mr. Graves fight the question in the courts, where both sides can be heard, where Mr. Carlisle can have his day in court. But, notwithstanding the withdrawal of the litigation, notwithstanding the abandonment of it, the resolution is pressed to take the place of great appropriation bills, pressed because it is seemingly of tremendous importance, pressed as though the whole fate of the present Administration was to hang in the balance, dependent on the determination of this investigation.

I put in evidence yesterday the proposal for bids by the Secretary of the Treasury. I answered some of the criticisms which had been made against the proposal. I have investigated the details of this Graves matter a little more thoroughly than I had theretofore. I am now prepared to say that I am perfectly satisfied that the Secretary of the Treasury, so far as Mr. Graves's bid was concerned, absolutely discharged his duty.

The Morgan bid was a full bid for the $100,000,000 of bonds. I will read it:

FEBRUARY 3, 1890.

We hereby propose, under the terms of your circular of January 6, 1890, to purchase United States 4 per cent thirty-year bonds described in said circular of the face value of $100,000,000, and agree to pay therefor at the rate of 110.6877 and accrued interest per $100. We further agree upon due notice of the acceptance of this subscription to deposit the amount thereof in gold coin or gold certificates with the United States assistant treasurer at New York or other cities mentioned in the circular, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with the terms of said circular.

We desire (registered or coupon) bonds in denominations as stated below, and we wish them to be delivered to us at such places as may be designated after receipt of notice that this proposal has been accepted.

J. P. MORGAN & CO.

THE NATIONAL CITY BANK OF NEW YORK,

By JAS. STILLMAN, President.

DEUTSCHE BANK OF BERLIN,

By EDWARD D. ADAMS, Attorney in fact.

HARVEY FISK & SONS.

To the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

$50 -----	$50 -----
100 -----	100 -----
500 -----	500 -----
1,000 -----	1,000 -----
	5,000 -----
	10,000 -----

It will be observed that this bid was for the full amount of the $100,000,000 of bonds. It being for the full amount, and the greater including the less, it was for every part of the $100,000,000 of bonds. There was no provision, any more than there was in any other bid, that if the full amount of the bid should not be obtained the parties did not want to take a part. The bid, therefore, was for the full $100,000,000 of bonds or, in legal effect, any part of the $100,000,000.

There were 4,641 distinct bona fide bids. The highest accepted bid was 130.8749 for $50 only. In other words, the highest bid was 130 and a fraction for $50 only. The lowest accepted bid was that of Morgan & Co., at 110.6877. It is the lowest accepted bid so far as the Government is concerned. The bid was for the full sum of $100,000,000, and there was first awarded to Morgan & Co. what was left of the bonds after all previous higher bids had been accepted, to wit, $37,915,850. The next highest bid to Morgan's was that of Kidder, Peabody & Co., of Boston, 110.69 for $2,000,000. There were 830 accepted bids, of which 829 were higher than that of the Morgan bid, leaving 3,811 bids lower than that of Morgan & Co.

The Graves bid was for $4,500,000 at 115.3391, which made the rate of interest 3½. When Mr. Graves failed to produce his gold on the day specified in the proposal there were two courses to pursue: First, to advertise and sell the bonds again or not advertise and sell them, or else to accept the next highest bid, which was that of Morgan & Co. I did not state that fact yesterday because I had not then examined fully the report recently presented here, not expecting that the debate would be resumed yesterday. It is a fact, not heretofore fully stated to the public, that Morgan & Co.'s bid was the next highest bid for the benefit of the Government, and therefore when Mr. Graves's bid failed, collapsed, forfeited, because he did not produce the gold, the Secretary of the Treasury said he would accept the next highest bid, which was that of Morgan & Co.

There is but one possible criticism to make, and that is that he should have put the bonds up and sold them again. What then would have been the criticism? If the bonds on the resale had not brought as much as Morgan & Co. had bid for them, then it would have been said that Morgan & Co. had bid a hundred million dollars and the Secretary of the Treasury had a right to hold them to it; that he ought to have made them take the bonds at that figure, because their bid was higher than 3,811 other bids. Therefore I am prepared to say that in my humble judgment the Secretary of the Treasury acted wisely, acted discreetly, acted as a business man, acted legally, and that there is no sort of criticism which can be made in regard to his conduct.

When grave Senators propose here to pass a resolution asking for the names of the bidders, as the resolution does, asking information as to the amounts of the bids, asking what the bonds were sold for, I am inclined to ask the Secretary to read, as a part of my remarks, the report which I hold in my hand. If you are going to pass the resolution saying you want that information, you might as well have it now as at any other time. Strike that portion of the resolution out. You do not need it. Here is the information in the book. You can read it. I will reserve, however, that question for the future.

How many bids were there which were forfeited? My friend the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] last evening asked me in regard to that matter, and I was unable to furnish him the exact information. There were only ten forfeited bids, of which Graves's bid was one. The Graves bid, as I have said, was for $4,500,000. The nine other forfeited bids amounted to only $237,000. Those were given to Morgan & Co., because Morgan & Co. were the next highest bidders. I wish to ask the Secretary to read the names of the forfeited bidders with the amounts, because I want the facts to go into my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

No.	Subscriber.	Residence.	Amount of bonds.	Price.

Mr. HILL. So, Mr. President, aside from the Graves bid, which was $4,500,000 of itself, instead of there being millions of other forfeited bids, there were only bids to the amount of $237,000—ten in all—and those bids, I say, were properly and legitimately given to the next highest bidders, which were Morgan & Co. There were a few bids thrown out, of which there has been no criticism anywhere. I stated yesterday that I knew of a certain gentleman in my own State who had bid for a large amount of the bonds, and whose bid was thrown out for good and valid reasons. I find that the A. P. A. Daughters, whatever they may be, of Moores Hill, Ind., subscribed for the whole sum of $100,000,000.

The newspapers gave the reasons why these bids were thrown out; and there was also one from Vernon, Tex. Nobody has made any criticism of such action of the Secretary of the Treasury or pretended but what those bids were absolutely fictitious. One of the bidders was insane, and had made a bid when he had not a dollar in the world and was confined in an asylum. Nobody has made any criticism, and there is not any point in regard to such bids; so I will not put them in the RECORD, because it is not necessary to refer to them further. Therefore, resuming my argument on the Graves bid, I say the Graves bid was properly thrown out and the Morgan bid was properly accepted. It will not do for the Secretary of the Treasury to advertise $100,000,000 of bonds and let capitalists make their figures accordingly—Morgan & Co.'s bid being higher for the Government than some 3,000 others—and then, when certain people forfeited their right to secure bonds, to assert that Morgan & Co. should be ignored, or that the bonds should be put up for sale again. We wanted no mock-auction business in regard to this affair. When the Government puts up its bonds, let them be sold to the highest bidders, and such bidders obtained them here. The situation, legal and otherwise, was exactly as though the Graves bid had never been made, and if it had never been made Morgan & Co., being the next highest bidder, would have received the bonds in the first instance.

Now, Mr. President, it may do for the press, which sometimes wants sensational matter—and I do not blame them for it—to talk about the Graves suit. I do not know that I ought to follow this matter up; I do not know that that is necessary, but I want to put in evidence here the affidavit of Secretary Carlisle himself in this litigation, which has now been withdrawn, which details just what sort of a fraud Mr. Graves was. I have already commented on the fact that on the day before he was to fulfill his bond contract he was peddling these bonds around the city of New York, and he could not obtain the amount of his bid for them. On that day the market price of the bonds was considerably less, and he could not get in that great city anybody to take his bid off his hands, and that is the reason he failed; and I have here the affidavit of Mr. Carlisle in this litigation. If we are going to make ourselves a tender to litigation in the District of Columbia; if we are not going to be satisfied with the matter when the complainant is beaten in court and when he withdraws his suit, abandons it, but if we are still going to continue this investigation which is nothing more nor less than persecution, getting up a scandal and throwing mud—if the record which we are making here to-day is to go down to history, let us accompany it with the affidavit of the Secretary of the Treasury in the litigation, which I ask the Secretary to read, so that we may have the whole truth for this fall's campaign.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. No. 39805 at law. The United States, ex relatione William Graves, vs. John G. Carlisle, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.]

AFFIDAVIT OF JOHN G. CARLISLE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, District of Columbia:

John G. Carlisle, having been first duly sworn, deposes and says: On January 6, 1896, a circular was issued by me, as Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, inviting sealed proposals for the purchase of United States bonds. It was stated that "purchasers will be required to pay in United States gold coin or gold certificates for the bonds awarded to them and the interest accrued thereon after the 1st day of February, 1896, up to the time of payment for the bonds." Payments for the bonds were required to be made at the various subtreasuries of the United States by installments as follows: Twenty per cent and accrued interest upon receipt of notice of acceptance of bids and 20 per cent and accrued interest at the end of each ten days thereafter; that all accepted bidders were given the privilege of paying the whole amount at the date of the first installment, and those who had paid all installments previously maturing were allowed to pay the whole amount of their bids at any time not later than the maturity of the last installment.

On January 6, 1896, a circular was issued by me which contained the following:

"The subscriber should state plainly the amount of bonds desired, the price which he proposes to pay, and the place where the bonds should be delivered, which may be at the subscriber's home, or any other convenient place."

Among the proposals received was one from "William Graves and associates."

Said Graves was wholly unknown to the Department, and the facts that he failed to give his street or office address, that the names of his associates were not disclosed, and that the price he proposed to pay for the bonds was considerably higher than responsible and bona fide bidders were offering were sufficient, in affiant's opinion, to justify an inquiry concerning his financial character and standing before disposing of his proposal. Affiant accordingly caused inquiries to be made at once in the city of New York, but no definite or satisfactory information concerning his business or financial standing was obtained, and on the 7th day of February, 1896, affiant caused a telegram to be sent to the assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, inquiring as to the financial standing and responsibility of said Graves, and received on the same day in reply a telegram to the effect that Graves was known very slightly as a promoter or financial agent, but not as a capitalist.

Although the information thus secured was not considered sufficient to show to affiant's satisfaction the ability of the bidder to pay for such a large amount of bonds, yet as he appeared to have been known as a financial agent, and as he professed to have others associated with him in making his bid, it was deemed better not to reject his offer without first giving him an opportunity to comply with the terms of the circular and his bid. Out of abundant caution, therefore, and in order to avoid a possible mistake in a matter of such importance to the bidder and to the Government, a notice of acceptance was mailed. The proposal of Graves and associates was dated "New York City, N. Y." No other address was given. The body of the bid contained the following:

"We desire (registered or coupon) bonds in denominations as stated below, and we wish them to be delivered to us at I. B. Newcomb's, Mills Building, New York City, or Bank of California, San Francisco, Cal."

This was understood to refer alone to the delivery of the bonds at one or both of the places named, as the bidder might decide, if successful, and was not understood to have any reference to the address to which the acceptance of the bid should be sent. There was no "designated office," as stated in paragraph 7 of the petition, to which communications were to be directed.

On the evening of February 9, 1896, being the same day on which the other notices to accepted bidders were mailed, a notice of acceptance was mailed to "William Graves and associates, New York, N. Y.," which was in accordance with the address given in his bid of February 4, 1896.

This letter was received at the post-office in New York on the morning of February 10.

All notices to other bidders were mailed according to the address given in the bid.

The acceptance of this bid was on the printed form used in notifying all other bidders, the only variation being in the filling of blanks in each case according to the bids.

The acceptance contained the following:

"You are therefore requested to deposit with the United States assistant treasurer at New York on or before the 15th day of February, 1896, the sum of $1,038,051.90, which is 20 per cent of the amount of your subscription at the price above named."

And also the following:

"The bonds will be issued only upon receipt by the Secretary of the original certificate of deposit of the assistant treasurer receiving the payments."

A list of the accepted bidders, which included William Graves and associates, was published in the principal newspapers of New York City and of the country generally on the morning of February 9.

Graves knew on Monday, February 10, all the facts which it was necessary for him to know, and which he would have known if he had that morning received the formal acceptance of his bid.

He knew through the newspapers of the acceptance of his bid, as is shown by Exhibit J to his petition, in which he says: "Even though the newspapers quoted the accepted bidders, the bank absolutely refused to continue until my notice from you was in hand."

On February 10 he sent to affiant a telegram as follows:

"Bank of California received their bond allotment. Has ours been forwarded? Wire."

To the above telegram an immediate reply was sent, stating that his notification had been forwarded.

On the 11th day of February, which was four days before he was required to make any payment, he received a duplicate of the original letter of notification of allotment.

The statement in the ninth paragraph of the petition that petitioner "immediately upon the receipt of this duplicate notice applied to the Secretary of the Treasury, requesting an allowance of the time lost to him by the negligent act of the Department in misdirecting the original notice of allotment, but that said allowance was declined by said Department through a telegram received by your petitioner on the 15th day of February, 1896," is false.

The first application for an extension was made February 13, at 12 m., through Mr. Nailor, of Washington.

At the same time Mr. Nailor presented a letter which was written to him by William Graves from New York on the 12th day of February, 1896, which is as follows:

"WALL STREET, MILLS BUILDING, NEW YORK.

"MY DEAR MR. NAILOR: I am among the fortunate bidders for $4,500,000 Government fours, and I am going to carry my negotiations to an issue, and of course every day counts, and I want this favor from some one to Secretary Carlisle:

"First. Because all bids were supposed to have been forwarded on Saturday last or Sunday and due here Monday. My notice I did not receive, and on Monday I wired, but got no answer until the following day (Tuesday). Gold advanced, the bonds sold for less, and my notification of acceptance marked 'duplicate' came wrongly addressed, and it found me yesterday p. m., but only after my advising the letter carrier, whom I know, to hunt it for me; and I have the envelope to prove its clerical error. In view of this fact I am behind nearly two days, and quotations prove my loss to be at this writing over $30,000.

"I am, however, prepared to carry the loss and pay my deposit of, say, one million and over on Saturday.

"But I want all this explained to Hon. J. G. Carlisle by you in person if you will do so, and ask him to wire or write this extension until Wednesday, 11 a. m., for me to make my 20 per cent payment if I desire the privilege; but I am, however, prepared to meet any bid as required under circular of January 15, 1896."

"Kind regards to you and yours."

"Most sincerely,"

WILLIAM GRAVES."

It appears from this letter, first, that petitioner was asking a favor; second, that he was a mere speculator and did not have the gold to carry out his contract, but was dependent upon hawking his bid about on the market; third, that he did not apply immediately upon receipt of the duplicate notice for an extension, as stated in paragraph 9 of his petition, but waited until the next day, and then wrote to Mr. Nailor and made his application through him; fourth, that, according to his own assertions, he had not suffered by not receiving the notice so far as impairing his ability to carry out his contract was concerned, but only as a speculator, for he distinctly says that, notwithstanding what had happened, "I am, however, prepared to carry the loss and pay my deposit of, say, $1,000,000 and over on Saturday." * * * "I am, however, prepared to meet my bid as required under circular of January 15, 1896."

No extension was promised or granted.

On February 13, 1896, said Graves wrote to affiant stating that he had heard from Mr. Nailor; that he had gone to the subtreasury that day preparatory to depositing the 20 per cent in accordance with his bid, and asking that the bonds be delivered to the subtreasury to be given to him upon anticipated payments being made, including the first 20 per cent payment.

Thus, after failing to get an extension of time, petitioner next sought to have the contract so modified that the bonds should be delivered in New York before any payment had been made.

To this letter, which was received February 14, 1896, an immediate answer was sent as follows:

"Letter received. Bonds are issued only upon receipt at this office of the original certificate representing payment therefor."

During the morning of the day the first installment of 20 per cent was due, February 15, 1896, Mr. Graves made another application, by telephonic message, for an extension of the time. To this request a reply by telegram was sent immediately as follows:

"Application for extension is declined by Department."

Said Graves sent to affiant a telegram, which was received at 11.50 a. m. February 15, 1896, which is as follows:

"Under your circulars of February 6, 9, and 15 you say 20 per cent may be deposited for the first payment by subscribers to the new bonds. Reserving this privilege as you do without demanding this payment, we tender you this proposition, agreeing to deposit 20 per cent toward a subscription to any and all bonds which may be considered by you a default on this date, our bid being $1.134, giving you satisfactory financial indorsements by Wednesday, February 19, 1896, of our ability to fulfill this agreement."

"WILLIAM GRAVES AND ASSOCIATES."

This telegram is withheld and not mentioned in the petition.

As appears above, Graves had been fully advised that his bid would have no effect if he failed to pay the first installment on or before February 15. He knew that all bids on bonds not thus consummated would be regarded as in default. With knowledge of these facts he, in the above telegram, made a new bid on all the bonds which affiant might consider in default, which included his own, and he thus bid a premium of 134 per cent upon bonds which had been awarded to him at a premium of 15.3391 per cent.

Graves did not make any deposit on this new bid, but asked until Wednesday, February 19, to give satisfactory financial indorsements.

No notice was taken by the Department of this second bid, and subsequent communications by Graves in regard to it, for the reason that according to the terms of the circular under which the bonds were offered to the public the time for receiving bids had expired on February 5, 1896, at 12 o'clock m., and no bids made or received after that time had been or could be properly considered. Bids had been made in good faith by responsible parties within the designated time, and in accordance with the terms of the circular, for the whole of the proposed loan, and the Department had in every case declined to consider any bid which was not so made.

After making his second bid, Graves, on February 15, wrote a letter to affiant, a copy of which is Exhibit H to the petition. Having failed to get the time for payment extended, having failed to procure the bonds to be sent to New York before he deposited the gold, he, in the letter last referred to, undertook to predicate a right under his original bid upon alleged clerical errors and delays in the Treasury Department, and to reinforce his claim by insinuations and threats.

In paragraph 11 of the petition it is stated that the telegram of February 14 above set out, a copy of which is made Exhibit I to the petition, was in reply to the petitioner's letter of the following day, February 15. The letter was written February 15, and was not received in Washington until February 16, whereas the telegram referred to was sent and was received by Graves on February 14, and was in reply to his letter of February 13, asking that the bonds be sent in advance of the deposit of the gold.

In paragraph 12 of the petition it is said that on February 15, 1896, petitioner notified the Department by letter that he did not want or desire an extension of the time within which to comply with his bid, informing the Department that the gold had been provided by him on the Saturday preceding with which to meet and pay the installment on his allotment. What purports to be a copy of this letter is attached to the bill, marked Exhibit J. In addition to suppressing and falsifying material portions of the history of this transaction, as above set forth, said Graves in his petition imposes upon the court a garbled letter. His letter of February 15 as it appears in Exhibit J and his letter as it really was are here set out in parallel columns.

EXHIBIT J.

My subscription to $4,500,000 of the new Government bonds was made in good faith, and I am prepared to live up to the letter of the transaction.

Deliver me the bonds and I will pay for them as agreed. I received a telegram to-day as follows, sent from Washington at 11.14 a. m.:

"Application for extension is declined by Department."

"(Signed) W. E. CURTIS, Assistant Secretary."

Now, I do not want an extension, neither do I ask for it; but I think it due by law and equity that one person be given equal chances with another, and that I be made good financially and because of the forfeit of my good name in not taking my bonds, because of a clerical error on your part in not properly addressing my letter.

ORIGINAL LETTER.

My subscription to the sum of $4,500,000 bonds was made in good faith, and I am prepared to live up to the letter of my bid.

Deliver me the bonds and I will pay for them as agreed. I inclose to Mr. Nailor the sealed letter from you that you may see it, because of this delay, caused by a clerical error, I could not get my gold from the Bank of California, to whom I refer you, until I produced the letter of acceptance from you; then the bonds went down and I could not collateral them at the price, and I was on the market as a borrower. To-day I received a telegram signed W. E. Curtis, Assistant Secretary, as follows, sent at 11.14 a. m.:

"Application for extension is declined by Department."

Now, I do not want an extension; I

Again, the United States Government can not afford to lose $239,000, which is the sum of money the Government will get from me over the next bidder, provided you make the allotment to such bidder in place of getting the market quotations. I can not afford to have myself and family sacrificed for this transaction, neither will I do so.

I refer you to the Bank of California that the gold was promised me on Tuesday to meet my demands, to Messrs. Seligman, to the ex-Secretary, Fairchild, and others, upon demand from you; but, even though the newspapers quoted the accepted bidders, the bank absolutely refused to continue until my notice from you was in hand.

simply want the time made good to me which was lost by this error, and in law and equity I am entitled to it, and I know you will not want the Government to lose $239,000, which is the sum of money I pay in excess of other bids, unless you sell them in open market. I refer you to the Bank of California of this city, to Seligman & Co., Von Hoffman & Co., Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., and others, as an evidence of my ability to carry this transaction to an issue, and the Bank of California refused to continue on Monday until I presented my letter from you.

Now, my honorable Secretary, do not allow the Government to lose this just sum; do not allow me to lose my good name because of my failure to meet conditions over which I had no control—namely, the drop in values after your notice came to hand, but on the other hand give me what you are in a position to, in justice, allow and believe me,

Very truly, yours.

It appears from his genuine letter that he could not get the gold in the Bank of California until he produced a letter of acceptance from affiant; that at the time he received the letter the bonds had gone down so that he could not use them as collateral at the price he had bid; that he was on the market as a borrower, and that what prevented him from complying with his bid was "the drop in values after your (my) notice came to hand."

In the thirtieth paragraph petitioner states that on the 17th day of February he learned of a move by the Treasury Department to deprive him of his allotment of bonds, and that he sent a written protest against it, a copy of which is set out as Exhibit K. The last sentence of this protest is as follows:

"I protest against any such action, if contemplated, and I demand the right to have the offer made by Graves and associates considered favorably if the bid is above others at hand."

The above statement that this protest applied to the original allotment of bonds to petitioner is palpably false. The closing sentence of the protest above quoted shows that Graves referred to his bid of $1.134, made by telegram of February 15, for all bonds upon which there had been a default.

This further appears from a letter sent to affiant by Graves, as follows:

"NEW YORK, February 17, 1896."

"I forwarded your Department a telegraphic offer on Saturday morning, which I now verify by mail, with the correction by substitution of January, the error being that we mentioned February, in speaking of circulars, the 6th, 9th, and 15th, 1896. We shall be pleased to have this proposition entertained by your Department that we may enter into further negotiations should it meet with favor."

This letter also was suppressed by petitioner in his statement of facts. It shows that on February 17 petitioner was insisting on his second bid on the bonds upon which he had defaulted on his first bid.

To this letter affiant made no reply. Petitioner then, on February 18, and not on February 17, as is falsely set out in paragraph 13 and Exhibit L of the petition, sent a telegram to affiant, as follows:

"Will you accept payment for the bonds allotted to me? Kindly wire answer."

On the same date, February 18, he wrote to affiant a letter, as follows:

"Mr. Thalmann, of Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., of at your Treasury Department in this city on Saturday a. m., the 15th, to deposit the gold for payment of 20 p. c. in full for allotment of bonds due under your acceptance of our bid for $4,500,000. I wired you this day, which I now confirm, 'Will you accept payment for bonds allotted to me? Wire answer.'"

In the fifteenth paragraph of the petition it is stated that on February 18, 1896, petitioner sent a telegram to affiant, saying that Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co. had offered to deposit gold in the subtreasury at New York City in accordance with the terms of petitioner's bid, and that such offer had been refused. The telegram referred to was sent on February 19, and not on February 18; but said Graves carefully refrains from averring in his petition that any such offer to deposit gold was in fact made, as is falsely stated in said telegram. Affiant is informed and believes that the said parties did not offer the subtreasury any gold on account of the Graves allotment, but proposed as a condition to their depositing any sum whatever on his account that the assistant treasurer at New York should accept from Graves a power of attorney for them to indorse Graves's name on the certificates of deposit. This would have been in effect a transfer of the entire bid, which was contrary to the regulations of the Department and to its practice in all cases, and the proposal was therefore properly declined.

In the said paragraph 15 petitioner says that on the same day he wrote to affiant in relation to said bid, referring to his original bid and the delivery of the gold to be paid for the bonds. This averment is untrue, for the letter written by him on February 18 has reference to his bid by telegram for bonds upon which there had been a default, and not to the bid upon which he said he offered to make the deposit and upon which all of his alleged rights are predicated.

Affiant is informed and believes that the statement made in paragraph 17 of the petition, that petitioner on March 31, 1896, made a tender to the subtreasury at New York, is absolutely false. He may have said that he would pay the gold upon the production of the bonds, but affiant is informed and believes that he made no tender at any time.

Affiant further states that the averment made in paragraph 18 of the petition that petitioner was at all times after he was notified of his allotment of bonds ready, willing, and able to pay for said bonds according to the terms and conditions of his said bid under the circular letters of the Treasury Department is not true, and that it is not true that he had the gold ready to pay into the subtreasury in accordance with the terms of his bid; that it is not true that he at any time made a tender in payment of any instalments due under his bid.

Affiant says it is untrue that the action of the Treasury Department in any of the matters relating to the transaction with petitioner was for the purpose of hindering or preventing petitioner from carrying out his bid, and says that the only thing that prevented petitioner from getting his bonds was that he did not comply with his contract.

According to the terms of the circular under which his bid was made, the first installment of 20 per cent and accrued interest was required to be paid "upon receipt of notice of acceptance of bids," and if his bid was in fact made in good faith he of course expected to comply with that requirement. By the terms of the notice of acceptance sent to him, however, the time of payment was extended until and including the 15th of February, 1896, notwithstanding which he failed to make any deposit whatever on account of his bid.

Affiant further says that the statement in paragraph 19 that the requirement that petitioner deposit gold in the subtreasury at New York, and transmit the original certificate of such deposit to the Treasury Department at Washington was and is a requirement not exacted of other bidders, is untrue.

Affiant further states that the averment in paragraph 20 of the petition that certain allotments of said bonds were sent to New York, and that in this certain bidders were favored, is untrue. It is not true that any bonds were sent to the subtreasury in New York and were there delivered as the gold was deposited.

The statement in paragraph 21, that the Treasury Department accepted assignments of bids and powers of attorney in case of other successful bidders, is untrue.

The statement in paragraph 22, that the Secretary of the Treasury could not impose reasonable conditions for the forfeiture of bids on account of non-compliance with them within a stipulated time, ignores the whole purpose for which the loan was undertaken. It was necessary that the loan should be successfully carried through. This could not be done unless a time was fixed for payment, with a condition that the rights of accepted bidders should be forfeited by noncompliance. It was necessary that the loan should be carried through in such a way as to prevent gold already in the Treasury from being drawn out of it. It was desirable that the loan should be as widely distributed as possible and among bona fide bidders. None of these ends could have been accomplished if persons had been permitted to bid with no limitations as to time for making payments, thus being enabled to keep the Government from realizing on the loan except at their pleasure and turning the whole scheme into a mere speculation.

The statement in paragraph 24, that there are still in the Treasury Department, of the said issue of bonds undelivered and undisposed of, an amount of bonds exceeding $5,000,000, is untrue. All the bonds of said one hundred-million-dollar issue have been sold to bona fide purchasers, in accordance with the terms of the circulars offering the bonds to the public and the bids made thereunder. Some bonds have not been delivered to the purchasers, but all of them were disposed of before this petition was filed and became the property of bona fide purchasers who have the right to demand their delivery upon paying installments not yet due.

JOHN G. CARLISLE.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence this 24th day of April, 1896.

Notary Public.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, no Senator around this circle need hereafter complain that he wants any further information in regard to the details of the Graves bid and the litigation which followed. The affidavit of the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury explains the whole case and leaves not a single particle of ground upon which to predicate the suit. I do not know that Senators who favor the resolution will still be satisfied. I suppose they are disappointed that Mr. Graves has not continued that litigation. I suppose that the next thing in order will be a resolution requesting Mr. Graves to institute his suit again for the benefit of the Senate and the country.

Mr. President, it is a miserable, contemptible proposition here to propose to have an investigation involving a recently pending litigation with the Secretary of the Treasury. There is nothing of the Graves business, there never has been; there is nothing of this whole bond business, there never has been, that is not as clear as the sunlight of heaven. Senators may differ with the Secretary about the silver question. That is another matter. But so far as the bond transaction was concerned there never was the slightest ground for an investigation, except to gratify curiosity, to gratify venom, to gratify spite, because the Secretary of the Treasury was what was called a "gold bug."

Now, Mr. President, I am not alone in this view of the case. I want to read from the Philadelphia Inquirer, a leading Republican paper of Philadelphia, and the organ of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], a recent candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency. [Laughter.]

IS THE LOAN A FAILURE?—WHERE THE RESPONSIBILITY RESTS.

It is evident that the bond question is going to be thoroughly ventilated in Congress. Mr. TILLMAN's effort to secure an investigation—

The editor has got Mr. TILLMAN mixed with Mr. PEPPER. In the light of recent developments I do not wonder at it.

Mr. TILLMAN's effort—

It should be, of course, Mr. PEPPER's effort—to secure an investigation of the various issues has been followed by a somewhat similar resolution offered by—

I strike out the offensive term and will not read it—

Mr. LODGE of Massachusetts. The fact that the Administration has handed over to the Morgan syndicate almost $5,000,000 in bonds bid for by other parties has given an impetus to the inquiry. The other parties failed to come to time. True, an investment company of New York has offered to take these bonds at a better rate than the Morgan syndicate, but Secretary Carlisle would not have been justified in accepting that offer. A certain day was fixed for bids. The bids were offered and the awards were made. The Government, if it is to keep faith, can not go outside of those bids. Therefore it is not to be criticised for handing over the $4,700,000 to the Morgan people.

There may be a field for investigation in the fact that the Administration entered into a secret negotiation with the syndicate for the disposal of the last fifty-million-dollar issue, but what is of much more to the point now is whether the one-hundred-million-dollar loan is going to prove a failure. Gold is being withdrawn from the Treasury at an average rate of something like $1,000,000 a day. This proves conclusively that the bonds are being paid for by gold being taken out of the Treasury. Of course the Administration can not be held responsible for that. What it is responsible for is its advocacy of a low-tariff measure, which has reduced the revenue of the Government to such an extent that it is more than exhausted by the expenditures. Having arrived at a point where the Government can not pay its bills without borrowing, these bond issues became necessary. The President in this latest issue certainly has conformed to the law, but the party of which he is the leader will be responsible if this loan is a dire failure.

That is, in my judgment, the public estimation of the bond transaction. The Graves bid can not hereafter cut any serious figure in the discussion of the question.

I have already commented upon the fact that investigations should not be inconsiderately ordered or ordered upon light or trivial reasons. I have given some samples which have been sent to me. I have stated that the tendency of the times is toward the investigation of every conceivable thing; that if the Senate is to investigate every subject upon the bare suggestion of a Senator there is no telling what would soon be investigated. I will read a letter showing that when the Senator from Kansas is encouraged to offer resolutions of investigation other people are encouraged to ask them also, and when the Senate proposes to treat such resolutions seriously it will be overwhelmed with similar applications of all kinds:

217 WEST ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FOURTH STREET,
New York, April 6, 1896.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been drawn to the removal of Governor Hughes, of Arizona. Governor Hughes, I am informed, has always stood for the best interests of temperance and morality, and I respectfully ask that you will urge a thorough investigation into the causes of his removal.

With respect, I am, very truly, yours,

MARY T. BURT.

President W. C. T. U. of the State of New York.

Hon. DAVID B. HILL,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

Mr. President, the precedent will be set here that every time an important public and official transaction occurs it must be investigated by a committee, no matter whether there is any ground for it or not, no matter whether there is any good reason for it or not. Everything which we do is to be subject to investigation at the caprice, the whim, the desire of a Senator.

I have some other resolutions which have been forwarded to me, disapproving of the present action which I am taking, and it is in justice to those people, as well as my sense of fairness, that I think they ought to go upon the record of the Senate:

BROOKLYN, February 22, 1896.

SIR: The inclosed resolutions were adopted at a meeting of Anti-Trust Legion of America, held last night at headquarters, 508 Fifth avenue.

Yours, truly,

H. V. MONAHAN,
President Anti-Trust Legion.

Senator D. B. HILL,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

That comes from a suspicious place—"Fifth avenue," Brooklyn, as headquarters of the Anti-Trust Legion of America. The elaborate and high-sounding name reminds me of a church up in my own part of the country; it is that of the African-American Methodist Episcopal Zion Church of the United States of North America and elsewhere. [Laughter.] I will ask the Secretary to read these resolutions to see the difficulties, the labors, which the Anti-Trust Legion of America are involved in, the difficulties which confront the American people, the things that ought to be investigated, and the concluding trifling matter of censure of myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas an attempt has been made to give up a portion of our public streets (known as the Bridge plaza) for the use of a favorite railroad corporation, the cost of the same to the people being about $1,000,000, we desire to know by what authority our worthy mayor has given away our property, and by what authority Messrs. Howell and Keeney, bridge trustees, should present to Messrs. Howell and Keeney (the same gentlemen), stockholders in the Brooklyn Heights Traction Company, the plaza, the property of the people.

Whereas Mr. Uhlmann, president of the Brooklyn Union Elevated Railroad Company, the deepest watered stock corporation in this city (so heavily watered it can not or will not pay its lawful taxes), sold to our officials a certain charter known as the East River bridge charter, given him by our legislators to build a bridge, which he made no attempt to build, and he now has another charter ready to sell the city, presumably, for $200,000 more of the people's money, will Mr. Uhlmann permit the inquiry, How many charters has he got from our politicians, and if this new industry is likely to be operated by all the watered stock and political gentlemen in our city, the object being to increase their personal bank account by emptying the people's treasury?

Whereas the whole system of trusts are devouring the substance of the people, especially the Morgan bond trust, Morgan coal trust, railroad trusts, sugar trust, beef trust, Standard Oil trust, and the dozens of other trusts, it is absolutely necessary the people, their ministers of all denominations, and the independent press combine in self-defense against the trusts.

Whereas it is plainly evident Wall street has a more than friendly interest in the White House; their relations should be rigidly investigated, and the attempt of Senator D. B. HILL to cover up the tracks of the bond trust we strongly condemn, and, as his constituents, call on him to support the motion to investigate the bond scandal or resign his seat in the United States Senate, because he misrepresents the people of this State.

Resolved, That not one foot of our streets be given to any railroad company. A lease of twenty-one years at a reasonable rental should be given until the people are prepared for municipal ownership of railroads.

Resolved, That under no consideration should our city establish the principle of giving Mr. Uhlmann and his partner politicians who championed his bill a charter this year, the object being to buy it back next year for $200,000.

Resolved, That the whole system of trusts is dishonest, immoral, and un-American, and must give way before the advancing tide of popular disapproval, to the end that the whole people be no longer beasts of burden for a very few favored gentlemen.

Resolved, That the persistent attempts to loot our depleted treasury before consolidation by Brooklyn's present officials should receive the condemnation of the people. Mayor Wurster, will you kindly say what is the amount of burglaries committed in Brooklyn in one year? It seems to us they must be considerably less than $500,000, while the plaza job and bridge franchise job amount to $1,200,000, and the other watered-stock jobs in Brooklyn to a few millions more yearly. We employ about 1,700 policemen in the attempt to save the $500,000. Why not employ policemen to save the $1,200,000? They could be placed at the doors of all the watered-stock gentlemen and their political allies to warn the people against the nature of their business, as is done with other places of questionable character.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be furnished President Cleveland, Senator HILL, Mayor Wurster, and the independent press.

We simply ask the people to investigate these resolutions for themselves as to whether they are true or untrue.

Mr. HILL. There is a most delightful mixture of investigation of Brooklyn bridges, Brooklyn bonds, Brooklyn burglaries, trusts of all kinds in the United States, including a censure upon myself. There is a great field for this Anti-Trust Legion of America, but it is that sort of a feeling and sentiment that the United States is trucking to. It is the Populist sentiment which is being encouraged—a sentiment which is clamoring against capital, whether capital is acquired properly or improperly. It is an effort to antagonize men of wealth; it is an effort to denounce men who have accumulated property or men who have obtained public position. We are simply fooling with fire here when we attempt to set this example, clamoring against your Secretaries of the Treasury and other public officials when there is no reason for it and when there is no ground for it.

I have introduced the last two communications in order to show whither we are drifting, what precedents we are setting here, and how ridiculous is the attempt to make serious allegations out of this bond matter that could not stand investigation a single hour in any court. Do you want another spectacle of the utter failure and collapse of your investigation like the sugar investigation, which simply cast discredit over the Senate in the estimation of the people and disclosed little or nothing? Do you want to have an investigation as was proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] a short time ago, to investigate every Senator who owned national-bank stock? And that was deemed worthy of discussion and worthy of consideration for a day or so here in the Senate of the United States! The next thing you will want will be to investigate those who own mining stock.

Mr. President, how ridiculous this whole performance is and how unworthy of men who are competent to be Senators of the United States. If there is any matter presented that in good faith requires investigation I am the last one to oppose it. We can always find enough trumped-up charges lying around loose without seeking to investigate matters in which there is really nothing.

Mr. President, there is nothing new in these accusations in regard to bond issues. Similar accusations occurred during all the resumption and refunding periods of the past. Senators have forgotten the fact; the public press seems to have forgotten it; the people seem to have forgotten it. There were syndicates in those days as there are syndicates now, and necessarily or inevitably so. There is nothing about a syndicate that requires any special explanation. A syndicate is simply a number of men having moneys to invest making an agreement to make a common bid or to take a common action. It is the same thing as a number of laboring men organizing a trades union and operating together for the common benefit; that is all. A syndicate of capitalists is nothing more nor less than a syndicate of workmen who put their labor in common with each other. If labor has a right to combine—and I say it has—capital has a right to combine, too. I believe in the personal liberty of a citizen. I believe in the right of men to organize and act together as one man, legitimately, properly, within reasonable bounds; and when you attempt to stifle the spirit of liberty you aim a blow at your free institutions.

But you would think from the remarks of Senators that there never had been a syndicate in the United States until a syndicate was organized under the Cleveland Administration. Such is the ignorance displayed that men now ask what is this syndicate? Who are Morgan & Co.? Some people have forgotten about the syndicates that we had during the period of resumption and refunding. Some people imagine, and some Senators imagine, that syndicates are something new, an invention of the present Administration; something that has come into life and prospered under the present Democratic National Administration. It is not so. There were syndicates for the purchase of Government bonds during the war. There were syndicates organized in the resumption period and the refunding period of our history. There always have been. Sir, but for these organizations of capitalists I do not know what this Government would have done during its war period.

Mr. President, for the purpose of showing to the country at large that syndicates are not new, that they are not something that Mr. Cleveland has invented, that they are not something that Mr. Carlisle has invented, to aid the gold policy, but that they are something which existed heretofore, that they occurred after the war, I wish to put in evidence a few contracts made years ago. I am going to ask the Secretary to spell me a little while, and I will put in an early contract, dated August 24, 1876, which I wish the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as indicated.

Mr. PEPPER. I object to the reading of the contract.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the question will be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Cockrell,	Martin,	Sherman,
Allison,	Cullom,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Shoup,
Bacon,	Daniel,	Mitchell, Wis.	Squire,
Baker,	Dubois,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Bate,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Teller,
Berry,	George,	Pasco,	Tillman,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Peffer,	Turpie,
Blanchard,	Gray,	Perkins,	Vest,
Brice,	Hill,	Pettigrew,	Vilas,
Butler,	Jones, Ark.	Pritchard,	Walthall,
Caffery,	Jones, Nev.	Pugh,	Wetmore,
Call,	Kyle,	Quay,	White,
Cannon,	Lodge,	Sewell,	Wolcott.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Chair will state for the information of the Senate that the Senator from New York requested the reading of a paper, to which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] objected. The Chair will have the rule in relation to the matter read.

The Secretary read Rule XI, as follows:

When the reading of a paper is called for, and objected to, it shall be determined by a vote of the Senate without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the paper be read?

Mr. TELLER. What is it? We would like to know what the paper is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will state what the paper is.

Mr. HILL. I will explain it, if the Senator from Colorado desires. I was commenting upon the fact, in the course of my discussion, that charges and accusations made against syndicates were nothing new; that syndicates had occurred before in the history of the country; that they had existed all during the refunding period and the resumption period. In proof of that statement I produced one of the first contracts, which was made with Morgan & Co. and others, of London, by the Secretary of the Treasury, and asked the Secretary to read the contract. Objection was interposed. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] asked for a call of the Senate. That is the question before the Senate. I will not trouble the Secretary to read the contract. I will read it myself.

Mr. GRAY. Let the Secretary read it.

Mr. HILL. I will read it.

Mr. GRAY. Question!

Mr. HILL. Senators suggest that I let the question be voted upon. I will do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the paper be read by the Secretary?

The question having been decided in the affirmative, the Secretary read as follows:

CONTRACT DATED AUGUST 24, 1876, BETWEEN THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY (HON. LOT M. MORRILL) AND MESSRS. N. M. ROTHSCHILD & SONS ET AL.

[NOTE.—This contract was in force at the beginning of Secretary Sherman's administration of the Treasury Department.]

No. 1.

This agreement, entered into this 24th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1876, between the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America, of the first part, and Messrs. August Belmont & Co., of New York, in behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, of London, England, and associates, and Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co., of New York, for themselves and associates, and Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, England, and Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co., of New York, representing the First National Bank of the City of New York, the American Exchange National Bank of New York, the Merchants' National Bank of New York, the Third National Bank of New York, Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb & Co., of New York, the Bank of New York National Banking Association, and Messrs. Morton, Rose & Co., of London, and themselves, of the second part: Witnesseth: That the said Messrs. August Belmont [& Co.], of New York, on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons and associates, hereby agree to purchase from the Secretary of the Treasury $16,500,000 of the United States bonds known as the 4½ per cent funded loan of 1871, issued under the acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871; and that Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co., for themselves and their associates, hereby agree to purchase from the Secretary of the Treasury $3,750,000 of the bonds hereinbefore described; and that Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, England, hereby agree to purchase from the Secretary of the Treasury $8,750,000 of the bonds hereinbefore described; and that Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co., of New York, representing the First National Bank of the City of New York to the extent of $4,000,000, the American Exchange National Bank of New York to the extent of $1,050,000, the Merchants' National Bank of New York to the extent of $200,000, the Third National Bank of the City of New York to the extent of $750,000, Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb & Co., of New York, to the extent of $1,050,000, the Bank of New York National Banking Association to the extent of $300,000, Messrs. Morton, Rose & Co., of London, to the extent of $1,125,000, and Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co., of New York, to the extent of $1,125,000, hereby agree to the extent severally for each as above stated, to purchase from the Secretary of the Treasury $10,000,000 in the aggregate, of the bonds hereinbefore described, making a total aggregate of $40,000,000, upon the terms and conditions following, to wit:

First. Of the said aggregate amount not less than $10,000,000 are hereby subscribed for, the subscription to take effect on the 1st day of September, 1876, and the remaining amount, namely, $30,000,000, may be divided at the pleasure of the parties of the second part into several successive subscriptions of not less than $5,000,000 each, to be made prior to the 4th day of March, 1877.

Second. The parties of the second part shall have the exclusive right to subscribe, in the same proportion to each of the subscribers, for the remainder, namely, $30,000,000, or any portion of said loan authorized to be issued by the acts of Congress aforesaid, by giving notice thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury on or before the 30th day of June, 1877; but the party of the first part reserves the right to terminate this contract at any time after March 4, 1877, by giving ten days' notice thereof to the parties of the second part.

Third. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, when subscriptions are made by the said parties of the second part, issue calls with even date with said subscriptions, for the redemption of an equivalent amount of 6 per cent 5-20 bonds of the United States, as provided by said act of July 14, 1870.

Fourth. The parties of the second part agree to pay for said 4 per cent bonds par and interest accrued to the date of application for delivery of said bonds in gold coin, matured United States gold-coin coupons, or any of the 6 per cent 5-20 bonds called for redemption, or in United States gold certificates of deposit issued under the act of March 3, 1863, with the understanding that payment to the extent of the amount of any call shall be made within the time during which such call shall mature: Provided, That if the parties of the second part shall elect so to do, they may have the privilege of making any of said subscriptions payable specifically in uncalled 6 per cent 5-20 bonds of the United States, in which case the Secretary of the Treasury may, to the extent of such payments, omit the calls mentioned in condition No. 3.

Fifth. The parties of the second part shall receive in coin a commission of one-half of 1 per cent on all bonds taken by them, as allowed by the act of July 14, 1870, and shall assume and defray all expenses which may be incurred in sending bonds to London upon their request or by transmitting bonds, coupons, or coin from there to the Treasury Department at Washington, including all cost of making exchange of bonds, and shall also be charged with the preparation and issuing of the bonds.

Sixth. No bonds shall be delivered to the parties of the second part, or either of them, until payment shall have been made in full therefor in accordance with the terms of this contract.

Seventh. During the continuance of this contract any sales of bonds ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury, by authority of law, except those that it may become necessary to sell to pay judgment of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, shall be made to the parties of the second part, who shall be allowed thereon a commission of 1 per cent in gold coin. And it is provided that the amount of bonds so ordered shall not exceed in the aggregate $25,000,000, unless by mutual agreement of the parties.

LOT M. MORRILL,

Secretary of the Treasury.

AUG. BELMONT & CO.,

On behalf of N. M. Rothschild & Son, London.

J. & W. SELIGMAN & CO.,

On behalf of Seligman Bros.

DREXEL, MORGAN & CO.,

On behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London.

MORTON, BLISS & CO.,

For Themselves and Associates, as named above.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know whether the Secretary so read it or whether it is stated that that contract was made by me. It was not made by me. It was made by my predecessor, Lot M. Morrill.

Mr. HILL. It was made by Mr. Morrill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was substantially renewed in the same terms, I think, the year following for a short time. It only lasted during the period of that season.

Mr. HILL. That is correct. I now ask the Secretary to turn to page 61 and to read the contract to be found there.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

CONTRACT OF JUNE 9, 1877.

This agreement, entered into this 9th day of June, 1877, between the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of the first part, and Messrs. August Belmont & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, of London, England, and associates and themselves; Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, and themselves; Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. Seligman Bros., of London, and themselves; Messrs. Morton, Rose & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co., of London, and themselves, and the First National Bank of the City of New York—

Witnesseth: That the said Messrs. August Belmont & Co., on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons and associates and themselves, hereby agree to purchase from the Secretary of the Treasury $10,312,500 of the bonds known as the 4 per cent consols of the United States, issued under the acts of July 14, 1870, January 20, 1871, and January 14, 1875; and that Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co. and themselves, agree to purchase $4,062,500 of said bonds; and that Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co., on behalf of Messrs. Seligman Bros. and themselves, agree to purchase $4,062,500 of said bonds; and that Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co., on behalf of Messrs. Morton, Rose & Co. and themselves, agree to purchase $4,062,500 of said bonds; and that the First National Bank of the City of New York agree to purchase $2,500,000 of said bonds, making a total aggregate of $25,000,000 of said bonds, on the terms and conditions following:

First. Of the said aggregate amount not more than $5,000,000 shall be sold for resumption purposes, the remaining $20,000,000 to be sold for funding purposes and subscribed for by the parties of the second part during the months of July and August, 1877.

Second. The parties of the second part shall have the exclusive right to subscribe in the same proportion to each of the subscribers for the remainder of the 4 per cent consols of the United States, or any portion of said consols, authorized to be issued by the acts of Congress aforesaid, by giving notice thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury on or before the 30th day of June, 1878; but the party of the first part reserves the right to terminate this contract at any time after the 31st day of December, 1877, by giving ten days' notice thereof to the parties of the second part.

Third. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not sell for resumption purposes exceeding five millions per month during the continuance of this contract, except by mutual agreement of the parties hereto. When subscriptions are made for other than resumption purposes by the parties of the second part the party of the first part shall issue calls of even date with said subscriptions for the redemption of an equal amount of 6 per cent 5-20 bonds of the United States, as provided for in said act of July 14, 1870.

Fourth. The parties of the second part agree to pay for said 4 per cent bonds par and interest accrued to the date of application for delivery of said bonds in gold coin, matured United States gold-coin coupons, or any of the 6 per cent 5-20 bonds called for redemption, or in United States gold certificates of deposit, issued under the act of March 3, 1863, with the understanding that payment to the extent of the amount of any call shall be made within the time during which such call shall mature: Provided, That if the parties of the second part shall elect so to do, they may have the privilege of making any of said subscriptions payable specifically in uncalled 6 per cent 5-20 bonds of the United States, in which case the Secretary of the Treasury may, to the extent of such payments, omit the calls mentioned in condition No. 3.

Fifth. The parties of the second part shall receive in coin a commission of one-half of 1 per cent on all bonds taken by them as allowed by the act of July 14, 1870, and shall assume and defray all expenses which may be incurred in sending bonds to London or elsewhere upon their request or by transmitting bonds, coupons, or coin to the Treasury Department at Washington, including all costs of making the exchange of bonds, and shall also be charged with the cost of the preparation and issuing of the bonds.

Sixth. No bonds shall be delivered to the parties of the second part or either of them until payment shall have been made in full therefor, in accordance with the terms of this contract.

Seventh. During the continuance of this contract any sales of bonds ordered by the Secretary of the Treasury by authority of law shall be made through the parties of the second part, who shall be allowed thereon a commission similar in amount and subject to the same deductions as prescribed in the fifth clause of this contract.

Eighth. It is also agreed that the parties of the second part shall offer to the people of the United States at par and accrued interest in coin the 4 per cent registered consols and 4 per cent coupon consols of the denominations of $50 and $100 embraced in this contract for a period of thirty days from the public notice of such subscriptions and in such cities and upon such notice as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe prior to the opening of the lists, and, further, to offer to the subscribers the option of paying in installments extending through three months.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK,

By H. C. FAHNESTOCK.

Witnesses as to all:

R. C. MCCORMICK.

E. J. BABCOCK.

Mr. HILL. I find that under that contract there had been received to July 16, 1877, subscriptions as follows:

August Belmont & Co.	$30,726,900
First National Bank of New York	30,500,000
National banks and other financial institutions together	2,011,350
Popular subscriptions	4,104,900
Total	76,343,150

That was a popular loan, which was authorized in the contract itself, but at its conclusion it was found that the popular subscriptions only amounted to $4,104,900. A few small institutions and national banks bid for $2,011,350, and August Belmont and associates and the First National Bank of the City of New York bid for over $70,000,000.

There was a clamor a short time ago for a popular loan, and it was said in the argument had along in January that if the bonds were only submitted to a popular loan, as they had been formerly, they would all be taken by the people. I then stated that it was my recollection that under many contracts where the syndicate was given the contract and required to allow the people to subscribe within certain periods the popular-loan feature was a failure; that after all the syndicates got the bonds. The figures which I have given are those taken under the very contract which has just been read, and the total amount received up to July 16, 1877, under this very contract is stated. So it seems that Mr. Carlisle is not the only Secretary of the Treasury under whom syndicates have taken bonds or under whom subscriptions by popular loans have been very few. Sometimes popular loans can be a success, but not always. Sometimes you have to fall back upon capitalists and syndicates who are willing to take the bonds. It depends upon the time; it depends upon whether or not money is scarce; it depends upon numerous conditions.

I merely procured these figures from the books in order to show that while under some of the contracts popular subscriptions were provided for in the first instance, in the end then as now the syndicate usually got the bonds. You can not change things. Nothing has been done differently under this Administration than was done under previous Administrations. The purchase of bonds is open to the world as a rule. Men of money subscribe. Men who have not money can not subscribe. The men who pay the most get the bonds. That is all there is of it, and there is no use, especially on the part of Democrats, to attempt to throw mud at our own Administration, when in the past, and in the very near past, similar transactions have been had by Republican Secretaries of the Treasury.

All I ask is fair play, and that we do not play into the hands of this coterie of Populists who want us to join them in throwing mud on a Democratic Administration. Let me say to Democrats, that you can not keep up your party that way. You will drag it down.

I do not blame the Populists. I do not blame those Republicans who favor the resolution. I think they already have about enough political capital for their purposes—enough to be satisfied with, if we are to believe their professions. I do not blame them if they want to support this resolution without regard to the merits of the question; if they do not wish to consider the merits of the case; if they do not wish to consider the unfairness of it, the unusual character of this proceeding. If they want to throw all such conditions aside and to enter upon a questionable proceeding in the effort to make party capital I do not blame them. My object here is not that I care anything about the political future of Mr. Carlisle or of this Administration, but that in this fall's campaign we can put side by side with Carlisle's syndicate contract the Republican contracts made after the war. We will comment upon them on the stump, and we will see which side gets the best of the argument. The Populists and Republicans are seeking to make political capital. That is their programme. That is all there is of it. There is a coterie of Populists holding the balance of power in the Senate, and we must bow to them, we must be polite to them, we must take off our hats to them, because they hold the balance of power. I am through with that, so far as I am concerned. I will vote the way which I think is right. I will sustain any investigation that has merit to it. I am through with trumped-up investigations just to keep our Populist friends good-natured or merely to gratify them.

On page 295 of the volume is another of these Republican contracts, and I ask the Secretary to read it. It is the contract dated April 11, 1878. I wish to state right here before it is read that it was made with Drexel, Morgan & Co. and J. P. Morgan & Co. Who is another? Morton, Bliss & Co. These are Republicans. The same Mr. Morgan whom we have been talking about now, the same Morgan for whom you seem to hold President Cleveland responsible. It is the same Morgan and the same London crowd. Here are the names of Drexel, Morgan & Co. and J. S. Morgan & Co. All the Morgans are here; Republicans, all of them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated. The Secretary read as follows:

CONTRACT OF APRIL 11, 1878.

This agreement, entered into this 11th day of April, 1878, between the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, of the first part, and Messrs. August Belmont & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, of London, England, and associates, and themselves; Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, and themselves; Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. Seligman Bros., of London, and themselves; Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. Morton, Rose & Co., of London, and themselves; and the First National Bank of the City of New York—

Witnesseth: That the said Messrs. August Belmont & Co., on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons and associates and themselves, hereby agree to purchase from the Secretary of the Treasury $4,125,000 of the 4 per cent bonds of the United States, issued under the acts of July 14, 1870, January 20, 1871, and January 14, 1875; and that Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co. and themselves, agree to purchase $1,625,000 of said bonds; and that Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co., on behalf of Messrs. Seligman Bros. and themselves, agree to purchase $1,625,000 of said bonds; and that Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co., on behalf of Messrs. Morton, Rose & Co. and themselves, agree to purchase $1,625,000 of said bonds; and that the First National Bank of the City of New York agree to purchase $1,000,000 of said bonds, making a total aggregate of $10,000,000 of said bonds, on the terms and conditions following:

First. The bonds covered by this contract shall be sold for resumption purposes.

Second. The parties of the second part shall have the exclusive right to subscribe in the same proportion to each of the subscribers for the remainder of the $50,000,000 4 per cent bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the acts of Congress aforesaid; but the amount to be so subscribed shall not be less than $5,000,000 for each and every month after the present month of April.

Third. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not sell during the continuance of this contract any bonds other than such as by act of Congress may be provided to be sold for the payment of the Halifax or Geneva awards, and the 4 per cent consols of the United States, and those only for refunding purposes, except by mutual agreement of the parties hereto.

Fourth. The parties of the second part agree to pay for said 4 per cent bonds par and 1 per cent premium and interest accrued to the date of application for delivery of said bonds in gold coin or matured United States gold coin coupons, or any of the 6 per cent 5-20 bonds heretofore called for redemption, or in the United States gold certificates of deposit issued under the act of March 3, 1863, or in gold coin certificates of deposit of authorized designated depositaries that have complied with the law.

Fifth. The parties of the second part shall receive in gold coin a commission of one-half of 1 per cent on all bonds taken by them under this contract as allowed by the act of July 14, 1870, and shall assume and defray all expenses which may be incurred in sending bonds to London or elsewhere upon their request, or by transmitting bonds, coupons, or coin to the Treasury Department at Washington, including all cost of making the exchange of bonds, and shall also be charged with the cost of the preparation and issuing of the bonds.

Sixth. No bonds shall be delivered to the parties of the second part, or either of them, until payment shall have been made in full therefor in accordance with the terms of this contract.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK,

By GEO. F. BAKER, President.

Witnesses as to all:

THOS. HILLHOUSE,

Assistant Treasurer of the United States.

E. J. BABCOCK.

Mr. HILL. There was subsequently a modification of that contract, but I do not care about putting it in evidence. I ask the Secretary to now turn to page 482, and read what is there marked. That is the last of these contracts which I care about putting in evidence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

CONTRACT OF JANUARY 21, 1879.

This agreement entered into this 21st day of January, 1879, between the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of the first part, and Messrs. August Belmont & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, of London, England, and associates and themselves; Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, and themselves; Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. Seligman Bros., of London, and themselves; and Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. Morton, Rose & Co., of London, and themselves—

Witnesseth: That the parties of the second part hereby severally subscribe as of this date for $10,000,000 of the bonds known as the 4 per cent consols of the United States, issued under the acts of July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, and acts amendatory thereto, in the following proportions, to wit, one-fourth part by each of the said several parties; and it is agreed that if the parties of the second part shall not subscribe for $5,000,000 of said bonds each month, the party of the first part is authorized to forthwith terminate this contract; but the next subscription need not be made before April 1, 1879, and all of said subscriptions shall be made on the terms and conditions following:

First. The proceeds of said bonds shall be applied, in compliance with said acts, to the refunding of the public debt. The party of the first part will, on receiving a subscription under this contract for not less than $5,000,000, issue a call for the redemption of United States 6 per cent 5-20 bonds equal to or exceeding said sum.

Second. The parties of the second part agree to pay to the party of the first part, at the Treasury Department, in Washington, within the running of such call, the amount of 4 per cent bonds subscribed for under this contract, at par and accrued interest to the date of subscription, in United States gold coin, United States matured coin coupons, coin certificates of deposit issued under the act of March 3, 1863, or United States 6 per cent 5-20 bonds called for redemption not later than the date of the subscription to which the payment applies.

Third. The parties of the second part shall receive a commission of one-fourth of 1 per cent on all bonds taken by them under this contract, and for such sums in excess of $10,000,000 subscribed for and taken by said parties they shall receive an additional commission of one-tenth of 1 per cent on the amount in excess.

Fourth. The Secretary of the Treasury shall transmit to London, England, at the risk and expense of the United States, the bonds subscribed for, and will receive in London, for transportation to the Treasury Department at Washington, any of the coupons or called bonds receivable under this contract, the amount thereof to be credited upon verification by the Treasurer of the United States; and he further agrees to maintain an agency in London, at the expense of the United States, for the convenience of making deliveries to said parties of the second part of said 4 per cent bonds, provided that no bonds shall be delivered to the parties of the second part until payment shall have been made in full therefor in accordance with the terms of this contract; and provided further, That the said parties of the second part shall provide for said agency, without expense to the United States, a suitable office room or rooms, with vault accommodation for the safe-keeping of its securities.

Fifth. It is agreed between the parties that this contract shall remain in force unless previously terminated, as above provided, until the 30th day of June, 1879, and that during its continuance and full performance by the parties of the second part the Secretary of the Treasury shall not sell and deliver in Europe to other parties any of the said 4 per cent bonds, but this shall not be held to preclude the delivery by the Secretary of the Treasury in Europe of $3,600,000 of said 4 per cent bonds already subscribed for by other parties, and said sum shall be considered as a part of the first subscription made under this contract, but no commission on said sum shall be allowed to the parties hereto.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Senator from New York yield to me, as I wish to make some remarks upon the pending bond resolution?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I simply wish to give a history, so that it may appear in the RECORD, of the numerous bond sales made by the present Administration.

It has been the policy of the present Administration to destroy the use of silver as a money metal, and to manipulate the credit of the United States in such a manner as to enrich its favorites, while piling up a load of debt to oppress the whole people. The first step was the extra session of Congress, called for the purpose of repealing the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act. The call for the extra session was a direct attack upon the credit of the United States, and it was preceded by a concerted movement of the banks of New York, inspired from Washington, to curtail mercantile credits and bring about the panic of 1893 as an object lesson to Congress. The panic started by the banks soon passed beyond their control, and involved the country in disasters from which it has not yet recovered.

Then came the enactment of the Wilson tariff for a deficit, a measure framed upon sectional lines, and intended to protect all Southern industries and those of districts represented by Democrats, while the industries of Republican States and Congressional districts were intended to be left defenseless against foreign competition. Fortunately for the country, the rules of the Senate of the United States afforded an opportunity for debate and for careful consideration of the provisions of the tariff as it came to us, and it was amended so as to be a little less obnoxious, in fact quite satisfactory, to the iron, cotton, and most Eastern industries before it became a law without the President's signature.

As soon as the Democratic Administration came into power the revenues began to decrease, because the expectation that the tariff would be reduced checked the importation of all foreign goods, and thereby diminished the receipts from customs.

The act repealing the purchasing clause of the act of July 14, 1890, known as the Sherman law, was signed by the President November 1, 1893, it having passed the House August 28 and the Senate October 31; but though it had been promised that this would restore confidence, it failed to do so, but rather increased the distress and misery by further contracting the volume of money, driving prices to a still lower level, closing mills and factories, and causing a steady increase in the number of bankruptcies in all producing industries to the present time.

On December 27, 1894, the cash balance of the Treasury was reduced to $88,914,096, the lowest on record. The Secretary of the Treasury then applied to Congress for relief, suggesting an issue of 3 per cent five-year bonds for the purpose of augmenting the gold reserve and meeting deficiencies. January 15, 1894, Mr. Carlisle, in a communication to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, stated that unless new legislation could be obtained he would feel compelled to resort to the resumption act of 1875, and issue bonds for the purpose of replenishing the gold reserve.

The chairman, the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], replied to Mr. Carlisle that he could not give an assurance of prompt action upon any new financial measure, and therefore Secretary Carlisle decided to issue $50,000,000 5 per cent ten-year bonds, and arrangements were accordingly made.

The price fixed for the issue was 117.223, which would net about 3 per cent interest. The large premium would reduce the interest which the Government would have to pay to 3 per cent.

The question was raised that no portion of the proceeds of those bonds could be used for any other purpose than for the redemption of United States notes, and this brought out a statement by Mr. Carlisle that the gold reserve was and always had been held as a part of the Treasury cash, and not as a separate fund.

The raising of this question had somewhat of a deterring effect upon intending subscribers, and Mr. Carlisle went on to New York and had a conversation with some of the bankers.

One result was the formation of a syndicate, arranged by Mr. John A. Stewart, of the United States Trust Company, through whose influence subscriptions amounting to $58,002,250 were obtained at from 117.223 to 120.829, and the award was made January 30, on which day the net gold in the Treasury was reported at $65,598,871, and the general cash, including this sum, $82,975,908. Payment for the bonds resulted in an increase in the net gold in the Treasury to $106,539,703 at the end of February, 1894.

But the expenditures of the Government were running ahead of the receipts. Gold was wanted in Europe to carry out the Rothschilds' contract with Austria by which that country was placed upon a gold basis.

Consequently exchange advanced, and on March 2, 1894, $1,250,000 gold was taken for shipment to Europe, followed by a similar amount during the next week, making $2,500,000 for the month. In April $8,874,000 was shipped, and in May $18,150,000; and the net gold in the Treasury at the end of that month was $80,692,962.

In June the continued drain of gold from the Treasury caused some apprehension, and a few of the New York banks agreed to supply the demand for export, but only a little was so furnished; and on the 22d of June the net gold was down to $61,903,746, and the total movement to Europe that month was $21,150,000.

In July shipments were $10,700,000, and the net gold was reduced to $45,516,212.

The Wilson tariff bill was passed on August 14 and it became a law August 27; but the mischief had been done; trade and manufacturing had been so far depressed by the contraction of our currency by the repeal of the Sherman law and the export of gold that prices continued to decline; trade and manufactures had been so far depressed that recovery was impossible without a reform of our financial system. The deficiency in the revenue continued to increase, and in September there was some talk about a new issue of bonds.

November 14 the Secretary of the Treasury issued a call for $50,000,000 5 per cent ten-year bonds under the resumption act. The conditions prevailing at the time this issue was made were peculiar.

The bonds sold in January had been absorbed at home and none had been taken abroad. The Stewart syndicate had been treated fairly by the Government, and there was a disposition on the part of these bankers freely to subscribe for the new issue.

Mr. Stewart and Mr. J. P. Morgan visited Washington in the interest of the syndicate, and it is represented and generally believed that Mr. Stewart, at least, had a distinct understanding with the President and with Mr. Carlisle that nothing would be done by the Administration in any way whatever to interfere with the marketing of the bonds.

These bankers went back to New York and forwarded a bid for the round amount of the bonds at 117.077.

The total subscriptions were $178,341,550. The award was made to the Stewart syndicate on the understanding that the gold to be paid for the bonds would not be taken from the Treasury, and payment was prompt, $29,021,518 having been turned into the sub-treasury by the end of November.

The syndicate immediately arranged to sell the bonds they had bought, and offered a lot of $5,000,000 at 119. It is believed that this amount was sold at the price named, but before they had an opportunity to dispose of many more the President's message and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury recommending changes in the currency effectually stopped the marketing of any more of the bonds.

The particular section of Mr. Carlisle's bill which did the business for the Stewart syndicate was section 1:

Be it enacted, That all acts which require or authorize the deposit of United States bonds to secure circulating notes issued by national banking associations be and the same are hereby repealed, and such notes hereafter prepared shall not contain the statement that they are so secured.

Now, Mr. President, let it be borne in mind that Messrs. Stewart and Morgan visited Washington in relation to the bond issue on or about November 24; that in all probability had it not been for the assurance given by Mr. Carlisle and the President that nothing would be done by the Administration to interfere with the marketing of the bonds, these bankers, and particularly Mr. Stewart, would not have bid for them at all, much less have bid a high price for the whole or none; that the formulation of a bill so important as that prepared by Mr. Carlisle must have been under consideration for some time prior to its presentation to Congress at the beginning of the session, and the President must have known the views of his Secretary long before their publication in the annual reports, or had inspired them; and there is the explanation of the statement made by Mr. Stewart early in December that his syndicate would dissolve December 27, 1894. It was also then stated that not more than $10,500,000 of the bonds bought by the Stewart syndicate of the Government had been sold, and only $5,000,000 at 119.

It is my opinion that this bad faith on the part of the Administration was planned in advance and for the purpose of depressing the price of the bonds and ruin the credit of the Government, so as to compel Congress to enact such financial legislation as the President might demand, and afterwards turned to account in enriching the favorites of the President, if not the President himself.

The net gold proceeds of the fifty-million-dollar bond sale in January, amounting to $58,000,000, went to Europe during the summer of 1894, and there was no reason to expect that the proceeds of the $50,000,000 sold in November, 1894, amounting to $53,472,319, would long remain in the Treasury.

Europeans were laughing at us, and sneeringly alluded to the financial methods pursued for rehabilitating our gold reserve. American bankers were coolly calculating upon the time when a new issue of bonds would have to be made and wondering who would buy them.

On the 8th of December, 1894, gold again began to flow out of the Treasury to Europe, and even then redemptions of legal tenders for the purpose of hoarding gold were well under way, having really begun toward the close of November, for concurrently with the settlement by the syndicate for the bonds bought by them there was a withdrawal of large sums of gold with which to pay for the bonds.

By the end of December the net gold in the Treasury had been reduced to $86,244,445, against $111,142,020 December 6, and $9,680,000 gold was shipped to Europe during the month. Withdrawals thus exceeding shipments by over $15,000,000.

In January, 1895, the withdrawals of gold for shipment were large, and considerable amounts were taken for hoarding by individuals and by banks. Confidence was unsettled, and the situation was regarded by Treasury officials at Washington as grave, but none recalled the blundering of the Administration which had precipitated it by discrediting the bonds bought by the Stewart syndicate.

January 30, Subtreasurer Jordan, at New York, reported that he thought he could hold out until February 2 with the gold coin in the New York subtreasury, but the next day might decide the situation.

The single day of January 25 had seen $6,903,081 in gold withdrawn from the New York subtreasury, and the evening of February 2 arrived with only $9,700,000 in gold coin available for the redemption of United States notes in New York. A day and a half like the 25th of January might have seen the United States compelled to refuse the redemption of its notes in gold at the subtreasury in New York, the only place at which they are by law redeemable.

Gold was hurried from Philadelphia and every available point, even at the risk of reducing below the point of safety the gold fund at other subtreasuries for the redemption of coin notes, with the result that on Monday, February 3, 1895, the available gold fund had been increased about $1,000,000. Assistant Secretary Curtis, who was then in New York, telegraphed to Secretary Carlisle for authority to sell bullion to exporters at a reduced rate in order to prevent the absolute exhaustion of gold coin. The Treasury had already violated the law requiring gold coin to be held against gold certificates, and had practically borrowed from the trust fund of the certificate holders several millions of dollars.

There was gold bullion still left in the Treasury to cover the certificates, which would have been adequate if it had not been feared that the certificates would be presented in large quantities for redemption.

The gold coin available for all purposes at New York on February 2 was $20,465,334, but it was absolutely known that $10,765,000 in gold certificates were in New York in the hands of a few holders, which were liable to be presented at any moment.

The further sum of $37,069,869 was outstanding in gold certificates, without exact information at the subtreasury as to where it was held, but with the probability that the bulk of it was also held in New York and was liable to be presented at any moment for redemption.

If only half of the certificate holders had decided that their gold coin was safer in their own custody than in that of the Treasury, there would have been scarcely a dollar left for the redemption of legal-tender paper, and the suspension of specie payments would have been decreed by Assistant Treasurer Jordan. The remainder of the gold held by the United States, outside of insignificant sums of coin at other subtreasuries, was in the form of uncoined bullion, of which there was $22,446,828 in the mint at Philadelphia and $18,301,470 in the assay office at New York.

The mints had been ordered to work full time in the coinage of gold, but rolled ingots and machinery were not in readiness, and the net daily product was but a drop in the bucket to the payments on account of redemptions. The demonstration that the crisis was too acute to be longer trifled with, and that gold was being withdrawn by the million for hoarding, was afforded, in the opinion of the Treasury officials, by the awful gap between the withdrawals from the subtreasuries and the exports.

The total withdrawals of gold from the subtreasuries from December 1, 1894, to February 13, 1895, were $80,786,302.

The exports during the same period are computed by the Treasury at $36,852,389, leaving a difference of $44,000,000 to be otherwise accounted for.

The New York bank reserve in the meantime had declined from $96,000,000 in gold to $32,000,000 in gold, indicating that another $14,000,000 had swelled to $58,000,000 the fund which had disappeared from circulation and from official knowledge. That hoarding was really going on, under the belief that the Treasury of the United States would be forced to suspend gold payments, was proved to the satisfaction of the Treasury officials by reports made to them by New York bankers who were withdrawing gold at the request of customers. One New York bank reported that on the single day of January 30 it received requests from over 150 different sources for gold coin. Before the repeal of the Sherman law of 1890 there was practically no difference between the withdrawals and shipments of gold.

These facts, Mr. President, constitute the evidence of a deliberate plot or conspiracy upon the part of the Administration to break down the credit of the United States and to discourage American bankers from investing in the bonds of the United States by threatening to discontinue the use of the bonds as security for bank circulation, for the purpose of enabling certain favored persons to realize enormous profits at the expense of the people of the United States or of compelling Congress to enact certain legislation at the demand of the President.

While this drain of gold was going on the Administration was actively negotiating with Messrs. Belmont and Morgan regarding measures of relief for the critical condition of the Treasury caused by the deliberate action or the criminal blunders of the Administration itself.

For reasons just stated nothing could be expected from American bankers, and Mr. Morgan, as one of the Stewart syndicate, well knew how that combination had been treated, and why it had been so treated. Negotiations were transferred to New York, and Assistant Secretary Curtis took charge there.

Messrs. Belmont and Morgan well understood the situation and the necessities of the Government, which they and the President had helped to create, and they refused to make the desired loan at the maximum of 3½ per cent. They pointed out that the price of the former 5 per cent bond issues had fluctuated from 119, at which they were taken immediately after their issue, down to 114, more than 3 per cent below the price received by the Government.

The representatives of the foreign houses declared that they could not take the risk of this fluctuation and the cost of maintaining a favorable rate of exchange without getting a higher interest than Mr. Curtis, under Mr. Carlisle's instructions, was willing to yield.

One of the elements in placing the bonds abroad was the tax of 1½ per cent imposed by the British Government upon the face value of foreign securities. The syndicate, it was represented, would not only have to consider that fact in placing bonds in Great Britain, but the cost of transporting foreign coin and bullion as well as controlling the exchanges. The differences in price between a 3½ per cent rate and the rate at which the bargain was made—a little under 3½ per cent—was 4½ per cent on the selling price of the securities, amounting to about $3,000,000 on the entire amount. The negotiations were finally completed and the contract was made on February 8, and these bonds were bargained to this combination at 104½ as against 117.077 which the Stewart syndicate had paid for the last issue and $8,325,000 less than the market price for similar bonds on that day for the total issue of a little over sixty-two million of bonds. This was a secret contract, from which the public was excluded, participated in by the President's former law partner. I will not comment on this transaction. I leave it to the American people to pass upon and for the judgment of history. This much may be said, however: If a similar negotiation had been conducted by the governor of any American State or the mayor of any city instead of the President of the United States, impeachment or criminal prosecution would have followed at once.

The contract of February 8, 1895, is as follows:

THE BELMONT-MORGAN CONTRACT.

The agreement is as follows:

This agreement, entered into this 8th day of February, 1895, between the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, of the first part, and Messrs. August Belmont & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, of London, England, and themselves, and Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co., of New York, on behalf of Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, and themselves, parties of the second part—

Witnesseth: Whereas it is provided by the Revised Statutes of the United States (section 3700) that the Secretary of the Treasury may purchase coin with any of the bonds or notes of the United States authorized by law at such rates and upon such terms as he may deem most advantageous to the public interests; and the Secretary of the Treasury now deems that an emergency exists in which the public interests require that, as hereinafter provided, coin shall be purchased with the bonds of the United States of the description hereinafter mentioned, authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, being bonds of the United States described in an act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt": Now, therefore, do the said parties of the second part hereby agree to sell and deliver to the United States 3,500,000 ounces of standard gold coin of the United States at the rate of $17.80441 per ounce, payable in United States 4 per cent thirty-year coupon or registered bonds, said bonds to be dated February 1, 1895, and payable at the pleasure of the United States after thirty years from date, issued under the acts of Congress of July 14, 1870, January 20, 1871, and January 14, 1875, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, payable quarterly.

First. Such purchase and sale of gold coin being made on the following conditions:

1. At least one-half of all coin delivered hereunder shall be obtained in and shipped from Europe, but the shipments shall not be required to exceed 30,000 ounces per month, unless the parties to the second part shall consent thereto.

2. All deliveries shall be made at any of the subtreasuries, or at any other legal depository of the United States.

3. All gold coins delivered shall be received on the basis of 25.8 grains of standard gold per dollar, if within the limit of tolerance.

4. Bonds delivered under this contract are to be delivered free of accrued interest, which is to be assumed and paid by the parties of the second part at the time of their delivery to them.

Second. Should the Secretary of the Treasury desire to offer or sell any bonds of the United States on or before October 1, 1895, he shall first offer the same to the parties of the second part; but thereafter he shall be free from every such obligation to the parties of the second part.

Third. The Secretary of the Treasury hereby reserves the right within ten days from the date hereof, in case he shall receive authority from Congress therefor, to substitute any bonds of the United States bearing 3 per cent interest, of which the principal and interest shall be specifically payable in the United States gold coin of the present weight and fineness for the bonds herein alluded to, such 3 per cent bonds to be accepted by the parties of the second part at par, i. e., at $18.60485 per ounce of standard gold.

Fourth. No bonds shall be delivered to the parties of the second part, or either of them, except in payment for coin from time to time received hereunder; whereupon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall and will deliver the bonds as herein provided, at such places as shall be designated by the parties of the second part.

Any expense of delivery out of the United States shall be assumed and paid by the parties of the second part.

Fifth. In consideration of the purchase of such coin the parties of the second part and their associates hereunder assume and will bear all the expense and inevitable loss of bringing gold from Europe hereunder; and, as far as lies in their power, will exert all financial influence and will make all legitimate efforts to protect the Treasury of the United States against the withdrawals of gold pending the complete performance of this contract.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands in five parts this 8th day of February, 1895.

J. G. CARLISLE,

Secretary of the Treasury.

AUGUST BELMONT & CO.

On behalf of Messrs. N. M. Rothschild & Sons, London, and Themselves.

J. P. MORGAN & CO.,

On behalf of J. S. Morgan & Co., London, and Themselves.

Attest:

W. R. CURTIS—

Representing the Treasury in the negotiation at New York.

FRANCIS LYNDE STETSON—

The law partner of Grover Cleveland at the time he was last elected President.

After the contract was signed the right was reserved to the Treasury Department, under the third section of the compact, to substitute any bonds of the United States bearing 3 per cent interest, payable in gold.

The President at once communicated to Congress the terms of the contract, at the same time asking for the passage of a law authorizing the issue of 3 per cent gold bonds, but the authority was not given, and the contract went into full effect February 18. Two days thereafter it was announced, with great circumstantiality, that the syndicate had then paid into the Treasury $32,558,137.50 gold for the American half of the bonds.

Immediately upon the signing of the contract there was an earnest desire on the part of American bankers and capitalists to get in. Application was made to the syndicate, and the applicants were let in; but under this stipulation: All who were admitted were required to unite in a practical underwriting of the entire issue of bonds. That is to say, as one-half of the bonds were reserved for Americans, these subscribers were required to deposit with the syndicate gold coin, not obtained from the Treasury, to double the amount of their subscriptions, which gold was to be placed under the absolute control of Messrs. Morgan and Belmont, to be used by them as they saw proper. The subscriptions came from every quarter, and it was stated by the syndicate that they were so large that not more than 50 per cent could be awarded.

The bonds were offered in New York at 112½ and in London at £227 per $1,000 bond, equal, with exchange at $4.90, to 111.23.

The subscribers agreed to the stipulation of the syndicate, and therefore these bankers were enabled promptly to make full payment for the bonds immediately after the closing of the books.

But, Mr. President, the gold so paid did not go into the Treasury, though it was credited in the Treasury accounts, for as late as June 21, 1895, $6,856,752 gold was transferred to the Treasury from one or more of the banks selected by the syndicate as depositories of their money.

Immediately upon the signing of the contract it was announced that £1,685,000 gold had been bought in London for the syndicate, and on the 21st of February they paid over to the Treasury 143,102 ounces of gold on foreign account.

Not all the American bankers who subscribed for the bonds paid in full their quota of gold until some time in May, and then the full amount due from them was collected, and there was turned over to the Treasury on June 8 $10,449,462, and credited on the foreign bond account.

As at that time $14,545,972 had been imported, there remained to be paid $7,562,702. The Campania arrived on Saturday, June 22, 1895, with about $880,000 gold for the syndicate, leaving $6,680,621.79 due, and this amount was announced at the Treasury as having been paid on Tuesday, June 25, 1895, thus closing the contract.

But the terms of the agreement were not literally complied with by this payment, and it is evident that either the President or the Secretary of the Treasury waived that provision of the contract which required that one-half of the gold should be imported from Europe.

The amount of gold to be imported under the original contract was $32,558,137. The amount actually imported was a little over $15,000,000, the balance having been made up from the contributions of the banks which were interested in the syndicate operations in the manner just stated; that is, every banker was required to deposit twice as much gold as he received in bonds.

Now, Mr. President, why was this syndicate permitted to close its contract without having imported from Europe nearly $17,000,000 of the gold which they had agreed to bring hither?

I propose to read an extract from a New York paper of that date, as it so clearly details not only what had happened, but what would happen. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 8.

The Administration contract with the bond syndicate was more infamous than at first appeared.

There was a secret verbal contract with the syndicate of bankers to whom the Administration intrusted the negotiation of the last batch of bonds.

This contract was not reduced to writing for a very simple reason. The Treasury Department has no authority of law to enter into such an agreement with any person or combination of bankers.

The written contract submitted to Congress was quite objectionable on account of the enormous profit which it permitted the bankers to make, but the verbal contract constituted the syndicate the financial agents of the United States, in return for which the bankers who took the bonds were to protect the Treasury against any further raid upon the gold therein.

This they are to do by keeping the price of sterling exchange in New York below the point at which gold can profitably be exported.

In this way the gains of the firms who used to export gold whenever there was a clear profit, however small, from the operation have been destroyed. But the syndicate is making much more, because the Administration permits the bankers to hold in London the gold received from foreign sales of bonds, so that they can sell exchange in New York on London cheaper than anyone else can afford to. They can do this because the gold upon which exchange is drawn is already in London.

In this way there is at present no demand upon the Treasury for gold for export, for no one could export gold except at a loss. The fact that the syndicate is now operating under this verbal contract explains the slowness with which gold is coming into the Treasury. It also explains the cheerfulness with which the Administration contemplates the situation. In fact, the Administration flatters itself that the endless chain is broken.

But is the endless chain really broken? If there is a demand for gold from this country, can the syndicate stop the endless chain from working any longer than their gold receipts from the sale of bonds in Europe hold out? Have not the bankers, who have been constituted the fiscal agents of this country by a verbal contract not authorized by law, always earned the reputation of taking the best possible care of themselves in every transaction in which they have been engaged?

Was not the clause in the written contract giving to them the option upon all other issues of bonds until October drawn to meet this very case? Did not the members of the syndicate know that they could not continue to sell exchange low enough to prevent gold exportations during all of the next six months without sacrificing some of their profits unless more bonds were given to them to sell in Europe?

These questions need only to be stated, the replies suggest themselves. From them can be seen what the Administration has really done.

It has not broken the endless chain, it has simply substituted for gold, temporarily, an export of thirty-year 4 per cent bonds. As soon as the proceeds of these bonds have been exhausted by exchange drafts and the gold received in New York for the sale of exchange has been deposited in the Treasury, the endless chain will begin to work again. As soon as greenbacks and Treasury notes begin again to be presented for redemption more bonds will be issued to the syndicate and more profits will accrue to these patriotic bankers.

While the endless chain was in operation the people knew what the sale of bonds to buy gold to replenish the Treasury was going to cost them in the way of interest. They had public notice of the time when bids for bonds would be received and opened, and that awards would be made to the best bidders. They knew also that the bonds were to be paid for at once and the gold deposited in the Treasury in plain sight of people of the United States, to whom it belonged.

Now, they knew that the men who undertook to negotiate the last bonds were not only presented by the Administration with an enormous gratuity of from $90,000 to $100,000 at least upon every million under the written contract, but by the secret verbal contract were and are permitted to retain in their own hands in London the gold received from the sale of bonds in Europe until they can make an additional profit by selling this gold to merchants and bankers in New York in the form of exchange upon London.

And all this without the expenditure of one cent by the members of the syndicate, except traveling expenses to Washington, for these patriotic bankers did not buy the bonds themselves; they merely contracted to sell them at a certain price, when they knew they could get a great deal more for them. And yet the Administration actually takes great credit to itself for this transaction. But the syndicate takes the cash and lets the credit go.

In the face of these facts it seems to me there is something to investigate; that it is exceedingly proper to go to the bottom of this transaction and ascertain all there is in connection with the secret bond contract. I presume it is not to prevent the disclosures which must come from laying bare this secret transaction that the Senator from New York is making such frantic efforts to prevent the proposed investigation. I think the American people demand it, and the Senate should probe this transaction to the bottom.

So this transaction was closed and the American people paid a premium of over eight millions of money for sixty-three millions of gold which did not maintain the gold reserve seven months, or from February 8 until September, 1895; for long before Congress assembled in 1895 it was apparent to everyone that another bond sale must be resorted to, and in November the gold reserve had been reduced to less than eighty millions. Early in December members of the Morgan syndicate visited Washington to negotiate for the delivery to them of one hundred millions of bonds at 104½ and the transaction was about completed by the 20th, but the President hesitated, and on the 21st of December the members of the Morgan-Belmont syndicate and others joining, sent the Secretary or the President a telegram that they would furnish one hundred millions of American gold if their offer of 104½ was accepted at once; that the credit of the United States was so bad that not a dollar of gold could be secured from Europe, and that if the Government delayed accepting their offer this chance would be lost and the Government would find it impossible to obtain gold at all. This telegram was supposed to produce the desired effect, and I am of the opinion that this contract was closed.

It was generally understood that the contract was closed and reported that enough bankers had been taken into the syndicate at an advance price over what Morgan-Belmont were to pay to afford them several millions of profit, and that these bankers controlled all the available gold in the United States, except what was in the Treasury.

Resolutions were introduced in this body condemning the private sale of bonds, and the New York World began an exposure of this transaction that startled the country. I quote from the New York World of January 1, 1895:

MORGAN ET AL.'S PROFITS FOR 1895.

If this new loan is negotiated the account of J. Pierpont Morgan and his associated gold brokers with the Government of the United States will show the following handsome book profits for the year 1895:

HOW THE ACCOUNTS STAND—FIRST TRANSACTION—LOAN OF FEBRUARY 18 LAST.

Face of loan	$62,315,000
Morgan-Belmont paid 104.49 as premium	2,797,943
United States got	65,112,943
Morgan-Belmont got from bankers' syndicate at 112½	69,948,587
Morgan-Belmont syndicate's first profit	4,835,644
Bankers' syndicate got from public, at 118	73,531,700
Bankers' syndicate's second profit	3,583,113
United States lost by transaction and the bond syndicate made an apparent clear profit of	8,418,757

The United States, therefore, lost by this transaction the difference between the price they took and the market price the sum of $8,418,757.

SECOND TRANSACTION (PROPOSED)—DECEMBER 31.

Face of loan (with $100,000,000 more in prospect)	$100,000,000
Morgan, as syndicate manager, pays about 104½ premium	4,750,000
United States will get	104,750,000
Morgan syndicate will get from public a premium of 117½ (yesterday's market price)	117,500,000
Morgan and other bankers' profit	12,750,000
Morgan and other bankers' profit in February	8,418,757

Total for 1895 if new contract is accepted..... 21,168,757

This is an appalling sum, $21,000,000; a sum greater than the average savings of 400,000 laborers for a year donated to men who never produced one element of wealth, but who have spent their lives in gathering together that which others have produced.

In the face of these facts and the attitude of the Senate on this subject, the Administration did not dare to carry out its contract, and so in January advertised for bids. No price was stated, and the officers of the Treasury did not expect the popular loan to be successful. They looked and hoped for failure. It was well known that the syndicate had most of the gold in this country cornered. The people did not bid, as they were afraid they could not get the gold to pay for the bonds.

At this juncture some of the banks that had been members of the syndicate put in independent bids, and Morgan & Co., fearing that they would be shut out of participation in any profit in the transaction, bid 110.6877, or a fraction less than 110.7, for the whole one hundred million or any part thereof. Sixty-seven millions of the bonds went for a higher price. Thirty-three million dollars was awarded to the Morgan syndicate at their bid of 110.7 or 6 per cent more on the dollar than their private contract with the Secretary called for, thus saving to the people between six and seven millions on this transaction. These bonds would have sold at 117½ on the day the bids were opened, if this had been an honest effort on the part of the Treasury Department to offer them to the public and a price or range of prices been published, showing the term of the bonds and the rate of interest they would draw at the various prices and payment accepted in lawful money, and thus over six millions more would have been saved to the people. It is no excuse to say that this sale was for the purpose of obtaining gold, for, if the bonds had been sold for lawful money, for a fraction of a cent on the dollar, lawful money could have been exchanged for gold.

But other favors were to be showered upon Morgan & Co. W. R. Graves, of New York, had bid 115.31 for $4,500,000 of the bonds and was unable to secure the gold to pay for them. Reliable parties thereupon bid 114.5 for these bonds, but the Secretary sold them to the syndicate for 110.7. The Secretary should, in law and equity, have sold all bonds not taken by bidders at the best obtainable price and looked to the defaulting bidders for the difference. This would have been done by any private individual, but the Secretary chose to turn the bonds over to this syndicate for their bid price, or at $190,000 less than the bid made by responsible parties. I will now read the bid which the Secretary received on the 15th of February and refused to accept:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 15, 1896.

SIR: The Investment Corporation of New York hereby bids 114.50 for any or all bonds allotted to parties who did not comply with the terms of their bids by the payment of 20 per cent or more of the amount awarded them by noon Saturday, the 15th instant, in accordance with the terms of the circular issued by you. We offer 114.50, with the understanding and condition that none of the gold to be paid for the bonds shall be drawn from the United States Treasury. We are prepared to deposit the gold on the receipt of advice from you that this bid will be entertained. The Investment Corporation insists that the bid of J. P. Morgan & Co. is not entitled to any further allotment of bonds, and we beg to hand you herewith our memorandum brief upon that proposition.

Very respectfully,

INVESTMENT CORPORATION OF NEW YORK,
By H. L. McDONALD, President.

Post-office and office address, Room 4, ninth floor, Mills Building, 15 Broad street, New York.

To the HONORABLE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

This company had already bid for $5,000,000 of bonds and had been awarded $2,000,000 of bonds at a higher price than the bid of Morgan & Co., and had paid for the bonds and received them. They were entirely responsible and able to carry out the bid which they had made, and yet the Secretary of the Treasury chose to refuse a bid of 114½ cents on the dollar for this four and a half million of bonds and turned them over to the Morgan syndicate for 110.7, thus apparently openly, intentionally taking out of the pockets of the people $190,000 to turn over to this syndicate of bankers already enormously enriched at the expense of the people.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me? What would the Senator have had the Secretary of the Treasury do after the forfeiture of Graves's bid?

Mr. PETTIGREW. What was the question? I did not hear the question of the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] corrects me. I thought you were speaking of the Graves bid.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I did speak of the Graves bid. I said that Graves forfeited, and after he forfeited the Investment Corporation of New York bid 114.50 for those bonds; that their bid was refused; that no attention was paid to it, and the bonds were turned over to the syndicate.

Mr. HILL. I ask what would you have had the Secretary of the Treasury do then?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I would have had him do what any individual would have done.

Mr. HILL. What is that?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I would have sold them at the highest attainable price.

Mr. HILL. Would you have advertised them, or would you have accepted a private bid?

Mr. PETTIGREW. He should properly advertise them, and if he did not advertise them he should have accepted the best bid which he could get.

Mr. HILL. And not accept any of the bids already in?

Mr. PETTIGREW. No, sir; he should have done exactly what an individual would have done, and he would have protected the Treasury thereby.

Mr. HILL. The Senator, then, would not have accepted the next highest bid?

Mr. PETTIGREW. No, sir.

Mr. HILL. The Senator knows the fact, does he not, that the bid of Morgan & Co. was the next highest bid?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think likely the bid of Morgan & Co. was the next highest bid.

Mr. HILL. Is there any doubt about it in the Senator's mind?

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have this to say in regard to that point: If their bid was the next highest bid, the Secretary of the Treasury was not bound to give the bonds to them, nor would they have accepted the bonds if the price in the market that day had been below 110.7. They would have laughed at the Secretary of the Treasury if he had offered the bonds to them if the market price on that day had been lower than their bid. But with a profit of $190,000 in the transaction, of course Morgan & Co. took the bonds.

Mr. HILL. What would the Senator have said as to this state of facts, which might or might not have occurred, depending on the market: If, after the forfeiture of Graves's bid, the bonds had gone down and the Government had refused to accept the bid of Morgan & Co. and had placed the bonds on the market again and the bonds had not realized the amount of the Morgan bid? Where, then, would the Secretary of the Treasury have been placed?

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me in this connection?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will yield to the Senator from Nevada in a moment.

Mr. STEWART. He reserved the right—

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to answer the question of the Senator from New York.

Mr. STEWART. All right.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If the bonds had gone below 110.7 in the market the Morgan syndicate would have refused to accept them, and would have said that their contract was closed when they received the $33,000,000 of bonds. The Senator knows that very well.

Mr. HILL. How—

Mr. PETTIGREW. If the market price of the bonds had gone below Morgan's bid on the date when Graves defaulted, and Morgan was still anxious to take them at his price, of course it would have been the duty of the Secretary to have accepted it, for that would be carrying out what I believe proper—that the Secretary should have obtained the best possible price for the bonds in order to protect the interests of the people of the United States, whose servant he was.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me now?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HILL. I am not through yet.

Mr. STEWART. In the proposal the Secretary reserved the right to reject any and all bids, and he had a perfect right to sell the bonds as he pleased under that reservation. He was not bound when he was offered 114 to take 110 or 111. Certainly not, because he had the absolute power reserved to himself.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This seems to have been a transaction where there was a partnership as to profit between the Secretary and a syndicate of bankers, and the interest of the people of the United States was entirely left out of the reckoning. That seems to have been the sum and substance and gist of the whole transaction, rotten and dishonest and corrupt to the core. It seems to me it is entirely proper and timely for the Senate of the United States thoroughly to investigate the transaction.

Here is a telegram from the Morgan syndicate sent on the 21st day of December to the President and Secretary of the Treasury, telling the Government officials that the gold can not be procured in Europe because the credit of the United States is so bad, and that if their bid of 104½ is not accepted at once they will withdraw the bid and refuse to furnish the gold in the United States, knowing as they did, and as the Secretary knew, that all the gold not already in the Treasury had been thoroughly cornered by Morgan and the banks associated with him.

The Secretary of the Treasury could not have been ignorant of what Morgan was doing, because Morgan came to Washington—he says on the invitation of the President, which the President denies, but admits the interview when the negotiation with the syndicate took place. Morgan immediately after that interview formed his syndicate, described the bonds as running twenty-nine years, and assumed that the price would be 104½. The arrangements that Morgan was making with the syndicate were public, and it was understood at the time that the gold in the country had been pooled or cornered for the purpose of purchasing the $100,000,000 of bonds by the syndicate. Under these circumstances the threat that they would deprive the Government of the means of obtaining gold was most significant.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. I understood the Senator to speak of what Morgan & Co. would have done if the bonds had diminished in market value. I understood the Senator to say that they would not then have insisted upon them taking the bonds under their bid. Is that correct?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator can go on with his statement, whatever it is.

Mr. HILL. Of course I am not authorized to speak for Morgan & Co., and I assume the Senator from South Dakota is not authorized to speak for them. Therefore I ask him whether his argument comes down to this, that whether the Secretary of the Treasury should have given the Graves bonds to the next highest bidder depends upon the fact as to what the market value of the bonds was. In other words, if the market value the next day was away below the bid, then he should have insisted upon Morgan & Co. taking the bonds, but if it was higher, then he should not have let them have the bonds. That is what I complain of.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator from New York seems determined—I do not know that he is trying to misrepresent me—not to understand what I say. I simply say the Secretary of the Treasury was bound to get the best price he could get for the bonds after they were not taken by the original bidders, and that Morgan & Co. were not bound in law to take them. Their transaction was closed. They had taken the bonds that were not awarded to other people.

Mr. HILL. Then let me see if I understand the Senator, for I am endeavoring to do so in good faith.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think so. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. HILL. In case the bonds decreased in value, the Senator says that the Secretary of the Treasury was not bound in law, and of course, then, he was not bound in fact, to compel Morgan & Co. to take the bonds. Now, what would he have done in case the bonds went up in value?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I said I would have sold the bonds at the highest obtainable price. It is possible—

Mr. HILL. Then, in either event, no matter whether the bonds went below the Morgan bid or beyond and higher than the Morgan bid, the Senator would have sold them to the highest bidder. He would have made a new advertisement.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will say further, in reply to the Senator from New York, that the Secretary reserved the right to reject any and all bids.

Mr. STEWART. That is it.

Mr. HILL. That is a different question.

Mr. PETTIGREW. And inasmuch as at the time Graves failed to take the bonds the market price was very much higher, the Government could have made $190,000 or more than that if the Secretary of the Treasury had put the bonds upon the market, and it was his duty to protect the people and the Treasury by doing so.

Mr. HILL. Does not the Senator know that on the very day before the gold was to be paid by the bidder on the Graves bid the market value of the bonds was below the price bid?

Mr. PETTIGREW. No; I do not know that fact.

Mr. HILL. It is the fact.

Mr. PETTIGREW. But I do know that the Secretary on the day Graves defaulted on his payment was offered 114.50 for those identical bonds and for all bonds not taken.

It is impossible for the Senator from New York to so obscure the question as to deceive the public. The Secretary reserved the right to reject any and all bids. He was under no legal obligation to accept the Morgan bid for any part of the loan. When he accepted the Morgan bid at 110.7 for $33,000,000 the transaction with Morgan was closed. He had no other bid and had no other claim upon the Secretary. When the Graves bid failed it was as if no bid had been made. The Secretary then was at liberty to advertise for new bids or to sell to whomsoever he pleased, for if he had any power at all to sell, the mode of sale was entirely discretionary with him, provided he acted honestly. He did dispose of the Graves bid at private sale. He was offered by another responsible bidder nearly $200,000 more. It is true the bid was not made in pursuance of an advertisement, nor was the bid of Morgan made in pursuance of advertisement. They were both private bids. The simple fact is that the Secretary of the Treasury sold $5,000,000 of bonds to his friend on a private bid for nearly $200,000 less than another responsible bidder offered. Is that honest?

Mr. HILL. What right had the Secretary of the Treasury to take an outside and a private bid which had not competed with any of the others?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It would have been better to have taken an outside bid, a private bid, which would have saved the Treasury of the United States $190,000, than to have sold the bonds to an outside or an inside private bid which lost to the Treasury $190,000.

Mr. President, I ask to have incorporated as a part of my speech a brief statement by these people who offered 14½ cents premium for the bonds.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HILL. What is it that the Senator asks shall be incorporated in the RECORD?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Does the Senator from New York object?

Mr. HILL. I want to know what it is. I have not the slightest idea.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is simply a statement by the Investment Company of New York as to the reasons why those bonds should not have been awarded to the Morgan syndicate.

Mr. HILL. When was it prepared and where did the Senator get it, may I ask him? [A pause.] He may decline to answer if he wants to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator can secure a copy by calling upon the Treasury Department for it by resolution.

Mr. HILL. I should like a little more definite description of what the Senator proposes to put into the RECORD. Whereabouts did the firm make this statement?

Mr. PETTIGREW. If the Senator desires, I will have the statement read by the Secretary.

Mr. HILL. I do not care to take up the time to do that, for I am anxious to progress in this matter. But I should like to have a little more definite idea of what the Senator is going to put in.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is a statement—

Mr. HILL. A statement prepared by whom and when? Where does it come from?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It was prepared on the 15th of February last. It is addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, and is signed by the Investment Corporation, per H. M. McDonald, its president. It gives the reasons why the bonds should have been assigned to them instead of to Morgan & Co.

Mr. HILL. Assigned to them, although they were not bidders?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Assigned to them upon their bid which they put in at the same time.

Mr. HILL. Upon their subsequent bid, after the failure of Graves?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Is that it?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Exactly. I am very glad the Senator understands it. The Secretary refused to deliver the bonds on this subsequent bid of 114.50, but delivered them to Morgan & Co., on their subsequent bid for $190,000 less money.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator thinks they can explain that transaction and their right to have those bonds, although they bid for them in a subsequent bid, the Senator is welcome to all the argument he can make from the statement.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will leave to the public and to the Senate to determine whether or not the syndicate the Senator from New York champions—

Mr. HILL. I do not object.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Had a better right to those bonds at $190,000 less than the Investment Corporation bid for them.

The statement referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 15, 1896.

DEAR SIR: We respectfully submit the following statement:

FACTS.

The Secretary of the Treasury, under circular of January 5, 1896, and circulars amendatory thereto, invited proposals for $100,000,000 United States 4 per cent bonds maturing February 1, 1925.

Such proposals were received up to 12 m. February 6, 1896.

These proposals aggregated many times the amount of the offered loan.

Among other proposals was one made by Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co., of New York, and associates for $100,000,000 of the loan or any portion thereof at 110.6877.

Under the terms of this proposal something over $33,000,000 of the sum was allotted Messrs. Morgan & Co. and associates.

This allotment was definite in amount, precise in terms, and unaccompanied by any condition or intimation that an increased amount of the bonds might thereafter be given Messrs. Morgan & Co. under their proposal of February 6. Among the bidders for the loan was W. R. Graves, of New York, who proposed to purchase $4,500,000 of the bonds at 115.31.

The above amount of bonds was awarded Mr. Graves and associates.

Mr. Graves has not paid for the bonds allotted him, as required by the terms of the honorable Secretary's circulars.

Other allottees for comparatively small amounts may also have defaulted in their payments.

The Investment Corporation of New York offers, by the terms of its accompanying proposal, to purchase the bonds awarded Mr. Graves and all other bonds upon which the first installment has not been met, paying therefor 114.50 and interest.

ARGUMENT.

The Investment Corporation urges, to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, that Mr. Graves put in his bid in good faith; is an actual person; the bonds were allotted to him in the regular routine of the Department, and he became entitled to the bonds on the payment of his gold.

Mr. Graves's bid was about $250,000 better than the bid of Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co. and associates.

Undoubtedly Mr. Graves depended on arranging with banks to carry out his bid. The high price he offered and the manipulation of the Government bond market at the great money center by those who bid much less for their bonds compelled Mr. Graves to default.

Messrs. Morgan & Co. bid for any or all of the $100,000,000 issue. By the terms of their bid they were only entitled to "any" left to them after bids at higher prices were filled. When Messrs. Morgan & Co. were allotted their bonds they received all to which they were entitled. Their rights were fixed. No further moral or legal obligation remained in abeyance to spring up on a future contingency; they had what they asked for, to wit, "any" of the bonds at their price.

No question of good faith or moral obligation on the part of the Government toward Messrs. Morgan & Co. can arise. The transaction was ended so far as award of bonds was concerned.

With the default of Mr. Graves, Messrs. Morgan & Co. have no concern; they have now no interest in Mr. Graves's bid or in the relation of the Government to him.

If the Government has any legal rights to enforce under the contract with Mr. Graves, there can be no legal or moral equity in favor of Messrs. Morgan & Co.

If the Government saw fit, they could bring either of several forms of action against Mr. Graves, as specific performance for damages, for difference in price, etc., as it might elect. We think this undoubted.

Or, if the Government were a bank, they could put up the bonds for sale and charge Mr. Graves for the loss, if any.

With the legal rights thus fixed, it is impossible to conceive of the existence of any obligation in favor of any third party as residuary legatee of all defaulted awards or contracts.

Furthermore, Graves's bid was in round numbers a quarter million of dollars more than the Morgan bid upon the amount involved.

The transaction contemplated by Mr. Graves was legal and precisely such as was, with a wider margin, carried out by most of the larger bidders, including Messrs. Morgan & Co.

The market price of Government bonds is fixed by the Wall street trading in these bonds.

Recently the strongest factor in fixing the Wall street prices has been the dealings in this issue of bonds by Messrs. Morgan & Co. (Read the financial reports in all the New York papers.)

What moral equity can Messrs. Morgan & Co. have when it has been by the manipulation of their firm that the market for Government bonds has been depressed to the extent that Graves has been "shaken out" and thus prevented from complying with the terms of his bid by the very parties who now seek to claim a moral obligation to receive the bonds allotted Mr. Graves on their bid at a loss to the Government of $250,000 and to their advantage to a very much greater amount?

But suppose a condition. If the market price of Government bonds to-day was 109, what would become of the moral obligation in favor of Messrs. Morgan & Co. to receive these bonds at their bid of 110.6877? It is a poor rule that will not work both ways.

We feel assured that the moral obligation of the Government is not to recognize Messrs. Morgan & Co.'s bid as entitled to any defaulted award, and for this cogent reason: It is the desire of the Government to obtain the very highest price possible for its bonds; no prudent responsible bidder will hereafter dare venture to bid close to the range of market quotation if a far lower bidder can manipulate the market and make it impossible for him to carry out his contract in the light of an established precedent that the lower bidder shall thereupon receive the bonds, with the serious loss which would follow to the Government.

The recognition of the bid of Messrs. Morgan & Co. in this instance would put a premium upon market manipulation to warn off all bidding close to the average market price, to the very serious loss to the Government in all future bidding under existing laws.

As a matter of good morals the Government can not afford to adopt any such course.

As a matter of law the bid of Messrs. Morgan & Co. has no present standing. The proposition is denied by all the law books.

The bonds should be again sold at the best private sale possible or new bids invited.

Either course is warranted by the statute, at the Secretary's discretion.

CONCLUSION.

One of two courses, as already indicated, are open for dealing with the Graves and other unpaid-for bonds, viz: Either readvertise these bonds and sell them to the highest bidder or sell them by private contract upon the most advantageous terms readily attainable by the honorable Secretary.

The first-mentioned course involves considerable expense and the operation of extensive governmental machinery of detail in comparison with the amount involved.

It is also open to the objection that some bidders to whom bonds shall be awarded may not fulfill their contracts, thus necessitating another resale of bonds.

On the other hand, a sale by private contract is expeditious and entirely free from complications.

The Investment Corporation, therefore, respectfully requests the acceptance of its offer herewith made.

The price named, viz, 114.50 and interest, is fair, being only slightly below the present market value of the bonds.

The price is also advantageous to the Government, as it is an increase of more than 3 per cent over the average price at which the recent loan was allotted, or in amount at least $150,000.

THE INVESTMENT CORPORATION,
By H. M. McDONALD, President.
W. B. BURNET, Counsel.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PETTIGREW. But the most remarkable of all is that while the Senator from New York is so anxious that this transaction shall not be investigated by a committee of this body, the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] should come in and indorse the whole transaction, for on the 29th of April the Senator from Ohio, referring to this issue of bonds, said:

They did right. Though I hold far different opinions from them on many questions, yet I stand here and say boldly and openly that in managing our financial affairs during the present condition of things I think the Secretary of the Treasury and the President have done their full duty, and I could say no more if there were a Republican President in office. (April 29, 1896. RECORD, page 4500.)

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me? Who is more competent to speak upon that subject than the distinguished Senator from Ohio, who for so many years had charge of the great finances of the country?

Mr. PETTIGREW. My answer to that question would be a matter of opinion, and therefore I will not burden the Senate with it. I do not doubt that the Senator from New York and the Morgan syndicate will forever proclaim that the Senator from Ohio is the best authority who can possibly be found so long as his opinions indorse the plunder of the people and the robbery of the Treasury.

Mr. President, the plain statement of the facts connected with the several bond issues by the present Administration constitutes an arraignment which no eloquence could make stronger. First, there was the attack upon the credit of the United States by the inspired object lesson from the banks of New York; then the extra session of the Fifty-third Congress; then the passage of the Wilson tariff for a deficit; the further depreciation of the national credit by the demonstration that the revenues were not equal to the necessary expenditures of the Government; then the endless chain, the first bond issue of $50,000,000 of 5 per cent ten-year bonds at a fixed price of 117.233; then the second issue of similar bonds at an accepted bid of 117.077; the depreciation of the market value of these bonds by the recommendation to Congress that a bill be passed discontinuing the use of them as a basis of bank-note circulation; then the secret contract with the Belmont-Morgan syndicate for the sale of $62,000,000 of thirty-year 4 per cent bonds at 104½, which bonds were quoted last December at 121; finally the attempt to give to the Morgan syndicate the last loan of $100,000,000 at the same figures, and the actual award to them at their bid of 110.6877 of about $5,000,000 upon which default was made in payment, for which other parties offered 116, and which were quoted in open market at a higher price.

Upon this record, Mr. President, the Administration and the Democratic party must go before the people next November, and the verdict of the people will be even more emphatic in condemnation than it was in 1894 and in 1895.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to ask whether the Democratic party can not quote with great effect the remarks the Senator has quoted from the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], a distinguished leader of the Republican party, showing that the bond transaction was all right? Can not the Democratic party stand pretty well on that statement?

Mr. PETTIGREW. They undoubtedly will quote it; but that will not justify the iniquity of this whole transaction.

JOSEPH R. WEST.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 673) granting a pension to Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major general, United States Army Volunteers.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SHOUP, and Mr. ROACH were appointed.

FRANCIS WALSH.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up a bill on the Calendar.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Nebraska assure me that it will not lead to any debate?

Mr. ALLEN. It will not lead to any debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York object?

Mr. HILL. I do not, under the circumstances.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 491) granting an increase of pension to Francis Walsh, of Stockham, Nebr.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me for a moment? If the Senator from New York does not wish to proceed further to-night with his discussion of the bond resolution, I see no reason why we might not devote a half hour to private bills, by unanimous consent. I should have no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us continue the order of this morning for the consideration of unobjected House bills.

Mr. ALLEN. Let this bill be first disposed of.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "fifty"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Francis Walsh, late a member of Company B, Third Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension which he is now receiving.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the committee will not insist upon the amendment, but will let the bill stand as it passed the other House. This party is totally disabled, as the report shows, and unable to be without an attendant at any time. It is a very meritorious case, and one in which I think the claimant is entitled to $72.

Mr. GALLINGER. I feel sure I speak for the committee when I say that in view of all the facts in the case it will not insist upon its amendment and is quite willing that the amendment shall be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask unanimous consent that the bond resolution may be temporarily laid aside so that Senators may be permitted to call up private bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that, as a great many Senators have requested that I should get speedy action on pension bills which are on the Calendar, we might devote a little time to the consideration of those bills.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to facilitate the passage of unobjected bills without having Senators getting up and asking unanimous consent for their consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us go on with the unobjected pension cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COCKRELL. To go on, under the order of this morning, with the consideration of unobjected House bills on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will agree to modify his request as I suggest?

Mr. COCKRELL. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire to take up pension bills.

Mr. WHITE. I have no objection to that course, but I would prefer very much that Senators should have an opportunity to call up other bills in which they are interested. However, I do not wish to oppose the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER], who has in charge the resolution which has been laid aside, when he expects to secure a vote on the resolution?

Mr. PEPPER. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I think we will surely be able to reach a vote some time to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Then might we not have a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the resolution at a certain hour?

Mr. PEPPER. I should be very glad to have such an arrangement, if it can be made with the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. What is the request?

Mr. PEPPER. To arrange a time for taking a vote on the bond resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I would ask if it is not possible to agree to an hour for taking a vote on the resolution?

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Iowa has not been listening to the debate.

Mr. ALLISON. I am sorry I have not been able to do so, but I understand the debate has progressed very satisfactorily during the day and that the resolution has been discussed with great ability by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that out of extreme courtesy to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] I yielded for an hour and over, and he has been taking the time of the Senate. Therefore it is impossible now to fix an hour for a vote on the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely desired to express the wish that we might some time agree to take a vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Why not go on with the bond resolution this evening?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BACON. I will first ask what the request is?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To take up unobjected pension bills. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

TESTIMONY IN LAND CONTESTS.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4804) to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 and to repeal subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to report it favorably with an amendment. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to yield to me to put the bill upon its passage. It will not take two minutes. There is no objection to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection, if there will be no debate.

Mr. DUBOIS. There will be no debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subdivision 10 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Tenth. Registers and receivers are allowed, jointly, at a rate not exceeding 10 cents per hundred words for testimony reduced by them to writing for claimants in all cases, and in all cases where they can secure a competent person to reduce the testimony to writing for a sum less per folio than the sum herein prescribed it shall be their duty to do so."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

JERUSHA STURGIS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first bill on the Calendar under the order just made will be announced.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 122) granting a pension to Jerusha Sturgis, widow of Brig. Gen. Samuel D. Sturgis, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five"; and in line 8 to insert "in lieu of the pension she is now receiving"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jerusha Sturgis, widow of Brig. Gen. Samuel Davis Sturgis, and pay her a pension of $75 per month from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Jerusha Sturgis, widow of Brig. Gen. Samuel D. Sturgis."

SAMUEL E. LISCOM.

The bill (S. 2828) granting an increase of pension to Samuel E. Liscom was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Samuel E. Liscom, late of Company A, Fourteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PLUMY E. MARDEN.

The bill (S. 2829) granting a pension to Plumy E. Marden was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Plumy E. Marden, daughter of Benjamin Chote, late a soldier in Colonel Poor's regiment and afterwards in Capt. Edward Burbank's company in the war of the Revolution, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIMPSON EVERETT STILWELL.

The bill (S. 2787) granting a pension to Simpson Everett Stilwell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Simpson Everett Stilwell, late scout and guide in the United States Army, at $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY ANN TRACY.

The bill (H. R. 152) granting a pension to Mary Ann Tracy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary Ann Tracy, as daughter of David Tracy, late lieutenant in the Thirty-seventh Regiment United States Volunteers in the war of 1812, and to allow her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOPHRONIA S. STOWELL.

The bill (S. 2790) for the relief of Sophronia S. Stowell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Sophronia S. Stowell on the pension roll as the surviving widow of Maj. David P. Stowell, late of First Maine Cavalry, and to pay her a pension of $25 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LYDIA A. TAFT.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF WAY ON PUBLIC LANDS FOR ELECTRIC POWER.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he will allow me to call up a bill of some local importance. There is some necessity for its immediate passage. It is a House bill and will not take up any time. If there is any discussion over it I will withdraw it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3018) to amend the act approved March 3, 1891, granting the right of way upon the public lands for reservoir and canal purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the act entitled "An act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1895, by adding thereto the following:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use of right of way to the extent of 25 feet, together with the use of necessary ground, not exceeding 40 acres, upon the public lands and forest reservations of the United States, by any citizen or association of citizens of the United States, for the purposes of generating, manufacturing, or distributing electric power.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EUGENIA R. SWEENEY.

The bill (H. R. 3426) granting an increase of pension to Eugenia R. Sweeney, widow of Brig. Gen. Thomas W. Sweeney, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in lines 6 and 7, to strike out the name "Sweeney" where it occurs and insert "Sweeny"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eugenia R. Sweeny, widow of Thomas W. Sweeney, deceased, late a brigadier-general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Eugenia R. Sweeny, widow of Brig. Gen. Thomas F. Sweeney, deceased."

CHARLOTTE O. VAN CLEVE.

The bill (S. 1883) to grant a pension to Charlotte O. Van Cleve, widow of Gen. Horatio P. Van Cleve, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of Mrs. Charlotte O. Van Cleve, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Horatio P. Van Cleve, at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEPHEN MAINES.

The bill (S. 2542) granting a pension to Stephen Maines was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Barnes, late captain of Company I, One hundred and first Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in lieu of the pension of $8 per month she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET C. M'KAY.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment, as I am compelled to leave the Senate, to ask to take up a bill a little farther along on the Calendar? It is a case in which I take some interest; Senate bill 527.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 527) for the relief of Margaret C. McKay, widow of the late Dr. William C. McKay, of Oregon.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, to fill the blank before the word "dollars" by inserting the word "twenty"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, the name of Margaret C. McKay, widow of the late Dr. William C. McKay, of Oregon, at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES W. WHITNEY.

The bill (S. 2430) granting a pension to James W. Whitney was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of James W. Whitney, late private, Company D, First Ohio Light Artillery Volunteers, at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB P. FLETCHER.

The bill (S. 2428) granting an increase of pension to Jacob P. Fletcher was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the name "Fletcher," to strike out "late captain Company A, Nineteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $24 per month from the passage of this act, in lieu of that he is now receiving," and insert, "late a lieutenant, Company A, One hundred and ninety-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $17 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob P. Fletcher, late a lieutenant, Company A, One hundred and ninety-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $17 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE E. TUTTLE.

The bill (S. 2341) granting a pension to George E. Tuttle was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve" and insert "eight"; and after the word "months," in the same line, to strike out "from the passage of this act"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George E. Tuttle, late of Company G, Two hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMBROSE B. CARLTON.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask permission of the honorable Senator from New Hampshire to allow me to request the immediate consideration of Senate bill 2601, granting an increase of pension to Ambrose B. Carlton.

Mr. COCKRELL. We shall soon reach it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I believe it is a pension bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a pension bill, and we shall soon reach it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to its present consideration. It is just as well to consider it now.

Mr. COCKRELL. If we are going to have a rule we should observe it. There are many other Senators who are interested in bills. We can pass them all in a few moments, and I do not think it is right to make exceptions.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think so either.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the regular order proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next pension bill in order will be proceeded with.

ABRAHAM RHODES.

The bill (S. 2158) granting a pension to Abraham Rhodes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "sixteen"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abraham Rhodes, late private in Company I, Sixth Kentucky Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month from the passage of this act, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Abraham Rhodes."

GEORGE D. NOBLE.

The bill (S. 2441) granting a pension to George D. Noble was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, after the word "regiment," in line 7, to insert "Wisconsin"; and in the same line, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve" and insert "eight"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George D. Noble, late private Company E, Forty-sixth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $8 per month from the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATHAN MITCHELL.

The bill (S. 1857) granting a pension to Nathan Mitchell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Nathan Mitchell, a soldier in the Mexican war, at $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMA WEIR CASEY.

The bill (S. 2729) granting a pension to Emma Weir Casey was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws, the name of Emma Weir Casey, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Thomas Lincoln Casey, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, at the rate of $75 a month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH G. IVES.

The bill (H. R. 4887) granting a pension to Sarah G. Ives was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Sarah G. Ives, widow of Joseph C. Ives, late of Company A, Iowa Volunteer Infantry, in the war with Mexico, at $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HELEN A. JACKMAN.

The bill (H. R. 4968) granting a pension to Helen A. Jackman, dependent daughter of Lieut. William Jackman, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Helen A. Jackman, dependent daughter of Lieut. William Jackman, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteers, at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMBROSE B. CARLTON.

The bill (S. 2601) granting a pension to Ambrose B. Carlton was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seventy-two" and insert "fifty"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ambrose B. Carlton, of Terre Haute, Vigo County, Ind., late a private in the Mexican war, and that he be paid a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. TURPIE. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "sixty" in place of "fifty." I am authorized by the chairman of the committee to move that amendment. The pensioner is already drawing $50 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that amendment ought to be made. I am satisfied the committee intended to report the rate at $60, inasmuch as the soldier is now drawing $50.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "sixty."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE. The pensioner is described in the bill as a private, when he was a corporal, and he was also described as a corporal in a previous bill. I ask to have that corrected.

Mr. COCKRELL. That can be reached by simply striking out the word "private" and inserting "corporal."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, after the words "late a," it is proposed to amend by striking out "private" and inserting "corporal."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN CALIFORNIA AND OREGON.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 5819. It is a matter of great importance to California and Oregon and affects no other State.

Mr. CULLOM. Is it a pension bill?

Mr. WHITE. No. The Senators from both the States of Oregon and California are very much interested in the bill, and we should like to have an opportunity to get it passed this evening.

Mr. PALMER. We shall be able to get it directly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I hope the bill may be taken up and disposed of at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection if it leads to no debate.

Mr. WHITE. Oh, no. It is exactly the same as the law which is now applicable to Idaho and Montana, except that this is less expensive.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest that the bill has been once read, and the amendments may now be stated. They are printed with the bill.

Mr. HILL. What bill is that?

Mr. WHITE. A bill to provide for the examination and classification of certain lands in the State of California. It is the same as the law now in force in Idaho and Montana.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5819) to provide for the examination and classification of certain lands in the State of California.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 3, line 7, after the word "lands," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That where large bodies of land within the limits of said grants are commonly and generally known to be nonmineral the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall direct said commissioners to take evidence with relation thereto, and if it be found that such bodies of land are nonmineral they shall classify the same accordingly in a body without actual inspection by legal subdivision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 4, line 9, after the word "compensation," to strike out the words "their actual necessary expenses incurred while in the performance of their official duties, and in addition thereto the further sum of"; so as to read:

The oath of office of said commissioners shall be filed by them in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Said commissioners shall receive for their compensation $10 for each day they may be actually engaged in the performance of their duties; and their accounts shall be audited by the Secretary of the Interior and paid monthly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 4, after the word "act," in line 23, to insert "and shall fully complete said classification within the term of four years from date of this act"; so as to read:

And they shall, immediately upon their appointment, proceed to examine and classify the lands herein mentioned, within their respective land districts, as provided in this act, and shall fully complete said classification within the term of four years from date of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 10, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty"; so as to read:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended to carry into effect the provisions of this act, the same to be paid out upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I submit the amendment which I send to the desk and ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be read.

The SECRETARY. After section 7 of the bill add the following as additional sections:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, as speedily as practicable, to cause all unpatented lands within the Roseburg and Oregon City land districts in the State of Oregon within the land-grant and indemnity land-grant limits of what is known as the Oregon and California Railroad Company grant, being lands in the State of Oregon granted by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad in California to Portland, in Oregon," approved July 25, 1866, and acts supplemental thereto and amendatory thereof, to be examined and classified by commissioners to be appointed as hereinafter provided, with special reference to the mineral or nonmineral character of such lands, and to reject, cancel, and disallow any and all claims or filings heretofore made, or which may hereafter be made by or on behalf of the said railroad company, or on any unpatented lands in said State of Oregon which upon examination shall be classified, as provided in this act, as mineral lands: Provided, That where large bodies of land within the limits of said grants are commonly and generally known to be nonmineral, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall direct said commissioners to take evidence with relation thereto, and if it be found that such bodies of land are nonmineral, they shall classify the same accordingly in a body without actual inspection by legal subdivision.

SEC. 9. That for the purpose of making the examination herein provided for, three commissioners shall be appointed by the President of the United States as soon as practicable after the passage of this act; that at least one of the three commissioners shall be a practical miner and a resident of the said State of Oregon. Before entering upon their duties each of said commissioners shall take an oath to faithfully perform the duties of his office. The oath of office of said commissioners shall be filed by them in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Said commissioners shall receive for their compensation $10 for each day they may be actually engaged in the performance of their duties, and their accounts shall be audited by the Secretary of the Interior and paid monthly. Said commissioners shall make examination of the lands herein mentioned within their respective land districts, and may also take the testimony of witnesses as to the mineral or nonmineral character of any of said lands and receive any other evidence relating to said matter, and shall have power to summon witnesses to appear before them, and to administer oaths; and they shall, immediately upon their appointment, proceed to examine and classify the lands herein mentioned, within their respective land districts, as provided in this act, and shall fully complete said classification within the term of four years from the date of this act. All testimony taken by said commissioners shall be reduced to writing, subscribed by the witnesses, and filed with the report of the commissioners hereinafter required. The action or decision of a majority of any one of said boards of commissioners shall control in all matters herein provided for within the jurisdiction of such board.

"SEC. 10. That all said lands shall be classified as mineral which by reason of valuable mineral deposits are open to exploration, occupation, and purchase under the provisions of the United States mining laws, and the commissioners in making the classification hereinafter provided for shall take into consideration the mineral discovered or developed on or adjacent to such land, and the geological formation of all lands to be examined and classified, or the lands adjacent thereto, and the reasonable probabilities of such land containing valuable mineral deposits because of its said formation, location, or character. The classification herein provided for shall be by each legal subdivision where the lands have been surveyed. If the lands examined are not surveyed, classification shall be made by tracts of such extent and designated by such natural or artificial boundaries to identify them as the commissioners may determine. Where patents have issued for mining ground in any section of land this shall be taken as prima facie evidence that the 40-acre subdivision within which it is located is mineral land: Provided, That the word 'mineral,' where it occurs in this act, shall not be held to include iron or coal: And provided further, That the examination and classification of lands hereby authorized shall be made without reference or regard to any previous examination or report or classification thereof.

"SEC. 11. That such of the lands herein mentioned as have been surveyed prior to the passage of this act shall be first examined and classified as herein provided, and afterwards, and as speedily as practicable, the lands herein mentioned which have not been surveyed, until all the lands herein mentioned have been examined and classified as herein provided.

"SEC. 12. That said commissioners shall, on or before the 5th day of each month, file in the office of the register and receiver of the land office of the land district in which the land examined and classified is situated a full report, in duplicate, in such form as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, showing all lands examined by them during the preceding month, and specifying clearly by legal subdivisions, where the land is surveyed, or otherwise by natural objects or permanent monuments to identify the same, the lands classified by them as mineral lands and those classified as nonmineral; and with said report shall be filed all testimony taken and written communications received by said commissioners relating to the lands embraced in the report. The register and receiver shall file one duplicate of said report in their office, together with all accompanying testimony and papers, and the other duplicate shall be by them forwarded direct to the Secretary of the Interior, and said commissioners shall furnish to the Secretary of the Interior at any time such further or additional report or information as he may require concerning any matters relating to their duties or the performance of the same. Upon receipt of such report the register of the land office shall, at the expense of the United States, cause to be published in a newspaper of general circulation in each county in which the land so classified is located, at least once a week for four consecutive weeks, notice of the classification of lands as shown by said report; and any person, corporation, or company feeling aggrieved by such classification may, at any time within sixty days after the first publication of said notice, file with the register and receiver of the land office a verified protest against the acceptance of said classification, which protest shall set forth in concise language the grounds of objection to the classification as to the particular land in said protest described, whereupon a hearing shall be ordered by and conducted before the said register and receiver, under rules and regulations as nearly as practicable in conformity with the rules and practice of such land office in contests involving the mineral or nonmineral character of land in other cases, and an appeal from the decision of the register and receiver shall be allowed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and to the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That at such hearings the United States district attorney or his assistants for the judicial district in which the land is situated shall appear and defend the interests of the United States, and for such services he shall receive compensation not exceeding $10 per day for each day's actual services before the register and receiver, to be paid out of the fund provided for the examination and classification of said mineral lands.

"SEC. 13. That as to the lands against the classification whereof no protest shall have been filed as hereinbefore provided, the classification, when approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be considered final, except in case of fraud, and all plats and records of the local and general land offices shall be made to conform to such classification; and as to the lands against the classification whereof protests may be filed, the final ruling made after the day set for hearing shall determine the proper classification, and all records of the local and general land offices shall be made to conform to the classification as determined by such final ruling, and all costs of such hearings shall be paid by the unsuccessful party, under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to establish such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect the true intent and provisions of this act as speedily as practicable.

"SEC. 14. That no patent or other evidence of title shall be issued or delivered to said Oregon and California Railroad Company for any land in said State, or to any assignee company, until the examination and classification provided for in this act shall have been made, and such patent or other evidence of title shall only issue then to such land, if any, in said State as said company may be, by law and compliance therewith, and by the said classification, entitled to; and any patent, certificate, or record of selection, or other evidence of title or right to possession of any land in said State, issued, entered, or delivered to said railroad company in violation of the provisions of this act shall be void: Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be taken or construed as recognizing or confirming any grant of land or the right to any land in the said railroad company, or as waiving or in any wise affecting any right on the part of the United States against the said railroad company to claim a forfeiture of any land grant heretofore made to said company."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the examination and classification of certain lands in the States of California and Oregon."

Mr. DUBOIS. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DUBOIS, Mr. PETTIGREW, and Mr. PASCO were appointed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 6, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 5, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXPLANATION OF A VOTE.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the RECORD of last evening. I voted upon the resolution offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], the understanding being that my pair with Mr. HUTCHESON of Texas had been canceled by striking out my name and inserting Mr. BROMWELL's instead. I find that was a mistake, and consequently my vote was cast through a misapprehension.

CONSIDERATION OF PRIVATE PENSION BILLS, ETC.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The report and accompanying resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House resolution No. 238, having had the same under consideration, ask leave to report the following substitute therefor:

"Resolved, That on Wednesday, May 6, 1896, and Wednesday, May 13, 1896, immediately after the reading of the Journal on each day, the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of such bills as are in order on the sessions of Friday evenings; and that in the consideration of such bills under this resolution ten minutes' debate shall be allowed on each bill, with the amendments thereto, such time to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the bill: Provided, however, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed as interfering with general appropriation bills and conference reports thereon."

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire to occupy time?

Mr. CRISP. When the gentleman gets through I shall occupy the floor for a few moments.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will make a brief explanation first and then hear what my colleague on the committee has to say.

Mr. CRISP. Very well.

Mr. HENDERSON. This resolution, Mr. Speaker, is the same as the one which the House voted upon last night, with the single exception that we have added thereto an exception in behalf of appropriation bills, so that conference reports on appropriation bills may be taken up and considered at any time during the two days set apart by this resolution.

The effect of the rule is to allow Wednesday of this week and Wednesday of next week for the consideration of such bills, and such bills only, as are in order for consideration under the rule on Friday nights. And I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Calendar of May 4 shows that there are 387 private pension bills pending on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and from the Committee on Pensions, and that there are 18 bills which have already passed the Committee of the Whole and are still pending, undisposed of by the House—bills reported from the same committees—making a total of 405 private pension bills undisposed of. It is because of this condition of the Calendar and the great need for the consideration of these bills that this rule is presented for the consideration of the House.

For reasons which I will not now discuss, no great progress has been made at the Friday night sessions, and it has been thought wise to allow the House one day of this week and one day of next week to be devoted to the consideration of these bills exclusively.

Mr. HULL. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. I take it from your statement that the special rule is to be devoted only to private pensions. There are a large number of desertion cases upon the Calendar; and if you propose to limit it to pension cases alone it will be necessary to amend the resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. If they are in order on Friday night, they are included in this rule.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will say to my colleague that I did not count up the desertion cases, for I was not familiar with that class. But they are in order for consideration under this special rule because they are in order at the Friday night sessions.

Mr. HOPKINS. The point is, as I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], that the two days should be limited to pension cases only, and not desertion cases.

Mr. HENDERSON. That was not the intention of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, whose wishes we considered in regard to the matter.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those that oppose reasonable and equitable pension bills, but I want to say a word or two before the House adopts this order. Of course I know well the majority are going to adopt it, that nothing I might say would affect it, and yet I want to say a word to justify my own vote against this proposition.

In the first place, all men must admit that our general pension laws are very liberal. I suppose no man, no matter how anxious he may be to appear as a special friend and champion of the soldier, will deny that our general laws are very liberal in relation to the granting of pensions to soldiers of the late war. Of course there are exceptional cases that arise, cases which the general law does not cover, which it is proper should be considered by Congress on their merits. Now, the first criticism I make of the practice here is that the Committee on Pensions does not confine itself to the consideration of cases which equitably come within the spirit of existing law, and yet by its strict terms are not included; but the Committee on Invalid Pensions report in favor of distinct classes of pensioners who, under the general law, are not included. I have always thought, and I now maintain, that it never was intended that the Committee on Invalid Pensions should report pension bills in favor of distinct classes of people who, under the general law, are not entitled to pensions, but it was intended rather to be like a court of equity, which might afford relief in certain cases where the general law, by reason of its universality, was deficient—some cases where specific proof could not be made, or something of that sort; but the Committee on Invalid Pensions does not limit itself in that way.

Now, in spite of the liberal law to which I have referred, I am told that there are more than 3,000 applications for pensions which have been introduced during this Congress.

Mr. LOUD. They are still coming.

Mr. CRISP. Now, a great number have been reported. A great number have been considered under the rules of the House, to which I make no objection.

This proposition is to change the rules of the House and to provide for the consideration of these bills during two days of this month, and that no more than ten minutes' debate or consideration shall be given to any one bill.

Now, think of that for a moment. If the report is read, it must come out of the ten minutes' time. I venture to say there are cases in which the report can not be read in five minutes. We can not even understand the ground upon which the committee recommend the pension, and yet we are told that this is equitable and just.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the House felt bound to accept the verdict or judgment of any of its committees absolutely, then, of course, there would be no occasion for any debate; but if the House reserves to itself the right to consider a bill reported by a committee, then I submit, Mr. Speaker, that ten minutes is too little time in which to permit the House intelligently to pass upon an application for a pension. Now, why should this be done? Why should the rules be changed in this way? Surely this House wants to pass intelligently upon these cases, and surely no gentleman upon that side will insist that you can do that in ten minutes. I undertake to produce—at least I am informed that I can produce—reports from the Committee on Pensions that can not be read in five minutes, and that is all the time allowed in favor of the proposition. Therefore by this rule you deprive the House of hearing even a report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I submit, Mr. Speaker, no matter how anxious gentlemen may be to consider these bills, this is not the proper way in which to consider them.

Again, the House of Representatives for some days has been through with all the general appropriation bills. Why can not the House, under its rules, proceed from day to day to consider pension bills, if that is the purpose or the desire of its majority? If these bills are regarded as so important that the rules of the House must be changed, so important that they must be considered without the House even knowing the reason why the committee report them, let me ask why it is that you can not proceed from day to day to consider them under the rules? Five days last week you gave to the consideration of the bankruptcy bill. Five days or more you gave the week before to general debate on the pension bill, a mere opportunity to permit gentlemen to make speeches to send home for campaign purposes. Why now, if it is so important that these bills should be considered—and I agree that they ought to be considered—why not proceed to consider them in the same manner that you consider other business? Why not give a reasonable time in which to discuss them? Is it true that gentlemen have reported bills when they are afraid that the country shall see and hear the reasons they allege for their passage? Is it true that gentlemen on that side of the House desire to pass bills which they are ashamed to have discussed in the open hearing of the House? It seems to me, sir, that this is not only unusual, but that it is unjust, and can only be defended by those who believe that every man who served in the war on the Union side is entitled to a pension irrespective of existing law.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I shall oppose this resolution. I shall vote against it, and in doing so I shall feel that I am doing my duty as a Representative to vote against any rule which provides that I shall be forced to pass upon a question when you do not afford me sufficient opportunity even to hear the report read.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against this rule; and no man recognizes better than I the imaginary idea prevailing upon our side of the Chamber of the delicate ground upon which I tread; but I do not believe that even the claim of an old-soldier is so sacred that the people of this country desire to pass his case without due consideration. I have repeatedly heard it uttered here on Friday nights, "Why, the committee have investigated this case and we will follow the committee." I have heard it stated that there have been 400 cases reported. Permit me to say that there are no committees in this House that can carefully consider 400 cases in the length of time they have devoted to those cases.

I assume, Mr. Speaker, in cases where a great deal more care and thought is given to the consideration of matters by a whole committee than is given to these pension cases, this House in many instances has overturned the deliberations of the committee. In many instances, Mr. Speaker, the committee has carefully considered bills for weeks and weeks and yet the sober judgment of this House has overturned the conclusions of the committee. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is any bill so sacred that it should be denied the light of day. Now, then, if the cases that have passed this House could bear that close investigation that they ought there might be some excuse for passing this rule. But I have been brought to contemplate, when we look at the cases that have been passed here on Friday nights, whether there were any private soldiers left at the close of the late rebellion! Mr. Speaker, 50 per cent of the cases that have passed have been to place upon the pension rolls, at a high rate, widows of officers; 25 per cent of the cases that you have passed have been to remove the charge of desertion from what I believe to be bona fide deserters.

Now, then, let me to say to you, gentlemen, that I think you mistake the temper of the people of this country when you propose to pass through this House, or any legislative body, cases under the rule that you have presented here. I know what I say to-day will fall upon deaf ears; no one recognizes that better than I do. But there is no man on this floor, Mr. Speaker, who will not recognize that one of the principal arguments used for the passage of the act of 1890 was that it would do away with the vicious pension legislation that had confronted Congress for many and many a session.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] says 3,000 cases have already been presented, and I said in an undertone to the gentleman that they were still coming. Look at your RECORD from day to day and see if what I say is not a fact, and the party with which I am associated are, under the guise of this rule, to force through this House cases that have had, permit me to say, no consideration whatever. Cases of pensioners and private claims, Mr. Speaker, do not receive deliberate consideration in committee. I know whereof I speak. These cases are referred to one individual member of the committee, and as the result of his deliberation this House is called upon to act. Yesterday I believe I was the only Republican who voted against this resolution, and I shall do so to-day, perfectly satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that I am doing what is right and just and what the Republican party ought to do.

Mr. HULICK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOUD. If I have time.

Mr. HULICK. I would like to ask what your remedy is, and how would you dispose of these several thousand private bills? Should they remain for consideration on Friday nights and meet with the opposition we all know, or shall we pass this rule?

Mr. LOUD. Ninety-eight per cent of your cases have no merit whatever, and investigation will show it. If you will present meritorious cases to this House there will be an abundance of time to pass them.

Mr. CRISP. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. How much time has that side remaining?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. CRISP. I reserve that. Of course if the gentleman wants to close, I will give him an opportunity.

Mr. HENDERSON. What time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has sixteen minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, it is true, as the gentleman from Georgia says, that the pension laws, the general pension laws, are liberal; and no thanks to that side of the House for that fact. The Republican party alone, with a few assistants from the North, and one or two, as I remember it, from the South, have made them so. Under a friendly administration of the pension laws it has been found necessary in the past to pass special pension bills; and now, with a mailed hand protruding from every Executive Department of this Government, when the interests of the old soldier are brought forward it needs some special legislation to take care of the unfortunate ones who have difficulty in getting their proofs. [Applause on the Republican side.] Every man who has served a single term in this body knows that there are special difficulties surrounding the old soldier in getting his proofs. The Angel of Death is swift among the ranks of that class, carrying away witnesses, and it is difficult, after the lapse of thirty years, to procure the necessary evidence in these cases; and the Congress of the people has been called upon, is called upon, and will be called upon, to provide for such defects.

The gentleman from Georgia complains of the ten minutes. Mr. Speaker, if you had ten hours on a pension bill Democratic tongues would be found on that side charged with bitterness and gall to consume that time in order to defeat the passage of all such bills. [Applause on the Republican side.] The first time that I ever crossed swords with the gentleman from Georgia, when we were both commencing our term in Congress, was on account of his opposition to a private pension bill for the widow of a poor soldier. The gentleman soon saw that he was not in the proper field. His greater abilities called him to a higher plane, and he turned over to the petty little Gatling guns of his party this petty warfare on the honored and maimed veterans of the Union. [Applause on the Republican side.] I congratulate him on his promotion. I leave those who took his place to make up a conscience fund, from their own standpoint, to settle with their Maker. [Laughter; applause on the Republican side.] Ten minutes is ample. Why? There are no new principles involved in these cases. They are settled on rules and principles well known to this House and to the country; the reading of the report, which on an average consumes about two minutes, will state each case, and five minutes will be left for the ancient, oft-repeated, abusive attacks coming from the Democratic side.

One gentleman on that side says that the Republican party has a "soldiers' trust" that we depend upon. I concede to most of you gentlemen on the Democratic side that in that matter and in that alone you are conscientious antitrusters. [Laughter; applause on the Republican side.] These pension bills are considered carefully in subcommittee and they are again considered and voted upon in full committee. They come here based on simple principles, and this rule is brought in because it is absolutely needed; for on Friday nights the mass of you gentlemen on that side are found, as you were found yesterday when we asked for this order under a suspension of the rules, obstructing the way and trying to defeat this pension legislation.

The gentleman from Georgia said something about our doing this for campaign purposes. When I presented this report, Mr. Speaker, I used no partisan word; I presented the report as a business proposition, representing the committee of which the gentleman and I are both members; but when the leader of the Democratic party in this House hurls that venomous imputation against the members on this side, most of whom have served side by side with the poor fellows who are sending us their petitions for this legislation, I hurl it back in his teeth, and assert that under this dome men can act for their constituents conscientiously in behalf of the old soldiers of the Union as well as for filled-cheese insolvents and other classes of unfortunates. [Laughter; applause on the Republican side.] And when you talk about campaign purposes possibly the thought is in the minds of some of you who blossom here perennially on Friday nights and on every other occasion that you have campaigns at home in which you can make your boasts of having been obstructionists and strong assailants of the old Union soldier. Take that comfort home into your campaigns; but I assert that if the Democratic leaders on the floor of this House would lay aside this partisan abuse, if they would treat these old Union soldiers as their defenders as well as ours, we would reach reconciliation and that union of hearts for which I love to labor as a member of this House and for which I long without a reservation. You gentlemen are the ones—some of you, I will not say it of you all—you gentlemen, the big and the little of you in the main, are the ones who keep tearing open afresh the wounds of war and preparing your campaign material on lines which God and your own consciences both ought to disapprove.

[Loud applause on the Republican side.] We reserve the balance of our time on this side until we hear again from the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, just a word. My friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], pursuing his usual custom, with which those of us who have served long here are very familiar, proceeds to set up a man of straw and then to knock him down. And he does that in a loud tone of voice, and he does it as though he felt and wanted the whole country to feel that the interest of the old soldier depended at this moment upon the action of the gentleman from Iowa. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I said no word about this proposition being made for campaign purposes. I said that for five days you had debated a general pension bill which was for campaign purposes, and that if you thought as much of the gentlemen who are now asking pensions as you profess to think you might have used that time in considering private pension bills rather than making speeches on the general subject of pensions to send home for campaign purposes. That is what I said.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is worse than I thought it was. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRISP. I made no criticism like that which my friend from Iowa has attributed to me. I defy you, Mr. Speaker, or any man in this House to make an argument against any proposition that is presented by the gentleman from Iowa without his working himself into a great passion and claiming that he stands here preeminently in the interest of the people and that those who oppose him are the enemies of the public weal.

That is an old cry. It does not mean anything. The gentleman himself does not mean anything. It is simply a habit he has fallen into. [Laughter.] Of course, if it affords him any pleasure it does us no harm.

Mr. Speaker, I think I will leave the matter there.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, this is the statesmanlike reply we have heard from the gentleman from Georgia! He attacks my voice. I do not brag of my voice. I came honestly by it driving breaking teams. [Laughter.] It is the best voice I have.

I opened this debate without bringing in any politics. The gentleman from Georgia seems incapable of discussing such questions on a high plane. Even now, as I understand him, he claims that in the passage of the bankruptcy bill we were using it for partisan purposes. He seems to treat me as though I thought—indeed he charges it—that the interests of the old soldier rest on my shoulders. Did I make any reference to myself, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia? I devoted most of my time to complimenting that side of the House on its devotion to the determination to fight the Union soldier. I said nothing of myself. No man ever heard me, on the stump or elsewhere, allude to the part that I played during the war—a very simple part. God knows there is work enough here for us all in holding you fellows in check, with your rapiers for the old soldier, without speaking of ourselves. I know that I have the habit, as the gentleman says, of voting in the interest of the old soldiers. I can not retort that charge upon the gentleman from Georgia. It is a habit that he never has acquired. His associations are such that it would be very difficult for him to acquire it; and I presume he never will. If that is a bad habit, I have it. I wish my other bad habits were no more hurtful than that. I will waste no more time on the gentleman from Georgia. He has sunk into a petty personal response which really answered itself. [Applause.]

I yield now to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the proposition embodied in this rule is to give one whole day this week and one whole day next week to the consideration of legislation of a particular kind. I think this rule can be justified as a plain business proposition. The reasons for it are, first, the character of the legislation; and second, the impossibility, under the rules of the House, of having this business considered in any other way. There are, as my colleague has said, some three or four hundred bills of this character on the Private Calendar. These bills are of a pressing nature. The very fact that they have been before this committee and are reported here for action testifies to the necessity for their immediate consideration.

Now, the gentleman from Georgia says, why not consider them from day to day under the rules of the House? The answer is a simple one—that these bills can only be considered in one of two ways, either by unanimous consent, which experience shows it is absolutely impossible to have, or under an order of business reported from the Committee on Rules. There are only these two methods of securing the consideration of this class of business outside of the ordinary Friday evening sessions. Now, why is it that Friday evening sessions do not answer the purpose of a fair consideration of these measures? No gentleman who comes here on Friday evening, or, failing to come, reads the RECORD, is ignorant of the fact that week after week, night after night, gentlemen get up on the floor of this House and consume the time of the Committee of the Whole by long debate—possibly not, as my friend from Georgia suggested, for campaign purposes, but, for whatever purpose, with the result that these bills go unconsidered, unpassed upon, and remain on the Calendar, blocking the business of the House.

There are, then, I suggest, two reasons why this rule should pass, from a purely business point of view—first, the character and number of the bills; second, the impossibility of their consideration in any other way than under such a rule as this. Now, what are the objections urged against the passage of this rule?

My friend from Georgia says that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has increased the classes of pensioners. I deny it. I deny that any bill has been passed or, so far as I have been able to ascertain, is now on the Calendar which deals with any other than persons equitably entitled to pensions under existing law. And I deny that the committee has abused its power or discretion in the number of bills that it has reported. According to the gentleman from Georgia, there have been referred to that committee at least 3,000 bills; yet it has reported only about 10 per cent of them; so that the reasons alleged against the passage of this rule fall to the ground for lack of truth. Without entering, therefore, into partisan discussion or any consideration as to whether pensions ought to be granted or ought to be refused, I submit that these bills are entitled to the consideration of the House, and that they can receive such consideration in no other way than by the adoption of this rule.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Is it not a fact that most of these bills are bills that were on the Calendar of the last two Congresses—bills which have accumulated during those previous Congresses and can not now be considered—

Mr. DALZELL. A great many of them are in that situation.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. A majority of them.

Mr. DALZELL. And if previous Houses had acted as we propose now to act our Calendar would not be loaded with these bills. Whether they are worthy or unworthy bills, whether the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] is right or wrong in the exaggerated statement he makes that 98 per cent of them are unworthy bills, they can in any event be trusted to the judgment, the discretion, the good sense of a Republican House of Representatives.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania one question. How many cases of private pensions have been defeated in this Congress?

Mr. DALZELL. I can not answer the gentleman from California. I have not the figures. I understand the gentleman from California, however, has done his best to defeat a good many of them. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LOUD. Well, the gentleman is making a statement of which he knows nothing personally. Permit me to say it is only hearsay testimony.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. I demand a division.

Before the count by division was announced,

Mr. HENDERSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 56, not voting 126; as follows:

So the resolution was adopted.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. RANEY with Mr. COWEN.

Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. McMILLIN.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota with Mr. LAWSON.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa with Mr. RICHARDSON.

Mr. PRINCE with Mr. BAILEY.

Mr. GROUT with Mr. NEILL.

Mr. DRAPER with Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. WANGER with Mr. SWANSON.

Mr. HARDY with Mr. HART.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana with Mr. BLACK of Georgia.

Mr. HEMENWAY with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. HUFF with Mr. MINER of New York.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana with Mr. SPARKMAN.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan with Mr. BERRY.

Mr. MOZLEY with Mr. MOSES.

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. DOCKERY.

For this day:

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska with Mr. HUTCHESON.

Mr. BEACH with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. CODDING with Mr. MAGUIRE.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. CLARKE of Alabama.

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. WASHINGTON.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE with Mr. WALSH.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. WILBER with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut with Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky.

Mr. TRELOAR with Mr. MEYER.

Mr. WHITE with Mr. KENDALL.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER with Mr. PRICE.

Mr. KULP with Mr. SHAW.

Mr. HERMANN with Mr. LATIMER.

Mr. GOODWYN with Mr. LIVINGSTON.

On this question:

Mr. CLARK of Iowa with Mr. TYLER.

Mr. AITKEN with Mr. CROWLEY.

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have my name recorded if I can have it done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BENNETT in the chair). Was the gentleman in the Hall at the time and failed to hear his name?

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. I was present, though not on the floor. I was in the gallery for a moment when my name was called. I would like to vote in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the Chair can not entertain the gentleman's request.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I desire to withdraw my vote, being paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. LAWSON.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. RICHARDSON, and not knowing how he would vote on this question, I desire to withhold my vote. I should vote in the affirmative if he were present.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I have been paired with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BAILEY, for some time. I do not know whether he is aware of the fact that I have returned or not. I voted in the affirmative on this question, but under the circumstances, as he is not present, will withdraw my vote.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent when the roll was called. If I had been present, I should have voted in the affirmative. I expected to have returned in time to cast my vote for the resolution.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

REGULATION OF MARRIAGES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1904), an act to regulate marriages in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

GEO. M. CURTIS,
B. B. ODELL,
S. W. COBB,
Managers on the part of the House.
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
JAS. McMILLAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is there a statement accompanying the report?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. No; it is unnecessary. The Senate recedes from its disagreement.

The SPEAKER. Has this been acted upon by the Senate?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. It has been.

I will say for the information of the House that the conference report recommends that the Senate recede from the disagreement to the amendment of the House; or it was agreed in conference that that would be the report of the Senate conferees. This report simply sets forth the fact.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the Senate, as I understand it, has receded from its action and has concurred in the House amendments, it is not necessary to take any further action here.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I think none is necessary except that I am simply submitting a report under instructions from the conference committee to show what was done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it needs no action.

Mr. DINGLEY. The two Houses are brought together?

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. The two Houses are brought precisely together.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the report will be considered as accepted.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have a conference report.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Kleberg, sworn in.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the resolution which I hold in my hand may be considered. It will take only a moment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The matter presented by the gentleman is no more a privileged matter than the one I am calling up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] calls for the regular order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have a conference report.

Mr. DANIELS. I ask leave, before the regular order is taken up, that this gentleman be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been called.

Mr. CANNON. I suppose the swearing in of a member is a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. But this is a case which requires unanimous consent of the House to have the member sworn in. It can not be done except by unanimous consent in this case.

Mr. HOOKER. I understood the gentleman from Maine that he would give way to permit me to offer a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania was on the floor and that the matter which he desired to present was the regular order; that it was a conference report, and hence I gave way.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I ask to dispense with the reading of the report, and I will make a brief statement, which will, I think, dispose of the matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the conference report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I will state for the information of the House that the conference report now to be acted upon was duly considered and agreed to by the House on the 25th of April last, in all of its details save two paragraphs. The Senate non-concurred in the action of the House, for the reason that after the report had been made to the respective bodies it was discovered with reference to the judicial district of the State of South Carolina that the committee had reached a conclusion not warranted by the law, in so far as they had failed to use the words of the existing statute with reference to the disposition of the marshal as well as the district attorney for the district of South Carolina. It was simply the using of the word "division" where the word "district" should be used, so that the amendment would read:

For the eastern and western districts of the district—

We used the word "division"— of the district of South Carolina, $4,500, $2,500 of which shall be for the performance of the duties of the district attorney for the western district.

It was simply a change in that one word, and the framing of the sentence so as to be consistent with the statute. That also runs with reference to the marshal.

The other paragraph of change is in reference to amendment 99, for 10 examiners, to constitute a board of examiners of surveys, at $2,000 each, the appointment to be certified to the Civil Service Commission, $20,000. That was a Senate amendment. The Senate recedes from the amendment in this agreement, for the reason that after examination it is found to be a subject covering so much ground that it was deemed wise to postpone it for future examination and legislative action. If there are no inquiries, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, have you agreed entirely on all matters of difference?

Mr. BINGHAM. No; this is simply a modification of a report which was presented to the House on April 25.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is simply for the correction of phraseology stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move a further insistence on the disagreement of the House to the remaining amendments of the Senate, and that the House ask for a further conference.

The motion of Mr. BINGHAM was agreed to.

HENRY T. BAKER.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood that when the House adjourned with a question pending—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman call it up?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not desire to interfere with any matter that will take but a short time.

Mr. HOOKER. This will only take a few moments.

Mr. BOUTELLE. There are other gentlemen here who desire unanimous consent. I should like to have some idea about how much time is likely to be taken up? I do not want to interfere with any matter that can be disposed of briefly.

Mr. HOOKER. This is very brief indeed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish simply to state that I shall not deem it proper to assent to requests for unanimous consent for any great length of time, because this important matter must be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HOOKER] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution for the relief of Ex-Naval Cadet Henry T. Baker.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to reappoint Henry T. Baker as a naval cadet to fill the vacancy in the engineers' division of his class caused by his resignation of March 7, 1896, with the same standing, rights, and privileges in all respects as if such resignation had not been tendered: Provided, That he shall not receive pay while out of the service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BAILEY. I reserve the right to object until I can hear an explanation.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, six years ago this young man was appointed a cadet upon his application to the President, being one of the ten appointees given by the Secretary of the Navy. He served, and was at the Academy for four years, took his examinations, passed a creditable examination, and then took his two years at sea. He returned about the 1st of March this year. Some would-be friends of his advised him to resign, wanting him to go into the employ of a shipbuilding concern; and, acting upon their advice, he resigned, which was done on the 6th or 7th day of March of this year, and the resignation was accepted by the Secretary of the Navy. The young man came from my district. He came to me on Friday of last week and stated the circumstances. I went with him to the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary stated to us that, inasmuch as the resignation had been accepted, he had no power to give him any relief, and that the only relief he could get would be through a resolution of Congress, and the resolution was prepared by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BAILEY. That is all the more reason why I would object to it—

Mr. HOOKER. But, the gentleman will bear with me, the making of this appointment does not interfere with any other. This young man is nearly through his course, and all that he has to do is simply to take his examination, which will occur next week. It does not interfere with any other appointment throughout the country, because the vacancy has already been created, which will be filled by an appointment next fall, and I hope the gentleman will not object. This young man has passed a very creditable examination.

Mr. DINGLEY. And has completed his studies?

Mr. HOOKER. He has completed his studies.

Mr. BAILEY. This is simply a case where a young man resigns one place to accept a better one, and failing to get the better one, he wants to take the other one back.

Mr. HOOKER. That is true in some respects, but he is so young that I hope the gentleman will not insist on objecting.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall not object to the consideration, but shall vote against the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House now that Mr. Rudolph Kleberg, successor of Mr. Crain, may be sworn in as a member of this House. I send up a certificate of the State officers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that Mr. Kleberg, a member-elect from Texas, be sworn in, and sends up the following communication to be read: The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, STATE OF TEXAS,
Austin, April 27, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Some days ago we sent you a telegram in reference to the special election held in the Eleventh district of this State on the 7th instant to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. William H. Crain; but, being requested to do so, this written statement is forwarded. Although the election returns, now in the office of the secretary of state, can not be opened and counted until forty days after said election, including the said day, we can state upon general and reliable unofficial information that Rudolph Kleberg, of Dewitt County, Tex., has received a plurality of votes over his two competitors and all other candidates or persons voted for in said election, and beyond doubt is elected to fill the unexpired term, and there is no contest and no probability of such.

Very respectfully,

C. A. CULBERSON,
Governor of Texas.
ALLISON MAYFIELD,
Secretary of State.
M. M. CRANE,
Attorney-General.

Hon. THOMAS B. REED,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. DINGLEY. Do those parties who sign the communication constitute the canvassing board of Texas?

Mr. DANIELS. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. There can be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. Kleberg then appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath prescribed by law.

VESSELS PROPELLED BY GAS, NAPHTHA, OR ELECTRIC MOTORS.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1646) providing for certain requirements for vessels propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, or electric motors.

The bill was read.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether the words "all vessels so propelled" would not force naphtha launches of any size to employ an engineer?

Mr. BENNETT. I believe it does not, as I understand it to mean vessels of over 15 tons burden that are used for hire shall comply with the rules and regulations of the Treasury Department, and that all vessels of whatever tonnage should obey the rules of the road.

Mr. DINGLEY. This applies only to boats propelled by the naphtha power when engaged in carrying freight and passengers, and not pleasure?

Mr. BENNETT. No; not pleasure boats. Vessels of over 15 tons burden that are used for hire shall comply with the rules and regulations of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BINGHAM. Of what kind?

Mr. DINGLEY. It does not apply to pleasure boats?

Mr. BENNETT. It means for carrying passengers, as a ferry-boat.

Mr. BOUTELLE. This bill ought to be amended. I have had several letters from parties owning these small launches on ponds and lakes, who complain that this will subject them to a great deal of inconvenience.

Mr. BENNETT. This bill will be misunderstood by members conflicting it with the bill H. R. 4442, a bill that was presented by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that may affect a great many people and put a great many to inconvenience.

Mr. BENNETT. I can assure the gentleman that this bill as amended has passed the Senate, and is one that is generally acceptable. The bill has already been passed upon by the Senate, and was amended in the Senate to comply with the request made by Senator FRYE.

Mr. LOUD. I would ask the gentleman if this provides restrictions for those vessels that do not now comply with the regulations that are prescribed for vessels propelled by steam?

Mr. BENNETT. It allows them considerably more latitude.

Mr. LOUD. Then I would like to know why it should not pass.

Mr. BENNETT. I see no reason why it should not pass.

Mr. PERKINS. Has this bill been reported by a committee of the House?

Mr. BENNETT. It has been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. I understand the gentleman to say that this bill applies only to boats of over 15 tons?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes; and to those only when they are used for hire.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to obstruct the gentleman's bill or to injure its position in any way, but I would like to have it go over until to-morrow, so that I can examine it. I have received thirty or forty letters in relation to this character of legislation.

Mr. BENNETT. I can assure the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the bill (Senate bill No. 1646) which has received the unanimous report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is the bill that was revised and amended according to the suggestions that were made to the Senate Committee on Commerce, of which Senator FRYE is chairman.

Mr. BINGHAM. Do I understand the gentleman to say that pleasure craft are protected under the bill?

Mr. BENNETT. They are.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then I do not object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. SIMPKINS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2221) for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands, asked for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CARTER, Mr. DUBOIS, and Mr. BERRY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1889) granting an honorable discharge to F. L. Taylor from December 2, 1864;

A bill (H. R. 2735) for the relief of Enoch Davis;

A bill (H. R. 4456) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the cemetery association in the city of St. Paul, Minn., to be used at or near the foot of the soldiers' monument in said cemetery; and

A bill (H. R. 6505) to revive and reenact an act to authorize the construction of a free bridge across Arkansas River, connecting Little Rock and Argenta.

PETER RAFFERTY.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6293) to increase the pension of Peter Rafferty.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to properly place the name of Peter Rafferty, late private in Company B, Sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, on the pension roll and to pay him $45 per month, the same to be paid in lieu of the pension now paid him of $24 per month, upon certificate No. 12469.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force on and after its passage.

The Committee on Pensions recommended amendments as follows:

Line 4, strike out the word "properly."
Line 7, strike out "the same to be paid."
Lines 8, 9, and 10, strike out "of $24 per month, upon certificate No. 12469."
Strike out section 2.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SULZER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee, and Mr. DOCKERY.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. The regular order is the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I find by the RECORD that an arrangement was made yesterday afternoon that the pending proposition in regard to the naval appropriation bill should come up this morning, at which time the Chair would decide who was entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the original motion made in the matter now before the House was the motion of the gentleman from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, which was that the House should nonconcur in the Senate amendment. If a vote were to be taken upon that proposition and it were decided in the negative, the Chair would announce that the House had concurred with the Senate. Consequently, the motion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] is simply a preferential method of putting the question, favored because it is supposed to look toward an agreement between the two Houses. The Chair thinks that that rule, which is a rule of ordinary parliamentary law, has little if anything to do with the question as to who has control of the matter, and the custom of the House is so invariable, as well as so entirely suitable, so well founded in good sense, that the committee in charge of the bill shall continue in charge of it until an adverse vote on the part of the House, that the Chair can not see that the making of this preferential motion makes any change in that aspect of the case. The Chair therefore thinks that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] in charge of the bill has charge of it until there shall be some adverse vote on the part of the House. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand that the pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], to concur with the Senate, as an amendment to my motion to nonconcur.

The SPEAKER. Not as an amendment, but as a preferential motion, a motion that is entitled to precedence.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will ask the gentleman from Texas how much time he desires to occupy in favor of his motion.

Mr. SAYERS. There are two or three gentlemen who would like to speak briefly on the motion, and if we can have an agreement for forty minutes' debate on each side I think that will be satisfactory.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think, Mr. Speaker, that if the matter is to be debated at all, one hour on a side is as little as we ought to have.

Mr. SAYERS. All right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine proposes that the debate on the pending motion be limited to one hour on each side, and asks unanimous consent to that effect.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, an hour on a side may not be enough, and it may be too much. I should be content with an agreement for an hour on a side with the understanding—of course not a binding agreement, but an implied understanding—that when that time has expired if the House should desire further discussion it can be had.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not see any particular object in making such an agreement at this time.

Mr. CANNON. I do not desire to make an agreement, but I should like to have an understanding to that effect. I think it very likely that an hour on each side will prove to be sufficient. If the gentleman will let the debate run for an hour on a side, and then test the disposition of the House—

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suggest that the vote be taken on ordering the previous question at the expiration of the two hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine proposes that at the end of two hours, one-half of which shall be controlled by each side, the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Not that it shall be considered as ordered, but I give notice that I will move the previous question at the expiration of two hours, so that then the House can act as it sees fit about closing the debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that there be two hours' debate, one-half on either side, and gives notice that at the end of the two hours he will move the previous question. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suppose the gentleman from Texas would like to be heard on his proposition.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, when I shall have consumed twenty minutes the Chair will please let me know.

Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House I believe the facts which I, in connection with others, will be able to submit will induce a majority of the members present to support the motion to concur. This is purely a business and by no means a political question, and if a political discussion should be developed it will be because gentlemen who may engage in it will not content themselves with discussing the question directly involved in the motion, but prefer to divert the minds of members from the real matter in issue for the purpose probably of having the motion to concur voted down.

This is not the time, Mr. Speaker, for either side to engage in a discussion as to the appropriations of the present Congress as compared with the appropriations of preceding Congresses. My effort shall be directed entirely to calling the attention of the House to the prospective condition of the Treasury and also to the appropriations already passed by the House and to the demands that will rest upon the Treasury because of the contract obligations that have been placed upon some of the bills.

I wish it to be distinctly understood that I am not criticising the great body of the specific appropriations that have been made at the present session. The appropriation bills themselves, independent of the contracts which some of them carry, are, in my judgment, fair and reasonable, and can not be considered as at all extravagant. I allude especially to the bills which have been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, and only speak from a general knowledge of the bills which have been reported from other committees.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his report to the present session of this Congress estimates the revenues for the next fiscal year as amounting to $464,793,120.75. This sum is the total of the estimated revenues which will accrue to the Treasury during the fiscal year beginning the 1st day of July next.

Mr. DINGLEY. That includes the postal revenue.

Mr. SAYERS. It does. Starting with the fact that $464,793,120.75 will constitute our total revenues for the coming fiscal year, we find that the appropriations which have already passed the House amount to $386,035,350.88—not including the estimated sum of $3,000,000 appropriated in an indefinite form on the river and harbor bill to purchase the Monongahela works. If we add to this sum the permanent annual appropriations for 1897, $119,054,160, the different classes of appropriations, annual and permanent, will amount to $505,079,410.88 as against $464,793,120.75 which will come into the Treasury as revenue during the next fiscal year.

It is fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that of these permanent appropriations, amounting to $119,054,160, $50,000,000 is estimated as a sinking fund. It has been the custom for years, I believe, beginning with the Administration of Mr. Harrison, not to set aside the sinking fund, upon the theory that in previous years so many bonds had been purchased and retired that the sum total of those bonds so purchased and retired would be for years largely in excess of the sinking fund required to be set apart under the law; and for the further reason that the revenues were declining and that there was not a sufficiency in the Treasury to meet the current expenditures of the Government and at the same time to provide for the sinking fund. If we exclude the sinking fund—$50,000,000—we then have $455,079,410.88 as probable current expenditures, which is but $9,713,709.87 less than will be the probable current revenues if the appropriations shall be limited to the bills as they have passed the House and not increased at all—and that, too, entirely without reference to the contracts.

Now, let gentlemen bear in mind that, taking the appropriations, excluding contracts, that have passed the House, and including permanent appropriations, without the sinking fund, there will be a working balance of only $9,713,709.87, comparing current appropriations with current revenues. Nor have I included certain and large deficiencies which must certainly be appropriated for at the next session of this Congress.

Mr. DINGLEY. And that on the assumption that the revenue will prove to be as large as estimated?

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. Speaker, let us see what has been done in the way of appropriations at the present session. A fortification bill has been passed. I think that it was a fair bill. I am not here to criticize it. I gave it my support, both in the committee and in the House. But I wish to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that in that bill as it passed the House is contained authority to make contracts amounting to $5,542,276, which amount was over and above the appropriation actually made. The river and harbor bill as it passed the House carries an actual appropriation of $10,453,860, besides an indefinite appropriation to purchase the Monongahela works, estimated at not less than $3,000,000, and in addition it carries contracts amounting to $51,741,210.91.

The naval bill, that now under consideration, appropriates as it passed the House $31,647,239.95, and in addition to that amount of actual appropriation contracts are authorized, including the specified limit of cost of ships and three-fifths thereof for armament, amounting to $26,680,000. So that, Mr. Speaker, we have, in addition to the specific appropriations actually made by the House, $386,025,250.88, the further sum of $86,963,486.91 in the form of authorized contracts and an indefinite appropriation, all on three bills—the fortification, naval, and river and harbor bills.

I have given only the figures as taken from the bills when they passed the House. Of course they may be increased or diminished before their final enactment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask gentlemen, Republicans and Democrats and Populists alike, is it wise for us to authorize these immense contracts to burden the revenues of the Government not only for the next year, but for one, two, and three years to come? That is the proposition now before us. It is a proposition that has no politics in it whatever. It should be a purely business matter for this House to take hold of and to solve—whether or not it will impose on the Treasury more than $86,000,000 in addition to the ordinary annual and specific appropriations, and to the permanent appropriations, and to the contracts already subsisting and authorized by previous Congresses.

It must be borne in mind that public buildings have been heretofore authorized and are still uncompleted, and that there are river and harbor contracts yet to be finished. These must also be provided for.

But as to the pending bill. It carries an appropriation amounting to $12,779,133 for the increase of the Navy. That is every dollar it provides for that purpose. The Secretary of the Navy informs us that of that amount $9,522,833 will be required for the ships heretofore authorized and now in progress of construction. But that is not all. He also says that in addition to this amount the further sum of $8,571,796 will be required for the ships already authorized before they can be put in commission. Therefore, the $12,779,000 which the bill carries falls short of completing the ships already authorized in the sum of $5,315,496. So there is carried on this bill for the construction of ships authorized by the bill not a dollar of specific appropriation, though the appropriation is in such a form that it may be used for the ships so authorized.

But what is the present condition of the Navy? Since 1884 we have constructed and put into commission 41 vessels of all classes; and in addition to that 24 vessels are now in progress of construction, and 1 vessel has not yet been begun. So the number of vessels that have been authorized amounts to 66, and the total appropriations heretofore made for this purpose have been more than $102,000,000.

Mr. HALL. How far does that go back?

Mr. SAYERS. To 1884. The number of vessels that I have mentioned includes only what is denominated the new Navy.

Mr. HALL. Does it include all other classes of vessels, or only the battle ships?

Mr. SAYERS. It includes all kinds of vessels, battle ships, cruisers, torpedo boats, gunboats, and so on.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And tugboats?

Mr. SAYERS. It includes everything.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that it includes tugboats?

Mr. SAYERS. No; the gentleman did not understand me to say that.

Mr. CUMMINGS. If my friend will allow me, he will find that they are included in the schedule as belonging to the naval branch of the Government.

Mr. SAYERS. Upon examination of the list I have I find that I was mistaken and that the list includes five tugs.

In addition to the new ships Congress has authorized an increase, from 8,250 men and apprentices in the Navy, to 10,000 men and apprentices, and the pending bill authorizes the further increase of 1,000 men, bringing the strength of the Navy up to 11,000. The Marine Corps has been already increased from 1,500 to 1,600 men; and the bill as passed by both Houses authorizes the further increase to 2,026 men for the Marine Corps and 74 additional petty officers and musicians.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is correct. But I wish the gentleman had stated it the other way, as his mode of putting it might create a wrong impression upon the minds of the House. He says that the number has been increased to 2,026, which might convey a wrong impression. The total increase has only been 500.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, if the statement be correct, I do not see why it should not be stated as I have done.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly not; except the impression might be created in the mind of some one that we have increased it 2,000, whereas the increase is only 500.

Mr. SAYERS. This increase, Mr. Speaker, of 3,250 men of the personnel of the Navy and the Marine Corps means a fixed annual charge of about $3,000,000 a year for their pay and maintenance.

But, sir, battle ships are expensive institutions. The cost of running one during a single year is very heavy. For maintaining and running the New York, for instance, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1895, $438,101.41 was expended. The cost of maintaining and running the Columbia during the same year was $313,421.35; and of the Philadelphia $289,747.73; so that gentlemen of the House may understand that the expenditure required for the construction of the vessels is not all the cost involved, enormous as it is, but that a vast sum is required to keep them in constant use.

With this statement, Mr. Speaker, I submit the question to this House whether or not it would be better to accept the Senate amendment, which provides for the construction of two vessels instead of four, and by vessels I mean two battle ships, involving as they do such enormous expenditure of money?

Let us for a moment consider their cost. The Indiana has just been completed. Her total cost, she being a vessel of 10,288 tons, from the commencement of her construction until she was commissioned for service, was $6,172,786.15. So that these four vessels that the House authorized in this bill, if no better contracts should be made than for the construction of the Indiana, will cost over $24,000,000.

Mr. COX. That, I understand, is the complete ship; the total cost of the vessel.

Mr. SAYERS. That is the complete vessel, and her entire cost, from the time her construction began until she was put into commission, $6,172,786.15. This sum of $24,000,000 and over the Treasury must provide for for four battle ships alone. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that it will take some three years to build these ships; but that will make $8,000,000 a year for four ships; and when it be taken into consideration the fact that there are public buildings all over this country which have been authorized, and which are now in progress of construction, that are to be completed also; that there are works on rivers and harbors which are in progress of construction, and for which contracts have already been made, which must be provided for; that there are ships already authorized by Congress, and they, too, are in progress of construction, which must be provided for in addition to the $12,779,000 appropriated in this bill, it becomes a very serious question as to how the Treasury Department can meet these large demands.

Can Congress go to its relief, beginning with the first day of the next fiscal year? Suppose that a law should be enacted to increase the revenues at the next session of this Congress. Such a law certainly could not operate in time to bring revenue sufficient to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government and at the same time meet these onerous contracts and burdens which are imposed upon the Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, I appeal to gentlemen to lay aside all questions and feelings of a political character, taking hold of the pending question as a purely business proposition, and ask themselves as to whether or not, under the circumstances, 4 battle ships and 15 gunboats should be authorized at the present session.

Mr. COX. How many vessels are now under construction which are not completed?

Mr. SAYERS. There are 24 in progress of construction that have not been completed, and one vessel not begun.

Mr. HALL. Do you mean that there are 24 battle ships?

Mr. SAYERS. Not at all. The gentleman asked me how many vessels. There are 24 vessels.

Mr. COX. My question was how many vessels, and I understand there are 24 now under construction, and that one is not commenced.

Mr. SAYERS. One has not been commenced.

Mr. HALL. That includes torpedo boats, does it not?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly; it includes such boats.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand if the House agrees to your motion to concur it will reduce the liabilities of this bill a little more than $12,000,000?

Mr. SAYERS. A little more than $12,000,000. There are 5 battleships, the Kearsarge, the Kentucky, the Iowa, Massachusetts, and the Oregon; 1 monitor, the Puritan; 4 cruisers, the Brooklyn, the Helena, the Wilmington, and the Nashville; 6 gunboats and 7 torpedo boats, now in progress of construction. The Secretary of the Navy says that it will require every cent of the $12,779,133 carried in this bill and $5,315,496 more before these vessels which I have named can be completed and put in commission.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will state to the gentleman that he is not quite accurate there.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, I shall be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Secretary of the Navy does not state that.

Mr. SAYERS. I will read what the Secretary of the Navy says.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Secretary of the Navy distinctly says that the $12,779,000 did not apply to these vessels that are now under construction, but only a portion of that sum, some $9,000,000 of the amount carried by the House bill, is applied to the completion of the vessels now under construction or authorized, and $3,256,000—I think that is the amount of the sum carried in the bill as it passed the House—will be applied to the construction of the vessels as authorized in the House bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Let us see what the Secretary of the Navy says. I will read the letter.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have his letter here.

Mr. SAYERS. I suppose the gentleman was furnished with a copy of the letter which I hold in my hand.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, I know the fact. I did not need the copy. I knew it before the gentleman called for the information.

Mr. SAYERS. I will read it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am supposed to have paid some attention to the details of these matters.

Mr. SAYERS (reading)—

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 5, 1896.

SIR: In reply to your telegram, which reads as follows: "How much is required to be appropriated to complete, including armament, vessels for the Navy authorized prior to this Congress? Would amount in pending naval bill ($12,779,000) as passed by House for 'increase of the Navy' complete and arm said vessels? If not, approximately how much additional to said sum will be required?"

This is the answer of the Secretary of the Navy:

I have the honor to state that the total amount of $12,779,133, appropriated in the naval appropriation bill as it passed the House, under the head of "Increase of the Navy," is not to be charged against the ships already authorized by Congresses prior to this one.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is exactly as I stated.

Mr. SAYERS. I have no doubt that the Secretary of the Navy and the gentleman from Maine are in complete sympathy in the effort to get these four ships.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have not exchanged a word with him on the subject—

Mr. SAYERS. I hope that the gentleman will not take my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Texas that the thirty minutes have expired.

Mr. SAYERS. I will take five or ten minutes more.

Mr. MILES. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to conclude his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish gentlemen to pay attention to this part of the letter:

Of said sum $9,522,833 was the amount estimated for by the Department to be expended during the coming fiscal year on the ships already authorized, leaving, therefore, the sum of $3,256,250 as the amount appropriated in the House bill to be expended on the new ships authorized in the same.

Now, listen—

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is exactly what I stated.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, but the gentleman did not state it all. I think I ought to have sworn him to tell the truth and the whole truth. I do not think he told the whole truth.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I told all I had time to tell.

Mr. SAYERS (continuing). Not if you had a copy of this letter.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, let us see.

Mr. SAYERS (reading)—

In addition to this sum of $9,522,833 appropriated in the House bill for the completion, including armament, of all ships hitherto authorized, the following sums will be required to complete said ships.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Did not the gentleman understand that?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTELLE. So did I.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish the House to understand it.

Mr. COX. Now, let us see how much he says will be required.

Mr. SAYERS (reading):

For hulls and machinery.....	$4,500,000
For armor and armament.....	4,021,796
For equipment.....	50,000

Making in all.....	8,571,796
--------------------	-----------

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is to complete these vessels after this year.

Mr. SAYERS. That is just exactly what I said.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is what I was trying to say.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, this shows that if every dollar that is appropriated by the present bill should be used for the construction of ships already authorized by Congress, there would still be needed $5,315,496 in order to complete them. Notwithstanding this we are asked to authorize 4 battle ships, to cost, in round numbers, if they are to be equal to the battle ship to which I have called attention, over $24,000,000, besides 15, I believe, smaller boats.

Mr. HALL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. HALL. You stated a moment ago that there was an increase in the personnel of the Navy of 3,000.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. HALL. I want to know if that means an absolute increase, or does it authorize the Secretary of the Navy, in an emergency, to call in certain men?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from Missouri that in my judgment if this bill should become law, there will not be by a thousand sailors and marines sufficient to properly man the vessels which have been authorized when they shall have been put in commission. Congress can not prevent this increase. It must go on. It must provide for additional men; and not only for additional men, Mr. Speaker, but it must also provide for additional officers, in order to command and man these ships, if they are to be run.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, no.

Mr. HALL. I want to make this point clear for the House. We provide that the Secretary of the Navy shall be authorized to call a certain number of men into service in an emergency.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. HALL. You have said that for the payment of the men now on the list it would cost $3,000,000 a year?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes.

Mr. HALL. Now, then, my colleague from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] stated that your motion was to strike out $12,000,000. Your motion is not to strike out $12,000,000, but a motion to strike out $3,256,260.

Mr. SAYERS. Let us see, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is correct. I do not want to get between the two gentlemen from Missouri. The gentleman from Missouri upon my left [Mr. DOCKERY] is amply able to sustain himself. But I believe that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] was correct.

Mr. DOCKERY. I used the word liabilities.

Mr. HALL. You intended to include what you understood the expense would be of these vessels eventually.

Mr. SAYERS (to Mr. HALL). Does the gentleman say that it is only $3,000,000?

Mr. HALL. Three million two hundred and fifty-six thousand two hundred and sixty dollars.

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman say that it will take only the sum named by him to complete these two vessels and put them in commission?

Mr. HALL. Of course not.

Mr. SAYERS. Then why does he make such a statement?

Mr. HALL. You are attacking this appropriation bill, and I say that this appropriation bill carries the amount I have stated for the purpose of starting the construction of these two battle ships.

Mr. SAYERS. Does the bill so state?

Mr. HALL. In substance, yes.

Mr. SAYERS. Is not the bill indefinite, and can not the Secretary of the Navy apply all of this money, if he pleases, toward the construction of the ships already authorized? But what will these ships cost? I understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] to say that it would cost a little over $3,000,000 to complete them?

Mr. HALL. I did not say that.

Mr. SAYERS. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. HALL. I said that in the next fiscal year, for the purpose of making contracts and starting the building of these two vessels, there was appropriated $3,256,260.

Mr. SAYERS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I do not think he made that statement. I may have been mistaken, but I understood him to convey the impression that it would require only about $3,000,000 to complete each of these ships.

Mr. HALL. I did not mean anything of that kind.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge my mistake, but I will say that if these vessels should cost as much as the Indiana cost—and she is a 10,288-ton ship—it will require twice $6,172,786.15 to complete these ships and put them in commission.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from Texas, I know, desires to be perfectly candid.

Mr. SAYERS. I try to be.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, the gentleman ought to state that since the Indiana was built we have contracted for two ships, which are now under construction at Newport News, that are each 1,000 tons larger than the Indiana, for $2,255,000, whereas the contract price of the Indiana was $3,120,000. So that the reduction in the cost of these ships has been very great.

Mr. HALL. About 33 per cent.

Mr. BOUTELLE. About one-third.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman can not only look into the future but can also put a limit to the greed and avarice of men, then he can tell us what these ships will cost.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask the gentleman from Texas which is fairer, to make an estimate based upon the prices of five years ago or to take the latest bids that have been accepted by the Department?

Mr. SAYERS. When was the Indiana completed?

Mr. BOUTELLE. She was contracted for in 1890.

Mr. SAYERS. When was she completed?

Mr. BOUTELLE. She was contracted for in 1890, and was to cost, exclusive of armament, $3,120,000. This year, on the 2d day of January, we contracted for two battle ships, larger and finer than the Indiana, for $2,255,000 each.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not wish the gentleman to take up my time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not wish to occupy the gentleman's time if he does not desire the information.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I desire to emphasize this proposition. We will most probably have only $464,793,120.75 as revenue with which to meet the expenses of this Government during the next fiscal year. Leaving out the sinking fund entirely, this House has passed appropriations, including the permanent, amounting to $455,079,410.88; $9,713,709.87 only less than the amount of the estimated revenue for the next fiscal year. The appropriation bills have been increased by the Senate. Appropriations will continue to be made as long as this session lasts, and to the gentlemen who control the legislation of this House and who are responsible for it I repeat the question: Are they prepared to exact of the Treasury during the coming year an expenditure amounting to fully $50,000,000 more than the revenues which will accrue during the same period? I am not. I shall vote for the pending motion because, as a pure business proposition, it commends itself to my judgment. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BENNETT). The gentleman has seventeen minutes remaining.

Mr. SAYERS. I reserve the balance of my time. I will insert in the RECORD a list of the vessels that have been completed and also those in progress of construction for the information of the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, in some aspects of the case it would seem a great pity that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], and such other gentlemen as agree with him in this matter, did not indulge in these "business" propositions at an earlier period in the session. No one can tell what influence for peace, good will, and common sense might have been exerted upon this House and upon the country if the gentleman from Texas and others who assent to his views had arisen here at a time when the disposition of Congress and of a large portion of the public press might have been fitly described as "flamboyant" and had suggested to the representatives of the people that asserting the "primacy" of the "great Republic" among the nations might cost a few dollars; that if we were to undertake to regulate all the South American boundaries and to compose all the disturbances in the adjacent islands around this hemisphere, if we were to take a new and aggressive attitude in regard to the disposition of all the great international questions affecting the peoples of the earth, it might entail the expenditure of something besides resolutions of Congress, and that a dictatorial attitude by a great nation might have to run upon something else besides wind. [Laughter.] I think if the gentleman had taken this position then it would have been very timely.

Now, I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that as a member of this House, charged under the rules and by the designation of its presiding officer with the chairmanship of one of the important committees of the House, I felt myself under obligations to consider not simply my own views and impressions, but the disposition, the manifest purpose, the public policy, declared upon the floor of this House and in the Senate by such unanimous expression as has rarely if ever been known in the history of our legislation. The future historian, if he devotes any of his attention to the work of the Fifty-fourth Congress in its first session, will certainly declare that the dominant spirit was in favor of the assumption of an aggressive attitude by this country in regard to matters beyond our own borders, and that that attitude was asserted in a remarkable and emphatic manner.

That was the condition when the Committee on Naval Affairs were engaged in framing this bill. I make a moderate statement when I say that at the time the bill was reported to this House recommending authorization for the construction of six battle ships it was far within what plainly appeared to be the aggressive desires of members of this House and of the "public sentiment" voiced by the press. I am bound in all candor to say that from the first session of our committee, throughout our entire deliberations, we felt pressing upon us an aggressive and belligerent spirit on the part of the membership of this House and the other branch of Congress that tended to urge even beyond the recommendations that we made.

Mr. MAHON. Does the gentleman think this House has changed its attitude in regard to a strong foreign policy?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I trust not, so far as the strengthening of our Navy is concerned.

Mr. MAHON. It has not.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish the gentleman could give me more than his individual assurance.

Mr. MAHON. The votes will show it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am glad to have this prophecy, and hope it will be fully confirmed when the vote is taken.

I am reminding the House of its attitude when the Committee on Naval Affairs brought in this bill. The only question raised on the floor of this House when the bill was pending here was whether we should authorize six battle ships or four. There was a great deal of "Cuba libre" in the air; there was a great deal of Venezuelan enthusiasm afloat, and not even my economical friend from Texas ventured at that time, when public sentiment was represented here to be rising in arms and anxious to embark for some foreign shore, not even my friend from Texas made a whispered suggestion that we had better cut the number of ships down below four.

Mr. SAYERS. Does the gentleman say—

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am stating the matter to the best of my recollection.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman state to this House that I was in favor of four battle ships?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, I have to state that as my understanding. I have had no official information that the gentleman was opposed to them.

Mr. SAYERS. When the House adjourns, if the gentleman will come to me, he will find that I tried to be of material help in cutting down the number still lower.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the gentleman say he voted against the four battle ships?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly I voted against them, if there was any vote on the proposition.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Did you vote against authorizing the four battle ships?

Mr. SAYERS. I do not remember that there was any recorded vote.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not wish to do the gentleman the slightest injustice—

Mr. SAYERS. I state to the gentleman that I can not remember now how I voted.

A MEMBER. There was no division.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I can tell the gentleman how he did not vote. He did not vote against the four battle ships.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman does not know anything about it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I know the record of the House.

Mr. SAYERS. On that question there was no record kept. But I will state to the gentleman that I was exceedingly anxious that, instead of having four battle ships, there should be but two, and I can substantiate what I say by an authority that will be satisfactory even to the gentleman himself.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am speaking of the official action of members of this House, as recorded in a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not know what the gentleman may have said in private, but on the floor of this House I recall no motion to cut down the number of these battle ships. I recall no utterance either on the part of the gentleman from Texas or anybody else against them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Naval Affairs reported a bill authorizing the construction of four battle ships. We did that as a reasonable recognition of what seemed to us the demands of this House, and such as we thought we had reason to believe at that time would be acceptable to the other branch of Congress, to which I desire to allude with all that awesome respect and vagueness which the rules of Congress are supposed to require. I had no reason to suppose that in any "other place" there would be a desire to reduce the number of those ships. The only apprehension of the committee and of myself was that in "other places" as well as here the desire to go beyond the authorization of the committee might prevail.

The gentleman from Texas tells us that it costs some money to build ships. Why, sir, I supposed he had discovered long ago that a navy, like everything else that is valuable, costs money. I realized that when I was being pressed on all sides in favor of authorizing six of these battle ships. The gentleman says, as in the nature of original information, that we actually enlist men and pay them for manning and sailing these ships. I supposed that was to be understood. I did not suppose anybody expected that we could assume an aggressive attitude toward the greatest naval power on the globe and then keep up our pretensions of dignity with ships that had neither men nor guns. I supposed it was understood by the people of this country that if we undertook to establish ourselves as even a respectable naval power among the nations of the earth it would cost something.

Mr. Speaker, what we have already done in this direction has cost far less than we anticipated instead of more; and I undertake to say that in no direction of the progress of the people of the United States in the last twenty-five years have there been such splendid results for the same amount of expenditure as have followed the work of rehabilitation of the new American Navy. It is a matter of pride to every citizen of America who has any pride in his composition that we have a Navy which, while comparatively small, is composed of ships that, class for class and ship for ship, are the equals, and many of them, as we fondly believe, the superiors, of any other war vessels afloat. This costs some money. I might refer to the record of what this policy has cost. But I undertake to say that the people of this country do not regret one dollar that has been expended to build up the new Navy of the United States.

Now, so far as concerns the question of funds, when we were discussing the warlike propositions on this floor I did not hear any suggestion from any quarter that considerations of revenue, of economy, should deter us from taking extraordinarily positive positions in regard to questions that were entirely outside the ordinary and legitimate business of the people of the United States. On the contrary, there was a remarkable display of enthusiasm in asserting that in spite of all business considerations affecting the revenues or the expenditures of the Government we should send out declarations to all the world that could only be supported and sustained by our possession of at least a respectably powerful naval force.

Mr. Speaker, I have no respect for either nations or individuals who go about interfering with the concerns of other people and manifesting a domineering spirit in regard to affairs beyond their own borders or jurisdiction and at the same time are not willing to assume the responsibility or cost of maintaining that assumption. I do not believe that the Government of the United States can afford to plead to-day that "economy" will not permit us to follow up our public declarations of policy by proper appropriations of money to defend our own coast and maintain our own honor and dignity in our intercourse with the other nations of the world whenever it may be necessary to do so.

Now, the question as to whether we have available funds or not, or whether the revenues are sufficient, is a matter in dispute. I have my own idea as to the facts in regard to our financial matters; the Democratic Administration has its ideas; and I want to say to my friend from Texas that in assisting to formulate legislation on an appropriation bill during a Democratic Administration I took particular pains to acquaint myself fully with the views of the responsible officials of that Administration as to the propriety as well as the desirability of the expenditure we are proposing to make.

I hold in my hand the printed report of a hearing before the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which we invited the present Secretary of the Navy, who attended and gave his views on the subject. I asked the Secretary this specific question, and I hope my friend from Texas is present and will recognize its pertinence:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Secretary, you will remember that after the issue of your report in December, 1893, in which you recommended the authorization of a number of new ships, the President, in his annual message, counseled Congress to consider the depleted condition of the Treasury before increasing naval expenditures. Will you kindly state your view as to how far the condition of the revenues has improved in regard to justifying a considerable authorization of new naval vessels at this session of Congress?

The Secretary understood very well that the proposition we had under consideration was the question of building either four or six battle ships. In response to the inquiry he replied:

Secretary HERBERT. There seems to be no reason to be drawn from the condition and prospects of the Treasury against a liberal appropriation for new vessels. The Secretary of the Treasury estimated in his last annual report that there would be a deficit of about $17,000,000 at the end of the present fiscal year—June 30, 1896. He now thinks that the deficit will be less than he then estimated. He also estimated on the basis of existing laws the revenues of the Government for the fiscal year 1897. His conclusion was that there would be a surplus for next year of something over $6,900,000—in round numbers $7,000,000. Outside of these revenues to come in in the ordinary way, and which the Treasury Department has estimated as more than sufficient to meet expenditures, there will be on the 1st of July next, excluding the $100,000,000 which the Government attempts always to hold for redemption purposes, $170,000,000 over and above the amount required for matured obligations, so that, in my opinion, the condition of the Treasury justifies as liberal appropriation for new ships as I have asked for to-day.

He then favored as high as 4 or 6 battle ships and 15 torpedo boats, which we authorized. And, Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the opinion of gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, I hold that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] is estopped by the public official declaration of this head of a Department of an Administration of his own party from pleading poverty here against the authorization of expenditures for the construction of vessels recommended by his own Secretary of the Navy.

As to this bill and the question of economy which has been suggested, what are the facts? How extravagant a bill is it? Keep in mind all the time that the duty of this country and the trend of public sentiment on the great questions affecting the relations and welfare of our nation, and especially in connection with its attitude toward foreign nations, have developed conditions which have pointed more directly to an increase in our naval establishment than in any other direction. In asserting a more strenuous policy in dealing with questions arising outside of our own territorial jurisdiction we necessarily directed the attention of Congress and the public to the strengthening of our naval power.

It is the Navy of the United States which must be depended on to maintain the prestige of our country in any controversy with a foreign power; and never before in my experience in Congress has there been a time when the action of the legislative branches and the expressions emanating from the executive branch of the Government have assumed so strongly the form of a demand upon Congress to strengthen the naval power of the United States as now. And yet this bill, against which the cry of extravagance is now raised, carried a less amount in gross as it passed the House this year than the bill that was passed by the House in the last session of Congress—and I hope my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] will take the figures right down, for I usually speak carefully of such matters—this bill that you are trying to help the other branch of Congress to mutilate, that you are condemning as extravagant, carried as it passed the House nearly $200,000 less than the aggregate amount that was carried by the bill passed by the House last year, which was reduced by the Senate for reasons I have not time to state.

That bill as it passed the House carried $31,807,023.86. This bill as it passed the House carried $31,611,034.95. Now, is it not an awful increase and extravagance on the part of the Naval Committee of this year?

In regard to the amount which is devoted expressly to the increase of vessels: In the House bill—and I will confine my attention to that, because I trust that when we get through we shall return substantially to the basis of the legislation of the House, where appropriations are properly initiated—in the House bill, before the Senate committee had it in hand, we provided for the increase of the Navy a gross amount of $12,779,133 for construction and armament of the new ships of the Navy.

Now, I address myself to my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], because I do not see my other esteemed friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], present.

Mr. DOCKERY. It might be well for the gentleman from Maine to address the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] also upon the same question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, I assume that all Republicans are going to vote patriotically on this question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope my friend will be impartial in his attentions, and will also include the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am not going to waste any persuasion on the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, because I can not doubt that he is imbued with such a spirit of Americanism that he will be more likely to want to put on an additional ship instead of striking out any. It is my Democratic friends whom I wish to convert. This House bill provided for $12,779,133 for the "increase of the Navy." Now, how much do you think that was increased over the bill that was passed by this House in the last Congress? Instead of being more, it was less. The bill does provide for $12,779,133 for "increase of the Navy," but the bill last year provided for $13,234,422. That is not so very extravagant a record, it seems to me.

Now, what of the future? The gentleman from Texas called our attention to the fact, which I supposed everybody understood, that the ships that are on the stocks and being built will require work to be done upon them after this year, and that the work will have to be paid for, because we have not yet reached the point where we impress workmen to build the ships of the Navy without pay. He seemed to think that it was an important thing to inform the House that it would take $8,571,796 after this year to finish the vessels heretofore authorized. That includes the Iowa, the Massachusetts, the two great battle ships just started down at Newport News, and the gunboats and torpedo boats under construction.

Now, if we add to that all that it will require to complete and put into commission the vessels authorized in this bill, with all the others, it will make an aggregate for all these ships (including the four battle ships proposed in the House bill, and assuming the cost of these ships to be approximately the same as those contracted for this year at Newport News), it would amount, for all the ships now building and all the ships that we propose, including the four, to $40,957,679, to be expended during a period of four years, which it will probably consume to build and finish these ships, making an average annual appropriation for the increase of the Navy, including ships and armament, of $10,239,419. And yet I find that as far back as the Fifty-first Congress, when there was not a war cloud or a speck of war cloud in the sky, long before any statesman had dreamed of suggesting that we should rise up and assert our "primacy"—which I believe is the favorite word—long before any resolutions or bills had been introduced in either branch of Congress proposing to appropriate $100,000,000 for the President to use as a war fund, long before any of the recent peculiarly bellicose pronouncements by the Executive or either branch of Congress had either been made or dreamed of, we appropriated, in the Fifty-first Congress, for the increase of the Navy, the sum of $16,607,000 at one session.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me a question there?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. SAYERS. The bill provides that each of the foregoing ships, exclusive of armament, shall not exceed $3,750,000. Now, will the gentleman explain to the House, if these ships can be built for a less sum, why should the committee put the maximum cost of the ships, exclusive of armament, at $3,750,000?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I assume that my friend from Texas is desiring me to answer that question for the information of the House—

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And not for himself, because I am sure that he understands it.

Mr. SAYERS. Does not the bill permit the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the vessels to the extent of $3,750,000, exclusive of armament?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The bill itself authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to make contracts for these ships up to an amount, exclusive of armament, not to exceed $3,750,000, but nobody on the committee expects him to do anything of the kind. Every bill prior to this in authorizing battle ships has made the outside limit of cost exclusive of armament $4,000,000. The bill under which the two ships are now being constructed at Newport News authorized an outside limit of $4,000,000, but they are under contract to-day for $2,255,000. We have reduced that limitation in the present bill by $250,000, more as a matter of form than anything else, because we authorize the construction of ships of a certain character, of a certain approximate size, and under carefully prepared legislation that has been perfected year after year, and upon which the Secretary of the Navy is obliged to advertise for bids, and to award contracts to the lowest bidder. As a matter of fact, the ships have never cost anywhere near the limit, and they never will.

Mr. SAYERS. I will ask the gentleman, in good faith, if he thinks that these ships, exclusive of armament, will cost less, why put the maximum limit at $3,750,000? If the gentleman does not expect that the ships will cost so much, why do so?

Mr. BOUTELLE. For the very same reason that we put $4,000,000 as the limit originally—because we did not desire to cramp the Department as to its designs, knowing that the Secretary must advertise for bids for the construction of these vessels and that they would have to accept, under the law, the bids of the lowest bidder; and under the $4,000,000 authorization we have constructed three at $3,120,000, and have two more now under contract at $2,225,000 each. We have reduced the authorization about $250,000, leaving the limit at $3,750,000; but there is no expectation on the part of anybody that these ships will cost near that amount. Of course the committee put the limitation considerably outside of the probable contract price. These ships have to be advertised and open to competition by all the shipbuilders of the country; and there has already been a decrease made from $3,120,000, contract price of the first three battle ships, without their armament, to $2,225,000 for these two ships at Newport News which are now under contract.

We inaugurated the policy when the first battle ships were authorized of requiring one of these ships to be built on the Pacific Coast if it could possibly be done at a reasonable compensation for any disadvantages of that locality on account of distance from the source of supplies of material. I believed, the committee believed, and Congress believed that it was desirable to sustain and encourage the building up of the great private plants on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts that could be utilized by the Government whenever needed. I think the result has vindicated the wisdom of that view.

I believe I have already given, while the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] was absent, statistics of the cost of building these ships, which I will repeat to him, that if we legislate just as the House previously legislated on this bill it will require to complete all the vessels authorized, including those in the present bill, inside of $41,000,000, to be expended in four years or over that they will probably be under construction, which would be an average of $10,000,000, as against over $16,000,000 that was appropriated for the new Navy in the Fifty-first Congress at one session and over $13,000,000 that this House authorized in the last bill that was passed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take up the whole time. I simply want to call the attention of this House to the aspect we will present to the people of the world if we heavily reduce the provision made by the House for war ships at this time, when important foreign complications which we have precipitated are pending; complications that, when they were discussed in this House, caused attention to be called by members on both sides to the great military and naval preparations and disposition of foreign powers and the necessity for such action in the matter of strengthening our naval force as would indicate to other nations that we meant something more than mere bombast and buncombe.

I ask members of the House to consider what will be the opinion of the civilized world if, in the face of the declarations we have made, in the face of the attitude we have assumed, instead of making even a reasonable progress toward putting ourselves into a position to maintain a foreign controversy, we shall deliberately, on the ground of economy, declare that we "can not afford" to even put under construction four battle ships that will be ready in three or four years from now to uphold the prestige and the dignity of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in that kind of economical patriotism. I wish there had been a little more economy of bluster evinced at an earlier stage; but after we have taken a position, after we have put our banners on the outer wall, for us to plead "economy" as a reason why we should reduce by one-half the provision we made at an earlier date of the session of Congress for strengthening our naval force, it seems to me, will present the American Government in a pitiable aspect in the eyes of the world. Here we have our attention called to a naval expenditure in Great Britain of $91,000,000, in France of $52,000,000, and in Russia of $26,000,000, and so on all up and down the list of foreign naval powers; and yet, at this stage in our new departure in the field of international dispute, we are asked to stop and say, not only that we do not mean it, but that we will not even provide for four battle ships to strengthen a Navy that to-day can only claim that it might compete successfully with that of Spain.

Gentlemen, there is a place for economy, but economy should not be exercised against making reasonable and proper preparation for safeguarding the peace of the country by providing against attack, and for maintaining the dignity of this Government among the nations of the earth. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten or fifteen minutes, as he may desire, to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Speaker, there are only ten or fifteen minutes left of the gentleman's time, and there are several members who desire to speak on this proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine has twenty-two minutes remaining.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will be content with ten minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. Before the gentleman from New York proceeds I wish to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Maine. In view of the fact that I was interrupted so frequently, and consumed more time than I intended, I would like to have unanimous consent—

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let us exhaust the remaining time, and then we can come to an understanding.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, if I should say that the minority of the Committee on Naval Affairs unanimously voted for six battle ships I would not be very far from the truth. The Senate in its erudite wisdom has seen fit to strike off two of those battle ships. I would not presume to complain now of the action of such an august body, but I do complain when a prominent member of the House of Representatives, who silently, at least, sanctioned the action of the House in voting four battle ships, now proposes that the House shall throw down its arms, fall upon its knees, and accept the Senate amendment. It seems to me, sir, that is hardly courteous to the majority of the committee, and in view of the action of the minority and of the political personality of the Representative, it is certainly not courteous to them.

Mr. Chairman, I have not forgotten the action of the Senate last year. The House then made provisions for three battle ships. The Senate struck out one battle ship, and then maneuvered the matter so adroitly that the House never had an opportunity of voting upon their action. We did not get even a committee of conference. Driven to the wall, we were compelled to accept the naval appropriation bill as it came from the Senate or lose the bill entirely. Thus a provision of the Constitution was virtually violated to maintain a Senatorial whim. I have not forgotten, sir, that the Senate returned to the House of Representatives a tariff bill full of errors, and that the House, under the arbitrary Senatorial dictum, was compelled to accept that tariff bill with all its errors. The country has been suffering from the errors ever since. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, we appear to be the American House of Commons and they the House of Lords. I can imagine how such a proposition as this coming from the House of Lords in Great Britain would be received by the House of Commons under similar circumstances. I can imagine how such a proposition would be received coming from the French Senate to the Corps Legislatif. The "lower bodies," as they are called, would stand upon their dignity, and I think the time has arrived for this House to stand upon its dignity and have some say with regard to appropriation bills at least. I remember that toward the close of the Fiftieth Congress the Senate of the United States, under the order of its Presiding Officer, nailed up the doors leading to the rotunda of the Capitol. It assumed to bar the Representatives from entering the rotunda on inauguration day without a card from the Presiding Officer of the Senate. The complaint of the House was long and loud, and axes would have been used if the barrier had not been removed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] with great interest. He is always an economist. The country grows, and I hope that in the progress of time the arithmetical calculations of the gentleman from Texas will grow with it. [Laughter and applause.] We can not run the country now on the basis of thirty years ago. The gentleman expatiated upon what he termed the extravagances of this bill, and he was not always correct in his statements. I refer to one made with regard to the increase in the enlisted force in the Navy. He said that this bill increases it 3,250 men.

Mr. SAYERS. I did not state that. The gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Well, whatever you stated, you gave the impression that the increase in the enlisted force was 3,250 men. Now, Mr. Speaker, the increase in the enlisted force in seamen is actually 1,000 men. The Secretary asked for 1,500, and he thought, in addition, that the President, in a war emergency, should have authority to increase the force to 2,500. I advocated that proposition, but it was voted down by the committee. I stood by the action of the committee, but I never dreamed that anybody would propose to cut off the 1,000. You have not men enough in the Navy now to man your ships when they are in commission. To put a crew upon a new vessel you have to put another vessel out of commission and transfer her crew. As for the 500 men in the Marine Corps, they are needed just as much as the sailors. When there are not enough sailors to man guns in action the marines are called upon. In view of the clouds upon the horizon—possibly because of your own action in this House—it seems to me that an increase of 500 men in the Marine Corps is a very small increase indeed, and uncommonly reasonable.

The gentleman from Texas alluded to the expense of maintaining our war vessels in commission. It is no greater in proportion than the expense of other nations. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] alluded to the naval appropriations of Great Britain. Why, sir, the appropriations of Great Britain for the increase of her navy alone at this session of Parliament is $52,000,000—more than double our whole appropriation for the maintenance as well as the increase of our Navy. Think of it; $52,000,000 for the building of new battle ships for the British navy. Our four ships are not in ratio in comparison with the strength of the two navies. By making the appropriation for four ships you do not sustain the ratio that we now hold with Great Britain. This is one of the reasons why I so earnestly advocated the building of six battle ships instead of four.

Now, if the argument of the gentleman from Texas with regard to our receipts and expenditures is valid, he ought to move to strike off all these ships. He ought to move to kill the river and harbor bill. He ought to move to cut off expenses at all points, regardless of the interests and welfare of the nation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BENNETT). The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] has expired.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine has twelve minutes remaining.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I thank the gentleman from Maine. Mr. Speaker, men build houses when lumber is cheap; and nations in a warlike atmosphere ought to build ships when material is cheap. There are warlike clouds on our horizon. The Secretary of the Navy, while before the Committee on Naval Affairs, expressly asserted that ships can now be built 30 per cent cheaper than the last ships were built. How long this percentage of cost will be maintained, as the gentleman from Texas truly says, can not be told. But if we pass this appropriation for four ships, we shall get the contracts while the prices are low; and no matter whether they should hereafter be doubled or not, the contractors will be forced to fill the orders.

The Senate, as I reckon from reading the RECORD, voted for two ships only on the score of economy. Why did not the economical "streak" reach other appropriation bills before that imposing body? Why is it that the naval appropriation, vital not only to the interests but to the safety of the country, is picked out for economical purposes? Why is it that in the same breath the river and harbor bill is increased over $2,000,000 by the Senate? And if they are honest in their economical tendencies, why is it that they do not begin work at home? Reading a speech of a Senator made in the other wing of the Capitol a month ago, I learned that it costs in the way of perquisites twice as much to keep a Senator of the United States in Congress as it does a Representative.

Mr. DOCKERY. About five times as much.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Five times as much. I thank the gentleman from Missouri; I stand corrected. The expenses of the 90 United States Senators (independently of salaries) are nearly as much as the expenses of the House of Representatives, with 357 members.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am greatly interested in what the gentleman is saying; but as a friend I wish merely to suggest that I hope he is conscious of the form of parliamentary discourtesy in which he is indulging. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. I did not catch the gentleman's words, but I suppose my time is out. I will say, however, that we made a great concession in economy on the naval appropriation bill when we reduced the number of proposed battle ships from 6 to 4, and I trust no further concession will be made. Means of offense is the best defense, and the best way of avoiding war is to be prepared for war. This is true economy. I trust the House will stand by its original proposition.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that so much time has been consumed by three of us, and as several gentlemen desire yet to speak, I ask that the time for discussion be extended say until 5 o'clock, and that then we take a vote.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman want a vote to-night?

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, yes.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] can call the previous question at any time he chooses.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I see no reason why we should have so long an extension of the debate as the gentleman from Texas suggests. I desire to be entirely reasonable. I understand that under the arrangement already made, the limit of debate would be reached at a quarter before 4 o'clock. I am willing, if it will be satisfactory, that the time be extended from quarter before 4 o'clock until quarter past 4 o'clock, with the understanding that there shall be no further request for additional time.

Mr. CANNON. Parliamentarily, the gentleman from Maine has complete control over the duration of the debate. He can demand the previous question at any time after quarter before 4 o'clock.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But we do not want to have a vote on the previous question if we can arrange without it. I do not wish to be arbitrary. I want to consult the wishes of the House so far as I can, but I am not willing to yield to the extent of not having a vote on this bill to-night, because members have come here and stayed here for the purpose of voting. I do not assume that any of them have stayed to listen to me, although they may have stayed to listen to others. I will agree that the time be extended until quarter past 4 o'clock.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] desires to speak, and so does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Very well, if the gentleman objects, then we will go on. I hope the House understands that I am perfectly willing to extend the time for half an hour more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understands, the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] is objected to.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and hope that he will yield a part of his time, if he can do so, to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. There are only seventeen minutes left.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the House will give a little extension of time, as indicated, when the hour of a quarter to 4 has been reached, provided, of course, that the discussion is confined to the pending proposition. I think, perhaps, there will be no objection to getting an extension.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BENNETT). The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for the remainder of the time of the gentleman from Texas, fifteen minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. I thought I had seventeen minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman had seventeen minutes, but some time has been occupied in determining the question of an extension of time.

Mr. SAYERS. Why not take it from the other side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is taken from each side equally.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I think I can say what I desire to say in ten minutes and perhaps less, but if I should need a few minutes' extension I will trust to the House in its generosity to give it to me.

This is a question to be considered in the light of fact. And I want to say in the very beginning that my work as a member of this House touching appropriations for the support and the honor of our common country has, in my judgment, been from as pure motives as the work of other members of the House. I am heartily in sympathy with the Republic—the Republic that belongs to all of the people—being armed at every point to protect the property, the person, and the rights of the citizen, and being able to assert itself among the nations of the earth.

But, nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, it is well enough for us once in a while to forsake the field of declamation and get down to the facts. Now, what are the facts? There are in sight now, outside of river and harbor contracts, contracts in this bill, or contracts on any other bill, there are in sight, appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year coming, an aggregate of $510,000,000—a large sum. Thank God, it is a large country, too, and I do not think it is too much. It is far more than was appropriated the last year or the year before. But the country grows.

Now, then, it is admitted by all that this will be, in round numbers, $50,000,000 more than we will collect from every source of revenue. The fiscal year for which we appropriate commences on the 1st day of next July and ends on the 30th day of June, 1897. So we run up all the ordinary expenses of the Government about $50,000,000 more than we have reason to expect money will come in to pay them with. We all understand that.

Now, a step further. We have reached out on the naval appropriation bill and, from a patriotic standpoint, authorized the construction or the making of contracts involving some twenty-five to thirty millions more than we actually appropriated—

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman will permit me—

Mr. CANNON. I have only a moment or two.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the gentleman will state that we are authorizing less this year than for years before. We appropriate a million dollars less in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. We appropriate a million dollars less than the bill of last year, that is true; but there is an authorization of contracts to the extent of about thirty millions to be appropriated for and hereafter paid, which is much greater than it ever was before.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, no; for years before. But the bill as a whole is less.

Mr. CANNON. I say the amount authorized and not appropriated for is greater than for any year before this time. Now, let us inquire further.

Mr. Speaker, we not only appropriate $50,000,000 for the coming year more than our revenues will be, but there is in sight on the various appropriation bills authority to the Administration to contract for the building of ships, improvement of rivers and harbors, and other public works to the amount of $112,000,000, payable substantially in one, two, three, and four years from the 1st day of July, 1897.

To put it another way, when we inaugurate a Republican President on the 4th day of March next, he will have to borrow $50,000,000 to pay the ordinary expenses of the Government from that time until the 1st day of July, 1897. The Republican Congress and President will also have to provide the money for the ordinary expenditures of the coming four years, and, besides, will have to pay off the $112,000,000 of extraordinary expenditures which is authorized by this and other bills by way of contract work. In addition to that, when we come in power we ourselves will want some river and harbor improvements; we will want some public buildings; we will want some internal improvements; but we will find by this and other contract work authorized this session of Congress that we will have first to meet by appropriation $25,000,000 a year for every year of the coming Administration; that is, we will have to take care of each year and pay the $112,000,000 we now go in debt for.

Now, there is the truth.

"But," says somebody, "Mr. CANNON, we are not getting all we want now for public works." That is true. We are not getting what we want. For you know, gentlemen, the policy of this House is not to authorize a single public building. Why? Because from the standpoint of economy. Not one is to be authorized. There is no money to pay for it. Now, then, if there is such a war pressure and such a danger menacing us that within the next twelve months we will have a war with all the world, should we break the record in the matter of authorization by contracts up to the extent of $30,000,000 for the Navy? But I state it takes four years to construct one of these ships. Each ship costs, in round numbers, $6,000,000. If you strike off two of them you decrease the mortgage to be placed on the future to the extent of $12,000,000. If you leave the four battle ships on, you increase the mortgage that amount.

"Oh, but," says somebody, "when we come in we shall get the revenue. We shall play the part of Moses and strike the rock that will bring the revenue, as the water came from the rock in the wilderness." How long will it take to do it? It will take us eighteen months to write a revenue-getting law upon the statute books and have it go into operation and produce revenue. So that when you mortgage the future to the extent of the $100,000,000 or $112,000,000 to commence with the incoming of a Republican Administration you say to that Administration: "You shall borrow to pay this mortgage that is placed upon this country during this Administration, and to meet contracts made by the present Administration by virtue of laws of this session of Congress." Now, if it is wise, if it is patriotic, if it is necessary to advance the public good and the public honor, let us do it, and do it although it would amount to ten times as much.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is there any appropriation that comes so near defending the public honor as that for the Navy?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I am proud of the Navy, and I have followed substantially the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs in his contest, because his wisdom and knowledge are greater than mine. I followed him when he said to strike out six battle ships and put in four, and I would follow him now if he would follow what I believe to be his true feeling, that two battle ships are sufficient.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask my friend not to make that statement.

Mr. CANNON. I will take it back if it is not correct.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is not so.

Mr. CANNON. I am glad to make the correction.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I never made a buncombe proposition to this House in my life.

Mr. CANNON. Then if I am under a misapprehension—I would not do my friend an injustice.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope not. I never say anything that I do not mean.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, what have we done for public defense? When we reported the fortification bill we found 150 built-up guns that were not emplaced, and we wrote in that fortification bill appropriations and authorizations of $11,000,000 plus, for what? Within the next twelve months to emplace those guns? Within the next twelve months New York and Boston and Portland and Washington and San Francisco and Puget Sound will be substantially fortified. Why, in that fortification bill alone we have provided in twelve months to do more than has been done from 1888 up to the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The ten minutes allotted to the gentleman from Illinois have expired.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin (to Mr. CANNON). You have settled it for four battle ships?

Mr. CANNON. I thank my friend, and if he by silence or speech can do as much, he will have done well.

Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin. We will do better than you will.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; that remains to be seen. At least I shall be courteous when I address my fellow-members, and shall ask the Speaker if I may have the privilege of interrupting, under the rules.

Mr. Speaker, let me say again that we have four battle ships now, practically, and two that were authorized a year ago; that is six. If this authorization passes as the Senate provides, it will make eight. We have four substantially completed.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, no; they are not all completed.

Mr. CANNON. But they approach completion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I can not let the gentleman make such statements.

Mr. CANNON. They approach completion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It will take eighteen months on one of them.

Mr. CANNON. They are authorized now. The contract for the two battle ships that were authorized a year ago was let last January. The contract for the armor has not yet been let. It is a million and a half for each ship. The bids are open. Bethlehem is to get one and Carnegie is to get the other. I am glad that they are going to. I am delighted that they have the capacity to do the work. I believe they are the only two establishments we have. These other two contracts for two battle ships will follow the two that they are soon to have. That makes four.

Now, my information is—and I believe it to be reliable—that Bethlehem and Carnegie can not more than complete those contracts for the two battle ships and the two more to be authorized, I hope, by this bill for eighteen months to come. So that we had just as well go over until next winter as to at least two of these battle ships, and leave something to be done by those who are to follow after us.

Now, I trust no man will misinterpret my motives. I stand ready to see public buildings and internal improvements in my section of the country stand still if it is necessary for the defense of the country; but I want to see the necessity for it, when we from the interior are called upon to wait without appropriations for public buildings, and when, if this mortgaging of the future goes on, next winter and the winter after we shall be asked to wait and still to wait until we pay off these mortgages. I am content if it is necessary for the public good, but if it is a mere utilization of the patriotic sentiment of the country to authorize great naval expenditures of doubtful utility, and, if meritorious, are not urgent, then I object.

I am content, having briefly referred to this matter, to leave it with the House. I believe, in closing, that we will subserve the best interests of the country, the best interests of the seacoast defense now by authorizing but two of these battle ships and proceeding with our fortifications next year as we are proceeding this year.

I yield the gentleman from Texas any time I have remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BENNETT). The gentleman from Texas has one minute and a half remaining.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended ten minutes longer, so that I may yield it to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]. I have consumed more time than I intended in consequence of interruptions.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Now, Mr. Speaker, the House will recognize the entire fairness and courtesy of the proposition I made a while ago when I asked consent to extend this time a half an hour, to a quarter past 4.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, the gentleman wants to thrust his individuality or personality, or whatever he may term it, constantly on the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. SAYERS. The reason I declined—

Mr. BOUTELLE. He has no right to speak of my thrusting my individuality or personality on the House.

Mr. SAYERS (continuing). Was simply this—

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am performing my duty as chairman simply and exhibiting a courtesy to the gentleman from Texas that the House will regard as a good example for him to follow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this matter be continued until quarter after 4 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the time for closing debate be extended until fifteen minutes after 4.

Mr. SAYERS. The time to be equally divided.

Mr. HICKS. I object. I think we had better have a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent for a further extension of the time for ten minutes, in order that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] may have an opportunity to speak upon this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the time be extended for ten minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I object.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I will not object to that, if the same length of time can be occupied on the other side. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Has the other side exhausted its time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas has a minute and a half remaining and the gentleman from Maine has six minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will wait until they conclude.

Mr. SAYERS. I yield a minute and a half to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. I can not occupy a minute and a half. If the House is not inclined to extend the time, I shall not occupy that time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why not let the debate run on toward 5 o'clock, if gentlemen want to talk?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Other gentlemen have objected. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The gentleman from Maine has five minutes remaining.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a very few words in reply to some of the excited and extraordinary statements of the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It seems a very strange thing in the legislation of this House, although I have observed it for many years, that one of the committees of the House is so distrustful of the capacity of anybody else in the House to attend to the business assigned them. Fifteen members of this House have been assigned to the committee that prepared the bill for the naval establishment.

I happen for the time to be chairman of that committee. I have served thirteen years as a member of that committee; part of the time as chairman. I have given my best thought and labor to the work of that committee; and I may without immodesty say that I came to the committee with some prior knowledge of the subject-matters with which it has to deal; and yet, on nearly every occasion when that committee presents a measure in the House, it is confronted by gentlemen from one of the other committees of this House, the Appropriations Committee, who seem to insist that the 15 members on the Naval Committee are incapable of preparing and conducting one of the appropriation bills, while they accord to themselves sufficient wisdom to prepare and manage six or seven of the great appropriation bills of the House, and then to supervise all the rest.

I wish to say that those gentlemen are assuming a great deal. I do not know what kind of success I should have in dealing with the "legislative bill," or the "sundry civil bill," or some other bill, but I have some knowledge of the matters that are provided for in the naval appropriation bill. I have had the assistance of a gentleman who for years has been a member and for part of the time chairman of the committee; of another gentleman who was for years an officer of the Navy, after graduating at Annapolis, and of other experienced and competent gentlemen; and we have the right to ask this House to repose some confidence in our judgment and in our statements about matters that affect naval appropriations and naval construction. Yet the gentleman from Illinois gets up here and, as an argument in favor of the mutilation of this bill, that has once passed the House, makes the distinct statement on the floor that the manufacturers of the armor can not possibly furnish their material in time.

I answer him by saying that the communications received by our committee from the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies declared that they can furnish all the armor of these battle ships inside of thirty months. We have not brought these details in here, and there was no need of bringing them in here. We had the right to believe that this House would take something for granted, and repose in us some confidence, when the Naval Committee come in here and make a general statement of facts.

Mr. CUMMINGS. And that letter is borne out by the letter of Commodore Sampson.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And that letter is indorsed by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy.

The gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations always want to cut down all bills except their own. If they really desire to economize, why do not they economize on their own bills? Why do they increase the fortifications bill and other bills under their control and then come into the House and talk about how much we are mortgaged for the future, and try to put all the responsibility upon the naval appropriation bill, which to-day calls for less money for the increase of the Navy than was appropriated in the naval bill by the House a year ago? It is not fair; it is not dealing with the House as I think the House has a right to be dealt with.

I repeat, the proposition before this House is perfectly simple. We provided for four battle ships at a time when the House certainly gave every indication that it wanted more. There is no reason why we should want less now than we did then, and I hope that when the vote of the House is recorded it will not put us, after all that has been said, and while the whole world is looking at us, in the position of receding from the provision heretofore made by the House for the protection of our coasts and the defense of our flag.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Has my time expired?

The SPEAKER. The time for debate has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. SAYERS and Mr. BOUTELLE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BOUTELLE (during the roll call). Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is entirely out of order to interrupt the roll call, but gentlemen are coming to me and saying that there is some misunderstanding as to the question on which the vote is being taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated it to the House. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the Senate. Those who favor it will say "yea" and those who are opposed to it will say "nay."

Mr. BOUTELLE. The effect of an affirmative vote will be to strike out the two battle ships.

Mr. SAYERS. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 81, nays 141, not voting, 133; as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 6, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. KYLE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, together with a report from Maj. J. H. Willard, Corps of Engineers, dated April 4, 1896, of a preliminary examination made by him in compliance with the provisions of the river and harbor act of August 17, 1894, of Big Sunflower River, Mississippi; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to the joint resolution approved February 26, 1896, a letter from the Chief of Engineers expressing the opinion that the construction of a breakwater at Palm Beach, Fla., for the purpose of protecting and facilitating landing at the pier now constructed at that place, would cost about $500,000; which, on motion of Mr. PASCO, was, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FANNIE KAUTZ.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 989) to place the name of Fannie Kautz, widow of August V. Kautz, deceased, late brigadier-general, United States Army, retired, on the pension roll at the rate of $175 per month.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, to strike out "$175 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now entitled to receive, in recognition of the distinguished services rendered his country in the Mexican war, the war of the rebellion, and in the Indian wars of the West," and insert "$50 per month"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fannie Kautz, widow of August V. Kautz, deceased, late a brigadier-general, retired, United States Army, at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. SQUIRE. I think the amount ought to be increased.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think so, too, but the beneficiary is so needy at this time that I hope the Senate will fix the pension at $50 a month as the committee have reported.

Mr. SQUIRE. I am very sorry to have the bill passed in this shape. The lady is a citizen of my State; I know her situation, and that she needs the money. I think the pension ought to be made $100 a month. Her husband was a very distinguished officer in the Mexican war and the late war.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that is all true; but I think we had better allow $50 a month now, and if Congress hereafter chooses to give her more, well and good. The committee have proposed $50, and I think the bill ought to be passed in that form.

Mr. SQUIRE. Very well. Under the circumstances I will not insist upon an increase over what is proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Fannie Kautz, widow of August V. Kautz, late brigadier-general, United States Army."

SARAH K. McLEAN.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 606) for the relief of Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the proper accounting officers to settle and adjust to Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean, all back pay and emoluments that would have been due and payable to him as a major from July 23, 1864, to the date of his reinstatement March 3, 1875.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 99, 101, 131, 133, 134, 136, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 234, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 245, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 257, 259, 261, 262, 264, 265, 266, 267, 269, 272, 273, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281 and 288.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 88, 98, 132, 135, 156, 157, 158, 219, 220, 221, 222, 224, 258, 265, 266, 267, 269, 292, 300, and 302, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$39,900"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 82, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For printing, binding, and wrapping 1,000 additional copies of series 1, volumes 1, 2, 3, and 4, for supplying officers of the Navy who have not received the work, $2,400."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 118, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 120, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "four"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$164,010"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 284, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "ten"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 290, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 11. That at any time when, in the opinion of the marshal of any district, the public interest will thereby be promoted, he may appoint one or more deputy marshals for such districts, who shall be known as field deputies, and who, unless sooner removed by the district court, as now provided by law, shall hold office during the pleasure of the marshal, except as hereinafter provided, and who shall each, as his compensation, receive three-fourths of the gross fees, including mileage, as provided by law, earned by him, not to exceed $1,500 per fiscal year, or at that rate for any part of a fiscal year; and in addition shall be allowed his actual necessary expenses, not exceeding $2 a day, while endeavoring to arrest, under process, a person charged with or convicted of crime: Provided, That a field deputy may elect to receive actual expenses on any trip in lieu of mileage: Provided, That in special cases, where in his judgment justice requires, the Attorney-General may make an additional allowance, not, however, in any case to make the aggregate annual compensation of any field deputy in excess of $2,500 nor more than three-fourths of the gross fees earned by such field deputy. The marshal immediately after making any appointment or appointments under this section shall report the same to the Attorney-General, stating the facts as distinguished from conclusions constituting the reason for such appointment, and the Attorney-General may at any time cancel any such appointment as the public interest may require. The field deputies herein provided for of the districts of California, Colorado, Washington, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nevada, Oregon, Wyoming, and Idaho shall, for the services they may perform during the fiscal year 1897, receive double the fees allowed by law to like officers in other States for performing similar duties, but neither of them shall be allowed to receive of such fees any sum exceeding the aggregate compensation of such officer as provided herein."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 291, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "twelve"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 311, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "6 to 23"; and on page 127 of the bill, in line 10, strike out the words "June 30" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the 1st day of July"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 312, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "6, 8, or 15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 19, 22, 23, 36, 37, 38, 83, 108, 109, 142, 144, 233, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 313, and 314.

S. M. CULLOM,

H. M. TELLER,

F. M. COCKRELL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

HENRY H. BINGHAM,

JNO. E. MCCALL,

ALEX. M. DOCKERY,

Managers on the part of the House.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report.

MR. HILL. If the Senate desires to legislate intelligently it is important that the conference report shall be printed, that we may have an opportunity to examine it. We are not familiar with what the amendments are. They are simply stated by numbers—for instance, that the Senate shall recede from its amendment numbered 129, and we do not know anything about what amendment numbered 129 is. If we vote to concur so far as there has been an agreement we vote entirely in the dark. What objection can there be to the report being printed and going over until to-morrow morning, that we may have an opportunity to know precisely what has been done?

MR. CULLOM. I do not desire to occupy the attention of the Senate more than a moment. The Senator from New York states correctly that in a very few instances where the report proposes that the Senate shall recede from amendment numbered 129, for example, without any further explanation, of course the Senate would not know what it meant, but in nearly all the instances—in all, in fact, of any consequence—the character of the amendment agreed to by the conferees on the part of the two Houses is set out in the report and has been read at the desk. For instance, take the important features of the bill which have been agreed to by the conferees, the question relating to attorneys and marshals. The salaries fixed by the conferees have been read and can be pointed out. I have a table in my hand showing exactly what the House agreed to as to any given attorney or marshal, what the Senate agreed to, and what the conferees have finally agreed upon.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator permit a suggestion right here? Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Of course I have no doubt that by making inquiries of the Senator from Illinois, who is perfectly familiar with the subject, every Senator here may understand what has been done; but it was to relieve the Senator from being subjected to the various inquiries, because Senators are naturally somewhat inquisitive to know what has been done, that I thought we could examine the question for ourselves. For instance, I am interested in several items, and so are my people. I am only interested in them because my people are interested. I could not quite catch what was done in regard to the salaries of the district attorneys for the three districts in my State. Of course I can ask, but will not that lead to other Senators asking, and take more time really, when we could dispose of it to-morrow morning without any trouble? That is one point. Another point I should like to be informed upon is as to what has been done with the question of the United States commissioners, a very important matter to my people, and to which I called the especial attention of the conference committee when it was appointed and when we had the question up for discussion before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no special objection to the report going over until to-morrow morning, if it is the desire of Senators. All that I want is to facilitate business as rapidly as possible consistent with intelligent action.

Mr. COCKRELL. Had it not better be printed?

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to its going over and being printed, with the understanding that we shall take it up in the morning among the very first things done after the early morning business.

Mr. HILL. It will be printed?

Mr. CULLOM. It will be printed, of course, in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will go over and be printed.

Mr. DUBOIS. I rose to say that I think the Senator from New York is entirely right in regard to this matter. The instance which the Senator from Illinois mentioned is a very good one. I caught as the report was read something in regard to the fees of marshals and attorneys in Idaho. There is a very good reason why the fees in that part of the country should be different from the fees in most other States. I think some change was made by the conferees and the Senate is asked to agree to it, if I caught the reading correctly. I believe that on this bill and all other bills the report of the conferees ought to be printed in such a way that the Senate can understand it. We make our fight here for items and get them in the bill and we do not know what becomes of them in conference. I believe the precedent ought to be established of printing conference reports.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say in justification of the committee and myself that we have been especially anxious that the Senate should not act blindly upon the appropriation bills when conference reports are brought in. Therefore, when I made a former report upon this bill, I was careful to note, so that the Senate could understand exactly what we were doing, the items yet disagreed to, calling attention at the same time to the important items that were agreed to by the conferees. I am prepared now, if it were desired that we should go on, to point out exactly the action of the conferees in reference to any particular item. But it may probably save time to let the report go over and be printed, so that the Senate can see it for itself.

I wish to say in addition before I sit down that the question of fixing the fees of attorneys and marshals has been an embarrassing one. It has required a good deal of attention on the part of the conferees of the two Houses, and while we have not the items in the bill exactly as some of us would like, we found that it was impossible to do anything in that direction in most instances except upon a basis of compromise. I hope that Senators who may feel dissatisfied with the salaries fixed for the marshals and district attorneys in the different States will realize when they come to look it over that however much they may think a salary fixed is too small, they must understand that if we are to make any progress in this matter at all we have got to give and take a little in dealing with the conferees of the body which has control of the bill in another place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Petitions and memorials are in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McMILLAN presented a petition of the Stone Cutters' Association of Detroit, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the use of convict labor in the construction of public buildings erected by the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the Congregational church, of Bay City, Mich., praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of Washington, remonstrating against placing the statue of Père Marquette in Statuary Hall; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry memorials of citizens of Snohomish County, Wash., remonstrating against the appropriation of public money for sectarian institutions; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PRITCHARD presented the petition of George C. Haynie, of Madison County, N. C., praying that he be granted the pay and allowances of a captain from September 15, 1863, to August 16, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present a resolution adopted by Local Union No. 51, of Boot and Shoe Workers' Union of Manchester, N. H., in favor of the passage of a law giving to the people of the United States free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation. This organization states that "we are of the opinion that to do so would relieve the present monetary stringency and contribute toward bringing to us a return of national prosperity." The resolution is signed by William E. Bailey, president, and James Damory, secretary.

While I do not agree with the views represented in this resolution, I am happy to present the petition to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will lie on the table.

Mr. THURSTON presented sundry memorials of citizens of Omaha, remonstrating against placing the statue of Père Marquette in Statuary Hall; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the faculty of the University of Nebraska, at Lincoln, Nebr., praying for the establishment of an international board of arbitration between Great Britain and the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SQUIRE presented sundry memorials of citizens of Seattle, Port Angeles, Snohomish and Tolt, all in the State of Washington, remonstrating against placing the statue of Père Marquette in Statuary Hall; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the passage of the proposed amendment to section 48 of the tariff law, restricting the bonded period on whisky to be made on and after July 1, 1896, and up to July 1, 1898, to one year; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WHITE. I present by request resolutions adopted at a meeting of sundry citizens of southern California, relative to the settlement of interstate railroad matters and the investment of Government funds. I move that the resolutions lie on the table. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE presented a petition of members of the bar of San Diego, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the holding of stated terms of the United States circuit and district courts of the southern district of California in that city for the purpose of the hearing and trial of all cases arising in the county of San Diego; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Young Men's Democratic Club of Massachusetts, praying for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the members of the California Yearly Meeting of Friends, of Whittier, Cal., remonstrating against the introduction of military training in the public schools of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the establishment of a department of commerce and manufactures; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the enactment of a voluntary bankruptcy law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the passage of the so-called Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Commercial Club of St. Paul, Minn., remonstrating against the construction of a bridge across the Straits of Detroit; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill prohibiting the Postmaster-General from consolidating smaller post-offices outside the corporate limits of cities; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CALL. I present a petition of the Federation of Labor of the District of Columbia, by request, signed by James F. McHugh, president, and Arthur Keep, secretary. The petition prays, in the interest of the workmen in the District of Columbia, that railroad companies applying for new franchises shall be placed under certain restrictions in regard to the interests and the rights of the laborers employed by them. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WETMORE presented a resolution adopted by the legislature of the State of Rhode Island, praying for the establishment of a national military park to commemorate the campaign, siege, and defense of Vicksburg; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[State of Rhode Island, etc. In general assembly, January session, A. D. 1896.]

Resolution.

Whereas there is now pending in Congress a bill (H. R. 4339) to establish a national military park to commemorate the campaign, siege, and defense of Vicksburg, which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs; and

Whereas Gettysburg and Vicksburg, being inseparably connected and constituting the greatest epoch in the war of the rebellion, should be equally commemorated in the most impressive and enduring manner possible; and

Whereas the establishment of a national military park to commemorate the campaign and siege of Vicksburg will be a most appropriate monument to the commander whose genius planned these operations and directed them to a successful issue, and whose fame and character are so dear to all Americans; and

Whereas the State of Rhode Island has not only a general, but also an especial interest in this bill, for the reason that one of her gallant regiments of infantry volunteers, the Seventh, participated in the operations it proposes to commemorate, and has Vicksburg inscribed on its colors; therefore

The legislature of the State of Rhode Island by this concurrent resolution asks its Senators and Representatives in Congress to do all they justly can to secure the prompt passage by Congress at this session of the bill H. R. 4339, and requests the House Committee on Rules to give the earliest possible date for its consideration by the House; and the secretary of state is hereby instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the Senators and members of the House of Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island, and to the Hon. THOMAS B. REED, Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States of America.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, April 20, 1896.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy of a resolution passed by the general assembly of said State on the 17th day of April, A. D. 1896.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid the date and year first above written.

CHARLES P. BENNETT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. WETMORE presented a resolution adopted by the legislature of the State of Rhode Island, praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the pay of letter carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[State of Rhode Island, etc. In general assembly, January session, A. D. 1896.]

Resolution recommending to Congress the passage of the bill now pending in the National House of Representatives to increase the pay of letter carriers.

Whereas there is now pending in Congress a bill (H. R. 260) which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the House of Representatives, entitled "A bill to increase the pay of letter carriers," by the provisions of which the compensation would range from $600 for the first year of regular service, with $500 annually added, to a maximum of $1,000 a year in cities of a population of less than 75,000, and a maximum of $1,200 in larger cities; and

Whereas granting the proposed increase the free-delivery service of the Post-Office Department would still be not only self-supporting, but the source of a large revenue to the Government; and

Whereas the duties of a letter carrier are of an arduous, responsible character, requiring for their best discharge the services of faithful and capable men permanently employed: Now, therefore, it is

Resolved, That in the judgment of the general assembly of the State of Rhode Island, the bill aforesaid to increase the pay of letter carriers should be promptly passed by Congress, that the Senators and Representatives of this State at Washington be, and they are hereby, requested to urge the passage of said bill at the present session of Congress, and that the secretary of state of Rhode Island be, and he hereby is, instructed to send a copy of this resolution to each of our said Senators and Representatives in Congress, as well as to the Hon. THOMAS B. REED, Speaker of the National House of Representatives.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, April 27, 1896.

I certify the foregoing to be a true copy of a resolution passed by the general assembly of said State on the 24th day of April, A. D. 1896.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid the date and year first above written.

CHARLES P. BENNETT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. MANTLE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Columbia Falls, Mont., and a petition of sundry citizens of Hamilton, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter, and also to reduce letter postage to 1 cent per half ounce; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

CUSTOMS EXPENSES.

Mr. ALLISON. I present a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the increase and decrease in force, salary, and expenses at the various customs ports for the first nine months of the fiscal year 1896 over the corresponding period of the fiscal year 1895.

The letter from the Secretary of the Treasury is accompanied by sundry tables and documents relating to an item of importance in the deficiency appropriation bill. These tables and documents require careful examination by the committee and perhaps by the two Houses, and I ask unanimous consent that the letter and accompanying papers be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. THURSTON, from the Select Committee on International Expositions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2889) to aid and encourage the holding of the Tennessee Centennial Exposition at Nashville, Tenn., in the year 1897, and making an appropriation therefor, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 167) authorizing foreign exhibitors at the Tennessee Centennial Exposition, to be held in Nashville, Tenn., in 1897, to bring to this country foreign laborers from their respective countries for the purpose of preparing for and making their exhibits, and allowing articles imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at said exposition to be imported free of duty, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1602) for the relief of A. P. Brown, late postmaster at Le Mars, Iowa, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6037) granting a pension to Mrs. Amanda Woodcock, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5140) for the relief of Michael H. J. Crouch, late of Company M, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5814) granting a pension to Cassie A. Davis, widow of James P. Davis and mother of Mary T. Davis, an invalid daughter, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 412) for the relief of Mrs. Emma D. Larsh, of Denver, Colo., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 413) for the relief of Charles M. Larsh, of Denver, Colo., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., praying for the immediate establishment of a cable between the Pacific coast of the United States and the Hawaiian Islands, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 3068) to facilitate the construction and maintenance of telegraphic communication between the United States, the Hawaiian Islands, and Japan, and to promote commerce; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported adversely thereon, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1316) to facilitate the construction and maintenance of telegraphic cables in the Pacific Ocean for the use of the Government in its foreign intercourse; and

A bill (S. 876) to provide for telegraphic communication between the United States of America, the Hawaiian Islands, and Japan, and to promote commerce.

Mr. ROACH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1300) for the relief of Hannah Newell Barrett, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6431) to pay Peter P. Ferguson $1,765, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 2842) to incorporate the Columbia Subway Company; and

A bill (S. 2123) to test the improved methods for the disposal of sewage and water filtration of villages and cities.

Mr. KYLE, from the Committee to Establish the University of the United States, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4785) to incorporate the National University, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. DANIEL on the 5th instant providing for the production of copies of the drawings of the weekly issues of patents for inventions, etc., intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. GEAR, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (S. 353) to provide for fixing a uniform standard of classification and grading of wheat, corn, oats, barley, and rye, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2953) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Mattie S. Whitney, administratrix of Franklin S. Whitney, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2087) for the relief of the legal representative of Franklin S. Whitney, deceased, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1335) for the relief of John Veeley, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GEAR, from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3080) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to effect an adjustment between the United States and the Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company in relation to certain bonds issued by the United States in aid of the construction of said railway; which was read twice by its title.

PAPERS OF MILITARY INFORMATION DIVISION.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 128) proposing an amendment to section 89, paragraph 2, of the act of January 12, 1895, providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to amend section 89, paragraph 2, of the act of January 12, 1895, by inserting in the last line, after the word "require," the words "and the Secretary of War may authorize, as a maximum number, the printing of 2,500 copies of each of the professional papers published by the military information division of the War Department, or a lesser number, if the interests of the public service justify it."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGISTERS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 127) proposing amendments to section 73, paragraph 32, of the act of January 12, 1895, providing for the public printing and binding and distribution of documents, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to amend paragraph 32 of section 73 of the act so as to read:

Of the registers of the Army and Navy, 2,500 copies of each; 1,000 for the Senate and 1,500 for the House.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUE OF JAMES SHIELDS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. CULLOM December 10, 1895, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed and bound in one volume the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statue of James Shields, 16,500 copies, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 each for use and distribution by the governors of Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to have printed an engraving of said statue, to accompany said proceedings, said engraving to be paid for out of the appropriation for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

JACOB A. WOLFSON.

Mr. BACON. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2382) for the relief of Jacob A.

Wolfson, to report it with an amendment; and I am further instructed by the committee to ask the Senate, upon the adoption of the amendment, to agree to a resolution which I report from the committee referring the claim to the Court of Claims. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Claims was, in line 5, after the word "to," to insert "the estate of"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Jacob A. Wolfson, of Natchitoches Parish, La., the sum of $23,600, in full compensation for property taken as a military necessity by the United States Army during the year 1864.

The amendment was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the estate of Jacob A. Wolfson."

Mr. BACON. I now ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved. That the bill (S. 2382) entitled "A bill for the relief of the estate of Jacob A. Wolfson," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate the facts of the case in accordance with section 14 of said act.

EMPLOYEES OF GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment be discharged from the further consideration of the communication from the Public Printer relative to the amount of "leave money" claimed to be due employees of the Government Printing Office, and that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 3069) for the relief of W. N. Hedden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3070) to correct the military record of George C. Haynie; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3071) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River from the borough of Braddock to the township of Mifflin, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 3072) to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3073) to extend the limits of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 3074) granting a pension to Joseph S. Bunker; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 3075) to incorporate the Washington, Burnt Mills, and Sandyspring Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3076) in relation to the putting up of smoking and fine-cut chewing tobacco and also cigarettes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAFFERY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3077) for the relief of the estate of J. K. Benjamin, deceased, late of New Orleans, La.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3078) for the relief of the estate of Hypolite Chretien, deceased, late of New Orleans, La.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin introduced a bill (S. 3079) granting a pension to Harrison Brott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEAR introduced a bill (S. 3081) for the relief of Edward T. Latta; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WHITE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McBRIDE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GORDON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask that the amendment which I offered yesterday, intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill, may be referred to the Committee on Patents instead of the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THURSTON in the chair). The change of reference will be made, in the absence of objection.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask that a new print of the amendment be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

CONTEMPTS OF COURT.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2984) in relation to contempts of court; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

TOWBOAT ASSOCIATION OF NEW ORLEANS.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, it was Ordered, That the Secretary request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate S. 862, for the relief of the receivers of the Towboat Association of New Orleans, La.

COTTON STATES AND INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. GORDON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate the report of the officer in charge relating to the administration of customs at the Cotton States and International Exposition, lately held at Atlanta, Ga., and that the same be printed when received.

CAPTURE OF SCHOONER COMPETITOR.

Mr. FRYE. Is the morning business completed, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not yet completed. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

Mr. CALL. I ask to have laid before the Senate a resolution I offered yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to protest against the execution of the citizens of the United States captured on board the schooner Competitor by a Spanish cruiser, and to request and demand of the Government of Spain that they shall not be subjected to cruel treatment, but be held only as prisoners of war, unless it shall be established that they were engaged only in carrying merchandise which was contraband and for which they were subjected to no punishment other than the confiscation of their property.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that that resolution ought to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. We have not the facts before the Senate, and therefore I move that the resolution be referred.

Mr. CALL. Do I understand the Senator to move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALL. It is useless to object, Mr. President; but with death hanging over these citizens of the United States, as we are told in all the dispatches that come from there, with the extreme anxiety of the friends of these people, and with the fact that they are not liable to anything more than the usual treatment of prisoners captured on board vessels carrying things contraband of war, it seems to me we might act in this case without delay. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] objected yesterday upon the ground that it was a matter for the President of the United States, but surely we are a part of the executive power and equally responsible with him that protection should be given to American citizens and to see that all their rights are accorded to them. Still, I have no power to prevent the reference of the resolution.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, I should like to state with reference to the prisoners taken on board the Competitor that, at the request of citizens of Florida who have written me upon the subject, I have had one or two interviews with the Secretary of State and have been assured that all proper steps will be taken to secure just treatment for the American citizens among them and to obtain a fair trial for them. I am satisfied, Mr. President, that the State Department is doing all that can be properly done with reference to these persons. In my different interviews with the Secretary in relation to this and other like cases I have been satisfied that American interests were being properly sustained, and I take pleasure in saying that the Department, in my opinion, has done and is doing its full duty toward our Florida people who have been drawn into trouble through the disturbances in Cuba.

Mr. CALL. I wish to say a word. I do not agree with my colleague that this resolution should not be passed. I think it is the duty, the imperative duty, of this body to speak in no doubtful terms in reference to the threatened execution of these citizens of the United States, and I do not feel that I have acquitted myself of my responsibility to the people of Florida and to the relatives of these unfortunate men if I am not heard here demanding, so far as I have any power, immediate action on the part of this Government for their protection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the pending resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

SUGGESTION OF ABSENCE OF A QUORUM.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CHANDLER, as follows:

Resolved, That the suggestion of the absence of a quorum, requiring a call of the Senate, may be made pending a motion to adjourn.

Mr. GALLINGER. In the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER], I ask that that resolution go over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to enter a motion, as I may not be present when the resolution comes up again, that it be referred to the Committee on Rules, as it proposes to make a change in the rules of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that my colleague is absent necessarily.

Mr. HARRIS. I say that I enter the motion now. I do not ask action on it.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over without prejudice, and the motion of the Senator from Tennessee will be entered.

ELECTIONS IN FLORIDA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CALL, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee shall be appointed of five Senators, who shall be charged with the duty of investigating and reporting to the Senate whether there are any influences affecting the elections of members of Congress in the State of Florida which are properly the subject of action by Congress, and without interfering in any way with the exclusive right and power of the States to regulate the same except as to time and place.

Mr. GRAY. I move that that resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to delay the Senate with any discussion of this resolution further than to say that, in my opinion, it is a very extraordinary condition of things in which the Senate of the United States hesitates to make an inquiry into the facts whether or not persons beyond the jurisdiction of the States are contributing great sums of money to debauch and degrade and corrupt the electoral franchise. Senators can not avoid the responsibility by claiming that this is an interference with the powers of the State. Is the power of the State to be destroyed by money from foreigners? Is this body to be debauched and corrupted by men holding seats by purchase? Is there no power in the Federal Government to aid the State in the protection of the legislative power vested in this body and in the other House of Congress? I submit that, in the case of a citizen of another State contributing willfully great sums of money to purchase the elections of members of Congress—beyond the jurisdiction of the State, impossible of indictment and trial, and only the agents through which the money is to be disbursed—for Senators to say that they will participate in this offense by maintaining that Congress has no power to legislate prospectively for the punishment of acts of this description and no power to make an inquiry into them is amazing to me.

Mr. President, I wish the distinction to be drawn between those who are the advocates of republican government, who are democrats in fact, and those who are maintaining and sustaining the money power in its attempt to destroy this Government and to establish over it a government of aristocratical power. That is the distinction in all parties, and it is being made broader and plainer every day. Men can not protect themselves by the name of Republican or Democrat who are aiding in the destruction of the liberties of the people and of the Government itself.

We know that there is a public opinion abroad throughout this country that corruption is used, and that it emanates from men of great fortunes, and we know that the power of taxation in public franchises conveyed to private persons monopolizes the larger part of the taxing power of this country until more than half of its wealth is held by 65,000 persons in the power of taxation. If no one else, Mr. President, raises his voice against this evil, I am here to do it, and to continue the doing of it, relying upon the American people of both parties to sustain the efforts which I endeavor to make for the protection of our form of government and of the rights of the people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] to refer the pending resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to prevail.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Let us have the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then let the vote be taken again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again submit the question on the reference of the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], but being satisfied that he and I would vote the same way on this question, I vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when the name of Mr. VOORHEES was called). The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PASCO. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. GRAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I ask if the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. GRAY. Then I withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Bacon,	Faulkner,	Lodge,	Vest,
Bate,	Frye,	McMillan,	Vilas,
Berry,	Gear,	Mills,	Walthall,

So the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections was agreed to.

WAR IN CUBA.

Mr. FRYE. I now ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the President of the Senate to lay before the Senate a joint resolution which I offered some time ago, which lies upon the table, relating to a recognition of the belligerent rights of Cuba, and I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me for a moment, as I wish to have it referred.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to a reference of the resolution.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to make a motion to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I wish to make a statement in that connection after the joint resolution has been read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the joint resolution referred to by the Senator from Alabama; which will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (S. R. 105) declaring that a state of public war exists in the Island of Cuba, as follows:

Resolved, etc. That it is hereby declared that a state of public war exists in the Island of Cuba between the Government of Spain and the people of that island, who are supporting a separate Government under the name of the Republic of Cuba, and the state of belligerency between said Governments is hereby recognized.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I introduced that joint resolution in the Senate at the time when the conference report from the conference committee of the two Houses was pending in one of the Houses, I think in the House of Representatives, intending, if that conference report should fail, that I would immediately press the resolution upon the consideration of the Senate. Circumstances have prevented me from being here since that time, and in that way delay has occurred, and new developments have occurred in regard to the situation in Cuba which still further demonstrate the truth of the proposition upon which the Senate and the House of Representatives have voted, that a state of public war exists in the Island of Cuba. We expressed an opinion that it was proper under those circumstances that belligerent rights should be accorded to both parties in our ports and upon our territory. Having expressed an opinion of that kind, and made a declaration to the effect that public war exists there, I desire now to ask the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate upon the state of facts existing which have been developed since the introduction of that resolution, which, I think, go greatly to strengthen and to confirm the proposition which the two Houses have united in voting upon, and in voting favorably upon.

I believe, Mr. President, that the time has arrived when in sheer justice to our own people, without reference to any effect it may have upon the promotion of the war in Cuba or the fortunes of either side, that it is our duty to declare that a state of public war exists there and that the laws of war as they are recognized among the nations of the earth should be applicable to that situation, and that we should not be left here in a state of doubt and uncertainty as to whether our relations to the people of Cuba or whether either the Spanish Government or the Republic are to be controlled by the laws of war, or whether they are to be controlled by the laws of peace.

I can not reconcile it to myself to affirm as a matter of fact that no war exists in Cuba. The Spanish Government recognizes the existence of war there, not only in reference to the conduct that she holds toward the people that she is trying to suppress, but also in regard to our own people and our own commerce. She treats our commerce as if it were a contraband of war. No nation has a right to do that with reference to the Government of the United States when that nation is in a condition of peace. She can not hold that her relations to our own people are those of perfect peace, and at the same time that she has the right to impose upon the Government of the United States and upon its commerce or upon its people the laws of war, which they are continually doing.

I hope that some speedy action will be taken; that is to say, proper action—deliberate, of course; firm and consistent and energetic—to determine the solution of this question before this Congress adjourns. I wish to say that I do not believe that the Congress of the United States can by a final adjournment of this session afford to leave that question in the shape it is now in before the world.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Maine allow me one word only?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; one word.

Mr. CALL. I introduced a resolution on the same subject some time ago, which still lies upon the table. I had hoped to obtain early action upon it, but I will ask that the same reference may be made of that resolution as that asked for by the Senator from Alabama as to his resolution.

Mr. FRYE. There is no objection to the reference of the resolutions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the Secretary read the amendment on page 6 of the bill, after the word "dollars," in line 25, to strike out the remainder of the item.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," on page 2, line 25, it is proposed to strike out:

Which said sum the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to expend from the balance on hand heretofore appropriated for entrance to Point Judith Pond.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 31, line 4, to increase the appropriation for improving the harbor at Greenbay, Wis., from $25,000 to $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 11, after the word "basin," to insert "and removing wreck therefrom"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Kenosha, Wis.: Continuing improvement, $24,000, of which sum $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in dredging in the harbor basin and removing wreck therefrom, and the balance of said $24,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for repairing piers and deepening and maintaining channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 19, before the word "improvement," to strike out "Continuing" and insert "Completing"; in line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four thousand five hundred" and insert "forty-four thousand four hundred and forty"; and in line 21, after the word "submitted," to strike out "and approved by the Chief of Engineers in House Document No. 300, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session," and insert "March 10, 1896"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Manitowoc, Wis.: Completing improvement, $14,440, to be expended on plan submitted March 10, 1896, for extending piers to the 22-foot contour and deepening channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert "and so much thereof as may be necessary may be used for the maintenance, operating, and care of the works"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal: Continuing improvement, $30,000, and so much thereof as may be necessary may be used for the maintenance, operating, and care of the works.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 10, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Capt. Carl F. Palfrey, Corps of Engineers, July 8," and insert "in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at South Milwaukee, Wis., in accordance with report and plan submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1895, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 1, after the word "ninety-four," to strike out "consisting of Col. O. M. Poe, Maj. James F. Gregory, and Maj. Clinton B. Sears"; and in line 7, after the word "appropriated," to strike out:

Provided, That such project of improvement may be subject to modification in the interests of commerce, as the Secretary of War may direct, as the work progresses, without, however, increasing the above aggregate.

And insert:

Provided, That in making such contracts the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than 25 per cent of the whole amount authorized to be expended: And provided further.

So as to make the clause read:

For improving the harbor at Duluth, Minn., and Superior, Wis., at the west end of Lake Superior: Continuing improvement, $50,000, whereof $30,000 shall be expended upon the Duluth portion of said harbor and $20,000 shall be expended upon the Superior portion thereof; and contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the project for deepening said harbor and the entrances thereto, reported to the War Department by the commission of engineers appointed under the joint resolution of Congress approved June 23, 1894, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $3,080,553, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided, That in making such contracts the Secretary of War, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 23, to increase the appropriation for improving harbor at Agate Bay, Minnesota, from $30,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 25, after the word "improvement," to strike out:

One hundred thousand dollars, of which $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used in opening the western end of the tidal canal in said harbor to the depth of 8 feet below low tide.

And insert:

Under existing project, $75,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $666,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Oakland, Cal.: Continuing improvement under existing project, $75,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $666,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 12, to increase the appropriation for improving the harbor at San Diego, Cal., from $40,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. The next item in relation to the Santa Monica improvement may be passed over for the present.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest that it be passed over.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], I believe, wants to make a few feeble remarks in relation to it.

Mr. WHITE. A few remarks. Whether they are feeble or not will depend upon subsequent developments.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 36, line 12, to increase the appropriation for improving the harbor at San Luis Obispo, Cal., from $32,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 14, after the word "the," to strike out:

Report of Col. W. H. H. Benyaurd, submitted in Senate Executive Document No. 61, Fifty-third Congress, third session, $50,000.

And insert:

Project submitted February 7, 1895, $50,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $342,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Wilmington Harbor, California, in accordance with the project submitted February 7, 1895, $50,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $342,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 10, after the word "Oregon," to strike out "Dredging to complete"; in line 14, after the word "dredge," to insert "and two hopper scows"; and in line 15, after the word "dredging," to insert "within the limit of this appropriation"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Coos Bay, Oregon, $14,390: Provided, That so much of this sum as may be necessary shall be added to the amount now on hand for the construction or purchase of a dredge and two hopper scows, and that dredging within the limit of this appropriation may be contracted for in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers, and in such portion of the bay as may be found necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 17, to strike out:

Improving Port Orford Harbor, at Grave Yard Point, Oregon, according to plan recommended by Capt. Thomas W. Symons, of the Corps of Engineers, as per House Document No. 313, Fifty-third Congress, third session, January 30, 1895, to cost not to exceed $203,336, and the unexpended balance of the appropriation heretofore made March 3, 1879, for the establishment of a harbor of refuge on the Pacific coast is hereby transferred to be expended on this improvement.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I inquire of the chairman of the committee upon what grounds this appropriation is proposed to be stricken out?

Mr. FRYE. On the ground that the expenditure of a dollar of Government money at that point would be simply a waste.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Upon what report does the Senator from Maine base that statement?

Mr. FRYE. Upon all the reports that have ever been made to the Engineer Department.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words as to the amendment.

There has been an effort, dating back a good many years, as far as 1873, to secure some appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Port Orford. The first effort was to secure an appropriation sufficient to create at that point a harbor of refuge for vessels. In 1873 Maj. H. M. Robert, Corps of Engineers, made a project for constructing a harbor at Port Orford by building a breakwater 1,500 yards long, at an estimated cost of about $9,000,000. In 1877 the board of engineers for the Pacific coast, composed of Lieutenant-Colonels Alexander, Williamson, and Stewart and Major Mendell, made a second plan and location for a breakwater for a harbor at Port Orford. The estimated cost of their project was $10,507,343. Again, in 1878, another survey and estimate were made by Maj. J. M. Wilson, Corps of Engineers, then in charge of river and harbor improvements on the Pacific Coast. That was with a view of creating a harbor of refuge at this point, and his estimate for a breakwater 5,000 feet long was $9,405,000.

In pursuance of an act of Congress authorizing a report from the engineers as to the best location for a harbor of refuge on the Pacific Coast, taking in the whole coast—California, Oregon, Alaska—a report was made favoring Port Orford as the proper place, as the one above all others at which a harbor of refuge should be located, and for which an appropriation should be made. Following that report Congress, in 1879, in March, the last month of the session, passed an act appropriating $150,000 looking to the commencement of the work at that place with a view to the establishment of a harbor of refuge. The Secretary of War declined to expend the money, for the single reason, not that there could not be a harbor of refuge created at that port by a proper expenditure of money, but for the reason that the appropriation was so small, considered in connection with the estimates for the work, that he would not expend the money, and he did not.

That money has never been expended. It has never gone back into the general fund in the Treasury. It stands to-day credited to Port Orford; for improvements at that point, $150,000. It was believed, however, by those interested in the navigation of the Pacific Ocean on that coast and by delegations representing California and Oregon that it would be impossible to secure from Congress the necessary appropriation, mounting up into the millions, eight or nine or ten millions, whatever it was, for a work of this kind at that point. Consequently we went to work to have another survey made with a view of ascertaining whether it was practicable and advisable to expend this money and perhaps a little additional in the improvement of the harbor with two ends in view, one that of creating a harbor of refuge on a smaller scale, and the other the improvement of shipping facilities at that point.

It was in view of facts of that kind that the latest report was made, which was submitted last year by Captain Symons. It is true that Captain Symons in his report states the improvements suggested in the act authorizing the survey are not advisable so far as creating a harbor of refuge is concerned, but he does say that the shipping facilities of the place could be improved, as I understand the report, by the expenditure of $203,000. It was in pursuance of that report which the chairman of the Committee on Commerce condemns that the House of Representatives put this provision in the bill, applying the $150,000 heretofore appropriated, which has stood credited to the harbor since 1879, and adding to it enough to make it $203,000.

I think I have fairly stated the history of legislation and appropriations in regard to this harbor. I concede that the commerce of this port at present is not great, and it never will be very great until the harbor is improved. When it is improved the commerce will be considerable. There is one of the finest timber countries adjacent to this harbor that there is in the world. The report which is condemned by the chairman of the committee states, I think, in terms that there are 100 square miles of the finest timber extant, fir and white cedar, adjacent to this harbor.

It is a very large tract of timber. I have traveled through that country myself. There is the finest fir, cedar, myrtle, and also live oak in the world in Coos and Curry counties, Ore. There is no finer anywhere. It is one of the finest dairy countries in the world. There are hundreds of tons of butter and cheesemanufactured in Curry County, Ore., to-day, and in Coos County, which is adjacent; and because it is a portion of the State somewhat isolated, as stated in the report, is no reason why it should be ignored when we are improving our rivers and harbors.

I should be willing to cut the appropriation down so that it will take no new money from the Treasury, and simply allow the $150,000 appropriated in 1879, which has never gone back into the general fund in the Treasury and is credited to this place, to be appropriated at the present session for this work. I hope the chairman of the committee can see his way clear to consent to do that.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the business to be accommodated by this great harbor is 1 daily stage, 2 hotels, 1 store, 1 feed stable,

1 apothecary shop, 1 newspaper, 1 carpenter shop, 1 blacksmith shop, 1 boot shop, 1 church, 1 school, 1 saloon, and 1 small sawmill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator from Maine is stating the business done at that particular point?

Mr. FRYE. At Port Orford. I am not amazed at anything that Oregon asks. I have got over that. But Oregon has three times had a board of engineers to go and visit this place with reference to establishing and creating a harbor of refuge. One board reported that it would require $10,000,000; another $9,000,000, and the third $11,000,000.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. All reported in favor of it—every one of them.

Mr. FRYE. In favor of it? They reported that it could be made with the expenditure of those various sums of money. Finally an appropriation was made. That does not astonish me, because my friend the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], acting as he does for the State of Oregon, with his influence in the United States Senate and with the influence of the other Senator who was here at that time—

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not appear to have much influence with the committee in reference to this matter.

Mr. FRYE. I am not surprised at any kind of an appropriation. Congress appropriated one hundred and fifty or one hundred and sixty thousand dollars to go on to the $10,000,000; and the engineer very sensibly refused to follow Congress and spend it, and it never has been expended.

The Senator from Oregon wants to compromise. What is the proposition? To expend $150,000 in doing what? To build a wharf for Port Orford. Captain Symons was before the committee, and he said it is nothing under the sun except a proposition to build a wharf, and in his report he says it is nothing but a proposition to build a wharf. He says that the wharf will be so exposed to the southeasterly storms of the Pacific Ocean that it can be used but four months in summer time. He says still further that it is so exposed that there must be heavy anchors sunk off some distance in front of the wharf, and that then there must be buoys attached to those anchors to which vessels which happen to be at the wharf can attach their hawsers and pull themselves out against the wind, so as not to go ashore. He says still further that the wharf must be made of iron, the most powerful, the strongest wharf that by any possibility can be made. It must be attached to legs at the bottom of the sea, and even then there is a serious doubt whether it will stay there. They may need a breakwater then.

Yet the Senator from Oregon is asking the Senate to strike out the amendment. The Senate is putting back every single provision we did strike out. I recognize that fact, but I do not think that even the United States Senate, with its liberal and gracious moods, will, at the request of the Senator from Oregon, restore the provision to build a wharf for one sawmill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I move to amend the committee amendment by limiting the appropriation to the $150,000 heretofore appropriated.

In response to the statement of the chairman of the committee in regard to what he deems the unimportance of this port, I will state that the necessity for the improvement is not to be determined by the number of houses on the banks of the coast at this particular place. You must take a wider view of the matter than that. You must take into consideration the adjacent country, its character, its timber, its products, its capacity, its capabilities, and its possibilities.

I undertake to say that there is not a more interesting piece of country in the United States to-day than that adjacent to the proposed harbor at Port Orford, in the county of Curry. There is no great amount of population there yet, and there never will be unless they have a helping hand.

Mr. FRYE. By building a wharf?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. That is all very well. If by the building of a wharf you will facilitate the shipping interests and improve them, why not build the wharf, so far as that is concerned?

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon a question.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. Has the Senator in his wide experience ever known any State or Territory or section, except the State of Oregon and Port Orford, to ask the Government of the United States to build a wharf for them?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Oh, well, I do not know what has been done heretofore. I am talking about what ought to be done now, in this particular case. I do not care whether it has been done heretofore or not. The question is, Can the shipping facilities be improved by the appropriation of this money, according to the report of the engineer? That is the question.

Mr. FRYE. Of course it will help the sawmill there to have a wharf.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The report of the engineer is to the effect that the shipping facilities will be improved by the appropriation of $203,000, which is only a fraction more than the money that is left idle and will remain in the Treasury for years to come for all we know. It has been there now seventeen years, lying idle, credited to this harbor.

Now, all I ask is that the $150,000 shall be applied to this work. There is an estimate giving the plan and all about it. I will take the chances of getting more money hereafter. But it does seem to me that it is useless to allow this money to lie idle when it can be applied there to the purposes stated in the report of the engineer. As I said before, this is a very interesting country. There were 82 tons of butter alone shipped from that port last year, small as the facilities are.

Mr. FRYE. That would not take a 100-ton schooner.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. We want to improve the harbor so that the country can be developed. It is a new country. All I am asking is that we amend the amendment so as to give us the $150,000 appropriated in 1879, and let it go at that. I hope the Senate will stand by me and the committee. I trust the chairman of the committee himself will see the justice of the claim I am making in behalf of Port Orford.

I hope the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is also a member of the Committee on Commerce, and who, I see, is on his feet, will not feel it incumbent on himself to make any observations simply for the purpose of standing by the committee. I know that away down in his mind he agrees with me that something ought to be done for Port Orford.

I ask for a vote on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I know that the Senator from Oregon has something of prophetic talent and prescience which is unrivaled in regard to the river and harbor bill, but he has no X rays that will tell him what conclusion I have come to upon the evidence before the committee in regard to this improvement.

The Committee on Commerce has been unusually generous to the Pacific States. I use the word "generous" in its full acceptance. Of the aggregate appropriation in this bill, which in continuing contracts and direct appropriations amounts to something like $70,000,000 as it stands now, $11,000,000 has gone to the three States of Washington, Oregon, and California. Oregon has been peculiarly blessed, if I may use the expression, in these appropriations. It has had the largest share of the amount given to that coast.

I have every disposition in the world to make liberal appropriations for river and harbor improvements. When this appropriation to which the Senator from Oregon refers was originally made his former colleague, Mr. Dolph, was a member of the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No; he was not.

Mr. VEST. I said his former colleague.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No; my former colleague, Mr. Dolph, was not then a member of the Senate. I was a member myself, and I was not on the committee either.

Mr. VEST. One of the Oregon Senators was upon the committee, as has always been the case during my service in the Senate. All three of those States have members on the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It was ex-Senator Grover of Oregon who was a member of the committee at that time.

Mr. VEST. There has never been a time when Oregon was not represented on that committee.

Mr. FRYE. On the committees in both Houses, too.

Mr. VEST. In both Houses. Now, all three of those States have members upon the Commerce Committee. I do not complain of any Senator for doing the best he can for his constituents and for appropriations for rivers and harbors in his State, but there is a responsibility resting upon the Commerce Committee and upon the Senate which can not be delegated to the Senators from any particular State, either as to the necessity for appropriations or the estimate as to cost.

Now, in this particular instance, I mean at the present session, the engineer, Captain Symons, who had charge of this work and was stationed there for a number of years, according to his testimony, was before us. He testified fully and was cross-examined in regard to his opinion as to the necessity for this improvement. The great argument made was for a harbor of refuge at this point; and I will ask the Secretary to read what I have marked as the succinct statement of that engineer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated. The Secretary read as follows:

The following are extracts from the report of Captain Symons:

"Port Orford is an open roadstead and village on the coast of Oregon, 51½ miles north of the California and Oregon boundary line. A map of the coast and its vicinity is submitted, in order that a correct understanding of its general situation may be attained.

"An inspection of the maps shows that Port Orford is wide open to the sea to the southward, the direction from which come the worst storms, and that the constructions as located are nearly head on to the sea and do not provide any inclosed anchorage area. This being the case, it is certain that they do not and can not be considered as providing in the remotest degree a 'harbor of refuge.' Therefore this view of the proposed improvements must be entirely cast aside, and they must be considered solely in relation to their use for 'shipping purposes' as mentioned in the law.

"These constructions for 'shipping purposes' are therefore construed to be piers or wharves, and the estimate herewith is for their construction as wharves for commercial shipping purposes."

Mr. VEST. That eliminates, if the report is to be taken for anything, the consideration of a harbor of refuge at that point, and it remits us entirely to the demand in favor of the construction of a wharf or wharves at that place. As was pertinently and appropriately asked by the chairman of the committee, when was it the custom of Congress openly and undisguisedly to make appropriations for wharves at any place? Is that within the purview and jurisdiction of the national legislative body? If we enter upon the construction of wharves at different harbors in the United States there is no limit to the appropriations, and instead of the clamor which is now here in regard to rivers and harbors there will be a burst of righteous indignation all over the land.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question? What is the difference in principle between an appropriation of money by Congress for the purpose of building a jetty out so as to deepen the water and the building a wharf out so as to reach deep water to accommodate shipping? Is there any difference between them?

Mr. VEST. With great respect to the Senator, the two things are not at all alike. When you build a jetty—

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. One is a jetty and the other is a wharf. That is the difference.

Mr. VEST. When you build a jetty you deepen the harbor and add to its navigability. You put more water there for the purpose of letting ships come in and unload and discharge their cargoes and be reloaded for an outward voyage. When you put a wharf there you do not add one inch of water; and nobody can pretend that you do. You simply put a structure there, a facility for putting freight upon a vessel and taking freight from a vessel. It does not add one inch to the navigability of the stream, and therefore it is outside the jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States. My friend the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] suggests to me that you might as well put a derrick there to lift out a cargo from an incoming vessel and to put a cargo on a vessel.

Mr. FRYE. I am sorry the Senator suggested that. It will be asked for.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, if you go on building wharves, there is no harbor in the United States which will not say, "You built a wharf in Oregon; build one here"; and every Senator upon this floor will feel himself called upon in the interest of his constituents to follow the example of the Senator from Oregon. This thing is too plain.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, I have the closing of this argument, I believe.

Mr. VEST. Of course the Senator can close.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I undertake to say there is not one particle of difference in principle between building a jetty out so as to increase the depth of water for ships in a port and building a wharf out over shallow water so that the ships and the land can be connected. There is not one particle of difference. I undertake to say as a matter of law, of constitutional law, that if Congress has the jurisdiction, if it has the power, if it has the right in the one case it has the right in the other, because neither the Senator from Missouri nor any other lawyer can draw a distinction except to say that the one is a wharf and the other is a jetty. Each is intended to improve the commerce, to improve the shipping facilities of the port. One does it by building a jetty, the other does it by building a wharf. If there is a constitutional right to appropriate money for the one there is a constitutional right to appropriate money for the other.

Mr. VEST. Has it ever been done by Congress?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not care a cent whether it has ever been done or not; that is not the question. We are on a constitutional question now. The Senator from Missouri undertakes to say that there is no constitutional power to appropriate money to build a wharf out over the shallow water so that ships can be accommodated. I undertake to deny the proposition, and I contend, and I stand on solid ground, as I think, that if there is constitutional power in Congress to appropriate money to build a jetty so as to get to deep water, and have deep water to connect the ships with the land to facilitate commerce, then the same power exists for the purpose of building a wharf over the shallow water so as to connect the land with the ships.

This is all I desire to say, Mr. President. I ask for a vote on my amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 38, line 6, after the word "Washington," to strike out "$10,000, as recommended by Capt. T. W. Symons, Corps of Engineers, March 20," and insert "in accordance with plan submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for"; in line 10, after the word "ninety-five," to insert "$20,000"; in line 15, after the word "and," to strike out "ninety" and insert "eighty"; and in line 16, after the word "appropriated," to insert "and the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, transfer the Government plant, or any part of it, now at the mouth of the Columbia River, to Grays Harbor"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Grays Harbor and bar entrance, Washington, in accordance with plan submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1895, $20,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $980,000, exclusive of the sum herein appropriated, and the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, transfer the Government plant, or any part of it, now at the mouth of the Columbia River, to Grays Harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 23, after the word "Harbor," to strike out "with a view to its improvement" and insert "and the cost of its improvement to be estimated"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Olympia Harbor, Washington: Continuing improvement, $32,000; and that a survey be made of the Deschutes River at its entrance in Olympia Harbor, and the cost of its improvement to be estimated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 2, to increase the appropriation for improving Everett Harbor, Washington, from $20,000 to $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty-five," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, expend so much of this as may be necessary for repairing damages to improvements, heretofore made, by the recent freshet.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Kennebec River, Maine: Continuing improvement, $55,000; and the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, expend so much of this as may be necessary for repairing damages to improvements, heretofore made, by the recent freshet.

Mr. FRYE. The comma after the word "improvements," in line 8, should be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The comma will be stricken out. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 15, to insert:

Improving Union River, Maine, by dredging, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 19, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Col. D. P. Heap, January 10" and insert "January 21"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Georges River, Maine, in accordance with plans submitted January 21, 1895, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 23, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Col. D. P. Heap, December 13" and insert "December 19"; and in line 24, after the word "ninety-four," to strike out "twelve" and insert "completing improvement, nineteen"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Sasana River, Maine, according to plan submitted December 19, 1894, completing improvement, $19,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten"; and in the same line, after the word "which," to strike out "ten" and insert "five"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Weymouth River, Massachusetts: Continuing improvement, $10,000, of which $5,000 shall be used in the improvement of Weymouth Back River.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the committee will not insist on the amendment here proposed. It is a very small matter. I think it proceeds on a misunderstanding, that the appropriation was reduced from $10,000 to $5,000 on the idea that a survey of a portion of the river had not been completed. It is true that a part of the survey has not been completed, but for the portion absolutely completed the engineer estimates $22,000. Twenty-five hundred dollars was appropriated in the Fifty-third Congress. The appropriation was too small to begin the work. With $5,000, making in all $7,500, it would still be too small to begin the work profitably, and the whole business would be left to a protracted delay. I have here a letter from one of the large manufacturing companies on the stream, which states that—

We are very greatly disappointed at this, for the reason that we have been waiting patiently for years to get enough money to improve this channel. At present we have but 16 feet of water at high tide and 8 feet at low tide. The channel is very narrow and crooked, and it is with difficulty that we can get in vessels carrying 800 to 900 tons. Even our own towboat can not reach our works at less than about half tide. One hundred and fifty thousand tons of goods go in and out of this river annually, and as we are remote from the railroad, we are dependent upon water transportation.

The letter then goes on to make the statement which I have made in regard to the amount needed. It is a tide-water river, flowing into Boston Harbor. It is a large manufacturing town, which lies apart, off from the line of the railroad.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. How many tons?

Mr. LODGE. One hundred and fifty thousand tons of goods came down the river last year. The amount asked altogether is $10,000, which is not an excessive appropriation. Twenty-two thousand dollars is needed to complete the improvement now estimated for by the engineers. There is a large business there and the people are dependent on this water service. I think there have been no increases asked in the Senate of any of the Massachusetts appropriations, but I do hope that the committee will be willing to allow the House appropriation to stand. I do not seek any increase, but simply that it shall stand at $10,000 instead of $5,000.

Mr. FRYE. It is just to the Senator from Massachusetts to state that when the committee made this amendment they did not have the papers showing a second project to which the Senator refers.

Mr. LODGE. I did not have it then, but I have it here in the report of the committee:

The project for the improvement of Weymouth (Back) River was submitted February 7, 1891. It proposed to dredge a channel through the outer bar 200 feet wide and 12 feet deep at mean low water.

At an estimated cost of $22,000. That is for the survey actually made. As I understood it, the appropriation was reduced $5,000 because the upper part of the river had not been surveyed, and at the time I supposed that it was to cover all parts of the river.

Mr. FRYE. I think it is all right to disagree to the amendment. The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 41, line 2, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Col. S. M. Mansfield, December 31, 1890," and insert "in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1891"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Town River, Massachusetts, in accordance with recommendations submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1891, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 13, to increase the appropriation for improving Pawcatuck River, Rhode Island and Connecticut, from $6,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 15, after the word "improvement," to strike out "$14,000" and insert:

According to the report of the Chief of Engineers, dated April 9, 1896, $25,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary for the completion of such project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $707,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island: Continuing improvement, according to the report of the Chief of Engineers, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to prescribe suitable rules and regulations in respect to the height and construction of the pilot houses, flag poles, and smokestacks of all tugs propelled by steam, with or without vessels in tow, habitually using said river, from and after the completion of the bridges at Third and Fourth avenues, now being modified by direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the act of Congress approved September 19, 1890, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," to the end that the draws of said bridges shall not be required to be opened or operated oftener than necessary between 10 o'clock in the forenoon and 5 o'clock in the afternoon: Provided, That the draw of the bridge at the mouth of Spuyten Duyvil Creek, authorized by the Secretary of War August 28, 1894, to be reconstructed at the height of only 34 feet above high water, be opened at all times during the day and night when approached by boats desiring to pass it:

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Harlem River, New York: Continuing improvement, $125,000. And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 13 on page 43.

Mr. FRYE. In line 13 I move to strike out the words "For maintenance" and insert "Continuing improvement"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Browns Creek, Sayville, Long Island, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 43, line 16, after the words "New York," to strike out "Continuing" and insert "Completing"; and in line 17, before the word

"thousand," to strike out "nine" and insert "thirteen"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Patchogue River, New York: Completing improvement, $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "eight"; and in line 23, after the words "Cross-Over Light," to strike out "in the St. Lawrence River between Ogdensburg and the foot of Lake Ontario"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving shoal between Sister Islands and Cross-Over Light, St. Lawrence River, New York: Continuing improvement, $8,000, to be expended for improving shoals between Sister Islands and Cross-Over Light.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 25, before the word "river," to insert "Congress in the," and on page 44, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Niagara River from Tonawanda to Port Day, in accordance with plan adopted by Congress in the river and harbor act of August 17, 1894: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 5, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Col. G. L. Gillespie, August 25" and insert "in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Bronx River, New York, in accordance with the plan submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1891, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 19, after the word "the," to strike out "approved project for its improvement" and insert "project submitted January 7, 1895"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Dennis Creek, New Jersey, in accordance with the project submitted January 7, 1895, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 23, before the word "improvement," to strike out "Continuing" and insert "Completing"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Elizabeth River, New Jersey: Completing improvement, $3,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 14, after the word "plan," to strike out "recommended by Maj. C. W. Raymond, and printed in House Executive Document No. 176, Fifty-third Congress, third session, thirty-five" and insert "submitted January 4, 1895, thirty-seven," and in line 20, after the word "be," to strike out "immediately available, to be"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cooper Creek, New Jersey: Completing improvement in accordance with the plan submitted January 4, 1895, $37,000; of which amount $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in rebuilding the dike on Government reservation in the Delaware River at Woodbury Creek.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 24, to strike out:

For completion of lock and dam at Herr Island, Allegheny River, and construction of the two locks and dams referred to in the report of Maj. R. L. Hoxie, in House Document No. 204, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.

And insert:

For continuing construction of lock and dam at Herr Island, Allegheny River, under existing project, and commencing construction of two additional locks and dams on said river, one above the head of Six Mile Island and the other at Springdale, according to report submitted January 22, 1896.

So as to make the clause read:

For continuing construction of lock and dam at Herr Island, Allegheny River, under existing project, and commencing construction of two additional locks and dams on said river, one above the head of Six Mile Island and the other at Springdale, according to report submitted January 22, 1896, $50,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the projects of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $394,500, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I notice on pages 44 and 45, as well as through the bill generally, there are a number of appropriations for the improvement of creeks, and without any statement as to the character of the creek or the ends to be accomplished by their improvement. For instance, on page 44, "improving Alloway Creek, New Jersey," $3,000; "improving Dennis Creek, New Jersey," $5,000; on page 45, "improving Goshen Creek, New Jersey," $3,000; "improving Cooper Creek, New Jersey," $37,000, etc. I have not observed that it is proposed we shall improve any ditches. I have not examined the bill closely enough to see whether any ditches are to be improved or not, but when we go from rivers and harbors down to creeks I think we ought to have an explanation from the honorable chairman of the committee showing the character of the creeks, their width, their present depth without the improvement, what will be required to improve them, the final cost of the improvement, what the improvements are to be, and what will be accomplished in aid of commerce when the improvements have been made.

Mr. FRYE. Some of these creeks are more important than a large majority of the rivers. One-half of Louisiana at least, as the Senator from Nebraska must be aware, is a very flat, low State, and it is bisected all around by tide water. The tide water extends up into the State for miles and miles and it is unfortunately called a creek. There are a great many of them in the South of the same character.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not speaking of Louisiana.

Mr. FRYE. They call them bayous in Louisiana.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not speaking of the lagoons or bayous of Louisiana. I am familiar with them to some extent, and they are rivers as a matter of fact.

Mr. FRYE. The creeks in New Jersey are precisely the same as bayous.

Mr. ALLEN. But the creeks where there is barely a foundation or barely a ditch, and that by a lavish expenditure of money can be converted into a river or a channel, I think, require some explanation at the hands of the Senator.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will look at the report of the committee he will find in every one of these cases just what the creek is. It is an unfortunate name, as bayou is an unfortunate name. If they were called rivers it would be all right and nobody would raise any question at all. But the creeks may be carrying a commerce which is hardly equaled by any of the great rivers in the country. There are very important creeks in New York. Take Newtown Creek, in New York. There is a provision in the bill for continuing contract. The commerce on that river I think amounted last year to about $86,000,000. That is Newtown Creek.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6293) to increase the pension of Peter Rafferty; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 180) for the relief of Ex-Naval Cadet Henry T. Baker.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on Monday, the 18th day of May, at 2 o'clock p. m.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 4th instant approved and signed the act (S. 67) for the relief of E. R. Shipley.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution submitted by Mr. PEPPER, providing for a committee of five Senators to investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution, on which the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. I desire to inquire whether it suits the convenience of the Senator from New York to agree upon a time—some time during the day—when we might reach a vote upon the pending resolution?

Mr. HILL. I am unable at present to fix such a time, I will inform the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. Would it—

Mr. HILL. I will proceed as diligently as possible and present my views. Of course I can not speak for any others who may wish to address the Senate upon the subject.

Mr. PEPPER. I understood yesterday that the Senator from New York would probably be able to complete his argument this day, within an hour or two, at any rate. I am extremely anxious, and so are other Senators, that we should dispose of the resolution soon—as soon as convenient, at least. I will ask the Senator, then, whether he would be willing to fix some hour to-night—say at 8 or 9 o'clock—the Senate to proceed without an adjournment?

Mr. HILL. I should prefer not to do so at this time.

Mr. PEPPER. Then, Mr. President, I do not see any other way than to ask the Senate to remain in session until the resolution is disposed of. I will give notice to all, particularly to the Senator from New York, that objection will be made to the consideration of every other proceeding except the bond resolution until it is disposed of, and I will ask the Senate to remain in session and to oppose all motions to adjourn until we have concluded the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HILL. The course marked out for himself by the Senator from Kansas, namely, the refusal to allow any Senator to call up any other business in the meantime, will not specially inconvenience me; it will only inconvenience other Senators who desire to transact the public business.

Mr. PEPPER. I will state to the Senator that I have no other understanding than that no Senators, except probably himself and one or two upon the other side of the Chamber and none on this side, expect to take any further part in the discussion of the resolution. So I am not trying to cut off—

Mr. HILL. The difficulty seems to be that the distinguished Senator from Kansas really obtained the consent of the Senate to proceed with the resolution under what in other places might be termed false pretenses. I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Senator from Kansas assured the Senate when it took up the resolution that the friends of the resolution did not propose to submit any further remarks.

Mr. PEPPER. That was my understanding.

Mr. HILL. The Senate will recall the fact that I questioned the authority of the Senator from Kansas to make that statement. I said he assumed to speak for all the friends of the resolution when it was very questionable whether he had the power to do so.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator allow me at that point? He surely misunderstood me.

Mr. HILL. I will yield in a moment, please. Yesterday, after I had spoken an hour or so, I was unexpectedly called upon to yield by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], who had a regular prepared written speech of an hour and a quarter, and with that courtesy which I usually exercise or endeavor to exercise I felt constrained to yield to him.

Mr. PEPPER. Now, will the Senator allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HILL. The Senator may be just as much mistaken now about the fact that no friend of the resolution proposes to speak as when he first obtained the consent of the Senate to take up the resolution upon the assurance that the friends of the resolution did not propose to make any further remarks.

Mr. PEPPER. I suppose the Senator from New York understands well enough that I did not assume to speak for every Senator. I only gave what was my opinion in the premises, that there would be no disposition upon the part of the friends of the resolution to consume time in discussing it. I had no knowledge until yesterday, probably about this time or later in the day, that the Senator from South Dakota had in his mind a desire to occupy some time. It was as much a surprise to me as it was to the Senator from New York. I do not now presume to speak for anyone personally.

Mr. HILL. There was, then, a mutual surprise.

Mr. President, I do not begrudge the time that was taken by the Senator from South Dakota upon the pending question. He contributed some new ideas to the discussion, and it has given me an opportunity to reply. I thought the friends of the measure would not feel as though it was incumbent upon them to remain entirely silent in regard to the arguments presented against the resolution, and the Senator from South Dakota seems to have been prepared for some time to enter into the discussion. I welcome him into the arena of this debate.

I was a little surprised at some of the suggestions made by the Senator from South Dakota. I was surprised at his frequent quotations from what he called the metropolitan or city press. He read several long extracts from a portion of the New York press. He commented upon articles which had appeared in such press as though they were conclusive of the questions involved. Undoubtedly he has a very high opinion of the press of New York City or he would not have taken the pains to put large extracts from the metropolitan newspapers in the RECORD. It was the confidence that he had exhibited in the New York papers which undoubtedly induced him to make the extracts.

The Senator from South Dakota is rather a new convert in his admiration for the great metropolitan city dailies. Someone has honored me with a speech, elaborately gotten up in pamphlet form and beautifully covered, upon the subject of "The editor in politics," delivered at an editorial banquet at Sioux Falls, S. Dak., October 2, 1895. It is entitled "The editor in politics—Response by R. F. PETTIGREW." I want to read a few extracts from that speech.

The opening sentence is very good. He was speaking before this editorial association. He says:

I stand before you to-night because you have called me—

That was very kind of him—

not because I expect to say anything that will be of value to you.

And from an examination of the speech I think it is evident that neither he nor his audience was disappointed in his expectations. [Laughter.] He then proceeded to pay a compliment to the press generally. I will read a few extracts:

It is a trite saying that a free press is the fountain of liberty.

That is absolutely a new idea. No one had ever contributed that sentiment before. Then he further says:

A government for all the people can not long exist in which the press is dominated by any influence except the popular voice.

Then he proceeds to speak of the dangers that are menacing the press of the country. The dear good soul seems to be disturbed over the stability of our free institutions on account of the existence of the metropolitan press. He says:

If the voice of the press is merely an echo of the voice of monopolies and trusts, of jugglers in money and gamblers in stocks—

Then he has great fear of the permanency of our institutions. Have we not—in this country reasons for forebodings in this direction?

He says—

Then he says:

There is no cause for inflammatory language, but he is no alarmist who tells of real danger, nor is he a wise man who hides his head from it like an ostrich in the sand.

The Senator from South Dakota does not propose to hide his head, like an ostrich, in the sand, encountering any peril that may exist to the rest of his person in case he does so.

He further says in this speech:

What of the future? Is there no cause for vigilance? Who does not see in the heavens the menace of that eclipse of virtue, in the shadow of which the great Republic may pass?

Now comes a surprising statement in regard to the city newspapers, from which he quoted so liberally yesterday in condemnation of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury:

Most of the great papers in our great cities are owned by corporations, and they are striving to shape the sentiment and direct the opinion of the people of this country, not in the interest of right or of public opinion, but to advance the interests, pecuniary or otherwise, of the owners of the stock. The columns of these great papers are no longer filled with the writings of great men whose souls are stirred by a love of country and a sense of duty, but by hired men—who are directed from the business office to write that which will best serve the purpose of the soulless gamblers who own the stock. To-day these journals refuse to publish any attack upon corporate greed or a corrupt financial system, but their columns are always open for the defense of these enemies of public liberty.

These sentiments are very high-toned; they are put upon an elevated plane. Then he proceeds to advise the newspaper fraternity, and says:

You should lead and form that sentiment uninfluenced by the corporate press and by corrupt influences of every sort. The hope for the future is with you.

Having unloaded the hopes of the future upon the editors, then comes a most surprising statement:

If I were editing a paper I should examine with care the articles in any ready-print or plate matter, and if it did not accord with my sentiments it should not go to my readers.

Just a word in regard to that. If he were editing a newspaper he never would publish the speech of an adversary; he never would publish a comment of an opposition paper; he would not educate the people who should read the newspaper, but he would keep out of his particular newspaper anything which did not accord with his own particular sentiments. How delightful and elevated that would make the newspaper press! How greatly it would educate the people if a newspaper were conducted upon that narrow plane of keeping everything out of it which did not agree with the particular sentiments of the man who was running the newspaper, and yet expect the people to acquire knowledge and information! It would be a fine and valuable newspaper which my friend from South Dakota would conduct.

Then, further—and I want to call attention to that one thing—one winds up by saying:

One thing is sure, no man of merit was ever destroyed by falsehood.

There is nothing like having one thing that is sure.

Mr. President, that remark is opportune to-day, because I think in the speech of the Senator yesterday he was disposed to utter some calumnies against high public officials whose reputations will live in this country in years to come when the distinguished Senator from South Dakota and myself shall probably be forgotten. Yet we may be assured from this speech that one thing is sure, that no man of merit was ever destroyed by falsehood. President Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle may therefore take hope and courage. They will not be injured by these attacks. Their good reputations will live in all the ages to come, because their good names can not be destroyed by falsehood.

Further, he speaks of the metropolitan press, from which, yesterday, he quoted so liberally:

Generally, however, an anonymous corporate press is the paid advocate of some interest, and its editorials are ordered from the business office often by men who can not speak the English language correctly.

Exactly what New York newspaper the Senator is now condemning or criticising I do not know. It has been supposed that there were some rather pro-English or other foreigners editing or controlling some of our New York newspapers. Possibly the criticism was intended to apply to those.

Mr. President, I shall not quote further from this elegant speech of the Senator from South Dakota, but shall proceed to notice some of the suggestions which he made yesterday upon the questions here involved.

Not much information is usually to be obtained during an argument before the Senate by quoting the opinions of partisan newspapers. I myself very seldom adopt that course. Once in a while, to illustrate an argument, I put in a newspaper extract. My attention is also called to a speech delivered by the Senator from South Dakota in the city of Sioux Falls, February 19, 1896, when it is understood that he went home to that city for the purpose of looking after the Republican primaries. It was a red-hot silver speech. I want to ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THURSTON in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

PETTIGREW ON SILVER.

The following extract from the speech of Senator PETTIGREW in the city of Sioux Falls, February 19, 1896, hits the nail square on the head. The Senator is not a Republican on the silver question, and he can not be consistent with himself nor honest with the people while he sails under Republican colors:

"If the Republican party will be honest with itself, and declare for honest money, for sound money, for regulation and control of railroad transportation, we can carry the State of South Dakota as we have always carried it.

"I say sound money—honest money—because an honest dollar is a steady, even, unchanging measure of value—qualities which do not pertain to gold. A gold dollar is the thieves' money, that grows in the night—

Mr. HILL. What was that? I did not catch that sentence.

The Secretary read as follows:

A gold dollar is the thieves' money, that grows in the night, commanding each day more of the result of toil and human sacrifice. Unchangeable gold! What rotten nonsense. If when you contract a debt, agreeing to pay it in gold five years hence, you find at the end of that time it takes twice as much as the results of your labor, twice as much as the products of your farm, to secure the gold dollar with which to cancel your debt as it did when you contracted the debt, you have been robbed to that extent in the interests of the idle. The dollar has increased in value; your products were worth as much as ever they were. Did you know that it is a fact that a pound of silver as silver, uncoined, not as money, will to-day buy as much of all the things that human toil and human sacrifice produce as it would twenty years ago? An ounce of gold, a pound of gold, will buy twice as much of all the things that are produced by human toil and human efforts—of all of the things which you wear and eat and use—as it would twenty years ago. If that is the case, what has changed in value? But you say that silver and all the products of the world have declined while gold has remained stationary. That is one way of putting it. The fact is that gold has doubled in value while silver and all the products of toil have kept together. They have remained staple, unchanged, while your gold has gone up each day higher and higher, growing in value, until it has laid all the burden upon the toiling masses, in the interests of the owner of credits. If I had my way I would demonetize gold.

Mr. HILL. What was that? Read that again.

The Secretary read as follows:

If I had my way I would demonetize gold. I would refuse it the power of legal tender, and I would prohibit and prevent, if necessary by taxation, the making of another debt in the United States payable in gold.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HILL. Not now.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I want to say that I indorse that doctrine now as I did then.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, then in view of that statement, I shall now quote from a newspaper of Sioux Falls a description of the part which the Senator took in the proceedings at the Republican convention which was recently held and which instructed for Mr. McKinley and also in favor of what they called sound money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

HE MET HIS WATERLOO.

Seldom in the history of politics has a United States Senator received a more complete and emphatic turnaround than that which was given to Senator PETTIGREW by the Huron convention. He gets to go to St. Louis—as a matter of grace—but he goes pledged to work against free silver, though believing or professing to believe that the people of his State are being robbed hourly by the gold standard, and he is instructed to work for the nomination of his personal enemy, William McKinley, for President. He was put at the foot of the delegation, all of the rest of which is anti-PETTIGREW. He will have no voice in the work of the delegation at St. Louis, will have nothing to say about the choice of a national committeeman, and will be merely a figurehead on a delegation where he is alone and on which he was placed by the generosity of the opposition. The effort of the PETTIGREW crowd to put Harvey Jewett, of Aberdeen, on the delegation, despite the action of the Fifth district, was defeated by a vote of 276 to 321, which shows that PETTIGREW himself could have been denied even the sorry comfort of a trip to St. Louis had there been a disposition on the part of the anti-PETTIGREW people to further humiliate the Senator.

At the beginning of this campaign Mr. PETTIGREW made a rank free-silver speech at the opera house in this city. He declared that the citizens of this State were being robbed daily by the gold standard, that the Jews had a corner on gold, and were exacting of producers a heavy daily tribute. He declared that he did not care whether he went to St. Louis or not, but that if the Republicans of the State wanted him to go to St. Louis to use his influence and acquaintance to secure a free-silver plank in the national platform he would accept the commission. This speech is too recent in the minds of men here and over the State to need further elaboration. Last night at Huron the Senator pledged himself to go to St. Louis and work for the adoption of an anti free-silver plank. He agreed to stand upon a sound-money plank. He kept silent while speakers in the convention were denouncing his views on the money question as rank Populism. He promised the convention to work for the perpetuation of that system which he declared a few weeks ago was robbing the people of his State, and which had crippled the industries of his country! He said not a word in defense of his principles, but abandoned them all with pitiable humility, and all this in order to get to go at the foot of the delegation to St. Louis.

The Argus-Leader did not believe that Senator PETTIGREW would accept such a small crumb at so great a sacrifice. It brings into serious question the sincerity of his principles. Most self-respecting men would have refused to go on the delegation under the conditions named. He had declared that he wanted to go to St. Louis—not because he wanted the honor or the trip, but because he hoped to accomplish something for his State in the way of a free-silver platform. But the Republicans of his State told him emphatically that what this State wanted was a sound-money platform. And then the Senator rises and declares that if the people would let him go to St. Louis he would abandon his free-silver views and work against the promotion of what he professed only one short month ago was his sole motive in wanting to go! We doubt if there is another public man in the State, and we are sure there is not another United States Senator in the West, who would put himself in so humiliating and equivocal a position. If Mr. PETTIGREW had refused the conditions, and declined to accept a place on the delegation, there would have been something of honor and dignity in his defeat. But there is nothing but humiliation and sorrow in a victory which means the abandonment of every principle. Mr. PETTIGREW's acceptance promptly proves that what he repeatedly said here about his motive in wishing to go to St. Louis is untrue, for he is just as anxious to go when that motive is removed. He has repudiated his views and fore sworn himself, in order to make it appear that he has won a fight in which all thinking men will at once see an almost crushing defeat.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his question of order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It certainly is in violation of every canon of decency and of good taste, in my opinion, for a Senator to ask to have read an irresponsible editorial in some newspaper the effect of which is personally to slander and abuse a brother member of this body; but if any Senator believes that such a course is fitting and wise and proper I insist that he read the article himself.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in answer to the unnecessary and unbecoming suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, I think it is entirely appropriate and becoming when a Senator the day before had read and had inserted in the RECORD an article from a New York newspaper attacking the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury, and that not an irresponsible newspaper article either, that another article from another newspaper upon the other side in regard to the Senator himself should be read. The attention of the Senator from Colorado possibly has not been called to the RECORD of yesterday, in which the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury are most shamefully abused. I, sir, should not have proposed to read that Sioux Falls article had not the Senator from South Dakota himself put that New York newspaper article in evidence. I will gratify the Senator from Colorado and read the rest of the article myself, and request that it be passed to me for that purpose. [The newspaper slip was handed to Mr. HILL]. The article continues:

Nor is this all. Mr. PETTIGREW goes to St. Louis instructed to help secure the nomination of a deadly personal enemy for President. To prevent these instructions the Senator worked hard. For weeks his personal organ, the Sioux Falls Press, has teemed with columns of pleadings asking that the convention make no instructions. Every argument was used to persuade against instructions, but in spite of this, when the PETTIGREW delegation from this county reached Huron, it had to join in the McKinley cry, and Mr. PETTIGREW himself had not only to agree to go on an instructed delegation, but to promise that if he went he would not break his instructions. It was a double dose, and there was no sugar coating on either.

There are some other Senators here who can appreciate that as well as the Senator from South Dakota.

In view of these facts the solemn declaration of the Press that everything was harmonious and lovely at Huron and that there never was a State convention "which left so few heartburnings as that of to-day" is a performance calculated to make a brazen monkey convulse with laughter. The fact is that there never was a convention which gave a more signal or complete drubbing to a man than that administered to Mr. PETTIGREW and his gang. A more direct or cruel slap could not have been administered, and if Mr. PETTIGREW and his crowd have no "heartburnings" it is not because they have no reason but because they have developed the Christian virtues of humility and resignation to an excessive and unexpected degree.

In addition, the distinguished Senator from South Dakota yesterday saw fit to characterize me as the champion of Morgan & Co.'s syndicate. I had commented upon the dealings of the syndicate; I had defended, as I thought was proper, the transactions of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that was all; but I was to be characterized and stigmatized as the champion of Morgan & Co. when I never met more than one member of that firm in my life, and that was in my official capacity when governor of the State of New York.

In addition to that, the distinguished Senator saw fit to allude to my opposition to this resolution as the "frantic efforts" of the Senator from New York. My efforts have not been quite so frantic in opposition to this resolution as were the efforts of the Senator from South Dakota to become a sound-money delegate to the St. Louis convention.

Mr. President, newspaper articles do not count for much upon either side, I concede, but when Senators rise in their places and read from New York and other newspapers elaborate attacks against citizens of my State, I retaliate in kind. I know it has become a popular thing here in the Senate when a speech is made upon certain subjects to abuse New York. We have listened to many speeches to which I could call the attention of the Senate, speeches against the business men of New York, its millionaires, its men of wealth, and its business men who have given honor and credit to my State, and I have sat here day after day and month after month and year after year, and have said but little in reply. Mr. President, that sort of abuse has got to be stopped, unless I have the opportunity to retaliate in kind. If newspaper articles are to be read against citizens of my State, against high public officials who have received the suffrages of the people of the country, then, sir, I propose to read extracts against those who see fit to resort to that sort of argument.

Mr. President, after these few preliminary observations, I will proceed to renew this discussion upon the lines where it was left last evening. The Senator from South Dakota argued—and he had a right so to argue from his peculiar standpoint—that there was some wrong done in some way in the turning over of the Graves bid to the Morgan syndicate. I have discussed that question about as fully as I care to. I have shown that Morgan & Co. were the highest bidders, and that, therefore, they were entitled to have the Graves bid turned over to them. I want to read one remark, one admission, made by the Senator from South Dakota in the discussion of this question. He said—

When the Graves bid failed it was as if no bid had been made.

That statement gives away the whole case. I am ready to take judgment upon that admission, "it was as if no bid had been made." Then, for the purposes of the argument, I will strike that bid out entirely, as though it was naught, as though it had not been presented, as though there never had been a Graves bid. The syndicate, Morgan & Co., would then have had every one of the $4,500,000 of bonds, because they were the next highest bidders. There is no answer to this proposition; and there can not be an answer to it. The Graves bid was not in the case; it was not there; it was not entitled to be considered. The Graves bid was first accepted, and then, when default was made, the Senator is right in saying that it was as though no such bid had been made, and therefore in looking at the bids the Secretary of the Treasury had a right to fall back to the next highest bid. That was good faith toward every man who made a bid, and every bidder had made his calculations upon that very course being pursued.

I have already answered the proposition that it was the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to readvertise for bids. I am not going to spend any time upon the point that it was the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to accept a private bid made after the defaulting day. It was easy enough to make "a bluff." Certain gentlemen whose letters to the Department have been put in the RECORD say they offered the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a higher sum than the Morgan bid after the Graves default. The acceptance of that offer would have been unjust to every other bidder, and especially unjust to the Morgan syndicate. When the Secretary of the Treasury offered these bonds for sale it meant that they would all be disposed of at that time. There was not to be any subsequent public bidding; there was not to be subsequent private bids. There were not to be readvertisements and relettings; it was to be one complete transaction. Therefore, I am not going to spend any further time on that branch of the case. Senators who seem to think that some wrong was done in regard to the Graves bid should volunteer to become Mr. Graves's counsel, for he is sorely in need of a defender in the courts. His counsel have withdrawn the case, abandoned it, eliminated it from the docket. There are others who say that Graves had a legal right, that he should have recovered, that he should have continued the prosecution, and have gone on with it; and the Senate of the United States is proposed to be made an instrument by which to investigate that litigation.

What further? Let me call the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I am sorry that he is not present. I want to know what that distinguished and fastidious Senator thinks of this language which yesterday passed from the lips of the Senator from South Dakota. The Senator from South Dakota had read a portion of the speech of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], in which that Senator had taken occasion to say, undoubtedly under the dictates of his best judgment, that there was little or no criticism to be made of the conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury so far as the bond transactions were concerned. The Senator from South Dakota seems to think in his superior judgment that that was a bad admission for the Senator from Ohio to make. He knows better, of course, about the finances of the country than the Senator from Ohio. With all his vast experience in the management of the finances of South Dakota, if he ever had any, he would likely know better than the Senator from Ohio. I am not going to say the Senator from Ohio was right or wrong. That is his business. I think he made that statement from his conscientious conviction that he ought to make it. Whether he did so or not, he said it, and he alone is responsible for it, and he undoubtedly will stand by it. It did not lie in the mouth of the Senator from South Dakota to rebuke the Senator from Ohio. Where is the Senator from Colorado now, the friend of the Senator from South Dakota? I interrupted the Senator from South Dakota and said:

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me? Who is more competent to speak upon that subject than the distinguished Senator from Ohio, who for so many years had charge of the great finances of the country?

Mr. PETTIGREW. My answer to that question would be a matter of opinion, and therefore I will not burden the Senate with it.

Then he proceeded immediately to burden the Senate with it.

I do not doubt that the Senator from New York and the Morgan syndicate will forever proclaim that the Senator from Ohio is the best authority who can possibly be found so long as his opinions indorse the plunder of the people and the robbery of the Treasury.

Where was the Senator from Colorado when that coarse fling was made on the floor of the Senate Chamber—he who gratuitously sets himself up to defend the dignity of this Senate and to rebuke little mild newspaper utterances which I had the honor of reading here?

What further? New York must be abused, of course. That is the fashion. There has not been a speech made in the Senate upon the financial question by some parties in the last three or four years in which New York was not traduced, its business men held up to scorn, its public men condemned, and legislation advocated directly against its interests, and yet the Senator from New York must remain here quiet, he must permit his constituents to be assailed by coarse epithets and not speak a word in their defense. That time has passed.

What further? I want to quote now from the Senator from South Dakota:

It is my opinion that this bad faith on the part of the Administration was planned in advance—

The Senator from South Dakota has discovered a deep-laid conspiracy—and for the purpose of depressing the price of the bonds and ruin the credit of the Government, so as to compel Congress to enact such financial legislation as the President might demand, and afterwards turned to account in enriching the favorites of the President, if not the President himself.

Where is the Senator from Colorado now? It was all right for him to sit here in his seat last night and permit the insinuation that the President of the United States is sharing the profits of bonds with his favorites. Not one word did my English friend from Colorado have to say in regard to that. He defends the English Government, English statesmen, English soldiers, English policy. He has not one word to say in defense of an American President of the United States.

Then, further, simply because Mr. Francis Lynde Stetson, a prominent lawyer of New York, is a subscribing witness to the syndicate agreement, Mr. Stetson must be dragged into the controversy as the law partner of the President. The President has had no connection with that firm for some time, and it was a mere nominal one even when it existed years ago. It is a well-known fact, as I am advised, that Mr. Stetson is related to one of the numerous members of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., and that he has been the counsel for that firm in many transactions in the past, and most important ones. He is an able lawyer, employed by numerous business men in the city of New York. He simply witnessed the contract, being one of the counsel engaged by those people.

Yet without any sort of reason it is sought to suggest that there was some wrong in the fact that Mr. Stetson signed his name as witness to the contract. There is no disputing the fact that he acted for his relative if not for the firm. There was nothing to conceal about it; if there had been, they might have adopted the South Dakota tactics and put some other name in the place of that of the law partner. No, no! The very fact that Mr. Stetson boldly and openly signed his name to the paper is evidence of the consciousness that there was nothing wrong. Yet his name must be dragged into the debate over and over again, with coarse insinuations that the President of the United States is personally in some way enriching his favorites. That is the term that the Senator from South Dakota used—"enriching his favorites."

Mr. President, what further does the Senator say? Where is the Senator from Colorado now, when I read this statement?

Mr. PETTIGREW. This seems to have been a transaction where there was a partnership as to profits between the Secretary and a syndicate of bankers, and the interest of the people of the United States was entirely left out of the reckoning.

I will read it again:

This seems to have been a transaction where there was a partnership as to profits between the Secretary and a syndicate of bankers.

What further, then, does the Senator from South Dakota say?

After having charged that this seems to have been a transaction where there was a partnership as to profits, he says:

That seems to have been the sum and substance and gist of the whole transaction—rotten and dishonest and corrupt to the core.

If there was a partnership in the profits between the Secretary of the Treasury and the syndicate it follows, as a matter of course, and it would so be regarded, I think, even in South Dakota, that it was rotten and dishonest and corrupt to the core.

Mr. President, the other day in answer to some suggestions of the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Kansas, who is usually very deliberate, and I must say usually fair in his statements, disclaimed any idea of casting any reflections upon the integrity either of the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury; and I was asked what objection I could have to the resolution of investigation when there was this disclaimer upon the part of the distinguished author of the resolution. The Senator this morning said he was surprised, as I was, at the remarks made yesterday by the Senator from South Dakota; that is, they were unexpected at that time from anybody. What becomes of the disclaimer now in the light of the accusations of the Senator from South Dakota? Can Senators justify themselves in voting for the resolution now, even though its form has been modified and changed so as to make it less offensive, when other Senators rise in their places and indulge in serious accusations like these without proof? Has it come to this—that we are to order an investigation simply upon the ipse dixit of Senators who in the heat of the discussion make serious reflections upon public officials like these?

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] spoke a short time ago about conduct "contrary to every canon of decency and good taste." I reply and say it would be unbecoming the Senate—a violation of decency and good taste—to dignify this proceeding, after what was said yesterday by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], by passing any sort of resolution of investigation. When somebody will bring in a written accusation, when somebody will give us some proof of wrongdoing, when somebody will present evidence that can be sifted and analyzed, then it will be time enough to proceed with an investigation such as this.

There are some other allusions in the speech of the Senator from South Dakota to which I will refer. Speaking of the Secretary of the Treasury, he says:

He did dispose of the Graves bid at private sale.

My answer to that statement is that he disposed of the Graves bid to a bidder who had duly made his bid with all the others prior to the opening of the bids.

It is true the bid was not made in pursuance of an advertisement—

Referring to the other bid, which was made intermediately—nor was the bid of Morgan made in pursuance of advertisement. They were both private bids. The simple fact is that the Secretary of the Treasury sold $5,000,000 of bonds to his friend on a private bid for nearly $200,000 less than another responsible bidder offered.

And then he makes the simple inquiry:

Is that honest?

I need not take the time of the Senate in any elaborate argument to show that it was the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury when he offered these bonds for sale to have a completed transaction, and it was his duty to give to the next highest bidder every bid that was forfeited by nonpayment. That was his duty in law, that was his duty in morals, and that was the duty which he in fact discharged.

Yesterday I put in evidence—I use the term "put in evidence," because it comes natural to me from my practice in court—I rather read to the Senate the syndicate contracts which were made years ago by previous Secretaries of the Treasury. I did it not for the purpose of intimating that there was anything wrong in them, but in order that the country might know that this is not the first time the Government has dealt with syndicates. I read them in order that gentlemen here who did not seem to know the nature of syndicates might understand them. I have no reflections to cast upon the distinguished gentlemen whose names are signed to those old syndicate contracts—Drexel, Morgan & Co., J. P. Morgan & Co., August Belmont & Co., the First National Bank of New York, and Rothschild & Co., of London.

I have no disposition to make any vile or contemptible fling at Rothschild & Co. because it is said they are Jews. It has been hissed out in this Chamber, amid laughter, that the Administration gave bonds to favorite Jews. Has it come to this, that in this land of the free nationality is to be urged as a ground of objection to a man or men in the Senate of the United States? A Jewish citizen is as good as any other citizen if he behaves himself. A Jewish citizen has a right to live among us so long as he obeys the law and is a good citizen. He has a right to be treated respectfully.

The Jews constitute a race which it is not necessary I should defend or eulogize. They may have their faults. They have, however, their good qualities. But I do think it unbecoming Senators here to rise in their places and hiss out that the bonds were given to a Jew, as though that settled the question, as though that was proof positive of infamy, of corruption, of fraud.

Where was the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] then—the defender and protector of the dignity, of the honor and proper conduct of the Senate? Where was he when Senators rose here, as several have on different occasions, and hissed out the word "Jews" as a term of reproach. It proves the correctness of what was said the other day, when a certain Senator who favors this resolution rose in his place and said, "We are getting desperate." They are, indeed, desperately in want of good arguments. Let Senators consult their Jewish constituents, and see what they think of these vile flings. Yes; as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] suggests to me, the Jews are a good race of people in many respects. They do not ask other nationalities to take care of their poor. They take care of them themselves. They have their grand and noble charities. They are noted for them throughout the length and breadth of the world. One of the greatest of Jews, who did much for his race and his people, has just died, and he left many grand bequests. It is not necessary that I should at this time enter into any review of the great men who have adorned the Jewish race. You have not forgotten the great Disraeli, who was formerly the premier of England. It does show the desperation of these Senators when all the argument they can make is "Oh, they gave the bonds to a Jew." If a Jew was the highest bidder he was entitled to the bonds. Out with such flimsy arguments, Mr. President!

I have also commented upon the fact that objections were raised to the form of proposal issued by the Secretary of the Treasury. I want to show now that the calls made years ago for bonds were just about the same in form, except they were made by the syndicates themselves. The syndicates were given control of the sale of bonds. For a short period of time they had substantially the absolute control of the sale of bonds. I wish the Secretary to read the published advertisement of the syndicate, found on pages 210 and 211, away back in 1877.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES 4 PER CENT FUNDED LOAN.

The bonds are dated 1st July, 1877; bear interest payable quarterly in coin on 1st days of January, April, July, and October, and are redeemable in coin after 1st July, 1907.

The loan is issued in coupon bonds, in denominations of $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, and in registered stock, in denominations of $50, $100, $500, $1,000, $5,000, and $10,000.

The interest on the registered stock will be paid by check issued by the Treasurer of the United States to the order of the holder and mailed to his address. The check is payable on presentation, properly indorsed, at the offices of the Treasurer and assistant treasurers of the United States. The coupons and interest checks can be cashed at any bank or bankers.

The bonds are exempt from the payment of taxes or duties to the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority. Under authority of a contract with the Secretary of the Treasury, the undersigned will, until further notice, receive subscriptions for the United States 4 per cent bonds at par and accrued interest, in gold coin, or, in lieu of coin, United States notes or drafts on New York, at their coin value on the day of receipt in the city of New York, or on subscriptions for sums not exceeding $100 in postal orders, payable to Messrs. August Belmont & Co., New York, at the fixed rate for gold, but reserving the right to change that rate from day to day, or discontinue such rate altogether, by notice in any newspaper at Washington or New York.

Forms of application will be furnished by the Treasurer at Washington, the assistant treasurers at Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and San Francisco, by the national banks and bankers generally, and by the United States postmasters. The applications must specify the amount and denominations required, and for registered stock the full name and post-office address of the person to whom the bonds shall be made payable.

The registered stock will be forwarded by registered mail; the coupon bonds will be forwarded to nearest point by express.

Mr. HILL. Now I ask the Secretary to read from page 71, where there is another proposal.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 14, 1877.

Messrs. AUGUST BELMONT & Co., New York:

GENTLEMEN: The notice to the public of the 4 per cent loan, a copy of which is herewith, is approved by me.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

[Inclosure with letter of Secretary to Belmont & Co. of June 14, 1877.]

Under authority of a contract with the Secretary of the Treasury, the undersigned hereby give notice that from this date, and until July 16, at 3 p. m., they will receive subscriptions for the 4 per cent funded loan of the United States in denominations as stated below, at par and accrued interest in gold coin.

The bonds are redeemable after thirty years from July 1, 1877, and carry interest from that date, payable quarterly, and are exempt from the payment of taxes or duties to the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

The interest on the registered stock will be paid by check, issued by the Treasurer of the United States, to the order of the holder, and mailed to his address. The check is payable on presentation, properly indorsed, at the offices of the Treasurer and assistant treasurers of the United States.

The subscriptions will be for coupon bonds of $50 and $100, and registered stock in denominations of $50, $100, $500, $1,000, $5,000, and $10,000.

The bonds, both coupon and registered, will be ready for delivery July 2, 1877.

Forms of application will be furnished by the Treasurer at Washington, the assistant treasurers at Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and San Francisco, and by the national banks and bankers generally. The applications must specify the amount and denominations required and, for registered stock, the full name and post-office address of the person to whom the bonds shall be made payable.

Two per cent of the purchase money must accompany the subscription; the remainder may be paid at the pleasure of the purchaser, either at time of subscription or at any time prior to October 16, 1877, with interest added at 4 per cent to date of payment.

The payments may be made in gold coin to the Treasurer of the United States at Washington, or assistant treasurers at Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, New Orleans, and St. Louis, and to the assistant treasurer at San Francisco, with exchange on New York, or to either of the undersigned.

To promote the convenience of subscribers, the undersigned will also receive, in lieu of coin, United States notes or drafts on New York at their coin value on the day of receipt in the city of New York.

JUNE 14, 1877.

Mr. HILL. The statements just read show that a syndicate composed of these very worthy gentlemen had substantial control of the sale of the bonds of the United States in behalf of the United States. I will now read the statement of the Assistant Secretary, Mr. French:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., June 11, 1877.

PAYMENT OF UNITED STATES BONDS.

1. The act of July 14, 1870, provides for the issue of United States bonds "redeemable in coin of the present standard value."
2. The then legal coin was gold and silver, the standard value being 23.22 grains of pure gold to the dollar and 371½ grains of pure silver to the dollar.
3. While the law remained unchanged the contract was legally performed by payment in such standard coin of gold or silver.
4. The act of April 1, 1873, declared silver not to be a tender for such bonds.
5. That act was an element in all sales of bonds after that date by the Government or by individuals, the buyer having the promise of the United States to pay in coin, i. e., coin recognized as legal, i. e., gold coin.
6. Any act which shall declare silver coin a tender for such bonds is an attempt to insert an element not in the contract, an element expressly excluded by the promisor by the act of 1873.
7. And as it can not be known what bonds have been transferred since the act of 1873, all bonds under the act of 1870 must be paid in gold coin of the standard value named therein—23.22 grains of pure gold to the dollar.

Respectfully submitted.

H. F. FRENCH, Assistant Secretary.

TO THE SECRETARY.

I also desire to read a letter from Secretary SHERMAN to Hon. August Belmont, of New York. In order to expedite the matter I want the letter put in my remarks in full, but I will skip certain portions of the letter and simply emphasize those points to which I wish to call attention.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 16, 1877.

DEAR SIR: Your private note, the letter of your firm, and one from Messrs. Seligman & Co., asking me to make a public statement over my own signature similar to that of Mr. French, are received. I have given to this important suggestion the most serious consideration, and have come to the firm conclusion that such an act on my part would be inexpedient and defeat the very object you have in view. As a purely executive officer I have no power to pass upon the question mooted. My attempt to do so would at once unite all those who are seized with this mania and those who oppose executive encroachment upon legislative power. It would create excitement, personal and political animosities would mingle with it, and it would tend more than anything else to defeat the success of the loan. I am quite sure this would be the result.

As to whether Congress or the people would ever undertake to pay either principal or interest of the bonded debt, and especially the bonds sold since 1873, in silver, I have a firm conviction that the question will never seriously be raised. These bonds will be paid, principal and interest, in gold coin. The people of the United States have always been extremely sensitive as to the public credit. They never have, for the sake of an apparent profit, yielded any question involving the public honor.

The great satisfaction that will arise from the funding of the loan at a low rate of interest, together with their strong sense of public honor and public faith, will always secure the payment of these bonds, principal and interest, in coin.

Parties or factions may for a time raise and contest questions, but they are but bubbles and will pass away, and like all other questions involving the public credit, will be rightfully settled in due time by Congress and the people.

Nothing would so tend to disturb this result as unauthorized "theses" or dogmas by an executive officer upon a question purely legislative or judicial. Indeed, it may be that too much has already been said about this matter by both the President and myself, and I assure you that you will have no occasion to be disturbed by anything truthfully reported of either of us hereafter. The better way is to move right along, making your own statements, and if at any time I see a proper occasion for a strong expression of my opinion, I will give it.

Please show this to Mr. Seligman and such of your associates as you deem proper as an answer to all.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

Hon. AUGUST BELMONT, New York.

I cite that letter for the purpose of showing that at this very time when the bonds were being transferred from one hand to another and being sold in the public market there was the assurance of the Secretary of the Treasury that the bonds would be paid, principal and interest, in gold, recognizing that as the duty of the Government and giving that interpretation of existing law. On the faith of that bonds were sold and transferred; on the faith of that declaration ownership was acquired, and in view of what has been said in this Chamber I cite the letter to show, whether legally payable in gold or in silver, the good faith of the Government of the United States was pledged to their payment in gold.

I will also read another letter from Mr. Sherman, dated June 19, 1877:

SIR: Your letter of the 18th instant, in which you inquire whether the 4 per cent bonds now being sold by the Government are payable principal and interest in gold coin, is received. The subject, from its great importance, has demanded and received careful consideration.

Mr. GRAY. To whom was the letter addressed?

Mr. HILL. It was addressed to Mr. French, Assistant Secretary, 94 Broadway, New York.

Under laws now in force, there is no coin issued or issuable in which the principal of the 4 per cent bonds is redeemable or the interest payable except the gold coins of the United States of the standard value fixed by laws in force on the 14th of July, 1870, when the bonds were authorized.

The Government exacts in exchange for these bonds payment at their face in such gold coin, and it is not to be anticipated that any future legislation of Congress or any action of any Department of the Government would sanction or tolerate the redemption of the principal of these bonds or the payment of the interest thereon in coin of less value than the coin authorized by law at the time of the issue of the bonds, being the coin exacted by the Government in exchange for the same.

The essential element of good faith in preserving the equality in value between the coinage in which the Government receives and that in which it pays these bonds will be sacredly observed by the Government and the people of the United States whatever may be the system of coinage which the general policy of the nation may at any time adopt.

This principle is impressed upon the text of the law of July 14, 1870, under which the 4 per cent bonds are issued, and requires, in the opinion of the executive department of the Government, the redemption of these bonds and the payment of their interest in coin of equal value with that which the Government receives from its issue.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

FRANCIS O. FRENCH, Esq.,
34 Broadway, New York.

This question was very much discussed in 1878 by the men who were dealing in Government bonds, and I want to read now a joint cable telegram from London from Messrs. Morgan, Morton, and Seligman to the President:

LONDON, February 15, 1878.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE PRESIDENT, Washington:

The universal feeling here is that public faith [is] solemnly pledged to payment in gold of all bonds issued under funding act 1870, under which Government demanded and received gold coin therefor. In our opinion it will justly be considered breach of public honor now to break the pledge given by the Cabinet in Secretary Sherman's letter June 19, 1877, in which it is stated that the essential element of good faith in preserving the equality in value between the coinage in which the Government receives and that in which it pays these bonds will be sacredly observed by the Government and the people of the United States.

Whatever may be the system of coinage which the general policy of the nation may at any time adopt it is this pledge which public faith and public honor alike demand shall be held inviolable.

MORGAN, MORTON, SELIGMAN.

Signing their names as though they were partners, "Morgan, Morton, and Seligman." Attention is called to the fact that Mr. Morton is the Hon. Levi P. Morton, now the present governor of the State of New York, and until recently also a candidate for the Republican nomination for President. [Laughter.] "Morgan, Morton, and Seligman." If the Presidential nominating lightning should strike the distinguished governor, whom I personally esteem very highly, I will have some fun during the campaign in reading the joint telegram, "Morgan, Morton, and Seligman," upon the question of the payment of the Government bonds in gold; and I expect to read with interest the remarks of my distinguished friend from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] (who intends to support the Republican ticket no matter what the platform may be or who the candidate may be) eulogizing this firm in his speeches in behalf of the gold policy—"Morgan, Morton, and Seligman," and victory.

I also read another letter, dated New York, June 20, 1877, to be found in this book, page 85, from Morton, Bliss & Co., of New York, in regard to the bond transactions. I will not take the trouble now to read it, but with the permission of the Senate will insert it in my remarks.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

Messrs. Morton, Bliss & Co. to Mr. Sherman.

NEW YORK, June 20, 1877.

DEAR SIR: Some of the parties interested in the contract for the 4 per cent bonds claim that in signing, on the 9th instant, the paper prepared by you, in which the syndicate subscribed for the remaining 4 per cent bonds up to two hundred millions and formally terminated the contract for their negotiation, we relinquished a then existing right on their part for their proportion of the third hundred millions.

In your letter of May 23, addressed to Messrs. A. Belmont & Co., you state as your understanding that the right of the syndicate to take over two hundred millions has terminated. Will you oblige us by informing us when and in what manner the notice called for under the contract had been given; and also whether you understood the termination of the 4 per cent contract and the contract for 4 per cent bonds one or two distinct transactions?

We remain, etc.,

HON. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

MORTON, BLISS & CO.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, it may have been forgotten that those bond transactions evoked considerable criticism at the time they were had. It was inevitable that great transactions involving millions of money should find some critics throughout the country. The House of Representatives was induced to interfere, and on November 5, 1877, passed a resolution, which I will now read:

Resolution House of Representatives, November 5, 1877, requesting copies of contract with syndicate, etc.

[Forty-fifth Congress, first session.]

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
In the House of Representatives, November 5, 1877.

On motion of Mr. Wood, from the Committee of Ways and Means—
Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the House of Representatives, at the earliest practicable moment, copies of the contract made with a certain syndicate of American and foreign bankers for the negotiation of the 4 per cent bonds of the United States, together with copies of all other papers relating thereto, and also with a statement as to the present condition of such negotiation, and whether it remains in force as originally made, without modification or change.

Attest:

GEO. M. ADAMS, Clerk.

I cite the resolution for the purpose of showing and demonstrating that there is nothing new about sensitiveness over great bond transactions; that the criticisms have not been confined to the present Administration; that there was restlessness in 1878 as now; that there were Senators and members of the House who wanted to take a hand in the bond business then as now; and to show so far as I can that there is nothing in these attacks; that they are inevitable in the Congress of the United States; that there always seems to be an inevitable sort of friction between the Treasury Department and Congress, but I do not cite them because there is anything wrong in the transactions themselves. History has vindicated the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and history, sir, will vindicate the present distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, the gentleman from Kentucky. The mere fact that the affairs of their offices were conducted so that criticism should have been avoided amounts to nothing. They could not avoid criticism.

Mr. Sherman did not escape. The bond syndicates did not escape then. Secretary Carlisle can not hope to escape criticism. The bond syndicate can not hope to escape criticism. Transactions involving millions of dollars of course give rise to suggestions and fault-finders of all kinds and character. When the millennium comes it will be possible to negotiate $100,000,000 of bonds when there will be nobody finding any fault, but not until the millennium comes.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that the House of Representatives did not order an investigating committee. The Democratic House of Representatives treated the Republican Secretary of the Treasury with great respect. They had the right to order an investigation. They passed a resolution requesting information of the Secretary in the ordinary and usual form, and to that the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury made reply on November 19, 1877. I will ask the Secretary to read that letter of Mr. Sherman to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. HILL. I will say before the letter is read that I cite it for the purpose of showing the proper way to ascertain information; the proper way to treat the officers of the Government. The House of Representatives, the Democratic House of Representatives, simply passed a resolution asking for information, submitting it to the Secretary of the Treasury, and awaiting his reply.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, November 19, 1877.

SIR: I am in receipt of resolution introduced by Mr. Wood, of the Committee on Ways and Means, as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable moment copies of the contract made with a certain syndicate of American and foreign bankers for the negotiation of the 4 per cent bonds of the United States, together with copies of all other papers relating thereto; and also with a statement as to the present condition of such negotiation, and whether it remains in force as originally made, without modification or change."

In compliance with this request, I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of the contract referred to and other papers which have a definite bearing upon the subject. Before this contract was entered into I met the contracting parties both in New York and Washington, and discussed at some length the feasibility of placing the 4 per cent loan upon the market, and, on the 9th of June, 1877, perfected arrangements for that purpose by executing said contract.

During the thirty days which were set apart by mutual consent for the reception of popular subscriptions, the amount of $3,073,250 was sold by the Treasurer and assistant treasurers of the United States, and subscriptions to the amount of $69,423,300 were procured through the efforts of the contracting parties.

The business of refunding progressed satisfactorily and arrangements had been perfected for the continuance of the sale of 4 per cent bonds, and a call was about to be made when fears of the effect of the proposed legislation by Congress remonetizing silver arrested for the time the sale of such bonds and caused a temporary postponement.

Below is a statement of the present condition of the 4 per cent loan, and I would add that the contract remains in force as originally made, without modification or change.

CONDITION OF UNITED STATES 4 PER CENT BONDS OF 1907 NOVEMBER 19, 1877.
Subscriptions received $75,496,550
Amount against which calls for 6 per cent 5-20 bonds have been issued 50,000,000

Balance account of resumption act 25,496,550

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

HON. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker House of Representatives.

Mr. HILL. I will read, or rather insert in my remarks, with the permission of the Senate, a letter from Fisk & Hatch to Secretary Sherman, of date April 16, 1878. I will not take the time now to read the letters, but simply to say that they asked to have placed in their hands certain bonds of the United States, which they should have the exclusive power to sell, and that the Secretary of the Treasury substantially gave them the control of the sale of the bonds. I will read the opening sentence:

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of yesterday is received, in which you ask if I will entertain a proposition from a combination of banks and bankers for the negotiation of 4 per cent bonds upon certain terms named by you.

I cite this letter for the purpose of showing that in 1878 there were dealings with combinations of banks and bankers; that the question of the combination of banks and bankers is not a new thing, but that it existed all through the resumption period and all through the refunding period.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letters will be inserted in the remarks of the Senator from New York.

The letters referred to are as follows:

NEW YORK, April 16, 1878.

HON. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Will you please advise us whether you are prepared to entertain a proposition from a combination of banks and bankers, whose names should be satisfactory to you, for the negotiation of 4 per cent bonds on the basis of an amount to be agreed upon to be taken at once with an option for any part of the remainder for the balance of the year or for such other period as might be mutually satisfactory; the sales of 4 per cent bonds to be made during the pendency of the option only through the parties entering into the contract, and the proceeds of sales to be applied to the redemption of 5-20 bonds.

If you are inclined to consider favorably a proposition to this effect, provided the details can be made satisfactory to you, it is probable that it will be made. The parties having the matter under consideration would be glad to have an indication of your readiness to entertain such a negotiation before proceeding further in the preparation of details, and have requested us to ask an expression from you on that point.

An early reply will greatly oblige.

Very truly, yours,

FISK & HATCH.

P. S.—In case any negotiation, as indicated above, should be entered into, the parties interested would be glad to have the matter considered as confidential between the Treasury Department and themselves until concluded, and your reply to this will be so treated if desired.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 17, 1878.

Messrs. FISK & HATCH, New York.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter of yesterday is received, in which you ask if I will entertain a proposition from a combination of banks and bankers for the negotiation of 4 per cent bonds upon certain terms named by you.

I would be happy to receive such a proposition from the banks and bankers whom I suppose you represent, and I would give the bonds to you on as favorable terms and with every facility that the law will allow. I am under no embarrassment or restraint as to the sale of the 4 per cent bonds, but I do not think it would be policy for me to give you an exclusive option for any period of time, though, perhaps, if the amount was large I might do so for a short time. I am not under any obligations to the purchasers of the 4 per cent bonds that restrict me in any way in the negotiation of the 4 per cent bonds, but am free to act under the law.

Still, as public subscriptions have been invited by Treasury circular, it would not be consistent with good policy for me to withdraw this tender and place the negotiation solely in your hands. Perhaps, in view of a large subscription, I might be disposed to give you some additional facilities not given by the general circular, but this would depend upon the amount and nature of your subscription. I would like, also, if practicable, in case an offer is made by you, that you include in it the contracting parties for the 4 per cent bonds, at least so far that the agents in the sale of the two classes of bonds will not conflict with each other, the interest of the Department being equally concerned in the negotiation of both classes of bonds.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

As you request, your letter and this reply will be considered by me as confidential for the present.

Mr. HILL. That was in 1878. The resumption act had been passed which required resumption to take place on the 1st day of January, 1879. There were skeptics in those days as now. There were men who were constantly doubting the power of the Government to resume specie payments on the day fixed by the statute. There were constant predictions of failure made by worthy gentlemen who thought that the Government was pursuing an unwise policy. There were men in those days, as now, who thought the Government was running headlong to destruction. They became desperate, as men become desperate now, in their criticisms of the conduct of the officers of the Government.

This volume is full of letters written to the Secretary of the Treasury in 1878 urging him to pursue a different course from what he was pursuing, and predicted disaster to the Government on the 1st day of January, 1879. It was said, "The Government will not be able to resume specie payment. Where will the coin come from? Where will the gold come from? How can specie payments be resumed and how can they be maintained?" There was the same uncertainty then as now, if not more so. There was the same distrust of public men, the same vile insinuations as now, the same unfounded charges then as now. People have forgotten what took place here only a few years ago.

I will read a letter from Peter Cooper to Mr. Sherman, written in New York April, 1878. Mr. Cooper was a very estimable gentleman, a man of large means. He had got the greenback craze in his head; he thought the country was going to destruction unless the greenbacks were kept afloat. He doubted the policy of redeeming the greenbacks. He feared the country was not strong enough for that purpose. There was a large element in the country, in different parts of the country, who called themselves greenbackers, who were fearful that the country was taking a hazardous step and making a most dangerous experiment in the effort to resume specie payments. How the speeches of those greenbackers would read now, in the light of history, their denunciations of Mr. Sherman! How they would like to be refreshed by reading those speeches again delivered here in the Senate, predicting failure, predicting disaster.

COOPER UNION, ETC., New York, April 18, 1878.

DEAR SIR: In the brief interview which you did me the honor to give me at my house a few days ago I was impressed with your desire to give all the information that would throw light upon the financial policy of the Government and in the Department of which you are the executive head. But we had not the time to discuss fully some of those practical questions that involve this financial policy, and I therefore now take the liberty, in a more deliberate manner, to ask of you an answer to questions which might throw light upon the public mind on these great interests and allay the anxiety which pervades the hearts of our people in reference to their future prospects of business and employment, and show more clearly how the present policy of the Government in enforcing "specie payments" by law and carrying out the resumption act could be attended with any wholesome results to the financial interests of this country, both in the present and the future.

First. Can you "resume" in the presence of $445,000,000 of legal-tender and bank notes with what gold and silver you may have at your command without an actual shrinkage of this currency either on the part of the Government or of the banks?

Secondly. Can "resumption" be maintained after the law has placed a premium on coin and virtually demonetized the paper by rendering its convertibility compulsory?

In other words, can the present "par value" of paper and coin be taken as an index that after the law has thrown its whole weight in favor of coin, by making the paper "convertible," the present equilibrium between the two can still be maintained?

Thirdly. In connection with the fact that by purely commercial laws we have already arrived at specie payments, or the par between coin and paper money, what good will it do to thrust in the further power of the law on the side of coin?

How can we avoid placing the paper at the mercy of those who will have control of the coin, especially the paper of the national banks, whose chief credit will consist in maintaining "specie payments"?

Fourthly. After "resumption" how much money will the people have with which to transact business, employ labor, enter into new enterprises, and use "cash payments" instead of "inflating credits" to a ruinous degree, as in times past under the system of specie payments and convertibility by law?

Fifthly. It being the duty of Congress to make the necessary and proper laws for carrying into execution a system of money, weights, and measures as the only means to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, to provide, as far as possible, an "unfluctuating currency," a steady measure of prices, how can you prevent great and disastrous fluctuations in our "convertible money" and coin arising out of the great demands for gold and silver that may at any time be made upon us from the commercial relations of this country with Europe, over which the Government can have no direct control?

With great respect, I remain, your obedient servant.

PETER COOPER.

HON. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. President, the world moved on just the same, steady, steps forward toward a right basis. The Secretary of the Treasury kept moving on unmindful of the clamor of the men who criticised him, unmindful of the threats made against him, unmindful of all the prophecies of disaster, and to-day, I say, simply reviewing the question, how futile seem the efforts that were made to stop resumption; how men fought desperately for the good old greenback currency; how official efforts to curtail and contract the currency met with determined opposition in the two Houses of Congress.

But, Mr. President, the policy of the Government went on; it could not be resisted; it went on to success, and the men who criticised it would not want to read to-day their speeches in the RECORD. Mr. SHERMAN made a reply to Mr. Cooper, which I want the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., April 20, 1878.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 18th instant is received. The questions which you ask me have been, in the main, answered to the committees of the two Houses, and I might, perhaps, best reply to your letter by sending these documents, printed by order of the respective Houses; but my sincere respect for you and desire to allay any doubts you may entertain of the success of the present plan of resumption induce me to answer your letter as fully as my time will allow.

As to your first question, "Can you resume in the presence of $445,000,000 of legal-tender and bank notes with what gold and silver you may have at your command without an actual shrinkage of this currency, either on the part of the Government or of the banks?"

You must bear in mind that the aggregate amount of legal-tender notes and bank notes stated by you may be gradually diminished, so far as the legal tenders are concerned, to $300,000,000, and by the banks to such sum as they find can be maintained at par with the United States notes. But, assuming that the aggregate should be about the present amount, and remembering always that the bank notes can be redeemed in legal-tender notes and are not required to be redeemed in coin, I do express the opinion that resumption in a country like ours can be maintained in the presence of the existing volume of circulation; but if this should prove to be too great the reduction will be gradually of the bank notes, or, if Congress so direct, of the legal-tender notes.

As to your second question, "Can resumption be maintained after the law has placed a premium on coin and virtually demonetized the paper by rendering its convertibility compulsory? In other words, can the present 'par value' of paper and coin be taken as an index that after the law has thrown its whole weight in favor of coin, by making paper 'convertible,' the present equilibrium between the two can still be maintained?"

I respectfully deny that the law places a premium on coin. One-half of this circulation is not redeemable in coin at all, but in legal-tenders; nor does the law fix a premium on coin as against legal-tenders, but simply requires an equality. Its convertibility is not compulsory. It is upon the demand of the holder. The holder is as likely to deposit the coin if he has it, as to deposit the notes for coin. The currency would rest upon the presumption that all paper money rests upon, that its use and convenience and convertibility will always keep it at par with coin.

To your third question, "In connection with the fact that by purely commercial laws, we have already arrived at specie payments, or the par between coin and paper money, what good will it do to thrust in the further power of the law on the side of coin? How can we avoid placing the paper at the mercy of those who will have control of the coin—especially the paper of the national banks, whose chief credit will consist in maintaining 'specie payments'?"

I have simply to say that we have only arrived at our present position approaching specie payments by the accumulation of coin in the Treasury and by the gradual and slow reduction of the volume of notes; and the very measures which have enabled us to reach so near the specie standard are necessary to be continued to enable us to maintain resumption. If resumption is desirable it can not be maintained by a repeal of the law which requires resumption and grants the necessary powers to prepare for it and to maintain it.

As to your fourth question, "After resumption how much money will the people have with which to transact business, employ labor, enter into new enterprises, and use 'cash payments' instead of 'inflating credit' to a ruinous degree, as in times past under the system of specie payments and convertibility by law?" It is answered, I think, by what I have said in reply to your first question. We will have the United States notes, the bank notes, the coin certificates, both gold and silver, together with the gold and silver itself, all in circulation. The actual amount of currency in circulation, I think, will be as large in specie times as now, and its equality and convertibility will rather increase than prevent the circulation of either. The depreciation of paper money is not necessarily caused solely by its excess, but by the uncertainty of its value and confidence in its redemption.

In reply to your fifth question, "It being the duty of Congress to make the necessary and proper laws for carrying into execution a system of money, weights, and measures, as the only means to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, to provide as far as possible, an 'unfluctuating currency,' a steady measure of prices, how can you prevent great and disastrous fluctuations in our 'convertible money' and coin, arising out of the great demand for gold and silver that may at any time be made upon us from the commercial relations of this country with Europe over which the Government can have no direct control?" I have only to say that it is undoubtedly the duty of Congress to provide for the possible contingencies that would make it necessary to suspend specie payments, though, as the circumstances which would compel suspension are necessarily unforeseen, unknown, difficult to be defined or to be provided for, I am not sure but it is better to leave the question of suspension to the necessities of the case rather than to legislation, which must be founded upon uncertainty. When the Treasury is actually unable to redeem its notes in coin, suspension comes necessarily, but resumption would come again from the absolute necessity of currency for our daily wants, and Congress could provide better in view of the actual facts than anticipated facts.

I think the real difficulty that has stood in the way of resumption is the nightmare of things that have existence only in the brain and not in fact. We can only deal with the current course of events based upon probabilities, and can not provide for unforeseen contingencies.

It is my earnest hope that you, and gentlemen like you, who I know are sincere in your convictions, may see your way to trust to the policy that is now entered upon, which seeks to provide as much paper currency as can be maintained at par in coin, and to secure its active circulation in aid of industry and enterprise.

I am, with great respect,

JOHN SHERMAN.

HON. PETER COOPER, New York.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I have also a letter from Secretary Sherman of date May 24, 1878, which I shall insert in my remarks without reading it in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be so inserted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MR. SHERMAN TO WILBER NATIONAL BANK, ONEONTA, N. Y.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 24, 1878.

SIR: Your letter of the 21st instant, asking what action is necessary in order to become a depository and subscription agent for the 4 and 4½ per cent loans, has been received.

In reply I have to inform you that subscriptions to the 4½ per cent loan are received only through Messrs. Belmont & Co., of New York, and their associates.

Subscriptions to the 4 per cent consols of 1867 are received at the Department and through the subtreasury officers and national banks which have been designated for that purpose.

I inclose herewith Department's circular of January 21, 1878, under the provisions of which, if you desire it and will so inform this office, the bank of which you are cashier will be designated a United States depository to receive deposits on account of subscriptions to the 4 per cent consols of 1867.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

CASHIER WILBER NATIONAL BANK, Oneonta, N. Y.

Mr. HILL. The point I wish to emphasize is that in this letter Secretary Sherman says he can not accept subscriptions to the 4½ per cent loan; that they can be "received only through Messrs. Belmont & Co., of New York, and their associates." The point being to establish the fact that in the history of our country it is not an unusual thing to deal with syndicates, and that while under the present Administration we have had several popular loans, the popular subscriptions, so-called, under Mr. Sherman's administration of the Treasury Department, were mainly through a combination of bankers, and he said that subscriptions to the 4½ per cent loan could "be received only through Messrs. Belmont & Co., of New York, and their associates."

I am not complaining of this, Mr. President. It was unquestionably the proper thing to do under the circumstances. I am simply illustrating the point that history repeats itself. I am answering the skeptics of those days; I am answering the critics of those days as I am answering the skeptics and the critics now.

I should infer from some of the speeches which have been made upon this subject that the policy of paying out either gold or silver on demand at the Treasury was a new one, invented by the present Administration, and had never existed before. It has been spoken of as an invention of the present Administration; it has been spoken of as a scheme of Mr. Carlisle; and it has been characterized as a questionable transaction, an ill-advised proceeding, as though it was something that had been unheard of in the previous history of the country. The policy of paying out either gold or silver on demand, I repeat, is not a new one. It was the policy that was pursued years ago, a wise policy, unquestionably, or it would not have been pursued. It was a policy which gave success to the administration of the financial affairs of the Government; it was a policy that tided us over critical times; it was a policy which gave honor and credit to the Government and placed this Government upon a high financial standing with the Governments of the world. Senators now want to reverse all this policy; want to attack this Administration for doing only what has been done by their honored predecessors in the past.

I now ask the Secretary to read the letter on page 423 of the book which I send to the desk, from Secretary Sherman to Mr. Wheeler, the then President of the United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Senate resolution dated December 3, 1878, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what amount and denomination of silver coin has been received in payment of customs dues since the beginning of the current fiscal year, and whether or not he has applied the silver coin so received in whole or in part to the payment of the interest on the bonds or notes of the United States. If it has not been so applied, to state the reason why; if it has been applied to that purpose in part only, to state what portion has been so used, and on what character of obligations. He is directed to inform the Senate the amount of interest he has paid on the bonds and notes of the United States since the current fiscal year began, and the amount of such interest which he has paid in gold and silver coin respectively."

And in reply to inclose herewith copy of report, dated 9th instant, from the Treasurer of the United States, to whom the resolution had been referred, which gives the information called for.

Under existing law, either gold coin or standard silver dollars may be used in payment of the interest of the public debt. The law does not direct which shall be paid, but leaves this to the discretion of the Department, to be exercised upon considerations of public policy; and the practice, as stated by the Treasurer, of allowing the public creditor the option of the form and denomination of money in which he shall be paid has thus far been observed.

The manifest object of the act to authorize the coinage of the silver dollar and restore its legal-tender character, when construed in connection with the resumption act, is that gold coins and the standard silver dollar shall be maintained at par with each other, and this object can best be attained by paying out such coin as may subserve the convenience of the person to be paid, and not to force upon him either form of money.

Any other course would discriminate against the standard silver dollar and tend to its depreciation.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM A. WHEELER,
President United States Senate.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, that letter shows the policy of the Government, instituted in a critical period of our financial history, and which has been maintained by every Secretary of the Treasury from that day to the present. I am not now going to argue whether it is right or whether it is wrong. It has existed since 1878, and I simply cite it for the purpose of showing that at least our Republican friends are estopped from questioning the wisdom of the policy of Mr. Carlisle. I do not know that they do so. In the main, I think that three-fourths of the Republican Senators upon the other side approve of the policy of the Secretary of the Treasury which has thus been indicated in the letter of Mr. Secretary Sherman, and which has been followed from that day to the present.

Possibly, Mr. President, some other course might have been wiser. No one can tell. This policy, however, has been a successful one; this policy brought us resumption; this policy made the greenback dollar the equal of the gold dollar; this policy has kept them at par from that day to this; and we can point to it as a matter of pride. Some other course might have worked; some other course might have been better; but this policy laid down in 1878 has been strictly followed. Possibly there are some new men who are wiser than those who then conducted the administration of affairs; possibly there are new financiers, and you can find them on the street corners and in the groceries and all around who know better how to conduct financial affairs than all the Secretaries of the Treasury from that day to the present.

It may be so. We may be disappointed. Perhaps these new men can give us new points as to how to conduct the finances of the country; but I do not believe it. I am inclined to think that the correct policy has been pursued, and because of that very policy to-day we can point to the fact that our currencies are all kept upon a parity; and any other course would have either appreciated the gold dollar or depreciated the greenback dollar. The election must be given to the holders of the securities. There is no other proper course. The election can not be reserved simply to the Government, because we know, as a matter of fact, that when you refuse to give a certain form of currency to a holder of the obligations of the Government, that would be the very currency which the holder would want. We do not change the law of legal tender. We leave it as it is. It is a question of administration; it is a question of business policy; it is a question of the art of managing the great financial affairs of a great country.

Mr. President, I do not know that it is necessary that the affairs of the country should be conducted to satisfy a mere contingent of the people. If it satisfies the great mass of the two good old parties that is enough for me. When you satisfy the Republicans and the Democrats there is not much left after that [laughter], only a few men hanging on the outskirts, you know, a few guerrillas in politics, as there always are in battles and in war, ready to attack first one party and then the other. I mean no disrespect to my good Populist friends, especially the distinguished leader who sits before me and whom I esteem as my personal friend [Mr. ALLEN]; but, after all, I am beginning to think there is a good deal of merit in the two old parties in this country. I know I have seen my friend here day after day arise and heard him criticize the two old parties, and there are some over on the other side of the Chamber who are anxious and eager to join with him in his criticism. But the two old parties have conducted the affairs of the country pretty successfully; one or the other of them has had charge of the administration of public affairs during nearly our entire history. It will be a cold day when our third-party friends squeeze into power. If they get in at all, it will be by a tight squeeze. [Laughter.] They do not expect to succeed in the coming campaign, we are told, but they are going to make it very interesting for us in 1900. It will always be in the future when they are going to put out of power one of the two old parties.

Mr. President, I simply cite what has been done in the past for the purpose of estopping our Republican friends from criticism of Mr. Carlisle's policy. I am free to say that nine-tenths of them really have no criticism to make in regard to it. They do not join in the coarse flings against the honesty and integrity of the President. No; no. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] spoke on this subject the other day, and while I differed with him in the sentiments which he expressed, he said no one would cast any reflection upon the President or the Secretary of the Treasury, no one would be heard to assail their integrity; they may have wrong theories on financial policies, but that is a question of judgment. There was a Jackson party in 1828 and there was an anti-Jackson party. There was a Lincoln party and an anti-Lincoln party. We differed, and have always differed, about financial policies; differed about tariff policies; differed about banking policies. We may have substantial differences among us here, and yet we need not assail the character or integrity of opponents.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] desires to make a few observations upon the subject, Mr. President, and I have deemed it my duty and felt constrained to yield to him, which I do for the present, but I shall resume my remarks at the conclusion of his speech.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6293) to increase the pension of Peter Rafferty was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions. The joint resolution (H. Res. 186) for the relief of Ex-Naval Cadet Henry T. Baker was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on Monday, the 18th day of May, at 2 o'clock p. m.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. PEPPER, providing for a committee of five Senators to investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

[Mr. CALL addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. HILL rose.

Mr. GORDON. Will the Senator from New York allow me to make an inquiry of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. GORDON. Yesterday I offered an amendment to the pending resolution, which I afterwards found had been offered previously by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], the amendment proposing to allow the investigation to be conducted by the regular Finance Committee. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Kansas who moved the resolution whether that amendment would be agreeable to him?

Mr. PEPPER. I answer in the negative, Mr. President. I suppose the Senator from Georgia does not care about any special reasons being given.

Mr. GORDON. I do not at this moment, for I want to give one reason or two why it occurs to me the Committee on Finance is the only proper committee to make the investigation.

Mr. President, I am not on my feet to make a speech. I wish to say, however, that if we are on the verge of all the ills which my friend from Florida [Mr. CALL] has just delineated it is impossible for me to conceive how a committee of five can better tell us what they are or more effectively build barriers against our headlong progress to destruction than the strong, able, venerable committee constituted by this body under its regular forms and modes of procedure.

Mr. President, what is that committee? At the head of it is the oldest and most venerable man who sits upon this floor, an opponent in politics to the Secretary of the Treasury. As I trace down the names of those thirteen honorable men I fail to find one man upon the committee who agrees with the honorable Secretary of the Treasury both in politics and in financial policy. Surely no committee less biased in favor of that officer of the Government could possibly be selected. Why gentlemen stand upon this floor with such a committee already organized, respected not only by this body but by every citizen in the country, and seek to have a select committee to investigate subjects with which that committee itself was chosen to deal is more than I can understand. There is some reason for it, and I am at a loss to know what that reason is. I might have my opinions upon the subject, but I have too much respect for this body and for myself as a member of it to state the reasons which might be suggested.

Mr. President, the country ought to know that there is a committee composed of thirteen men as unimpeachable as any who ever sat in this body from the organization of the Government to this hour, and that there are Senators on both sides of the Chamber appealing that the proposed investigation shall be made by that committee, and yet it is resisted. Is there any man on this floor afraid of the distinguished and venerable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]? Is he to be bribed by the millions about which my friend from Florida talks so eloquently? Are not the gentlemen upon that committee who advocate the free coinage of silver, and who are therefore not in sympathy with the Secretary of the Treasury, to be trusted? I stand here to say that I will guarantee, although I have never heard it from him, that the Secretary of the Treasury is ready to meet any investigation, and I dare say that he would trust his honor and his reputation and his fidelity and responsibility to the Government and its people as readily in the hands of that committee—upon which there is not one man who sympathizes with him both in politics and financial policies—as readily as he would trust them to a committee of his own choosing.

Now, why should not that be done? My distinguished friend from Colorado had that conviction upon his mind when he offered the amendment which I repeated yesterday without knowing that he had preceded me.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me a moment?

Mr. GORDON. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Colorado did not offer such an amendment; the Senator is mistaken. It was offered by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. There was originally a resolution offered by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] proposing to refer the subject to the Committee on Finance. Whether that is now pending or not I do not know.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the pending question. I looked at the RECORD yesterday. I had given notice of my intention to make such a motion, but upon looking at the RECORD I saw that the junior Senator from Massachusetts had entered the motion before I gave the notice, and that is now the pending question.

Mr. GORDON. It is a matter of gratification to me to learn that there are a number of gentlemen here who take the same view of this subject. For myself I have not any doubt that if a vote were had to-day upon the simple question as to whether the Committee on Finance is worthy to be trusted with this investigation there would be a unanimous "yea" in response in this Chamber.

But, Mr. President, I said I did not intend to make a speech, and I will not do it. I received an answer from the Senator from Kansas, but I insist that before the discussion closes we shall have a vote upon that question.

Mr. HILL rose.

Mr. GORDON. Would the Senator from New York object to a vote upon that amendment now? He can afterwards discuss the question as to whether we shall have any investigation at all.

Mr. HILL. No; I have no objection to having that branch of the case disposed of now.

Mr. GORDON. Now, will the Senator from Kansas allow the Senate to vote upon that amendment?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Georgia is mistaken about the parliamentary status of the resolution. In the first place, the resolution as modified was presented to the Senate by myself. A motion was made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance, and, with that motion pending, the resolution went over until the next day. I submitted some remarks upon it, and the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], I believe, followed me; and the hour of 2 o'clock having interfered with his discussion it went upon the Calendar. The next day the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] offered a resolution similar to mine, except that it was not quite so long, and he proposed that the investigation should be conducted by the Committee on Finance. That resolution the next day likewise was disposed of; it seems it never went to the Calendar, so that the resolution which is now pending is the one which I originally introduced, with the motion of the Senator from Ohio pending to refer it to the Committee on Finance. The suggestion made by the Senator from Tennessee was in reference to the resolution presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, and of that resolution it seems there is no record anywhere. I did not find any record of it.

Mr. GORDON. The question can not be disposed of in that way, because if there has been no amendment offered to the resolution by the Senator from Colorado or the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Tennessee, certainly the Senator from Georgia, myself, did offer one yesterday.

Mr. PEPPER. That is true.

Mr. GORDON. So that, in a parliamentary sense, the amendment proposing that the investigation shall be conducted by the Committee on Finance is pending.

Mr. HARRIS. There can be no trouble about the parliamentary status of the resolution. The motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is to refer the resolution as it stands to the Committee on Finance, which, I take it, is the first question the Chair will put to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unquestionably that is correct.

Mr. HARRIS. But the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] moved to strike out that part of the resolution which proposes to raise a select committee and to require the Committee on Finance to make just such an inquiry as the resolution of the Senator from Kansas provides shall be made. Those are the two questions pending. If the resolution is referred, it goes just as it is to the committee. If it is not referred, the next question is upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to amend.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution which I introduced was voted down, as I remember, and disposed of. I had not made a motion to substitute the Finance Committee for the select committee, but when the question is reached on the pending resolution I shall certainly do so. It will be simply renewing the resolution which I introduced. I think the Finance Committee is the proper committee to make the inquiry.

Mr. HARRIS. Did I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that his motion was voted down?

Mr. LODGE. No; my original resolution was voted down.

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, yes; your original resolution.

Mr. LODGE. It was a separate resolution. My motion has not been voted down.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HILL. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is mistaken in regard to the situation. The Senator from Massachusetts offered a distinct resolution—

Mr. LODGE. That is what I said.

Mr. HILL. It was a distinct resolution, proposing an investigation by the Finance Committee. He did not offer it as an amendment; he did not offer it as a substitute. The Senator from Kansas offered his resolution. Subsequently the Senator from Ohio moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance. In the meantime the Senator from Massachusetts moved to lay upon the table the resolution of the Senator from Kansas. That was voted upon and the motion was voted down. I voted against laying it upon the table because I was just upon the point of discussing it. After that motion was voted down the Senator from Tennessee moved to amend the Pepper resolution by striking out

"a special committee of five" and inserting "the Committee on Finance." That motion is still pending. Of course the motion to refer will have to be taken first, and I assume next will follow the motion of the Senator from Tennessee. That is the parliamentary status. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts had not been voted upon at all. The Senate simply refused to lay the Peffer resolution upon the table, I myself saying that I did not wish to have it laid upon the table.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply wish to remind the Senator from New York that my recollection was exactly in accord with the statement he has just made until I examined the record at the Clerk's desk yesterday. I find that before I offered my amendment the junior Senator from Massachusetts had proposed the amendment that I had given notice of my intention to move.

Mr. LODGE. That is correct. I have looked at the record and find that my amendment is pending.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the statement of the record.

Mr. LODGE. I had forgotten it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the first question is upon the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FAULKNER and others. Question.

Mr. GORDON. Now let us have a vote on that question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending question. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. PEPPER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McBRIDE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I really do not know how he would vote upon this question, and therefore I do not feel at liberty to vote.

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], but I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON]. If the Senator from Utah were present, he would vote "nay." I vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER. I transfer my pair with my colleague [Mr. ELKINS] to the Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] and vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], with whom I am paired, is not in his seat, and I will therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Allison,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas,
Baker,	Gray,	Palmer,	Wetmore.
Brice,	Hill,	Proctor,
Faulkner,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Gallinger,	Mills,	Vest,

NAYS—35.

Allen,	Chilton,	Lodge,	Roach,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	Mantle,	Shoup,
Bate,	Cullom,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Squire,
Berry,	Daniel,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Dubois,	Pasco,	Teller,
Brown,	Frye,	Peffer,	Warren,
Butler,	Gear,	Perkins,	White,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.
Carter,	Lindsay,	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—37.

Aldrich,	George,	Kyle,	Smith,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	McBride,	Thurston,
Burrows,	Gorman,	Martin,	Tillman,
Caffery,	Hale,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Cameron,	Harris,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Cannon,	Hawley,	Murphy,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Platt,	Wilson.
Clark,	Irby,	Pritchard,
Davis,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,
Elkins,	Jones, Nev.	Sherman,

So the Senate refused to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FAULKNER. Let us vote now on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment that I offered, to substitute the Committee on Finance for a select committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the first word, "That," strike out "a committee of five Senators shall be appointed by the Vice-President, whose duty it shall be" and insert "the Committee on Finance shall be directed."

Mr. PEPPER. On that question let us have the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I wish to announce the pair of the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON]. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McBRIDE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Being paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and record my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. My colleague is unavoidably absent from the Senate, and will be absent for several days.

Mr. PASCO. I announce, as before, the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and I vote "yea."

I wish to state that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] is paired generally on all questions this afternoon with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY. I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Probably the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] can mention the views of his colleague upon this subject.

Mr. PUGH. I am able to state to the Senator from Pennsylvania that my colleague, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY. Then I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. CLARK] is absent, and is paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote, as the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], with whom I am paired, is not in his seat.

Mr. THURSTON. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Allison,	Faulkner,	Lodge,	Roach,
Bacon,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Baker,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Squire,
Bate,	Gear,	Mitchell, Wis.	Thurston,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a motion to strike out the second and third paragraphs of this resolution, so as to leave the resolution stand upon the first paragraph, which undoubtedly comprehends all that is mentioned in the others as well.

Mr. STEWART. Has not that been done?

Mr. VILAS. It has not yet been done, but I suppose the Senator from Kansas will not object to its being done.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, while I am of the opinion that the first paragraph of the resolution is sufficiently wide in scope to authorize the committee to go into all the facts and details that are material, yet, at the same time, in drawing the resolution I thought it well to be more specific. Senators will observe that in the first paragraph the language is:

To investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury, etc.

"Generally;" but there is nothing to indicate that the committee is expected to go into details. Hence I thought in the draft of the resolution that it would be better to be more specific and to point out by way of suggestion, if for no other purpose, to the committee what lines of investigation the Senate desired the committee to pursue.

But, as I stated a moment ago, while I think the first paragraph covers all the ground that really need be covered after the discussion we have had here, still I prefer to have the resolution remain as it is, and especially when it goes to the Committee on Finance, instead of to a select committee. I assume that, instead of 13 members undertaking to make this investigation, it will be done by a subcommittee; that the report of the subcommittee will be submitted to the full committee, and that the action of the full committee will be made on the report of the subcommittee. Hence I still think that it will be better to leave the language just as it is.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I should have supposed that the Senator would agree to my suggestion, inasmuch as he has agreed that the language of the first clause covers the whole subject.

Mr. PEPPER. I should have been willing to agree to that if the Senate had seen proper to intrust the investigation to a select committee.

Mr. VILAS. I see no reason to suppose that the Finance Committee will not intelligently interpret the instruction which is given by the Senate to the resolution.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will allow me, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] a little while ago made the same mistake, and he emphasized it with considerable fervor and gesticulation, that there must be something else that moved the author of the resolution than an honorable, fair, and equitable investigation. While that was not the language of the Senator, yet it was what he meant to say, and as we all understood it.

Now, I say, once for all, that I have no manner of objection to the Committee on Finance making this investigation. I make no imputation upon the character, the integrity, the intelligence, the honor, or the patriotism of any member of that committee, but it occurred to me, Mr. President, that with a cumbrous committee of 13 members, not chosen and appointed for the special purpose of making investigations of transactions in the Executive Departments, but for other purposes connected with the body here, as one of the arms of the body, so to speak, it would be less liable to make this investigation thorough and complete as the public demand, if there is a public demand, expects that it will be done.

More than that, Mr. President, that committee has remained perfectly silent during all of these peculiar bond transactions which this resolution proposes to investigate, saying not one word; and one of the members of the committee upon this floor—and I do not know but others, but one particularly—gave it as his opinion that the members of the Administration had done exactly right; had done just what he thought they ought to do. The committee, I say, sat silently by, seeing all these things, noticing the clamor in the newspapers and the scandal that was being published broadcast over the country, saying not a word; and it seemed to me that a body so inert, that required so much to move it as our Finance Committee, would probably not be so zealous, so earnest, and so thorough in the investigation of this unusual transaction of the executive department as a special committee, specially commissioned for that particular purpose, to go out and do thus and so. That was the view I had in my mind.

One other word, and that is all I have to say. It has been assumed by the Senator from New York—and probably from his eloquence by others—that this resolution is from the incubation of Populism, if I may use that expression; in other words, that it was the result of a conference and caucus among Populist Senators. I want to disabuse the mind of the Senator from New York and that of all other Senators here on that subject. The Populist Senators, as such, have had no more to do with the preparation and presentation of that resolution than had the Senator from New York. It was my own product exclusively, and no living soul saw it until within just a few minutes before it was offered to the Senate, and then I showed it to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], who had hardly time to read one-half of it until he handed it back to me, and I offered it to the Senate, and whatever there is in it to be censured or approved I am responsible for.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I had hoped that if we could remove from this resolution one or two of those details which are unnecessary and leave the resolution just as the Senator from Kansas says it ought to be, we might have an end of it. I hoped for that reason, among others, that he would readily agree to the suggestion, and, indeed, I expected that he would, and that there would be no occasion to present my reasons in support of my motion. Indeed, what he states is a sufficient reason for the adoption of the motion, because, if it be true, as the Senator from Kansas concedes, that the first paragraph of this resolution comprehends all the various details which are set out at some length in the second and third paragraphs, I think it is true that there ought to be no occasion to direct specifically a committee like the Committee on Finance, which is abundantly directed generally in the first paragraph of the resolution.

It ought to be further said, too, that there is a certain risk if you begin with a general declaration, intending thereby to impose a comprehensive view, which shall require the committee to pursue whatever path the investigation may itself indicate to them, you do, by giving them specific and limited directions afterwards in a certain sense limit and restrict them to pursue those particular points. If Senators notice the several things mentioned in the second paragraph, it seems to me it will occur to everyone at once that it is mere surplusage to repeat them in the resolution.

Mr. STEWART. Read them.

Mr. VILAS. I will read the second paragraph.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator read the first paragraph? There are several Senators here who wish to hear the first paragraph read. I ask the Senator to read the first paragraph as amended.

Mr. VILAS. The first paragraph is not amended. The declaration part of the resolution has been amended; so that it reads:

That the Committee on Finance is directed, etc.

The first paragraph of that declaration, unchanged as it was introduced by the Senator from Kansas, is:

First. To investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

Now, take the second paragraph:

Second. To investigate and report specially what amount of available funds, classified, was in the United States Treasury and on deposit in other places, subject to the order of the Secretary of the Treasury at the time the bonds were sold or offered for sale.

Necessarily one of the facts and circumstances connected with the bond investigation.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Necessarily?

Mr. VILAS. Yes; necessarily.

Second—

Whether there was or was not coin enough on hand to meet all coin obligations of the Government due at the time said bonds were sold or when they were offered for sale.

The very reason upon which the bonds were sold.

Third (these enumerations of paragraphs are my own)—

What obligations were due at that time and the amount of each, stated separately.

Fourth—

What was the reason for any unusual withdrawal of coin from the Treasury shortly before bonds were sold or offered for sale, if such unusual withdrawals were in fact made.

Fifth—

And by what persons or classes of persons and for what purpose or on what account such withdrawals were made.

Sixth—

Who purchased the bonds, in what amounts, and where, whether in the United States or in foreign countries, and in what proportions.

And seventh—

And from what persons or classes of persons the gold was procured with which to pay for the bonds, what the bonds sold for, and what was the market price of our Government bonds at the time, and what effect the bond sales had on the credit and business of the people of the United States.

That is the whole of the second paragraph. If a committee were to investigate intelligently the subject committed to them generally to pursue and inquire about under that first resolution, how could they possibly omit any circumstance?

Now take the third paragraph. This embraces one thing which seems to me ought not to be embraced. If we were to repeat these specific directions in addition to the general directions, one of them ought to be omitted; but as it is all comprehended except that one, perhaps the better way is to strike them all out.

Third. To investigate and report as to the manner of disposing of said bonds, by what authority, and what contracts, advertisements, or proposals were made by the Secretary of the Treasury in relation thereto; what agreements or contracts, and whether oral or in writing, and whether publicly or privately, were entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury and any syndicate or person or persons with respect to the sale and purchase of the bonds—

Of course necessarily involved in every circumstance—and the profits made—

Now, here is one clause embraced in these words—or to be made by such syndicate, or any person or persons connected with such syndicate, directly or indirectly.

Mr. President, it does seem to me quite ridiculous to charge the Committee on Finance with an investigation or with an inquiry into what profits are "to be made" by any syndicate out of their having purchased bonds in the past. It is a speculative inquiry, which it would be better to omit from the resolution. It is the only indication of an inquiry in the whole specification of particular inquiries which, it seems to me, would not immediately occur to every member of the Committee on Finance as within the duty charged upon him by the first resolution. There is added to it—whether such contract or agreement had any and what effect on the prices offered for the bonds, what the effect was, and who, if any person, profited by it, and to what extent.

Which is mere repetition. It seems to me that we do harm to the resolution by adding these particular and specific directions. We had better leave it to a committee instructed to pursue the inquiry, a committee like the Committee on Finance, into all material facts and circumstances. Some new lines may be opened up by them as they make inquiries which are not mentioned in the specific suggestion in the second and third parts of the resolution; and as the first part is enough, it is not even becoming in us to repeat and specify more particularly the directions. That is all there was in my mind on the subject, and I did not expect to have said half so much by way of interposing what seems to me the plain propriety of this motion, because I supposed it would have been assented to.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have no disposition to discuss this resolution or the amendments to it, but when the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] attacks the Committee on Finance for inertness it seems to me he makes a charge which is utterly unfounded. I do not think it was the duty of that committee, without any action on the part of the Senate, to take this matter up in regard to the sale of these bonds; but speaking for myself, as a member of that committee, I desire to state that, although the other day as a matter of courtesy to the Senator from Kansas I voted to take up his resolution, though the river and harbor bill was then pending and I was a member of the Commerce Committee, which had reported it, I did not then mean to state—and I distinctly want that understood now—that I believed there was any necessity for this investigation by any committee.

The intelligent portion of the people of the United States know all the facts connected with these bond sales. The real essence of the whole matter lies in the policy of the Administration. There is no man in this country who is worthy to cast his ballot at an election who does not know why these bond sales were made and how they were made. If the Administration believed honestly, as it doubtless did, that the gold standard must be preserved, their only way to do it was by the sale of bonds. I differ in toto with the Administration upon that question; but a further explanation of my opinions in regard to that would involve the whole financial question.

As to the details of this investigation, I desire to say that, as a member of the Committee on Finance, whatever may be my opinion as to the necessity for it, I shall honestly act as the agent of the Senate in making that investigation, and I shall not stand upon any technical terms or phrases contained in the resolution. I understand the Senate to mean that this whole proceeding is to be investigated. Let me say to the Senator from Kansas that this resolution, in whatever form it comes to the committee, will not be pigeonholed and die in that committee. There will be a report upon it, full, ample, with all the information that the committee can possibly obtain.

It is unjust to the Committee on Finance, whose chairman is absent this afternoon, to charge that we have been guilty of any neglect of duty or any inertness, as the Senator expressed it. That committee is up with its docket; it has discharged all the duties imposed upon it, and will continue to do so; and I undertake to say, although not authorized to do so by any other member of the committee, that not one of us will be disposed to shirk the duty imposed by this resolution in any form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] to the resolution of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the second and third clauses of the resolution, in the following words:

Second. To investigate and report specially what amount of available funds, classified, was in the United States Treasury and on deposit in other places, subject to the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, at the time the bonds were sold or offered for sale; whether there was or was not coin enough on hand to meet all coin obligations of the Government due at the time said bonds were sold or when they were offered for sale; what obligations were due at that time and the amount of each, stated separately; what was the reason for any unusual withdrawal of coin from the Treasury shortly before bonds were sold or offered for sale, if such unusual withdrawals were in fact made, and by what persons or classes of persons and for what purpose or on what account such withdrawals were made; who purchased the bonds, in what amounts, and where, whether in the United States or in foreign countries, and in what proportions, and from what persons or classes of persons the gold was procured with which to pay for the bonds, what the bonds sold for, and what was the market price of our Government bonds at the time, and what effect the bond sales had on the credit and business of the people of the United States.

Third. To investigate and report as to the manner of disposing of said bonds, by what authority, and what contracts, advertisements, or proposals were made by the Secretary of the Treasury in relation thereto; what agreements or contracts, and whether oral or in writing, and whether publicly or privately, were entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury and any syndicate or person or persons with respect to the sale and purchase of the bonds, and the profits made or to be made by such syndicate, or any person or persons connected with such syndicate, directly or indirectly; whether such contract or agreement had any and what effect on the prices offered for the bonds, what the effect was, and who, if any person, profited by it, and to what extent.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Secretary to read the resolution as it will stand if amended under the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated. The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance shall be directed to investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

Mr. BACON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I announce the pair of the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON]. That enables me to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Being paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "nay."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], who, I notice, has not voted on this question. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who is not otherwise paired on this vote, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—7.
Brice, Faulkner,	Gordon, Gray,	Hill, Palmer,	Vilas.
NAYS—44.
Allen, Allison, Bacon, Baker, Bate, Berry, Blackburn, Brown, Burrows, Butler, Carter,	Chilton, Cockrell, Cullom, Daniel, Dubois, Frye, Gear, George, Hansbrough, Harris, Jones, Nev.	Lindsay, Lodge, McBride, McMillan, Mantle, Mitchell, Oreg. Nelson, Pasco, Pepper, Perkins, Pettigrew,	Pugh, Shoup, Squire, Stewart, Teller, Thurston, Vest, Warren, Wetmore, White, Wolcott.
NOT VOTING—38.
Aldrich, Blanchard, Caffery, Call, Cameron, Cannon, Chandler, Clark, Davis, Elkins,	Gallinger, Gibson, Gorman, Hale, Hawley, Hoar, Irby, Jones, Ark. Kyle, Martin,	Mills, Mitchell, Wis. Morgan, Morrill, Murphy, Platt, Pritchard, Proctor, Quay, Roach,	Sewell, Sherman, Smith, Tillman, Turpie, Voorhees, Walthall, Wilson.

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is upon agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President—

Mr. VILAS. Does the Senator from New York desire to go on to-night?

Mr. HILL. I wish to say a word. While I am gratified at the action of the Senate in changing the form of the resolution, dispensing with the appointment of a special committee and directing the Finance Committee to make the investigation, I am, of course, as I stated at the outset, opposed to any investigation whatever. I was willing to suspend my remarks at the suggestion of several Senators to enable a vote to be taken on this test question. I desire to assure the Senate that I shall not detain it very long, but I have marked out for myself some things which I desire to say. I do not desire, unless it is the pleasure of the Senate, to complete my remarks to-night, but I shall be able to conclude them within an hour to-morrow. I will then finish what I have to say upon this question, and the Senate may, so far as I am concerned, take a vote.

Mr. PEPPER. I think that if the Senator from New York can conclude his remarks in the course of an hour, he ought to be able to do so to-night. He has had a good deal of rest this afternoon, and Senators are very anxious to dispose of the resolution. I hope the Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. HILL. It is immaterial to me. Then I will go on.

Mr. VILAS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FRYE. Will not the Senator from Wisconsin let me ask the Senate to go on with the river and harbor bill?

Mr. VILAS. Yes; if the Senate will agree to that course.

Mr. HILL. I am entirely agreeable to anything.

Mr. GRAY. Let us take a recess.

Mr. HILL. The contest is substantially over, and I wish to conclude my remarks in form and shape.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FRYE. I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me to call up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state, in order that there may be no misunderstanding—

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Missouri to withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to state to the Senator from New York and to other Senators that if we can have an understanding that a vote upon this question shall be taken at some reasonable hour to-morrow, early in the day, I shall not object to an adjournment at this time. The Senator from New York states that he desires to occupy an hour.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator said he could conclude his remarks within an hour.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope to take up the resolution immediately after the routine business in the morning, and allow the Senator from New York to complete his observations, which he certainly can do in an hour and a half. I presume that no other Senator will desire to speak. If that be true, we can vote—

Mr. FRYE. At half past 1 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that we may take a vote upon the resolution at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HILL. Let me say a word. It is immaterial to me. I would just as lief go on now—

Mr. STEWART. I object to the request.

Mr. HILL. And close the discussion to-night, so far as I am concerned. It is just as convenient to me.

Mr. STEWART. That is right.

Mr. FRYE. Let us close the discussion to-night.

Mr. HILL. I will proceed and will close the discussion to-night.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let us do that.

Mr. FRYE. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw his motion?

Mr. VEST. I do.

Mr. HILL. I am as anxious to reach the river and harbor bill, although New York has not very much in it, as any other Senator. Therefore I will not unnecessarily detain the Senate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now let us go on.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe it is now understood that we shall take a vote upon the question to-night before adjournment. I only mention it at this time because some Senators will soon leave the Chamber unless that is understood.

Mr. HILL. I have not the slightest objection to that course.

Mr. FRYE. Let us vote to-night.

Mr. GRAY. Let us go on.

Mr. HILL. Of course I can not control other Senators.

Mr. President, it is unnecessary that I should refer to the speech of the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] who spoke in favor of the proposed investigation. I simply wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that to-day it referred a resolution to investigate the election of members of Congress in the State of Florida to a standing committee of the Senate rather than summarily order an investigation; and yet in reference to a question involving a hundred million dollars the Senate proposes to proceed immediately and summarily in ordering an investigation.

When I was interrupted and yielded to the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], I was speaking upon the fact that history was repeating itself. I wish now to read a letter from the agent of the Nevada Bank of San Francisco to Mr. Sherman, dated New York, December 21, 1878:

AGENCY OF THE NEVADA BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO,
New York, December 21, 1878.

DEAR SIR: We received at noon your favor of yesterday's date, with the following closing remarks:

"It should be understood by yourselves and by the bank that while there is little doubt that the money will remain on deposit until the maturity of the seventy-fifth call, yet the Department must reserve the right, without qualification or condition, to draw the money out at any time."

We very much regret that this proviso has now been interposed, because in our previous correspondence with your good self relative to this subscription we find nothing that would lead us to expect it.

On the 18th instant we inquired by telegraph if we could subscribe "with privilege of three months in which to settle for same," to which you replied on the same day by telegraph: "Can not under the law accept your offer. Can only accept subscription as per circular, the terms of which are as favorable to you as your offer. See letter." And the letter referred to covers the circular of August 1, 1878, which distinctly authorizes designated depositaries to retain the subscription money until the call of the corresponding 6 per cent bonds matures, ninety days hence, and closes with these words: "I hope you will make the subscription on these terms."

Thus you will perceive that not a word in your telegram or letter indicated that you would reserve the right to call for the money before the expiration of the ninety days, and we felt perfectly justified in telegraphing our head office on the 19th: "Just received letter Secretary Treasury conceding three months' time if subscription made through depositary."

We now beg to confirm the following telegram which we sent you upon receipt of yesterday's communication:

"Yesterday's letter received. In accordance with yours of the 18th, and August circular therewith inclosed, we subscribed for million bonds, understanding that ninety days' privilege was unquestionably granted. If any doubts exist on this point, we fear our head office will prefer to cancel subscription. Kindly reply promptly."

Very respectfully, yours,

C. T. CHRISTENSEN, Agent.

P. S.—2.15 p. m.—We are this moment in receipt of your telegram, as follows: "The money will remain on deposit, as stated, ninety days, but this is only done by reason of the misapprehension into which you have fallen in making the subscription, and must not stand as a precedent."

Very respectfully,

C. T. CHRISTENSEN, Agent.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

I wish to show from this letter that in 1878 as now there were complaints in reference to bids; that banks and individuals were complaining of the Secretary of the Treasury that they had not been treated properly and rightly in reference to the award of bids. That is the only point I make, namely, to show that there is nothing new in these allegations, but that all during the resumption period there were complaints by bankers and others.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New York allow me to ask—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to suggest that an hour from now we will not have a voting quorum on this floor. If we can come to an agreement to take a vote not later than 2 o'clock to-morrow, giving the Senator from New York an opportunity to conclude his remarks to-morrow morning, I think it would be the wiser policy, and with his permission I will ask unanimous consent for such an agreement.

Mr. HILL. To take a vote when?

Mr. HARRIS. To take the final vote on the resolution not later than 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HILL. That is satisfactory, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent for such an agreement.

Mr. DUBOIS. I do not desire to object, but I think a Senator who has left the Chamber would object to such an arrangement. Can the Senator not fix the time at 4 o'clock? We will go ahead with business and vote at 4 o'clock, and the Senator from New York can conclude at 2 o'clock.

Mr. FAULKNER. Why not modify the request for unanimous consent by asking for a vote at 2 o'clock, or sooner, if the debate is concluded?

Mr. HARRIS. If I can get a unanimous-consent agreement to take the final vote at any hour named to-morrow, it will suit me.

Mr. DUBOIS. Say 4 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What hour was designated by the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HARRIS. I designated 2 o'clock, but other Senators suggested other hours. The earlier the hour the better it suits me.

Mr. DUBOIS. I suggest 4 o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I ask unanimous consent that the final vote on the resolution shall be taken not later than 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. DANIEL. Make it 2 o'clock.

Mr. HILL. I would suggest 3 o'clock. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] can go on with the river and harbor bill for an hour, and I will finish at 3 o'clock. If I do not conclude by that time you can have the vote.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Idaho whether he is aware that any other Senator desires to be heard upon this subject?

Mr. DUBOIS. I am not certain about it.

Mr. WHITE. Of course I would not be a party to any agreement that would exclude any Senator who has left here with—

Mr. DUBOIS. As I said, a Senator left the Chamber who would object to taking a vote at 2 o'clock. I am willing to make it 4 o'clock. The Senator from New York can conclude his remarks at 2 o'clock. Then if no one wants to speak we can go on with the river and harbor bill, and vote on the resolution at 4 o'clock.

Mr. HILL. When do I begin?

Mr. HARRIS. Immediately after the routine business to-morrow morning. I make this distinct proposition—

Mr. HILL. Say 4 o'clock. If I conclude sooner—

Mr. HARRIS. That immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow the resolution shall be taken up.

Mr. HILL. At what hour?

Mr. HARRIS. Immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow morning the resolution shall be taken up—

Mr. HILL. I do not know exactly when that will be, but I do not object.

Mr. HARRIS. And that the final vote shall be taken not later than 4 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators have heard the request of the Senator from Tennessee for unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. I observe that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] is temporarily absent from the Chamber. I suppose he will be here in a moment or so.

Mr. TELLER. I think we ought to wait until he comes in.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think a unanimous-consent agreement ought to be made until the Senator from Kansas comes into the Chamber.

Mr. TELLER. I think not.

Mr. PEPPER entered the Chamber.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kansas was absent when I made my request a while ago. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the fact that I have just asked unanimous consent that the pending resolution shall be taken up immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow and that the final vote shall be taken upon the resolution not later than 4 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. PEPPER. If that is satisfactory to the members of the Appropriations Committee it will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not quite satisfactory, but we will abide by it.

Mr. HARRIS. If it is just barely satisfactory—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WILLIAM GRAY.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 953) for the relief of William Gray.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The chair hears none.

Mr. TELLER. The bill involves the small sum of $174, and I ask that it may be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to issue to William Gray, late a private in Company D, First Regiment of New York (Lincoln) Cavalry, a warrant for the sum of $174.43, in full for his claim heretofore allowed by the Treasury Department, and for which claim the Department issued to him Treasury pay warrant No. 3960, dated September 20, 1865, which warrant was paid on a forged indorsement of the name of the claimant without his authority or knowledge, and for which he has never received any return or benefit.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VILAS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 7, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 6, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 491) granting an increase of pension to Francis Walsh, of Stockham, Nebr.;

A bill (H. R. 152) granting a pension to Mary Ann Tracy;

A bill (H. R. 577) granting a pension to Lydia A. Taft;

A bill (H. R. 5254) granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer G. Howell, late a private of Company F, One hundred and sixtieth New York Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 1139) granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt;

A bill (H. R. 3018) to amend an act approved March 3, 1891, granting the right of way upon the public lands for reservoir and canal purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4887) granting a pension to Sarah G. Ives; and

A bill (H. R. 4968) granting a pension to Helen A. Jackman, dependent daughter of Lieut. William Jackman, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteers.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 673) granting a pension to Joseph R. West, brigadier and brevet major general, United States Army Volunteers, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendment; and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SHOUP, and Mr. ROACH as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution authorizing the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives and one other member of the Joint Committee on the Library, etc., to sit during the recess of Congress for the purpose of inquiring into the condition of the Congressional Library, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2746) to remove the political disabilities of Col. John Taylor Wood;

A bill (S. 1741) to authorize the Muscogee, Oklahoma and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a line of railway through Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 581) for the relief of the legal representatives of Hiram Somerville;

A bill (S. 2828) granting an increase of pension to Samuel E. Liscom;

A bill (S. 2829) granting a pension to Plumy E. Marden;

A bill (S. 2787) granting a pension to Simpson Everett Stilwell;

A bill (S. 2790) for the relief of Sophronia S. Stowell;

A bill (S. 1883) to grant a pension to Charlotte O. Van Cleve, widow of Gen. Horatio P. Van Cleve;

A bill (S. 2542) granting a pension to Stephen Maines;

A bill (S. 536) granting an increase of pension to Samantha Barnes;

A bill (S. 527) for the relief of Margaret C. McKay, widow of the late Dr. William C. McKay, of Oregon;

A bill (S. 2430) granting a pension to James W. Whitney;

A bill (S. 2428) granting an increase of pension to Jacob P. Fletcher;

A bill (S. 2341) granting a pension to George E. Tuttle;

A bill (S. 2158) granting a pension to Abraham Rhodes;

A bill (S. 2441) granting a pension to George D. Noble;

A bill (S. 2077) granting a pension to Richard T. Seltzer;

A bill (S. 1465) granting an increase of pension to Elijah A. Gilbert;

A bill (S. 2822) to increase the pension of Theodore V. Purdy;

A bill (S. 1857) granting a pension to Nathan Mitchell;

A bill (S. 2729) granting a pension to Emma Weir Casey; and

A bill (S. 2601) granting a pension to Ambrose B. Carlton.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5819) to provide for the examination and classification of certain lands in the State of California, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments; and had appointed Mr. DUBOIS, Mr. PETTIGREW, and Mr. PASCO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 5490) to license billiard and pool tables in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4804) to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 and to repeal subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 3426) granting an increase of pension to Eugenia R. Sweeney, widow of Brig. Gen. Thomas W. Sweeney, deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 3013) to amend section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to improve the merchant marine engineer service, and thereby also to increase the efficiency of the Naval Reserve, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendment; and had appointed Mr. FRYE, Mr. SQUIRE, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in one volume the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statue of James Shields, 16,500 copies, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 each for use and distribution by the governors of Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to have printed an engraving of said statue, to accompany said proceedings, said engraving to be paid for out of the appropriation for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills and resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 2542) granting a pension to Stephen Maines—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2601) granting an increase of pension to Ambrose B. Carlton—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 536) granting an increase of pension to Samantha Barnes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1465) granting an increase of pension to Elijah A. Gilbert—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1857) granting a pension to Nathan Mitchell—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2077) granting a pension to Richard T. Seltzer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2158) granting an increase of pension to Abraham Rhodes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2341) granting a pension to George E. Tuttle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2428) granting an increase of pension to Jacob P. Fletcher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2430) granting a pension to James W. Whitney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2441) granting a pension to George D. Noble—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2829) granting a pension to Plumy E. Marden—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 2828) granting an increase of pension to Samuel E. Liscom—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2321) for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 1367) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob R. Davis—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 5819) to provide for the examination and classification of certain lands in the State of California, with Senate amendments—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Concurrent resolution—

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in one volume the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statue of James Shields; 16,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 each for use and distribution by the governors of Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to have printed an engraving of said statue, to accompany said proceedings, said engraving to be paid for out of the appropriation for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing—

To the Committee on Printing.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS.

Mr. DINGLEY. By instruction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I present a privileged resolution relative to final adjournment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on Monday, the 18th day of May, at 2 o'clock p. m.

[Applause.]

Mr. DINGLEY. On that resolution I move the previous question.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, is not this question debatable? Mr. DINGLEY. I have felt that under the circumstances, this day having been set apart for the business of another committee, I ought to move the previous question.

Mr. WHEELER. Will not my colleague on the committee consent to put off action on this resolution until to-morrow, and then have debate upon it? There is, I think, great division of opinion upon this subject.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think there is a practically unanimous desire that there should be no debate.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, the previous question having been ordered, is it not true that under the rule a debate of twenty minutes is allowed on each side?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the impression that, strictly speaking, debate has been had between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. WHEELER. I simply asked that the resolution lie over until to-morrow. Under the rules, Mr. Speaker, we are entitled to debate. I should like, as a member of the committee, to occupy a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not like to rule very sharply upon such a question as this, although it has been ruled once or twice, upon less debate than has occurred in this case, that the previous question cut off further debate. The Chair hopes that the gentleman from Alabama will not press the point.

Mr. WHEELER. I will not insist upon twenty minutes, but should like to have five minutes.

Mr. DINGLEY. In view of the fact that this day has been set apart by a special rule for the business of another committee, I have felt that we ought not to occupy any time with debate on this resolution. But I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] be allowed five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, during the canvass of November, 1894, the Republican party most solemnly pledged that if intrusted with power they would enact all necessary legislation to relieve the people from the depression under which the country was suffering.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Caused by the Democratic party being in power.

Mr. WHEELER. No, sir; the four years of unbridled Republican rule, which terminated on March 4, 1893, bequeathed to Mr. Cleveland's Administration a prostrate country, an empty Treasury, and a discreditable public service.

The country was like a drunkard after a long debauch.

On March 4 Mr. Cleveland suddenly checked this condition, and as withholding stimulant from the slave to drink is followed by lassitude, so a somewhat similar effect followed the halt called by Mr. Cleveland in the practices which had characterized the administration of affairs since he left the helm of state on March 4, 1889.

Mr. Cleveland found $117,927,395 of net gold in the Treasury in March, 1885, and in four years of Democratic silver-coinage administration we increased the net gold in the Treasury to $218,818,253, which Mr. Cleveland turned over to President Harrison on March 4, 1889, and when Mr. Cleveland relieved President Harrison, in March, 1893, he found the net gold was only $103,284,219.

Under a silver-coinage Democratic Administration gold steadily flowed to our country, and under the Republican silver-demonetizing Administration which succeeded the tide was turned and gold flowed from our country to the four corners of the earth.

Mr. Cleveland left a balance of profitable trade in our favor, and he found, after four years of Republican rule, the balance of trade and the tide of prosperity turned fearfully against us.

He left a tariff which taxed the people 47 per cent, and he found one which increased the tax to an average of 60 per cent and a tax of 120 per cent on the necessities of life which the wage worker is compelled to buy. He left a country in the boom of prosperity, the result of his wise Administration from 1885 to 1889, and in 1893, after four years of Republican rule, he found it in poverty and distress, shrinking commerce, falling prices, reduced revenues, and paralyzed industries.

Before Mr. Cleveland had fairly taken the reins of Government the Republican party commenced the exercise of all its power to attribute the existing evils to Mr. Cleveland and his Administration.

This was the battle cry in the campaign of 1894, and they promised, if intrusted with the control of Congress, that every evil would be remedied, prosperity restored, and the country again made happy.

Under this pledge the people gave them a majority of 150 in the House and a decided plurality in the Senate.

The question before the American people is, Has that promise been redeemed?

I reply that the history of the world does not show another instance of such utter disregard of the promises by virtue of which a party was intrusted with position and power.

You have not the poor, threadbare excuse that you were obstructed in your efforts by filibustering Democrats, because no such action in a single instance has been even attempted.

You can not say that as the session advanced your wisdom admonished you that it would not be sagacious to comply with your pledges to the people, because the first utterance of your great, your distinguished, trusted, and worshiped leader announced that nothing would be done, and this was certainly an announcement and a confession that all of the promises made by the Republican party would be violated.

In his inaugural address when Congress convened, in his first utterance as to the proposed Republican policy, Speaker REED said:

If we do something which for the moment seems inadequate, it may be that time, which has justified itself of us on many occasions, may do so again.

This expression was understood to mean that nonaction on the part of a majority of this House would be approved by the people, and this was corroborated by the following expression, which was widely published as his utterance:

If we received the applause of the country for what we did in the Fifty-first Congress, we may receive applause for what we do not do in this Congress.

I hold in my hand a newspaper account of the Republican caucus of April 11. It seems very clear from its statements that the Republicans were quite unanimous in their determination not to allow the enactment of any general legislation. The newspaper account says:

Speaker REED was not present, but Mr. DINGLEY spoke, outlining the views upon general legislation held by the leaders of the House.

The account then says:

The general tendency of his (DINGLEY'S) advice was that the Republicans should use every endeavor to bring about an early adjournment of Congress; to adjourn, if possible, within a month, as soon as the appropriation bills could be passed by both Houses.

This shows that the first day the House met your greatest leader announced that the policy of the Republican party was not to enact legislation.

It shows that prior to April 11 the Republican leaders had determined upon an early adjournment, to adjourn as soon as the appropriation bills could be passed; and that determination on the part of the leaders has been repeatedly manifested, and not a semblance of honest effort has been made to enact legislation for the benefit of the people.

Mr. Speaker, is not this policy the grossest violation of the pledges made by the Republicans to the people in the election two years ago? With no legislation accomplished for the benefit of the people, with bills introduced and pending which should be considered by the House and which would give relief to the people, the great Republican majority propose to abandon their post, to fly from their duty, and to escape in this way the just responsibility which rests upon their heads. Is not this action like that of soldiers who fly from the field of battle? Is it not like sentinels guarding important trusts abandoning their duty? In my opinion, not a single honest effort has been made by the Republican majority to relieve the people from the thralldom under which they are suffering. Instead of reducing taxes you have used your best efforts to raise them.

Every measure you have presented to the House upon this question has been to raise taxation and sorely add to the people's burdens.

I read from the Scriptures the fate of the raiser of taxes. I find in Daniel xi, 20, that—

Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes, * * * but within a few days he shall be destroyed.

That, Mr. Speaker, will be the fate of a party who desert their posts and are false to the people. They will receive the execration of the people, as a soldier who runs from battle or a sentinel who leaves the post at which he has been placed intrusted with the honor and defense of the people. I hope that every member of this House who loves the people, who feels the responsibility of his obligation, who feels that his pledges are to be kept, will, when this question is brought up, vote "no," and pledge himself to stay here until Congress has legislated for the people. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that some efforts have been made by the Republican majority toward relief legislation.

It is true that on December 26 the premier of the House, Mr. DINGLEY, thrust a tariff bill upon us. I hold the bill in my hands. It was dated December 26. It was introduced and printed that day and, as I said in my speech, while the ink was still wet its consideration was forced upon the House and it was crammed down the throats of the subservient followers of the proud leader whose friends delight in giving him the appellation, the American Czar—the imperial captain-general of the Republican party.

This unwise measure sought to exact and collect burdensome taxes from the people in the face of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury that he already had (I read from page 53) a balance of $177,406,888.62 in the Treasury, and that there was—

No reason to doubt the ability of the Government to discharge all its current obligations during the present fiscal year, and have a large cash balance at its close, without imposing additional taxation in any form upon the people.

Mr. Carlisle also told you in his report (page 52) that while the kind of bill you proposed would place unnecessary burdens upon the people, the probable tendency of such a bill would be to paralyze industries and decrease rather than increase revenues. He said:

The revenue derived from customs during the fiscal year 1895 exceeded the revenue derived from the same source in 1894 by the sum of $20,340,086.83.

Now, as the principal items of the Wilson bill went into operation January 1, 1895, we see by these figures that the low-tariff Wilson bill gave more revenue than the high-tariff McKinley bill.

Unwise, impolitic, and unnecessary as was any measure of this character, it was exceeded by the unwisdom and impolicy of its proposed methods and provisions.

1. The largest increase of tax was on many articles which are of necessity used by laboring people.

2. The bill was a horizontal bill; a kind of bill which Presidential Candidate Mr. McKinley said was—

A confession upon its face of absolute incapacity to grapple with the great subject.

He also said:

It gives no evidences of the expert's skill. It is the invention of indolence.

He repeats:

It is not only the invention of indolence, but it is the mechanism of a botch workman.

For two years the Republican party have vehemently denounced the wise Democratic tariff bill which was enacted by the last Congress, and in asking for votes at the last Congressional election they solemnly pledged that if placed in power they would immediately enact tariff legislation of the most approved character. The people gave them 150 majority, and they now propose to adjourn without any further fulfillment of their pledges and promises than the attempted enactment of a measure which their leading Presidential candidate denounces as—

The mechanism of a botch workman—the invention of indolence.

Another evil feature of this bill was the badly concealed and finally admitted purpose to enable and finally compel the Secretary of the Treasury to use the money thus collected from the people to pay running expenses and withhold and hoard all Treasury notes and thus fearfully contract the volume of money and still further cripple enterprises which employ labor and encourage progress and prosperity.

If this had been accomplished you would, no doubt, have held Mr. Cleveland's Administration responsible for the distress which of necessity would have followed, and thus seek to add to the chances of a Republican victory in the coming election.

The exposure of the bill's fearful infirmities and deformities by the little band of Democrats sent the measure limping on crutches to the other side of the Capitol, where it was promptly disposed of by the Senators without regard to party affiliations.

The leader in the assault and the first to thrust his javelin into its bleeding breast was the distinguished field marshal of the Republican hosts—its greatest leader, the chairman of the executive committee of that organization.

On December 27, in the same way, you forced through the House what was called a currency bill, the atrocities of which were so fully exposed by the few tried and true Democrats who remain in this body that, like the tariff bill, it dragged its limping form to the Senate Chamber, where, amidst its dying groans, that body, by a decided majority, transformed it into a silver-coinage bill, and in that condition sent it back for our consideration.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. WHEELER. I hope that every man here will vote against the resolution reported by the gentleman from Maine.

The question being taken, the resolution submitted by Mr. DINGLEY was agreed to. [Loud applause.]

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONTESTED ELECTION—YOST VS. TUCKER.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of Elections Committee No. 3, I present the report of the contested-election case of Yost against Tucker. I ask that the report be printed, and also that the minority of the committee, who desire to file their views, may have leave to do so during the present week, and that they be printed with the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

CONTESTED ELECTION—THOMPSON VS. SHAW.

Mr. MILLER of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of Elections Committee No. 2, I desire to present the report of the committee in the contested-election case of Thompson against Shaw, from the Third Congressional district of North Carolina. This is the unanimous report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire immediate action?

Mr. MILLER of West Virginia. Yes, Mr. Speaker. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Cyrus Thompson was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Third Congressional district of North Carolina, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That John G. Shaw was elected a Representative in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Third Congressional district of North Carolina, and is entitled to retain his seat therein.

The resolutions were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MILLER of West Virginia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONTESTED ELECTION—JOHNSON VS. STOKES.

Mr. McCALL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in the case of Johnson against Stokes, considered by Elections Committee No. 3, I ask that the minority have leave to file their views to-day, and that they be printed with the report of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under special order fixed for to-day, and pending that motion will yield to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON], who desires to make a request.

Mr. CATRON. Mr. Speaker, I move that House bill 4052, in relation to the issue of certain bonds by the Territory of New Mexico, be set for consideration immediately after the approval of the Journal on next Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the consent was to be asked for to-morrow morning.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman will defer that request for the present. My colleague [Mr. HALL] has some objection to this bill.

Mr. LACEY. I think the gentleman from Missouri has no objection to the consideration of the matter, but desired to be heard when it came up.

Mr. DOCKERY. My understanding was that he objected to the consideration of the matter. Did he consent to its consideration?

Mr. LACEY. That is my understanding. He did not want it done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent—

Mr. CATRON. I will modify the request, and ask that it be taken up to-morrow morning after the Journal is read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, the bill indicated by him may be taken up for consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. MOODY. I object.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope that request will go over for the present.

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made.

The motion of Mr. PICKLER was then agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF PRIVATE PENSION BILLS, ETC.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the special order fixed for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House resolution No. 288, having had the same under consideration, ask leave to report the following substitute therefor:

"Resolved, That on Wednesday, May 6, 1896, and Wednesday, May 13, 1896, immediately after the reading of the Journal on each day, the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of such bills as are in order on the sessions of Friday evenings; and that in the consideration of such bills under this resolution ten minutes' debate shall be allowed on each bill, with the amendments thereto, such time to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the bill: Provided, however, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed as interfering with general appropriation bills and conference reports thereon."

HIRAM P. PAULEY.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 986) for the relief of Hiram P. Pauley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Hiram P. Pauley, late a private in the Morgan raid militia of Seventh Indiana Legion, and to pay him a pension, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, for injuries received in what was known as the Morgan raid in Indiana.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out the words, in the seventh and eighth lines, "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, for injuries received in what was known as the Morgan raid in Indiana," and insert "at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I perceive that the other side does not want to have the report read in this case. According to the policy adopted on yesterday, in accordance with the gag law applied yesterday, we are not to know what we are passing on. We are to take for granted everything, without question, that appears on the face of these bills, and pass upon them without an opportunity of comment or examination.

The other side is afraid this country will know what they are doing. They are afraid the country will see the flimsy ground on which the bills are based.

I see that they do not propose to have the report read if they can help it. This is a new class—militiamen who are to be pensioned for disease—and I ask to have the report read in my time.

The report (by Mr. KIRKPATRICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 986) for the relief of Hiram P. Pauley, submit the following report:

The affiant, Hiram P. Pauley, was a member of Capt. Marion Blair's company of what was known as the Indiana Legion, a militia organization of the State of Indiana. During the Morgan raid the company was ordered to Indianapolis to prepare to meet the invading army. It went to the United States arsenal to secure arms, and the affiant among others was ordered to open the boxes containing arms for the company, and while so engaged, in lifting a box of guns, received a serious injury producing hernia of a serious character. From this injury the claimant has never since recovered, and by reason thereof is rendered totally incapable of performing manual labor. He is now old and destitute. He can not be pensioned under the existing law for the reason that he was never mustered into the United States service.

Your committee believe that inasmuch as the claimant received his injury while in an organized company preparing to defend the country against an invading army he has just claims on that country for relief. They therefore report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it be amended by striking out all after the word "pension," in line 6, and adding the words "at the rate of $12 per month," and that the bill as amended do pass.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HATTIE A. BEACH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4903) for the relief of Hattie A. Beach, child of Erastus D. Beach, late a private in Company H, One hundred and forty-third New York Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to grant a pension, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 27, 1890, to Hattie A. Beach, the helpless child of Erastus D. Beach, late private Company H, One hundred and forty-third New York Volunteers; that this pension shall be at the rate fixed by the said act of June 27, 1890, so far as said act relates to the pensioning of permanently helpless children, and that said pension shall be granted from the date of the filing of the original application for pension under the aforesaid act, to wit, on or about December 27, 1890.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "pension," in line 4, and insert the following: "At the rate of $12 a month to Hattie A. Beach, child of Erastus D. Beach, late private of Company H, One hundred and forty-third Regiment New York Infantry Volunteers."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LAMBERT L. MULFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4753) granting an increase of pension to Lambert L. Mulford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Lambert L. Mulford, late of Company A, Second New Jersey Cavalry, and first lieutenant Third United States Cavalry, to the sum of $50 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension now drawn by him under certificate No. 856371.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "thirty," and strike out all after the word "him" in line 8.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. DINGLEY. I think the report ought to be read, so that we may know what the facts are.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. POOLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4753) granting an increase of pension to Lambert L. Mulford, late of Company A, Second New Jersey Cavalry Volunteers, and first lieutenant Third United States Cavalry, respectfully report as follows:

Soldier enlisted August 28, 1863, as second lieutenant Company K, Second New Jersey Cavalry; promoted to captain Company A of same regiment September 1, 1864, and mustered out with company November 1, 1865. He was appointed second lieutenant Third United States Cavalry February 23, 1866; promoted to first lieutenant December 24, 1866, and honorably discharged January 1, 1871, after eight years of almost continuous service.

He filed claim for pension June 28, 1894, alleging rheumatism from exposure in frontier service and resulting paralysis of right side, totally incapacitating him for any kind of manual labor. He has a hospital record in service for rheumatism and a number of other disabilities, and Dr. B. A. Waddington, of the highest professional standing, testifies to treating him for rheumatism ever since discharged, and that the same is the direct and undoubted cause of his present helplessness from paralysis. He says:

"His rheumatism is of a chronic nature and peculiar, in that it produces cramps, always leaving an echymosed condition of the areola tissue of the parts affected. On the night of November 2, 1891, he had an attack of these cramps, and getting up to bathe himself, he fell upon the floor with hemiplegia. I saw him in an hour after with partial loss of speech, motion, consciousness, etc., from which he has never recovered, and his rheumatism continues in spite of treatment, rendering him entirely unfit to make a livelihood, and rendering him, in my opinion, deserving a liberal pension from the Government."

The medical examinations by pension boards show that he is so disabled by paralysis that he can walk only by the aid of a cane and assistant, and that he is totally incapacitated for performing manual labor, and that he will gradually grow worse.

He is pensioned at $12 under act of June 27, 1890, his claim under the general law being rejected on the ground that his paralysis can not be accepted as the result of rheumatism.

Your committee is of opinion that the claim is meritorious and should have been allowed, and that from the evidence the paralysis is a result of disabilities contracted in service, as no other cause is shown, and claimant's habits are temperate and exemplary. The claimant is poor, helpless, and requires a constant attendant.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty," in line 7, and inserting "thirty" in lieu thereof, and by striking out all after the word "him," in line 8, and as amended that the bill do pass.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH SADLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3421) to grant a pension to Elizabeth Sadler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Sadler, dependent sister of James Sadler, deceased, formerly of Company G, Forty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and Company K, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. It can be read in the time of the gentleman.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let it be read in my time then.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3421) granting a pension to Elizabeth Sadler, submit the following report:

The committee, having carefully examined the evidence in support of this bill, find the following undisputed and uncontradicted facts:

James Sadler was enrolled September 12, 1861, in Company G, Forty-second Illinois Volunteers; was discharged to join Fourth United States Cavalry, in which he served until August 20, 1864. On the muster rolls of Fourth United States Cavalry for November and December, 1864, he is dropped as "Missing in action since August 20, 1864; supposed to be dead." No record of desertion or dishonorable conduct is against him. He has not been heard from since August 20, 1864.

Elizabeth Sadler was the only sister of James Sadler; parents both dead. She was dependent on James Sadler, her only brother, for her support before the war and during the war. He sent her money regularly during his service. Since the war she has been so broken down in health that she is unable to labor, and is dependent upon friends—she has no relatives—for her entire support. She has no means or property. At the date of soldier's death she was 19 years old. The soldier left no widow, child, or children.

She made application for pension, but it was rejected on the ground that then she was not pensionable—that she was 19 years old at date of soldier's death.

The committee, on these facts, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ARMINDA WHITE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2358) for the relief of Arminda White, widow of Israel White.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Arminda White on the pension roll, and that she be paid a pension at the legal rate as the widow of Israel White, captain of Twenty-fifth Ohio Infantry, from the date of her application for pension as appears on the files of the Pension Office.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In line 5 strike out the word "legal" and in line 6 insert the words "of $20 per month." Also in lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "from the date of her application for pension as appears on the files of the Pension Office" and insert in lieu thereof the words "said pension to terminate should the soldier be found to be alive."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill on the Calendar, No. 980, and to make this statement about it—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cox] asks unanimous consent to take up the bill, Calendar number 980, for present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire and Mr. ALLEN of Utah objected.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlemen permit me to make a statement?

Mr. HOPKINS. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar.

HELEN M. JACOB.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 149) granting a pension to Helen M. Jacob.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Helen M. Jacob, of Rochester, Ind., widow of Benjamin Oden West, deceased, late private in Company C of Mounted Riflemen, in the war with Mexico, and pay her a pension of $16 per month.

The Committee on Pensions recommended an amendment striking out the word "sixteen" and inserting the word "twelve" in line 9.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. HARDY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 149) granting a pension to Helen M. Jacob, have examined the same and respectfully report as follows:

The facts, as sworn to by John C. Williams, a resident of Cleveland, Ohio, are as follows:

"Helen M. Jacob was married to Benjamin Oden West December 12, 1850; said Benjamin Oden West enlisted January 23, 1847, in the Mexican war, at Washington, D. C., and he was honorably discharged on or about November 6, 1847; said Benjamin Oden West deceased December 3, 1857, and he (Williams) was informed and has always understood that it was from the disease contracted while in service in the Mexican war; he left surviving him his widow, Helen M. West, and two children, Benjamin West and Helen West; said Helen M. West drew a pension as his widow from the date of his death to her marriage to William W. Jacob, when her pension ceased; said William W. Jacob died on or about October 18, 1872, at Washington, D. C., and left surviving him his said widow, Helen M. West Jacob, and left nothing for her support; she is now residing at Rochester, Ind., and is entirely dependent for her support upon what is given her by others; she has no income or no property to this affiant's knowledge, and she is 65 years of age, and further affiant saith not."

The above facts are also corroborated by William J. Craign, a physician in active practice for fifty-seven years:

"He knows and has been acquainted with Mrs. Helen M. Jacob during the past thirty-five years or longer; he knew her when she was the wife of Benjamin Oden West, and knows that the said Benjamin Oden West is now deceased, and knew she married William W. Jacob, and said William W. Jacob is now deceased. He also knows that prior to her marriage to William W. Jacob she was without means of support and was dependent on her own exertions for the support of herself and family, and also knew that said William W. Jacob died, leaving her dependent and without means of support for herself and children. He further knows she is now a widow without means of support, and that she is dependent on her children for a livelihood. She has always been active and industrious, energetic and faithful in her maternal duties while rearing two families of children, and he can truly say she now merits the attention and support of her country as the widow of one of its defenders who succumbed to disease contracted in the line of his military duties. The remarriage of the claimant occurred April 17, 1861."

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment fixing the rate of pension at $12 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I must protest against this consumption of time by the leader of the other side. There is no necessity for it. [Laughter.] According to the newspaper declaration we are going to remain in continuous session until the saturnalia is over. What is the use? The country does not want to know. Gentlemen on the other side do not want to know. They have never defeated, they have never amended, they have never changed a single bill, and never will. Now, what is the use? I suggest to the leader on the other side that he ought not needlessly to consume the time of the House by having the reports read.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reports be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ERDMAN. To that I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, I thought you wanted to have the reports go in.

Mr. ERDMAN. If the gentleman wants to pass his bills en bloc, let them be passed in that way.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill is right. I think these bills are all right.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. We ought to have the knowledge contained in the reports. How do we know what a pension claim is about? I do not see any reason why the gentleman from Maine should be charged with obstructing legislation by insisting upon the reading of the reports. They are all short. They only consume a few moments' time. It gives us some knowledge of what they are about.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZA SANDFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1189) granting a pension to Eliza Sandford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Eliza Sandford, permanently helpless and destitute daughter of William Sandford, a sergeant under Captains Huntington, Wheeler, Squire, and Gilman, in the years 1777, 1778, 1779, 1780, and 1781, in the Army of the Revolution, and pay her a pension of $25 per month.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 11, strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

The report (by Mr. COFFIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1189) granting a pension to Eliza Sandford, respectfully submit the following report:

Eliza Sandford is the daughter of William Sandford, of Captain Williams's company, Colonel Van Courtland's regiment, New Jersey Volunteers, war of the Revolution. The soldier's entire service covered the period of two years and seven months. He received a pension under certificate No. 9814, beginning March 4, 1831, at the rate of $120 per year, which pension ceased March 4, 1842, the date of his death. His widow was subsequently pensioned until February 12, 1864, when she died.

The papers accompanying the bill show that Eliza Sandford was born in 1816; that she has supported herself during her long life by her own exertions in the profession of a nurse until 1893, when she became disabled by reason of her advanced years. It is also shown that she has no near relatives to whom she can apply for a support, and is now entirely destitute and likely to become a public charge.

Miss Sandford is an excellent and worthy woman, and has always enjoyed the respect of her neighbors and acquaintances. The facts are shown by a memorial of the Daughters of the American Revolution of New Jersey, and also by the sworn statement of the claimant and of Horace Dodd, an aged resident of Essex County, N. J., who has known her for more than fifty years.

There are several precedents for the proposed legislation, and your committee recommend that the bill do pass, with an amendment to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. VIRGINIA E. TURTLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3264) to increase the pension of Mrs. Virginia E. Turtle, of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Virginia E. Turtle, of Washington, D. C., widow of Maj. Thomas Turtle, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and pay her a pension of $50 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension now drawn by her.

Mr. SPALDING. Read the report.

The report (by Mr. COFFIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3264) granting an increase of pension to Virginia E. Turtle, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

Mrs. Turtle is the widow of Maj. Thomas Turtle, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, who died in the service, and from causes originating in the line of his duty, September 18, 1894. The soldier's service began as a cadet at the Military Academy July 1, 1863, and he subsequently passed through all the grades, until he finally attained the grade of major May 18, 1893.

His services, as certified to by the War Department, were of a most active and valuable character, and covered altogether the long period of thirty-one years.

After his death Mrs. Turtle was granted a pension of $35 a month under the general laws, and this sum, together with $2 additional for each of two minor children, is practically all that she has on which to depend for a support.

She married the soldier August 28, 1876, and his brother officers certify that, being a man of regular and careful habits, he would have been able to have made better provision for his family if it were not for the fact that he was obliged to assist his parents, they being in very moderate circumstances.

Mrs. Turtle is now about 53 years old, with three young children dependent upon her for a maintenance.

There are several precedents for the allowance of an increased rating to widows of officers of this rank, and, in view of the facts stated above, your committee recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment, striking out the word "fifty," in line 8, and substituting therefor "forty"; so as to allow a pension of $40 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8, strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I must again protest against this blocking of pensions for the old soldier. Whenever I have stood here on a Friday night and asked for the reports of the committees to be read, I have been charged with blocking pensions. This is blocking pensions now. Why, at this rate, you would not begin to pass your bills in twice twenty-four hours. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire what pension this lady is getting?

Mr. COFFIN. Twenty-five dollars a month. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The question was taken on ordering the bill to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MILNES. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 1.

So the bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH W. SUTHERLAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1420) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth W. Sutherland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth W. Sutherland, widow of the late Charles Sutherland, deceased, formerly Surgeon-General of the United States Army, at the rate of $100 per month, which rate of $100 per month shall be in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report be read.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think we ought to have it read where a pension of $75 a month is given.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 1420, granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth W. Sutherland, have considered the same, and respectfully report as follows:

Said bill is accompanied by Senate report No 172, this session, and the same, fully setting forth the facts, is adopted by your committee as their report, and the bill is returned with a favorable recommendation.

[Senate Report No. 172, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1420) granting a pension to Elizabeth W. Sutherland, have examined the same, and report:

Mrs. Sutherland is the widow of the late Brig. Gen. Charles Sutherland, who served as Surgeon-General of the United States Army with distinguished ability, and whose death occurred May 10, 1895. The widow was left with eight children, their ages ranging from 20 to 8 years.

The following is the record of the military services of Dr. Sutherland: Appointed assistant surgeon August, 1852; after examination served as an acting assistant surgeon for ten months prior to being commissioned.

First service was at Fort Monroe, Va., and remained there six months, 1851 and 1852.

In the spring of 1852 served at Jefferson Barracks, Mo. While stationed there an epidemic of cholera prevailed.

In summer of same year on duty with a military exploring party that located the present site of Fort Riley, Kans., and shortened the wagon trail to Santa Fe, N. Mex.

Served in the Department of New Mexico for five years, and stationed during that time at Forts Webster, Fillmore, Craig, Stanton, and Santa Fe. Took part at times with troops serving in that department in engagements with Apache and Comanche Indians. Transferred to the Department of Texas, and served there two years and a half. Stationed at Forts Davis and Duncan. Was serving at the latter post when the State of Texas seceded from the Union. Left the State without being captured, and reported at Washington March, 1861. Sailed one week after by command of General Scott on a secret expedition to Fort Pickens and Santa Rosa Island, Florida. The troops composing this expeditionary force were among the first to take an active part in the war, sailing from New York and arriving at their destination prior to the first call for volunteers issued by President Lincoln. Remained at Fort Pickens one year on hospital duty. While there participated in two bombardments between United States troops and the enemy on the mainland; also in an attack made by Confederates on United States volunteers near hospital.

Commended for conduct and services on those occasions in the reports made by General Brown, commanding, since published in Official Records of the Rebellion.

Commissioned as surgeon, with the rank of major, April, 1862.

Relieved from duty at Fort Pickens and ordered to Fort Warren, Boston Harbor. This fort contained several hundred Confederate officers as prisoners, and was garrisoned by a regiment of volunteers.

In summer of same year ordered again to the field, and reported to General Halleck, in command at Corinth, Miss.

Was selected to act as medical purveyor for the armies then concentrated near that center of military operations.

Subsequently, at Columbus, Ky., fitted out large warehouses for the storing and distribution of medical supplies for 200,000 men, the estimated strength of the army under General Halleck.

At Memphis, Tenn., established and organized a second large depot for distributing supplies.

Mr. ERDMAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ERDMAN. In whose time is this report being read?

The CHAIRMAN. In the time of a gentleman who was recognized.

Mr. ERDMAN. How much time has he?

The CHAIRMAN. He had five minutes, and has two minutes remaining.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report, as follows:

At the same place fitted out 9 general hospitals, capable of containing 3,000 patients, for the accommodation of the sick and wounded serving on the Mississippi River.

Assisted in equipping a floating hospital capable of holding over 800 beds for the use of the army under General Grant, stationed at Milliken Bend, near Vicksburg. Was attached to the headquarters of General Grant and selected as assistant medical director and also as inspector of camps and transports of the Army of the Tennessee, and continued on that duty until the surrender of Vicksburg, July, 1863.

Was engaged in the battles of Jackson and Champion Hill and assisted in locating the field hospitals.

During siege, actively engaged in examining camps, transferring wounded to transports for Northern hospitals, and also in keeping departments supplied with medicines and stores. General Grant, in the first volume of his personal memoirs, alluding to his campaign against Vicksburg in the winter of 1862 and 1863, writes that it was one of great hardship to all engaged in it: "Troops could scarcely find dry ground on which to pitch tents. Malarial fevers broke out among the men. Measles and smallpox also attacked them. The hospital arrangements and medical attendance were so perfect, however, that the loss of life was much less than might have been expected."

After surrender of Vicksburg, appointed medical director of the Department of Virginia and North Carolina, under the command of General Foster, at Fort Monroe, Va. In this department, besides troops in the field, had supervision of five large general hospitals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask for the reading of the balance of the report in my time.

Mr. ERDMAN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ERDMAN. Does the gentleman oppose this bill?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, sir; I am recognized for that purpose.

Mr. ERDMAN. If the gentleman is in the position of opposing the bill, I have nothing further to say.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report, as follows:

Owing to change of commanders a new staff was created; transferred to Annapolis, Md., and appointed medical director of hospitals and parole camp located in and near that city.

Member of retiring board at Wilmington, Del.

When General Grant moved with the Army of the Potomac, in the spring of 1864, was specially detailed by the Secretary of War to act as medical purveyor to supply that command, as well as the hospitals located in the city of Washington. There were 20 general hospitals, capable of holding over 30,000 patients. The Army of the Potomac was composed of at least 150,000 men. The supplying of these large establishments and the army in the field was faithfully maintained for over a year and until the close of the war. Spacious buildings in the city were kept filled with medical supplies of every description ready for immediate use, and a large force employed for prompt distribution of the same. Disbursed when on this duty over $4,000,000 without loss to the Government and to the satisfaction of the accounting officers.

For these services when surgeon and major, without solicitation on his part, and on the recommendation of General Grant, then Commanding General of the Army, as well as of Surgeon-General Barnes, was appointed (by President Johnson) assistant medical purveyor with the rank of lieutenant-colonel to fill an original vacancy. Four other medical officers were similarly appointed, the present Surgeon-General being one of the number. This office was held until June, 1876, when it was vacated by receiving the appointment of surgeon with the rank of colonel.

Member of retiring board convened in consequence of a reduction of the Army.

Served as medical director of the division of the Pacific at San Francisco, Cal., for five years.

President of a board of medical officers selected from the Army, Navy, and staff marine service, by direction of President Arthur, to designate a proper site for a quarantine station at San Francisco, Cal.

An act of Congress, session 1884, directed that all medical officers of the Army should take place in their several grades on the Army Register according to date of commission. This prevented any application for the position of Assistant Surgeon-General, to which the senior surgeon was, under the usual custom, entitled, and which was vacant at that time. If Dr. Sutherland had received the appointment and not promotion (being already a colonel) in accordance with this law he would have been transferred from the head of the list of colonels and lowered in rank four files, and instead of being the ranking colonel would be occupying an anomalous and degrading place at the foot. This law destroyed the value of the office of Assistant Surgeon-General as a promotion or as a stepping place to the higher grade of Surgeon-General, and bestowed only a title to any who should receive it, with no privileges or importance attached thereto. The vacancy was subsequently filled by promoting the senior lieutenant-colonel of the corps, and the War Department, recognizing the provisions of the law, placed the office at the foot of the list, where it belonged.

Served as medical director of the division of the Atlantic.

Was brevetted twice during the rebellion—lieutenant-colonel for services in the campaign and siege of Vicksburg, and colonel for diligent discharge of duties in the war.

Was appointed Surgeon-General, with rank of brigadier-general, in 1890 (being then the ranking officer of his corps); served in that capacity until his retirement for age.

[Extract from indorsement by General Grant, when Commanding General of the Army, to President Johnson, January 7, 1866, recommending Surgeon Sutherland for the appointment of assistant medical purveyor with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, for services rendered during the war.]

As to Dr. Sutherland, I know of my own knowledge that he has performed satisfactorily about the most important and responsible duties in the field and out of it that it has been possible for any officer of his corps to render during the rebellion.

U. S. GRANT, General.

[Extract of letter from Surg. Gen. J. K. Barnes, U. S. A., to Senator E. Cowen, of Pennsylvania.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., January, 1866.

During the war Colonel Sutherland disbursed millions of money; was medical purveyor in the field to the great Army of the Southwest, and subsequently had charge of the great depot of the Army of the Potomac.

His qualifications are eminent, and his character, both public and private, unimpeachable.

He has served as surgeon, inspector, purveyor, and medical director. His duties have been of the most extensive character, as well as of vast responsibility.

J. K. BARNES,
Surgeon-General, U. S. A.

[Letter of Surg. Madison Mills, afterwards medical inspector-general, United States Army, on file in Surgeon-General's Office.]

ST. LOUIS, MO., March 8, 1866.

Surg. Charles Sutherland was my principal assistant during the entire campaign—Vicksburg—and was constantly under fire in the discharge of his duties in the field, superintending the removal of the wounded as fast as they fell.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire how much time is being consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know; and the reading can not be interrupted for such an inquiry as that.

Mr. PICKLER. A parliamentary inquiry. Have not the ten minutes been exhausted on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time has not been consumed.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

I beg leave to recommend him for a brevet of lieutenant-colonel, to date from the 16th May, 1863, the battle of Champion Hill, when he was eight hours under fire in the discharge of his duties. I would also recommend him for the brevet of colonel, to date the 4th of July, 1863, the surrender of Vicksburg.

MADISON MILLS,

Surgeon, U. S. A., Medical Director, Army of the Tennessee.
SURGEON-GENERAL UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C.

[From General Sherman.]

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 27, 1866.

DEAR SUTHERLAND: I have received your letter of the 23d instant, and assure you of my hearty sympathy in your claim to the vacancy soon to occur in the office of Surgeon-General by reason of the retirement of my good old friend Dr. Murray.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. Time for debate upon this bill has expired.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I wish to offer an amendment. I move to strike out the words "seventy-five" and insert the word "fifty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. WILLIAM LORING SPENCER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4020) granting a pension to Mrs. William Loring Spencer, as widow of George E. Spencer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place upon the pension roll the name of Mrs. William Loring Spencer, as widow of George E. Spencer, late of —, and pay to her a pension of $100 per month, in lieu of the pension which she now receives.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the bill just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART] asks consent that the Senate bill for the same purpose be substituted for the House bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the Senate bill be read.

A MEMBER. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The House bill has been read, and consent has been asked by the gentleman from New Jersey to substitute the Senate bill.

Mr. HULL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The question is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to, as follows:

Strike out, in lines 6, 7, and 8, the words "of, and pay to her a pension of $100 per month, in lieu of the pension which she now receives," and insert "colonel First Cavalry Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension which she now receives."

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak upon this bill. No more meritorious pension case has ever come before this House. Mrs. Spencer now, in her old age, is in absolute destitution in the city of San Francisco, attempting to get employment as a typewriter, or in other fields where she has the capacity to serve. Her right hand is partially paralyzed. General Spencer served his country in the State and in the field, and for gallant and meritorious conduct on the field of battle he was brevetted as major-general. He raised the first white regiment of Union troops from the State of Alabama. These circumstances should appeal to this House when his widow, in her age and her poverty, asks for this insignificant pension, and I submit that the Senate bill should be substituted and passed without a dissentient voice.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to object to anything in the pension line, but I know something about this case, and it seems to me that my friend from New Jersey is entirely mistaken when he pleads the old age of this lady. She is about 40 years of age, and two years ago she was the personification of good health. She married Mr. Spencer while he was in the United States Senate, and there is no more reason for giving her a high pension than there is for giving such a pension to the widow of every United States Senator. They were married fifteen or twenty years after the war, and while I am willing to let this bill go at $30 a month, as recommended by the House committee, I am not willing to sit here and see the Senate bill pass.

Mr. HULLICK. What is she now receiving?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Eight dollars a month—the widow of a United States Senator and a distinguished soldier, promoted for gallantry on the field of battle. She is now paralyzed—

Mr. HULL. When did she become paralyzed?

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. She can not use the typewriter.

Mr. HULL. I do not think she ever knew how to use it. She was an actress when she married Senator Spencer.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I have received typewritten letters from her.

Mr. HULL. That may be, but it does not follow that she wrote them herself.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I do not suppose the gentleman imputes untruth or want of veracity to this lady?

Mr. HULL. I am not so certain about that. I want to say to this committee that Spencer received his first commission as colonel of an Alabama regiment. He never served in any other capacity than as a hotel keeper until he was commissioned colonel of that regiment. He was married to this lady long after the war, and as to the plea of age, she can not be more than 40 years old.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. I ask for the reading of the Senate report, which will show the record of this distinguished soldier.

The CHAIRMAN. It can be read in the time of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read the Senate report in part, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommended the bill (S. 1099) granting a pension to William Loring Spencer, have carefully reexamined the same and beg leave to report as follows:

Your committee are of opinion that the bill should be amended by striking out the word "fifty," in line 8, and substituting therefor the word "seventy-five," and that as thus amended the bill should pass.

The facts in this case were substantially embodied in the committee's former reports, made to the Fifty-third and the present Congress, it appearing that the claimant is the widow of Gen. George E. Spencer, late colonel First Regiment Alabama Cavalry, and for twelve years a Senator of the United States. Inquiry reveals the fact that applicant was christened "William," so that the name is correct as printed in the bill. The following letter from Mrs. Spencer will explain the grounds upon which she asks for increased pension, and it also sets forth her necessities:

"AUSTIN, NEV., February 2, 1894.

"MY DEAR SIR: This, I trust, will be presented to you by one whose name and influence will incline you to kindness; for while I believe I am asking only justice, yet justice is cold without mercy.

"My husband, George E. Spencer, was a brave and gallant soldier. His record you will find satisfactory, and I have asked that the letters of Sherman, Dodge, and Kilpatrick regarding his services be sent you. Unfortunately for me, I did not know General Spencer until the war was over for some time. But when I did know him I found him a sufferer from two maladies, one malaria, contracted during the fatigues of different campaigns, the other rheumatism, associated with a wound in his leg, which, as years went on, increased, there coming with it an added discoloration of the bone near the wound.

"I asked him why, like other men, he did not have a pension. He answered what he had done for his country had been done with all his heart, and he would do it over again and never ask for a money reward. He was cast in a heroic mold, and I felt the nobility of his thought too much to press the matter further. As he became more ill, I changed my thought, and said that for his child's sake he should apply for a pension, and he promised he would when he was better; but he died. His widow and his young son are left penniless, and the world is hard for a woman, and an ill woman, to make a way to support herself and educate her child.

"It is in this position I come to you. I ask of the country for which my husband fought and suffered the pension of $75 a month. This much I ask, for with strict economy I can with it educate my son and support us both until I, in some measure, regain my strength. I would not have more, for nothing but poverty, absolute poverty, could make me a pensioner, even of the Government. I do not ask less, for with less I do not believe my purpose could be accomplished. Senator PALMER, I leave my case in your hands.

"Very respectfully, yours,

"MRS. GEORGE E. SPENCER.
"W. LORING SPENCER.

"Hon. Senator PALMER."

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is the present status of this question? Has the committee amended the House bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the House bill, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, has been adopted, and the question is upon laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GROW. The amendment fixes the pension at what rate?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment fixes the pension at $30 per month.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the report be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ERDMAN. I object.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] will withdraw his objection and will let the Senate bill be taken up, that the House may take such action upon it as it desires.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this bill is exhausted except three minutes controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. I will simply say, Mr. Chairman, that I shall not withdraw my objection, for the reason that if we take up the Senate bill and amend it it will go back to the Senate, and the next thing we know this pension will be $75 a month. I am willing that this lady shall have $30 a month, and I think that if we pass the House bill at that figure we shall be able to keep it at that figure.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman—

A MEMBER. The time is up.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I believe, Mr. Chairman, I can be recognized in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon this bill except two minutes remaining to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Do I understand that the gentleman from Iowa controls the whole of the time on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. HULL. I am perfectly willing that a vote shall be taken now.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the House bill so as to make the amount $50 instead of $30 a month.

The CHAIRMAN. The amount has been already passed upon by the committee.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to reconsider is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES LOYD YOUNG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 358) granting a pension to James Loyd Young, of Company A, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant a pension to James Loyd Young, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, for injury to right hip, in addition to the pension by him now received.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"So that he shall receive $17 per month, in lieu of the pension now received."

Mr. DALZELL. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 358) granting a pension to James Loyd Young, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, having examined all the facts and circumstances in evidence, submit the following report:

James Loyd Young enlisted July 21, 1861, and was discharged to date July 22, 1862. He claimed pension for rheumatism and resulting disease of heart; and also for an injury of right hip incurred at the battle of Pittsburg Landing, Tenn., April 7, 1862, by being struck with a piece of timber from Shiloh church. His claim was admitted for rheumatism and resulting heart disease, and he was pensioned at $4 from July 23, 1862; at $8 from August 11, 1866, and at $12 from May 7, 1890; but the claim for injury to hip was rejected after special examination on the ground of no record and no satisfactory proof of incurrence of injury to right hip in service.

The record in the War Department shows he was admitted on hospital steamer Silver Moon at Pittsburg Landing, Tenn., May 16, 1862, with rheumatism, and to No. 1 General Hospital, Louisville, Ky., May 20, 1862, with rheumatism, and remained there until July 22, 1862, when he was furloughed to await discharge from service. He returned to the hospital in August, 1862, but what disposition was made of him is not stated, and he was discharged by the War Department in 1878, to date July 22, 1862.

Newton Hicks, a comrade of good reputation, testifies that he saw Young in a wagon, injured, just after the battle of Pittsburg Landing and he said the injury was in the side, and he heard members of company say he was injured near Shiloh church.

John Coffey testifies that he saw Young struck with a piece of flying timber near Shiloh church, and he fell forward on his face and was lying there with the piece of timber on him when affiant last saw him. The special examiner was unable to locate or cross-examine this witness, but the adjutant-general reports him present with the company at that time. His reputation is reported variable, from "good" to "unreliable."

James G. Lindsay, whose reputation is good, testifies that when Young returned from the Army, in 1862, he was crippled and disabled so that he was obliged to walk with a cane.

Mrs. A. D. Deegan testifies substantially to the same.

The board of examining surgeons at Covington, Ky., which examined him May 7, 1890, rate him ten-eighths for rheumatism and resulting disease of heart, and eight-eighths for injury to hip.

Your committee believe that the injury to hip was incurred as alleged, and recommend that the bill do pass, granting him a pension at $17 a month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, and that the bill be amended by adding after the word "received," in line 7, the words "so that he shall receive $17 per month in lieu of the pension now received."

Mr. PICKLER. The Senate has passed a bill granting the same amount of pension, $17 a month, as this House bill. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Senate bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2175) granting a pension to James Loyd Young, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant a pension to James Loyd Young, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, for injury to right hip, in addition to the pension by him now received, so that he shall receive $17 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

There being no objection, the Senate bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the House bill will be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

SILAS S. WHITE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4547) granting a pension to Silas S. White.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to place the name of Silas S. White, late a private in Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment New York Infantry Volunteers (and also a soldier in the Seminole Indian war in Florida), on the pension roll at the rate of $50 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty"; so as to make the amount of the pension $30 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

HARRIET C. GREGG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2006) to increase the pension of Harriet C. Gregg, widow of Col. John Irvin Gregg, from $30 to $50 per month.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of Harriet C. Gregg, widow of John Irvin Gregg, late colonel of the Eighth Regiment of United States Cavalry, be, and the same is hereby, increased from $30 per month to $50 per month, and the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place her name on the pension roll at the rate of $50 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. MILNES. Let us have the report read.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask that in reading the report the military record of the soldier be omitted and that the report proper, which was prepared by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN], be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read that portion of the report called for by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2006) granting a widow's pension to Harriet C. Gregg, submit the following report:

Mrs. Harriet C. Gregg, the claimant in this case, is the widow of Gen. John Irvin Gregg, who died on the 6th day of January, 1892. The widow has had a pension granted to her at the rate of $30 per month, her case having been made special by the following order filed in the Pension Office: "Mrs. Gregg is in destitute circumstances. The Commissioner directs that in view of this fact the proper calls be made in the case and action had thereon without delay."

The following is the entire record of the military service of General Gregg:

The said Mrs. Gregg submitted to the whole committee her own affidavit and also that of two of her neighbors, showing that she has no means of support and has no property whatever, and her dependence rests entirely on a pension.

General Gregg's long service, embracing not only the Mexican war and war of the rebellion, but also on the Western plains during frontier troubles with the Indians, ought to give the application of this widow for this increase of pension special consideration, and the committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARTHA LINDSAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 126) for the relief of Martha Lindsay.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the act of Congress approved June 27, 1890, the name of Martha Lindsay, widow of William Lindsay, late of Company F, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out, in lines 5 and 6, the words "act of Congress approved June 27, 1890" and insert "general pension laws."

Mr. PICKLER. I ask that the report in this case be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. LOUD. I object. If we have not time to hear a report read, I object to its insertion in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. ERDMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered the bill (H. R. 126) to pension Martha Lindsay, and submit the following report:

The petitioner is the widow of William Lindsay, who served in Company F, Second Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, from February 12, 1864, to March 27, 1864, when he was accidentally killed in camp by the explosion of an old shell which he was handling.

It is duly shown by evidence on file in the Pension Bureau that the widow is 74 years of age and has no property or other source of income. She was married to the soldier January 26, 1853, and had four children at the date of his death. Her claim, filed June 20, 1864, was rejected on the ground that soldier's death was not incurred in line of duty. She can not be pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, because he did not serve ninety days.

Two witnesses testify that she has not remarried since the soldier's death. The ground of rejection of the claim under the old law is purely technical. There is nothing to show the circumstances of his death, except the statement on records of War Department, as quoted above. It was clearly through no conscious fault of his own that he met his death. His conduct may have been imprudent, but it was not even, strictly speaking, "contributory negligence."

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass, after being amended by striking out the words "act of Congress approved June 27, 1890," in lines 5 and 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "general pension laws." The effect of this change will be to give her $12 per month instead of $8, as would be the rate in the present form of the bill.

A similar bill for this woman was favorably reported by this committee in the Fifty-third Congress, and the above is the language used in their report. The bill died on the Calendar of that Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

EMILY B. MUNCEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 705) granting a pension to Emily B. Muncey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls the name of Emily B. Muncey, Topeka, Kans., widow of Leonard B. Muncey, late private in G Company of the Forty-eighth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. LACEY. I ask for the reading of the report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas):

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 705) granting a pension to Emily B. Muncey, have carefully considered the matter in evidence, and they hereby adopt the following from the Senate report in this case and make it their own:

"The evidence fully shows that Leonard D. Muncey enlisted as a private in Company G of the Forty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, on the 1st day of September, 1861, and was honorably discharged on the 31st day of August, 1864, the expiration of his term of service.

"John Willman testifies that 'said soldier had the measles at Camp Butler, Ill., some time in November, 1861, and that he, said soldier, was moved to Cairo, Ill., and there took a relapse and was left either at Cairo or Mound City, not being able to follow the regiment on foot.'

"David S. Hill testifies that 'he served with Leonard D. Muncey in Company D, Forty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and knows of his own personal knowledge that said Muncey had the measles while they were at Camp Butler, Illinois, and was sent to the hospital, which was so crowded that he was sent out in camp too soon and caught a severe cold and had a very severe cough, so that he was not able to do hard duty, and he was detailed to do light work in the quartermaster's department. There was such a rush of patients, principally with measles, that they would send them out from the hospital as soon as possible to make room for others.'

"Peter Cotton testifies that 'he served in the same company and regiment as the soldier, and was with him when he contracted the measles at Camp Butler, in November, 1861; that he himself contracted the measles from said soldier; knows that said soldier was discharged too soon from hospital, and that he contracted cold which settled on his lungs, and that he was assigned to duty in the quartermaster's department on account of his not being fit for duty.'

"Ezekiel Bass testifies that 'he was personally acquainted with Leonard D. Muncey, and served in the same company and regiment with him, and remembers wrestling and scuffling with him before he took the measles and knew him to be stout and robust. We were in the hospital together at Camp Butler, Illinois, and to the best of my recollection said Muncey was in a squad of about 15 of us, all sick with measles, and were moved some time in November, 1861, from Camp Butler, Illinois, to Cairo, Ill., through a snowstorm, and most of us took relapse, and, as best I remember, said Muncey was with me in hospital in Cairo, Ill., and I well remember of looking out the window and seeing our regiment—the Forty-eighth Illinois Infantry—pass along the street, going on what was called the Kentucky scout. The last time I remember of seeing said Muncey was somewhere in Tennessee, and he was then very pale and thin, scarcely able to walk.'

"The records of the War Department show that said Muncey was treated in hospital from November 9 to 23, 1861, and returned to duty in his company and regiment December 11, 1861.

"J. A. Muncey testifies that 'he was personally acquainted with Leonard D. Muncey previous to his enlistment in the Army, and that he was a man of robust health and good physical condition; that he has known him since his discharge from the Army, and knows from personal knowledge that his health and physical condition were entirely changed, and that he was suffering from a severe lung trouble, attended with a cough.'

"John W. Ingersoll, late Lieutenant Company G and Lieutenant-colonel Forty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, testifies that 'he was acquainted with L. D. Muncey, and knows that the said L. D. Muncey is the identical person who enlisted as a private in Company D, Forty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and was discharged by reason of expiration of term of service.

"That said Leonard D. Muncey, while in line of his duty at or near Camp Butler, in the State of Illinois, did, on or about the 9th day of November, 1861, become disabled in the following manner, viz: Was taken with measles at Camp Butler, Illinois, and for want of proper care took cold, which settled on his lungs. The regiment received marching orders, went to Cairo, Ill., where we did not have at the proper time sufficient quarters to protect the men from the inclement weather, and Muncey, having first left hospital, was exposed to the bad, stormy weather, took cold, and his lungs became affected, which left him with a hacking cough up to the time of his leaving the regiment. He further states that said Muncey frequently complained of lung trouble, and did not reenlist in consequence thereof. He further states that his knowledge of the foregoing is from being with him—served in the same company, enlisted at the same time; that he has no interest in the claim.'

"W. H. Murray, who was lieutenant of said Leonard D. Muncey's company and regiment, testifies that 'said soldier was a man of sober and temperate habits, and when he enlisted was in good health and strength, and that said soldier was ruptured in the abdomen from overstrain or exertion in tearing up and destroying the railroad track at Jackson, Miss., on or about the 17th day of January, 1863, so that soldier had to be placed in hospital, and afterwards detailed as a clerk in the quartermaster's department on account of his disability for military duty.'

"Said soldier testified that 'he was examined by a United States surgeon when he enlisted; that he was stripped and particularly examined by said surgeon as to rupture by his pressing his finger firmly in the region of the groin, and was pronounced by said surgeon a sound and healthy man, and accordingly was mustered in the service.'

"Several witnesses testify that they knew said soldier ever since the time he left the Army, and that he had a hacking cough and had lung trouble, which he said he had contracted while in the Army, and that he had never been entirely well since he left the Army. Said soldier died April 13, 1889. The credibility of the witnesses is fully established.

"Emily B. Muncey, the widow of said soldier, is a very worthy woman, but in poor circumstances. She made application to the Pension Office for a pension as the widow of said soldier, but being unable to furnish all the evidence required by the Pension Bureau to show that the soldier had not before he entered the service contracted the disease of which he died, her claim was rejected.

"Having carefully considered all the evidence in the case, your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

[Before the reading of the report was concluded the hammer fell.]

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent for the reading of the residue of the report.

Mr. PICKLER. I object.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask that the remainder of the report be read in my time.

Mr. PICKLER. All these reports are printed in the RECORD over in the Senate; and at any rate they are just as much a part of the records of the House, whether they are in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or not.

Mr. LACEY. But how can we tell what they are unless we hear them read?

Mr. PICKLER. Many gentlemen do not listen to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has been recognized, and asks that the remainder of the report be read in his time.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

THOMAS BREWER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3857) granting a pension to Thomas Brewer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Brewer, late of Companies I and F, Thirty-first Regiment Enlisted Missouri Militia.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and at the end of the bill add "at the rate of $12 per month."

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3857) granting pension to Thomas Brewer, late private Companies I and F, Thirty-first Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, respectfully submit the following:

His discharge certificate shows that Thomas Brewer enlisted August 10, 1862, and was discharged December 8, 1862; but he alleges he was enlisted June 1, 1861, and discharged May 8, 1863.

He filed claim for pension under general law November 12, 1889, for varicocele of left testicle, incurred at or near St. Joseph, Mo., October 21, 1862, caused by being thrown upon the pommel of his saddle.

This claim was rejected April 15, 1890, on the ground that the organization to which claimant belonged was not shown to have been in the military service of the United States, and no title to pension under general laws.

He filed claim under act June 27, 1890, on October 23, 1890, alleging "epilepsy, varicocele, disease of kidneys, and hernia."

The proof on file in his claim shows that his horse fell with him while on a march, throwing him on pommel of saddle, and mashed his left testicle and unfitted him for further service.

The testimony of physicians and neighbors shows that he has been unfit for manual labor since he came home from the Army, the physicians certifying that the injury to testicle caused hypochondria, fits, sensory illusions, and a train of diseases entirely disqualifying him for the performance of manual labor.

He was examined by the board of examining surgeons at Albany, Mo., March 25, 1891, which rated him at eight-eighths for hernia, two-eighths for varicocele, two-eighths for epilepsy, and four-eighths for heart disease.

In view of the facts and circumstances in evidence in this case, your committee earnestly favor the passage of this bill when amended to strike out, in lines 4 and 5, the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and add, after the word "Militia," in line 7, the words "at the rate of $12 per month."

Mr. CROWTHER. The question, as I understand, is now upon the amendment of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report that amendment, if the gentleman desires.

The amendment of the committee was again read.

Mr. OWENS. As I understand from the reading of the report, this man was not in the military service of the United States at all.

Mr. CROWTHER. He was in the military service of the United States, but the organization to which he belonged was not properly mustered into the service.

Mr. OWENS. As I understand, he was simply willing to be in the service, but did not get in.

Mr. CROWTHER. The statement of the report is that he did serve in that branch of the Army.

Mr. OWENS. What branch?

Mr. CROWTHER. The cavalry branch.

Mr. OWENS. But the report states that the Department refused to place him on the roll because he was not in the service of the United States.

Mr. CROWTHER. Because he was not properly mustered into the service. That organization was not mustered into the service by the proper mustering officer.

Mr. OWENS. Then he was not in the service.

Mr. CROWTHER. Certainly he was in.

Mr. OWENS. As I understand, the report states that he was willing to enter the service; was loafing about ready to go in, but he did not in fact go in.

Mr. CROWTHER. That may be the gentleman's idea of the record of this soldier.

Mr. OWENS. The report says that he was not in.

Mr. CROWTHER. He was not technically in the service—

Mr. OWENS. I was quite sure I caught the reading correctly.

Mr. CROWTHER. According to the records of the War Department, he was not in the service.

Mr. OWENS. Then where do you get your information, except from the records of the War Department?

Mr. CROWTHER. The records of the military organization to which he belonged.

Mr. OWENS. But he was not in the military service of the United States.

Mr. BRODERICK. If the gentleman from Missouri will allow me I would like to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. OWENS. I do not care about objecting to this thing. I only wanted to understand the status of it; to find out exactly what we are going to do. I have down in my country a large number of such people, and have had a great many inquiries. They are anxious to get on the rolls, but I have hesitated to ask Congress to put them there. If, however, you are going to adopt that principle, I will have to take up their cases. I merely want to understand the status of the thing.

Mr. CROWTHER. We have no men from Missouri who are anxious to get on the rolls, unless they are entitled to it.

Mr. OWENS. You seem to be trying to get one on now. I do not know where he is from, but I suppose from Missouri.

Mr. CROWTHER. But you see he was performing service for the country.

Mr. OWENS. But outside of the service of the United States.

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman will permit me, this man was practically, although not technically, in the military service of the United States. He performed military duties under the command of United States officers.

It is not a new case, I will state to the gentleman. Pensions of this kind have been granted heretofore. I have no doubt that he would have been pensionable under the act of 1874—

Mr. OWENS. But he was not in the service at all.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, yes; this is simply an exceptional case. He performed military service, and such pensions have been granted heretofore.

Mr. OWENS. When was he in the service; during the war, or afterwards?

Mr. PICKLER. During the war, of course. Our committee does not have jurisdiction except of cases arising out of the late war.

Mr. OWENS. He came in contact with a saddle, I believe, and was hurt?

Mr. PICKLER. Well, he got hurt.

Mr. OWENS. Well, I merely wanted to understand the merits of the case.

Mr. PICKLER. Does the gentleman think there is no danger in a saddle?

Mr. OWENS. I do not know; I wanted to find out.

Mr. BRODERICK. If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri this question: If it is not true that some of these militia organizations in his State and mine were called out by the governors of the State about the time of the Price raid, and that after they got into the field they went into the regular service; that is, they were under the command of United States officers, and were engaged in some of the battles, during the war, along the border?

Mr. CROWTHER. That is true. There were several such regiments from my own State, and I know in certain instances the men were not mustered into the United States service, but they performed military duty under United States officers. This case is one where the performance of duty was in 1862.

Mr. BRODERICK. And these regiments called out in that way for State service served under United States officers and performed duty in the United States service under the command of army officers?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; and perhaps saved the States from going out of the Union.

I ask a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CROWTHER. There is a typographical error in the seventh line of the bill, which should be amended. I move to strike out the word "enlisted," in that line, and insert "enrolled" in lieu of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with favorable recommendation.

CYRUS THOMAS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4910) granting a pension to Cyrus Thomas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Cyrus Thomas a pension at the rate of $75 per month from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension which he now receives, and subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

Mr. MILNES. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4910) granting a pension to Cyrus Thomas, submit the following report:

Cyrus Thomas enlisted August 7, 1862, and served as sergeant and second lieutenant in Eleventh Vermont Infantry and Battery B, First Vermont Heavy Artillery, until June 24, 1865. He was promoted to first lieutenant for meritorious conduct, but seems not to have been mustered, being absent on account of wounds received in battle. His discharge and record is honorable.

He was twice wounded in battle. At Cedar Creek, Virginia, he received a slight scalp wound. At Petersburg he was wounded in left leg by piece of shell. For this last wound he is now receiving a pension of $11.25 per month.

It conclusively appears that claimant, while in service and in line of his duty at Monocacy, Va., on July 31, 1864, received a sunstroke. This appears from the affidavits of his captain and two comrades. He is now in feeble health, partially paralyzed, subject to dizziness, and totally unfit for physical labor. His trouble in the head causes forgetfulness to such an extent that he is totally unfit for mental labor, and he has been obliged, on account of such disabilities, to abandon his profession, that of a minister of the Baptist Church. He is 60 years of age, and requires a nurse or attendant from one-third to one-half of the time. He has little power over his muscles and can not dress himself alone.

The evidence examined by the committee is voluminous. Besides the statement of claimant, the evidence on file in the Pension Office, there are 40 affidavits, which have been carefully considered. The committee believe that the condition of the claimant is from disabilities of service origin. His captain, on account of lapse of time and lack of memoranda, can only state the fact of the sunstroke. Neither he nor the comrades can state the effect of this injury or how it affected him, although both state the fact, and one at the time wet the claimant's head. Claimant was soon after wounded and went to hospital, which reasonably accounts for this lack of evidence, which, if it could be obtained, would secure him an increase through the Pension Office. As it is, he is without remedy there.

Claimant is poor. His only income is $11.25 per month pension and $3 per week which his daughter earns. It is entirely insufficient for his support under his present condition.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment striking out the word "seventy-five" and inserting "fifty"; also insert after the word "Thomas," in line 4, the words "late second lieutenant Battery B, First Vermont Heavy Artillery, and sergeant Company B, Eleventh Vermont Infantry."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH E. DONAHOE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 746) granting a pension to Elizabeth E. Donahoe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth E. Donahoe, widow of the late Col. Michael T. Donahoe, of the Tenth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry and brevet brigadier-general of volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read in that case.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 746) granting a pension to Elizabeth E. Donahoe, adopt as their own the Senate report, as follows:

"Mrs. Donahoe is the widow of Col. Michael T. Donahoe, of the Tenth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and brevet brigadier-general of volunteers. The following certificate from the adjutant-general of New Hampshire gives the military record of the soldier:

"THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,

"ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,

Concord, November 26, 1895.

"I certify that the following is a correct abstract from the official records of this office:

"Michael T. Donahoe, born Lowell, Mass.; age, 22; residence, Manchester, N. H.; enlisted August 1, 1861, as private in Company C, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers; appointed captain August 22, 1861; mustered into service as captain August 23, 1861; discharged July 31, 1862, to accept promotion; appointed colonel Tenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers August 6, 1862; mustered as colonel September 5, 1862; wounded September 29, 1864, Fort Harrison, Va.; mustered out June 21, 1865, brevet brigadier-general United States Volunteers, for gallant conduct in the field, to date from March 13, 1865.

"A. D. AYLING,

"Adjutant-General State of New Hampshire.

"At the age of 22, and almost at the beginning of the war, Mr. Donohoe raised a full company for the Third New Hampshire Regiment, which he served with and commanded until promoted to the colonelcy of the Tenth Regiment from that State. He commanded a brigade at the close of the war. He was severely wounded at the battle of Fort Harrison, Va., in September, 1864, being confined in hospital at Hampton and Fortress Monroe for many weeks. In consequence of this wound Colonel Donohoe could have been placed on the pension roll at the close of the war, but he preferred not to accept aid from the Government while he was able to take care of himself and family. Had he accepted a pension he would have doubtless drawn from the Treasury more money than will be paid to his widow during her natural life under the provisions of this bill.

"General Donohoe was a brave, loyal, true Irish-American soldier and an upright, honored citizen. He was twice named by the Democratic party of New Hampshire as their candidate for railroad commissioner (in those days the second name on the ticket), and was twice honored in Massachusetts as the party candidate for secretary of state. During the three years 1891, 1892, and 1893 he served as aid-de-camp on the personal staff of Governor Russell, of Massachusetts. During the later years of his life he served as secretary to the department of public institutions of Boston, and a few months previous to his death he was promoted to the superintendency of the Reformatory for Boys at Rainsford Island, Boston Harbor.

"General Donohoe died on the 26th day of May, 1895, of cerebral hemorrhage, leaving no property whatever. This not being a disease of service origin, the widow is barred from receiving the pension of $30 per month, the grade of a colonel, under the general law. Her only means of relief is either by special act or by securing a pension of $8 per month under the act of June 27, 1890.

"In view of the fact that General Donohoe served with distinction for almost four years; that he declined to apply for pension in consequence of a severe wound, and the destitute condition of his widow, your committee recommend favorable action on the bill after it has been amended by substituting 'Donohoe' for 'Donahoe' in lines 6 and 7 and also in the title of the bill."

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty"; so that it will read "thirty dollars a month" instead of fifty.

I have but just a word or two to say about the amendment. If this soldier had actually been killed in the service of the United States his widow could not have received a pension of over $30 a month under the law. Now, there are in the United States tens of thousands of widows of private soldiers and noncommissioned officers who are absolutely unable to receive a pension of over $8 a month, and I do not think that we ought to go on paying large pensions to the widows of officers, but should distribute the pensions a little more generally and uniformly.

Therefore, I favor cutting down the amount carried by this bill to $30 per month.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of my friend will not prevail. It was my good fortune to have known and served for some time with Michael Donohoe. I knew him and his regiment. I had an opportunity to see him after the war and to know something of his services to the States of New Hampshire and Massachusetts. But this bill relates to pensioning his widow, and I desire to speak simply in that regard, with the desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that he was a very deserving man. This lady cared for him in the years of his affliction and suffering from wounds. She is entitled to high consideration. I trust it will not be the purpose of any member of this House to raise an objection against the continuing of the practice which has been established in respect to these meritorious officers and the widows of those who served in the war in the capacity and with the fidelity and ability of General Donohoe.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, this widow is now drawing, as I understand, $8 a month. If my amendment is adopted it will give her $30 a month, all she could possibly get under the law, even if her husband had died by being killed in battle. Now, why should we go on and pay $50 a month to these widows of officers while there are thousands and tens of thousands of widows of soldiers just as gallant as this soldier who can not get to exceed $8 a month? I do not believe it is right, and I do not believe the old soldiers of this country, of whom I am one, are in favor of that kind of pension legislation. If I know anything about the wishes of the soldiers of this country—and I have been as intimately connected with them as any man on this floor—they are opposed to that kind of legislation. Therefore I hope this amendment will prevail.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I hope this amendment will not prevail. There is no reason why it should. None has been given. I notice when a gentleman arises on this floor to oppose a pension he always says he does it in the name of the old soldier. He always has great love and sympathy and pity for the private; but I never knew one of them to arise here and propose to do anything for the private, not one of them. I have watched that during this session, and there has not been an instance.

Now, this is the widow of as brave a man as ever stood under that flag. He stood under it on many a bloody field, when its stripes were torn, its stars shot away, its staff splintered, and its folds stained with blood. I ask that his widow be treated as widows of other generals have been treated; not as well, because we have voted to some $100, to some $75; but for this one we ask only $50. I ask it for the very best reason in the world, that this general was one of the most successful killers of rebels, at a time when that was the best use you could make of them, that the North produced. [Applause on the Republican side.] She is drawing no pension whatever, not a penny. I ask that she be given $50 a month.

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate is exhausted. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MILNES].

On a division (demanded by Mr. SULLOWAY and Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire) there were—ayes 25, noes 50.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. MILNES was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HANNAH NEWELL BARRETT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3239) for the relief of Hannah Newell Barrett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Hannah Newell Barrett, eldest daughter of Noah Harrod, late a soldier in Colonel Shephard's regiment and Captain Webb's company of Massachusetts troops in the war of the Revolution, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The Committee on Pensions recommended an amendment striking out the word "twenty," in line 8, and inserting the word "twelve."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CELESTIA R. BARRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1891) granting a pension to Celestia R. Barry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Celestia R. Barry, widow of Claudius C. Barry, deceased, late a private in Captain Connor's company, Bell's regiment, Mexican war volunteers, and to allow the said Celestia R. Barry a pension at the rate of $12 a month.

The Committee on Pensions recommended an amendment striking out the word "twelve," in line 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "eight."

Mr. SPALDING. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. BLACK of Georgia) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1891) granting a pension to Celestia R. Barry, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of Claudius C. Barry, late a private of Captain Connor's company of Texas Mounted Volunteers in the war with Mexico. The records of the War Department show that he enlisted May 5, 1848, and was discharged with the company December 31, 1848. The rolls further show that the regiment was called into service for the protection of the frontier against hostile Mexicans and Indians, and it is also shown that casualties occurred in the regiment December 1, 1848, at Brazos River, and December 30, 1848, at Austin, Tex.

The soldier was allowed a pension under the Mexican war act of January 29, 1887, but when his widow made application after his death (which occurred May 4, 1894) the rulings of the Pension Bureau had changed, and her claim was rejected "on the ground that the soldier did not serve the requisite sixty days in the war with Mexico, as said war closed May 30, 1848."

Mrs. Barry is now 56 years old, and the testimony filed at the Pension Bureau fully establishes her widowhood and that she has no property or income, but is dependent upon others for support. It is also shown that she is so disabled by rheumatism as to incapacitate her from earning a maintenance by her own labor.

The soldier's service, notwithstanding the fact that the Pension Bureau holds that the Mexican war ended May 30, 1848, was of an arduous and dangerous character and extended far beyond the date named. As stated above, casualties occurred in the regiment as long as six months subsequent to May 30, 1848.

Your committee believe that the claimant is deserving of relief, and the passage of the bill is therefore recommended with an amendment striking out the word "twelve," in line 8, and substituting therefor the word "eight"; so as to allow a pension of $8 per month.

Mr. DINGLEY. As I understand, this is a proposition to pension the widow of a soldier who did not serve the sixty days required by the general law.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition to pension Celestia R. Barry, widow of C. C. Barry, who was a soldier in the Mexican war. When General Black was Commissioner of Pensions he gave C. C. Barry a pension. After his death Celestia R. Barry applied for a pension, and the Pension Office refused to grant it, for the reason that the ruling of the Pension Office had been changed.

Barry enlisted in the Army on the 5th of May, 1848. He was discharged from the Army on the 31st day of December, 1848. General Black decided that the war had ended on the 4th of July, 1848, at the date of the President's proclamation declaring peace between the two countries, and therefore gave Barry a pension. After his death, when Mrs. Barry applied for a pension, the Pension Office decided that the date when hostilities ceased between the United States and Mexico was not the 4th of July, 1848, but the 30th of May, 1848, when Congress passed an act declaring peace. The entire question is whether peace was declared by the act of Congress or by the proclamation of the President.

Mr. MILNES. I understand that the soldier enlisted May 10, 1848?

Mr. PENDLETON. May 5.

Mr. MILNES. And the war was declared at an end—

Mr. PENDLETON. On the 4th of July, 1848, making the soldier's service just sixty days exactly.

Mr. MILNES. I understood the report to say he enlisted May 10.

Mr. PENDLETON. No; May 5. General Black gave the soldier a pension, deciding that the date of the cessation of hostilities was the 4th of July, the date of the President's proclamation.

Now, the soldier served eight months, lacking four days, in the Army of the Republic, and he served sixty days before the proclamation of the President, but only twenty-five days before Congress passed a resolution declaring peace between the two countries. General Black, when he was Commissioner of Pensions, decided that it was the day of the President's proclamation, and gave her husband a pension; but the present Commissioner of Pensions refuses to grant her a pension because he has decided that it was the 30th day of May and not the 4th of July that the war was ended.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is the amount provided for in the bill the same as she would have received under the law?

Mr. PENDLETON. The same exactly. The amount I wished her to have was $12.

Mr. DINGLEY. The general law is $8 a month, and that is what is provided for here.

Mr. PENDLETON. That is what is provided; but in her indigent condition I think she ought to have had more.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LYDIA BOYNTON FERRIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1511) for the relief of Lydia Boynton Ferris.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Lydia Boynton Ferris, daughter of John Boynton, who was a soldier in the war of 1812 in Capt. Joseph Morrill's company, Vermont Militia, from September 12 to November 30, 1812, on the pension roll and pay her a pension of — dollars per month.

Mr. SPALDING. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. HOWE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1511) granting a pension to Lydia Boynton Ferris, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant is the daughter of John Boynton, who served as a corporal in Capt. Joseph Morrill's company of Vermont Volunteers from September 12 to November 30, 1812, in the war of that year with Great Britain. It is also shown that she is the granddaughter of Isaac Boynton, who is shown by the records of the War Department to have served for a period of three years in the war of the Revolution. John Boynton, the claimant's father, was, at the time of his death, a pensioner at $8 per month on account of his service in the war of 1812.

Her relationship to the above-named soldiers is shown by the sworn statements of James Owens, Alonzo L. Boynton, Laura Hayes, M. L. Staib, Minnie Miller, and Sophia B. Frary.

The claimant swears that she is 63 years old, a resident of 287 Normal avenue, Buffalo, N. Y., and that she is the widow of Joshua C. Ferris, who died in 1882, leaving her comparatively penniless. She further swears that by the accidental breaking of her arm in 1884 she has been rendered permanently unable to provide for herself, and that she is now without any means of support whatever.

The truthfulness of the claimant's statement is certified to by B. W. Green, of Emporium, Pa., in a letter addressed January 12, 1895, to Hon. Charles Daniels, M. C.

The soldier, in his application for pension, certified that his wife (the claimant's mother) was deceased.

There are precedents for the proposed legislation (one of them being the case of Delia Stewart Parnell, pensioned in the Fifty-first Congress as the daughter of an officer in the war of 1812), and in view of the claimant's necessities, the passage of the bill is recommended with an amendment fixing the rate of pension at $12 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to see the time of the committee taken up by the useless proceeding of reading the report, and I am very much annoyed that there is no continual wailing of "Vote!" "Vote!" on the other side when reading the report. Has the leader of the House cast his spell over them? Something is the matter with them. I should like very much to hear an explanation of the reason why we must have these reports read and why pensions are blocked by it. It would be very interesting!

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, as this is the second statement the gentleman has made in this line, I think it is appropriate that some response should be made. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] on Friday evening sessions, up to the last one, has occupied a large part of the time in making speeches and repeating them, occupying hours, I understand, talking, not for the purpose of ascertaining whether the bill should pass or not, but for the purpose of blocking the passing of bills.

Now, to-day he has changed his course of procedure. He desires now that the bills shall be considered without even the reading of the report and without any knowledge respecting them. I think it is entirely appropriate that this House, at any time, whether on Friday evening session or any other, should have enough said, either by the reading of the report or by a statement of some gentleman, that members should know what the character of the bill is and its merits, and I think it is entirely appropriate to have the report read. [Applause]. But now a change has come over the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The House should proceed in no other way than to deliberately consider each bill as it comes up, and ascertain from the report or some statement of some gentleman exactly what the merits of the bill are. We should not swing from one extreme to the other, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to have swung, but should consider each bill upon its merits. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. ERDMAN. Does the gentleman think that five minutes is sufficient time to discuss and deliberately consider any bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Ordinarily I will say that five minutes for and five minutes against a bill, where there is simply a question as to whether a person should be pensioned or not, is sufficient. Now and then there may come up a bill where more time is needed; but ordinarily, in most of these bills, especially referring to privates, five minutes on one side and five on the other clearly acquaint the House with the facts.

Mr. ERDMAN. Did not the gentleman see that five minutes for and five minutes against it were exhausted by the reading of a report and was not sufficient for the reading of the report itself?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes; and the gentleman objected.

Mr. ERDMAN. I did.

Mr. DINGLEY. Undoubtedly we have been compelled to resort to this procedure for the purpose of doing business that ought to have been done at the Friday night sessions, and the gentleman is responsible. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ERDMAN. I point to the RECORD, which will show that I did not occupy more than fifteen or twenty minutes' time on any Friday night.

Mr. COLSON. Which was fifteen minutes too much. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. LOUD. Unless the time is exhausted, I would like to say one word on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there are two minutes remaining.

Mr. LOUD. I will confine myself to the bill. I would like to ask some gentleman, in regard to this bill, whether this lady is to be pensioned because her grandfather was in the Revolutionary war or because her father was in some other war?

Mr. DANIELS. It was intended to put it on both grounds; but the committee concluded it would be shorter to put it on the ground that her grandfather served in the Revolutionary war.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to discover how far removed by blood a person must be before a pension shall not be granted. You have gotten to granddaughters now. I do not know why we should not go down the whole list to cousins.

Mr. DANIELS. She is the granddaughter of a soldier of the Revolutionary war who served three years.

Mr. PICKLER. We are more lenient to those who served in the Revolutionary war than others.

Mr. DANIELS. There are very few of them.

Mr. LOUD. But there are lots of cousins and granddaughters left.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

KATHERINE ZEIGENHEIM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2359) granting a pension to Katherine Zeigenheim, of Louisville, Ky.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Katherine Zeigenheim, widow of Frank J. Zeigenheim, late private of Third Regiment of United States Dragoons, Mexican war, at the rate of $8 per month from and after the passage of this bill.

The report (by Mr. COLSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2359) granting a pension to Katherine Zeigenheim, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of Francis J. Zeigenheim, who served from May 16, 1848, to July 14, 1848 (a period of sixty days), as an unassigned recruit in the Third United States Dragoons. The records of the War Department show that he enlisted at Louisville, Ky., for the Mexican war and was forwarded to Jefferson Barracks, Mo., where he remained on post duty until discharged.

The soldier made application for a pension under the Mexican war act approved January 29, 1887, and the same was allowed, but after his death, which occurred January 5, 1892, his widow's claim was rejected because he did not serve in Mexico, on the coast or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, as required by the act in question.

The claimant is now about 61 years old, in poor health, and without any means of support aside from what she earns as a janitress of a furniture store. These facts are sworn to by the claimant and by Sebastian Wetterer and Edward Duerr, citizens of Louisville, Ky. Her status as the soldier's widow is fully established by the proof on file at the Pension Bureau.

In view of the fact that the soldier enlisted in good faith for service in the war with Mexico and was actually en route thereto until assigned to other duty at St. Louis, your committee believe that Congress can very properly grant the relief prayed for, and the passage of the bill is therefore recommended.

Amend by changing the spelling of soldier's Christian name to "Francis."

The amendment recommended in the last paragraph of the report was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NANCY B. PRINCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1827) granting a pension to Nancy B. Prince, widow of Elbert Prince.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy B. Prince, widow of Elbert Prince, late private of companies commanded by Captains Christmas and Spirey, Georgia Volunteers, Indian war of 1836, and that he pay her a pension of $8 per month from and after the passage of this act, and to continue during her widowhood.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the facts in this case are very simple. This lady is the widow of a soldier who actually served sixty days in the Indian war, but served in two companies. On the widow's application for pension, the Department could only find record of service of the soldier for about eighteen days in one company, and therefore the application was denied; but the facts as shown establish a service of about sixty days in the two companies. The old lady is now about 86 and entirely dependent upon others for support, and I trust there will be no objection to the passage of this bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY PRINCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1826) granting a pension to Henry Prince.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry Prince, late private in companies commanded by Captains Christmas and Spirey, Georgia Volunteers, Indian war of 1836, and that he pay him a pension of $8 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, this is a similar case to the last. The applicant in this case is a brother of the soldier to whose widow the last bill grants a pension. The Princes were brothers and served in the same company.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. STALLINGS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1826) granting a pension to Henry Prince, beg leave to submit the following report: The claimant declares that he enlisted about May 1, 1836, and served until the last of June, 1836, as a private in Captain Christmas's company of Georgia volunteers in the Creek Indian war, and his allegations as to length of service are borne out by the sworn statements of Linson Pickard and John H. Blalock, aged residents of Lee County, Ala., who knew him at the time of his service.

The records, however, fail to show the service except from May 21, 1836, to June 7, 1836; and it further appears that no travel-time allowance is included within that period. His claim, under the Indian war act of July 27, 1862, was disallowed because of inability to find a record except of eighteen days' service.

The claimant is now 80 years old, in feeble health, and without property or income upon which to depend for a support. The facts are shown by the certificate of the gentleman who introduced the bill in the House, and also by the sworn statement of three residents of Lee County, Ala.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEN. JAMES C. PARROTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5226) to give increased pension to Gen. James C. Parrott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of James C. Parrott, late colonel of the Seventh Iowa Infantry in the war of 1861, and pay him pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The Committee on Pensions recommended amendments as follows:

Line 6, strike out the words "in the war of 1861."

Line 7, strike out "seventy-two," before the word "dollars," and insert "fifty."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. CLARK], who is absent. General Parrott is 85 years of age. He was a soldier in the Regular Army for a period between 1830 and 1840. He was 50 years of age when he enlisted in the Seventh Iowa Infantry in the late war. He has a distinguished record as a soldier, and he is now in a helpless condition, due, to some extent, to his advanced years. I believe there can be no possible objection from any quarter to this bill. Investigation of the case will simply serve to show its highly meritorious character.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I know Colonel Parrott well. He entered the Army as a private and was elected captain by his company. He was baptized at Belmont, and his gallantry was recognized by General Grant in a letter which he wrote urging him to go home to recuperate. He was at Fort Henry, at Donelson, at Shiloh, and at Corinth. He was severely wounded at Donelson and at Corinth. He was in the battle before Atlanta. He marched with Sherman to the sea, and was mustered out at the end of the war. He is a man of beautiful character. He is now stricken down by paralysis, absolutely prostrated; he is 85 years of age, and is without a dollar on which to live. I believe the case is wisely and well put by the committee when they say in their report that they "unanimously and cordially" recommend the passage of this bill, and I want to thank them for that assurance.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CAROLINE E. PURDUM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6134) granting an increase of pension to Caroline E. Purdum.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline E. Purdum, widow of Elijah F. Purdum, late private in Company F, Thirtieth Regiment, and assistant surgeon Eighty-ninth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, the report in that case is brief, and I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. ANDREWS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6134) granting an increase of pension to Caroline E. Purdum, have considered the same and report as follows:

Five different pension certificates were issued to the soldier because of disease contracted in the service.

One of the disabilities mentioned in his last certificate was "disease of heart," for which disability he was rated at eight-eighths.

After the soldier's death his widow, the said Caroline E. Purdum, applied for a pension under the general law.

The declaration alleged that the soldier's death resulted from "heart disease."

The claim was approved by the medical examiner in the Pension Office and submitted for admission by the present "medical referee."

The re-reviewer raised some question of doubt, and a special examination was subsequently ordered.

In the course of that special examination Dr. B. B. Baker, who had been the soldier's advisory physician for several years and was his attending physician during his final illness, testified that "the immediate cause of his death was chronic valvular disease of the heart."

The report of the special examiner concludes with the following statement:

"I think the claim could be fairly admitted under the positive medical testimony of Dr. B. B. Baker that the heart disease was undoubtedly due to the typhoid fever and its resulting disease of the circulatory system."

Nevertheless, the claim was rejected. But the facts cited, which are corroborated by other testimony, lead your committee to believe that the widow is clearly entitled to a pension under the general law, and we therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FRANCES E. HELFENSTEIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 979) granting a pension to Frances E. Helfenstein.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frances E. Helfenstein, widow of George W. Helfenstein, late first lieutenant and adjutant of the One hundred and seventy-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The committee recommended an amendment, adding, after the word "Infantry," the words "at the rate of $17 per month."

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 979) granting a pension to Frances E. Helfenstein, widow of George W. Helfenstein, late first lieutenant and adjutant of the One hundred and seventy-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant is the widow of George W. Helfenstein, who was first lieutenant of Company D, One hundred and seventy-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and afterwards adjutant of the same regiment. The soldier entered the service August 10, 1864, for one year. He was appointed first lieutenant of Company D, One hundred and seventy-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, September 17, 1864, and adjutant of the same regiment December 21, 1864. He was discharged May 30, 1865, for disability, the regiment itself being mustered out June 26, 1865. He was married January 28, 1863, to Frances E. Spry, and she, as his widow, now prosecutes this claim.

The evidence in the case is voluminous, but the main facts are as follows:

In the service, about October, 1864, the officer was sent out on a long detail, or scout, in which he rode horseback. In that time he bruised his scrotum and caught cold. When he returned to camp his scrotum was swollen and painful, and a case of orchitis or sarcocoe was set up. He was sent to the officers' hospital at Nashville, Tenn., treated for it, and returned to the regiment. There was a recurrence of the disease, and he was returned to the hospital, where his right testicle was extirpated. He was granted sick leave, and sent home in March, 1865.

He returned to the regiment, but on May 30, 1865, he was again found in the hospital and was discharged, as of that date, by virtue of a general order discharging all officers in hospital at that date.

The soldier applied for pension on account of the disability arising in the service in March, 1879, and was allowed for $3.50, dating from January 5 1882. He applied for an increase of pension and was allowed it to the amount of $12.75, October 7, 1887, which he was receiving on June 5, 1892, the date of his death.

In August, 1892, Frances E. Helfenstein, the widow, applied for pension on the ground that the soldier died of the disability on account of which he was pensioned.

On September 10, 1894, the claim was rejected on the ground that the soldier's death was not the result of the disability originating in the service.

The whole case turns upon this one point. There is no doubt but that the soldier received the disability in the service, and was pensioned for it, and that claimant is the widow, and the only question is, Did the soldier die of the disability received in the service?

Upon this point there are five medical witnesses. Dr. Morris, late first assistant surgeon of the One hundred and seventy-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Dr. F. B. Mussey, both of whom treated the soldier in the service for the disability incurred there, the latter physician treating him on down until 1881. Then there are Drs. Fulton, McClure, and Halderman, who treated the soldier from 1881 until his death.

Each physician states his own knowledge of the case, and then gives his opinion on his own evidence and on that of the other four. All of these physicians stand high in their profession. All arrive at the same conclusion, namely, that the disease of which the soldier died is traceable to the sarcocoele which originated in the service and on account of which he was pensioned.

The Pension Office physicians refuse to draw these conclusions from the evidence of the five physicians, and say that the soldier did not die of the disease on account of which he was pensioned. If this case had been submitted to a court on the evidence of the five physicians, and the court had been bound to accept their evidence as experts, then it would have been bound to have allowed the pension, for their evidence establishes the right to a pension.

Your committee think that this evidence was competent, and that when given the Department was bound to receive it, and to follow what it proved. We do not believe that the medical staff of the Department can or should arbitrarily say that they will not accept as proven what the evidence clearly proves.

The facts in the case warrant the allowance of a pension, and we therefore recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment adding to line 8, after the word "Infantry," the words "at the rate of $17 per month."

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the rate provided for in the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Seventeen dollars per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ABRAM H. PARKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5946) granting an increase of pension to Abram H. Parker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Abram H. Parker, late of Company A, Forty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Mounted Infantry, on the pension roll of the United States at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Chairman, in order to correct an error in this bill I ask that "Abraham" be inserted instead of "Abram."

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection that correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Chairman, the beneficiary named in this bill entered the Army at the age of 15 and made as true and brave a soldier as ever flashed a saber or shouldered a musket. Although entitled many years ago to a pension, he never asked this aid from the Government so long as he could get along without it; and he would now scorn to receive the increase he asks if it were not due to him as an act of justice in every sense of the word. He is in an utterly helpless condition and requires the almost constant care of an attendant. I personally presented this claim before the committee; and when the facts were there heard and considered the committee openly expressed the opinion that this claimant is entitled to and should receive $72 a month. But fearing that to ask such an amount might jeopardize the passage of the bill, I have sought to secure for him a pension of only $50 per month, and this amount the committee recommends. I hope the recommendation will be adopted.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "late," in line 5, the word "private." I will state that this man requires the attendance of another person a large portion of the time; and his case brings him within the class of pensioners who receive from the Pension Office $50 a month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY PRINCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1825) granting a pension to Mary Prince, widow of Ellis Prince.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Prince, widow of Ellis Prince, late corporal of company commanded by Captain Christmas, Georgia Volunteers, and late member of company commanded by Captain Spirey, Georgia Volunteers, both of Indian war of 1836, and that he pay her a pension of $8 per month from and after the passage of this act, and to continue during her widowhood.

Mr. SPALDING. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. STALLINGS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1825) entitled "A bill granting a pension to Mary Prince, widow of Ellis Prince," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass: This is a bill enacting that Mary Prince be granted a pension because of the service of her deceased husband, Ellis Prince, in Captains Christmas's and Spirey's companies of Georgia Volunteers in the Indian war of 1836.

Such rolls as are on file show that Ellis Prince served from May 31 to June 7, 1836, in Captain Christmas's company, but no allowance was made on account of time spent in travel. No rolls of Captain Spirey's company can be found, but parole evidence is furnished to show that the soldier's service covered a period of nearly sixty days.

The claimant's application at the Pension Bureau under the Indian war act of July 27, 1892, was disallowed because of inability to find a record of more than the eighteen days of service appearing on the above-named roll.

Ellis Prince died November 1, 1874, and his widow, who is now about 76 years old, is in a very needy and dependent condition.

The facts as to dependence are shown by the statement of the gentleman who introduced the bill in the House and by the affidavits of three citizens of Lee County, Ala.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MRS. F. E. MARSHALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4090) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. F. E. Marshall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Mrs. Frances E. Marshall, widow of Gen. Humphrey Marshall, an officer in the Mexican war, from $8 per month to $25 per month, to take effect from the passage of this bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty."

Mr. COLSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a statement which, while it gives me no pleasure, will, I have no doubt, afford a great deal of satisfaction to at least one gentleman on this floor. The widow of that distinguished soldier Humphrey Marshall is dead; and I ask leave to withdraw this bill which was introduced for the benefit of his widow.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the bill will be withdrawn.

SARAH WEEDON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1178) granting a pension to Sarah Weedon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Sarah Weedon, widow of John H. Weedon, deceased, who was a sergeant in Company I, Fourth United States Infantry, in the Mexican war, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 5, after "Weedon," insert "Jones, former."

In the last line of the bill strike out "twenty-five" and insert "eight"; so as to make the pension $8 a month.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Sarah Weedon Jones."

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. HARDY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1178) granting a pension to Sarah Weedon, have considered the same, and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant was formerly the widow of John H. Weedon, who served as a sergeant in Company I, Fourth United States Infantry, and as such participated in the war with Mexico.

The exact date of the soldier's death is not known, but the Pension Bureau reports that he was discharged at the City of Mexico November 23, 1847, on a surgeon's certificate of disability, and he directed that his pension certificate should, when issued, be sent to Zanesville, Ohio. This certificate was issued to him in May, 1848, sent to Zanesville and returned uncalled for, and it is now on file in the Pension Bureau.

The testimony filed in the widow's pension application shows that it was understood that he received a wound at Molino del Rey, Mexico, September 8, 1847, and died soon after from the effects of same. The widow remarried to one Enoch Jones, who died September 23, 1891.

The claimant's application at the Pension Bureau, filed January 30, 1890, was rejected March 8, 1890, "on the ground of no pensionable period, application not having been filed within three years subsequent to soldier's death nor prior to remarriage May 13, 1849."

As stated above, the claimant is again a widow, and as shown by her sworn statement, she reared two sons by the soldier, both of whom served through the late war in the Union Army, one of whom died several years ago from the effects of the service, and the other is still surviving, though a wounded invalid.

The claimant is now 85 years old, and it is shown by the sworn statement of several citizens of Guernsey County, Ohio, that her sole property consists in a dower interest in a small piece of real estate in North Salem, Ohio, worth not over $100, and is dependent upon others not legally bound for her support.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended with an amendment changing the title of the bill so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Sarah Weedon Jones"; also by inserting the words "Jones, former" after the words "Sarah Weedon," in line 5, and striking out the word "twenty-five," in line 8, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "eight"; so as to fix the rate of pension at $8 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. I should like to make an inquiry about this bill. It proposes, as I understand, to pension a widow who has remarried. I should like to know whether this bill conforms to the principle which I understand has been established by the Committee on Invalid Pensions that where a widow has remarried and the second husband has died, the widow is not pensioned unless she was the wife of the soldier during the time of his service? We do not wish to adopt with reference to soldiers of the Mexican war a rule which is not made applicable to other soldiers.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. This lady did not marry the soldier until after his service.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understood that the Committee on Invalid Pensions had steadily refused to report a pension in any case where the widow has remarried unless she was the wife of the soldier during his service.

Mr. PICKLER. Perhaps I stated a little too broadly, or the gentleman from Maine understood a little too broadly, what had been done by our committee. The committee has sought to hold itself down to the rule he states; but there may have been a case or two in which it has been departed from.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think we should not establish with reference to soldiers of the Mexican war a principle which we would not apply to soldiers of the late war.

Mr. PICKLER. That is the principle we have adopted in the general bill which we have reported.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. This lady is the widow of the soldier.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then this comes within the principle.

Mr. TALBERT. I did not hear the reading of the report. Is this the case of a widow who has remarried?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. TALBERT. What is the amount of pension proposed?

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Eight dollars a month. Her husband was a soldier in the Mexican war.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM F. SONGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4193) to correct the military record of William F. Songer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against William F. Songer, late a private of Company B, Forty-second Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, on the records of the War Department, and to issue to said Songer a certificate of honorable discharge.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to hear the report.

The report (by Mr. WOOLMER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4193) entitled "A bill to correct the military record of William F. Songer," beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass:

This is a bill enacting that William F. Songer, private Company B, Forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteers, be relieved of the charge of desertion.

The evidence shows that he served faithfully during his first enlistment; that in October, 1864, nine months after his second enlistment, he deserted, returning to his home to visit his wife, who was sick, and she remained sick a long time thereafter.

In consideration of his faithful service for three years, the committee are of opinion that this bill should pass.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would ask that this bill be laid aside with an unfavorable report. It has no merit. Let us pass meritorious bills or none. I move that it be laid aside with an unfavorable report.

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 66, noes 1.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DALZELL in the chair) (having counted the committee). One hundred and thirteen members are present, a quorum.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM WALDRUP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4001) to reinstate William Waldrup on the pension roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be instructed to reinstate William Waldrup, of Maddox, Tenn., late of Company F, Sixth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, on the pension roll of the United States at the rate he was drawing when dropped from the roll.

Mr. SPALDING. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4001) to reinstate William Waldrup, late of Company F, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers, on the pension roll at the rate he was drawing when dropped from the roll, having carefully examined all the facts and circumstances in evidence, respectfully report:

William Waldrup enlisted as private in Company F, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers, September 21, 1862, and served faithfully until honorably discharged July 23, 1865.

He applied for pension October 2, 1885, for chronic bronchitis and chronic diarrhea contracted in service, but being poor and unable to furnish satisfactory proof of origin, his claim was rejected June 29, 1888, under order No. 62.

He filed a claim under act of June 27, 1890, on July 15, 1890, for disease of bowels, liver, kidneys, and bronchitis, and was pensioned thereunder at $12 per month for "disease of liver, diarrhea, and bronchitis."

He was dropped from the pension roll October 18, 1894, on the ground of "not ratably disabled for earning a support by manual labor under act of June 27, 1890."

Drs. L. E. and J. B. Covey filed affidavit November 22, 1890, that claimant "came under our care in 1882. Since that time he has been suffering from enlargement of liver, inflammation of bowels, and kidney trouble. He has not been able to do any manual labor since that time. His wife and daughters have supported the family."

The board of examining surgeons at Savannah, Tenn., which examined him December 17, 1890, rate him six-eighths for disease of liver, four-eighths for diarrhea, and two-eighths for chronic bronchitis. Another board, which examined him May 9, 1894, declined to rate him; but said, "There is a history of diarrhea, but health not impaired, and 'he is totally blind in right eye, the pupil closed, caused by a stroke in the eye followed by iritis.'"

Thirty-three neighbors certify to the committee that—

"To our personal knowledge he is not able to perform manual labor; he is 55 years old and has had chronic diarrhea and bronchitis ever since the war, and his wife and daughters have to make their living by working in the field."

This certificate is indorsed by Dr. James B. Covey, his family physician, who is thoroughly reputable, who says he has been his family physician for fifteen years and knows that he is badly afflicted and not able to labor.

Your committee believe this applicant justly entitled to the small pension he was receiving, and earnestly recommend the passage of this bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ISAAC H. WHETSEL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4720) granting an increase of pension to Isaac H. Whetsel, of Louisville, Ky.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Isaac H. Whetsel, a soldier in the war of the rebellion, now drawing a pension under certificate No. 72027 of $12 per month, to $25 per month, to take effect from the passage of this act.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the present pension in this case?

Mr. PICKLER. He was pensioned at $4 a month from the date of his discharge until April, 1889, and at $12 since that date, for gunshot wound in the right thigh. The ratings put him up to the amount fixed in the bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. I suggest that we let in the report in this case.

Mr. EVANS. I suggest that we dispense with the reading of the report in this case, and let it be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. ERDMAN. I have no objection to dispensing with the reading of the report, but I object to printing it in the RECORD unless it is read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment recommended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the word "Whetsel," in line 5, and inserting the following: "Late private in Company B, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, to $16 per month for gunshot wound of right thigh and callouses of buttocks, in lieu of the pension which he now receives."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SARAH ANN WIBLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5311) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Wible.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place upon the pension roll the name of Sarah Ann Wible, dependent mother of John Wible, deceased, late of Company B, Twenty-first Regiment Indiana Infantry, also First Indiana Heavy Artillery, at $12 per month.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5311) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Wible, dependent mother of John Wible, late of Company B, Twenty-first Regiment Indiana Infantry Volunteers, and also of First Indiana Heavy Artillery, at $12 per month, having considered all the facts and circumstances in evidence, respectfully submit the following report:

John Wible served in Company B, First Indiana Heavy Artillery, from July 6, 1861, to January 10, 1866, having an honorable and exemplary record. He was pensioned at $6 per month from April 2, 1883, for rheumatism and disease of lungs. He was killed by accident in 1892, a loaded sled upsetting upon him.

His mother, Sarah Ann Wible, applied for pension under both the general law and the act of June 27, 1890, both of which were rejected on the ground that the soldier's death was not in any manner due to his army service.

The petition of 167 reputable citizens of Nodaway County, Mo., represent and show that she is 84 years old, respectable and deserving in every particular, and that she has no property and was wholly dependent upon her son, John Wible, for her support and maintenance, and has no one legally bound to support her.

From the facts presented your committee believe the Government should provide for her in her old age, and therefore recommend that the bill be amended by adding after the word "authorized," in line 4, the words "and directed," and by striking out all of line 6 after the letter "B," and by striking out the word "also" in line 7, and, as amended, that the bill do pass.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I just want to call the attention of gentlemen on the other side who say we are discussing these matters intelligently to what is done as shown in this report. This soldier was killed by a sled. Now, does the House determine that that was due to his army service? I want to ask the gentlemen on the other side whether we are to have that established now as a new principle in the granting of pensions?

Mr. CROWTHER. I would like to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania by stating that the soldier in this case was pensioned for rheumatism, and that by reason of his rheumatic affliction he was unable to get out of the way of a loaded sled, and by indirection the result of his death was due to his army service.

Mr. ERDMAN. There is nothing in the report to show it.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. F. E. MARSHALL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, a short time ago the House bill (No. 4090) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. F. E. Marshall was withdrawn by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. COLSON], he stating that the claimant had deceased. No motion was made at the time; and that bill, unless otherwise disposed of, will remain on the Calendar. I move, therefore, that it be laid aside with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not know whether the gentleman from Kentucky has the power or authority to do that. The committee authorized him to withdraw the bill. He can do that.

Mr. SPALDING. The bill has been already withdrawn.

Mr. PICKLER. I have no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

There was no objection.

DR. HARRISON WAGNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6789) granting a pension and for the relief of Dr. Harrison Wagner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Harrison Wagner, and pay him a pension of $40 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The evidence in this matter is very voluminous, and only the substance of it can be set forth in this report. In 1862 the beneficiary was an advanced medical student in the State of Maryland, and on the 27th day of September, 1862, he enlisted in the Union service as a hospital nurse at General Hospital No. 1, Frederick, Md.

Soon after his enlistment as nurse he was examined with a view to utilizing his services as a physician and surgeon. He passed the examination, and was assigned to duty as an assistant surgeon in said hospital. Soon after his assignment to duty, as aforesaid, smallpox broke out in the hospital, and he was assigned to attend and treat the patients afflicted with this disease. His services in this regard were faithfully performed, and were so laborious and constant that his health was completely ruined.

The evidence shows that upon his enlistment he was a strong, healthy, and able-bodied man, but since the expiration of his service his health has constantly grown worse, until in 1875 he was compelled to give up his practice as a physician, and since that time has been unable to do any kind of labor, and for long periods he is confined to bed from bleeding hemorrhoids and general weakness.

The evidence is clear, and it may be said to be conclusive, that his disabilities were contracted during his service in the hospital. While he was thus engaged he was attacked with indigestion and constipation and internal bleeding hemorrhoids, and with them he has been afflicted ever since.

The petition of the claimant sets out fully the facts of this, and these statements are fully sustained by the evidence of Dr. William H. Wagner, Dr. Luther M. Zimmerman, W. H. Myers, Mrs. Amelia J. Anders, Mrs. Mary Myers, Mrs. Mary Alcott, Elizabeth Flemming, Mrs. Esther Beck, Mrs. Mary Barrock, Benjamin Smith, James Woods, William Wilson, William Grimes, Henry Working, Samuel Myers, Jacob Hyder, George Gilbert, William Nort, Enoch Watz, Henry Hinea, Levi Pipinger, and others.

Besides this claimant's service and his disabilities, there are some special circumstances entitling him to especial consideration. In 1863 he was residing at Woodsboro, Md., and gave the Union forces, upon the eve of the battle of Gettysburg, some very valuable information. The sentiment in the community at that time was almost wholly Confederate, and the claimant's sympathy with the Union cause and his services brought upon him many persecutions from the Confederate sympathizers, and to such an extent was he persecuted that he was compelled to give up his home and seek a new one elsewhere.

A bill for claimant's benefit and granting a pension of $25 per month passed both House and Senate in the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, but it failed, with other bills, for lack of time to receive the Executive signature.

Since that time his condition has grown much worse in that he is now confined to bed or to the house for periods and requires the attendance of others at times.

He was honorably discharged, as the records show, on the 12th day of April, 1863.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the following substitute, granting the claimant a pension of $40 per month:

A bill granting a pension and for the relief of Dr. Harrison Wagner.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Harrison Wagner and pay him a pension of $40 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE HAGER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4888) for the relief of George Hager.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to revoke the order of the Commissioner of Pensions of the date of April 10, 1895, to recover from George Hager, late a private of Company B, Ninety-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in the late war of the rebellion, by withholding from his current pension (certificate numbered 222172) the sum of $2 per month from July 29, 1863, to September 14, 1881, inclusive.

Sec. 2. That said George Hager shall not, in any manner, be required to refund or repay to the United States said sum of $2 per month, or any part thereof; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay said George Hager the pension provided for in his certificate of pension bearing date April 10, 1895 (No. 222172), and all additional pension that may hereafter be allowed him, if any, without deducting therefrom said sum of $2 per month referred to in the first section hereof or any part thereof.

Mr. DALZELL. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. LAYTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4888) for the relief of George Hager, having examined the evidence in the case with great care, report as follows:

George Hager enlisted in Company B, Ninety-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, August 12, 1862. He was taken prisoner at Murfreesboro, Tenn., December 31, 1862; paroled at City Point, Va., February 9, 1863; reported at Camp Parole, Md., February 11, 1863; admitted to hospital at Annapolis, Md., February 11, 1863, and discharged July 28, 1863, for phthisis pulmonalis, with extreme debility, contracted (as he states) while in prison at Richmond. While in hospital at Annapolis, Md., he was treated for catarrh as well as for the disease for which he was discharged.

On March 6, 1866, he filed a claim for pension, alleging that he was rendered partially insane by abuse and hardship while a prisoner of war, and that by reason of said sickness he had not been able to labor any after leaving the service. For some unexplained reason he was not examined medically on that application.

On September 15, 1881, he filed another declaration, in which he alleged typhus fever, causing pains in his neck, which affected his eyes, and also chronic catarrh in right breast. On December 11, 1882, a certificate was issued, allowing him $2 per month for disease of eyes from July 29, 1863, the date of his discharge. On November 30, 1887, his pension was increased for same cause to $8 per month, which he continued to draw until March 4, 1895. Recently it has been discovered that in his declaration, filed in 1866, he did not distinctly name disease of eyes as a cause of disability entitling him to pension, and on that account a reissue has been made to change the date of commencement of pension for disease of eyes from the date of his discharge to September 15, 1881, the date of filing the declaration distinctly setting forth disease of eyes, and directing the withholding of his pension to recover the amount paid from discharge to September 14, 1881. While this may have been correct action from a strict technical point of view, we feel that in view of the mental condition of the soldier at the time of making his first claim, as shown in the declaration itself, he should not have been held to an accurate statement of his disabilities, but should be allowed pension for the disabilities established as of service origin.

The evidence on file in the Pension Office, all of which your committee has carefully examined, shows clearly and satisfactorily that prior to his entering the service Mr. Hager was a strong and healthy man, and that his eyes and eyesight were good. It is further shown that immediately after his return home from the Army, and from thence until the present, his eyes were sore and diseased, and the eyesight badly affected, and that he was otherwise diseased, injured, and disabled.

These facts are clearly shown by the sworn testimony, on file in the office, of George McAdams, William Hager, William Haruff, James Haruff, John Grassley, John Neff, Frederick Boyer, and Darius McIntire, all of whom served with him in the same company and regiment and were also neighbors and knew him well before, during, and after his service. The last named, Darius McIntire, was also captured by the Confederates and confined in Libby Prison with Mr. Hager.

Christian Neff, Daniel Grassley, Godfried Klenk, Charles Mack, Isaac Zerkel, and Jacob Shaffer, near neighbors of Mr. Hager, also testify as to the physical condition (injury of eyes) of Mr. Hager before and after his army service.

The files of the Pension Department further show that all the witnesses are good and credible men.

It thus clearly appearing that the disease of the eyes was of service origin, and that claimant made application for pension in March, 1866, as above stated, in which he alleged general disability (which would fairly include disease of the eyes), your committee is of the opinion that he should not be deprived thereof simply because he failed to set forth in his application the specific disease or disability, to wit, disease of the eyes, for which pension was afterwards granted, and that the pension paid him should not be recovered by withholding any part of his pension, and therefore the passage of the bill is earnestly recommended.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have not before noticed a bill involving just this principle, and would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to explain briefly the effect of the action proposed here.

Mr. LAYTON. I will say to the gentleman that this does not carry arrears. The Committee on Invalid Pensions have declined in all instances to allow arrears of pension.

Mr. DINGLEY. This does not allow arrears. But will the gentleman in a few words simply state what the case is?

Mr. LAYTON. In 1866 or 1867, soon after the close of the war, this gentleman, Mr. Hager, filed an application for a pension, in which application he alleged general disability incurred in the service without specifying the nature of the disability any more definitely than that. That ran along until 1881, when he filed an additional application, in which he specifically set forth his disability as disease of the eyes, and was allowed $2 per month only for that disease of the eyes, commencing from the time of his discharge in 1863.

In 1887 he made an additional application for the same cause for an increase of pension, and was allowed $8 per month.

In 1894 he made another application for an increase, which was adjudicated in March, 1895, at which time it was discovered or alleged to be the fact that his first pension of $2 should have been allowed to commence from the time of his filing his additional application in 1881, instead of going back to the time of his discharge. Hence the Commissioner of Pensions made an order, not affecting his pension of $8 per month in any way, but that that should be withheld until the Government was reimbursed for the mistake that had been made in allowing the pension from 1863 to 1881 at $2 per month.

Mr. DINGLEY. I want to ask if it is the practice of the Pension Office to order a reimbursement in such a case, where they discover a mistake in a former ruling?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes; it is. Now, the committee find, as a matter of fact, that in this case it was simply a technical objection and mistake. There is no question about the disability of this soldier, and that the general application which stated that he had been disabled from the performance of manual labor while in the service undoubtedly covered the disease of the eyes for which he claimed a pension, and for which he was afterwards allowed a pension. From that disability he is now suffering. For that reason the committee found that the pension should be continued to him without this deduction. That is all there is in this bill. There is no question of allowing arrears of pension at all involved in this case.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH WATTS KEARNY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6283) granting a pension to Elizabeth Watts Kearny, daughter of the late Philip Kearny, major-general, United States Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Elizabeth Watts Kearny, daughter of the late Philip Kearny, major-general, United States Army, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month during her natural life.

The committee recommended an amendment striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty-five."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. McCLELLAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6283) granting a pension to Elizabeth Watts Kearny, have had the same under consideration and report as follows:

Miss Kearny is the daughter of the late Maj. Gen. Philip Kearny, United States Army, whose services appear from the accompanying letters from the War Department. She is well advanced in years, in feeble health, almost blind, and destitute.

In view of these facts, and in recognition of the great service rendered to the country by her father, your committee recommend that the bill pass with the following amendment:

In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-five."

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 24, 1896.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 21st instant, received to-day, in which you request to be furnished with a statement showing the military record of Maj. Gen. Phil. Kearny, for the use of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the consideration of a bill for the relief of his daughter, I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you that it is shown by the records of this office that Philip Kearny was commissioned brigadier-general of volunteers August 7, 1861, to rank from May 17, 1861, and accepted the commission August 24, 1861, and that he was appointed major-general of volunteers July 25, 1862, to rank from July 4, 1862, and accepted the appointment August 2, 1862. The records show that he was assigned to the Department of the Potomac in Special Orders, No. 141, dated Headquarters of the Army, August 24, 1861, and that he was killed in action at Chantilly, Va., September 1, 1862.

I am further directed to inform you that General Kearny had service in the Regular Army, and that the records of the permanent military establishment are filed in the office of the Adjutant-General of the Army, to whom your letter has this day been transmitted.

Very respectfully,
F. C. AINSWORTH,
Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

Hon. J. A. PICKLER,
Chairman Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear some additional reasons stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS] why this pension should be granted.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, this lady is the daughter of a very distinguished officer of the war, who rendered valuable services to the Government in the Mexican war, where he lost an arm, and later in the rebellion, until he was killed at Chantilly, Va., as stated in the report, in 1862.

His daughter is comparatively, perhaps actually, destitute; advanced in years; her eyesight has failed. She is unable to perform the labor which persons of her education and qualifications might easily do. As no one is receiving a pension on account of the military service of General Kearny, it is thought to be entirely consistent that his child should, in view of her physical disabilities and her dependence, be placed upon the pension roll. I am sure my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] has that gallantry of feeling and devotion to those persons thus situated which will lead him to be entirely satisfied with this statement.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELEANOR L. CURTISS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5710) granting a pension to Eleanor L. Curtiss.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Eleanor L. Curtiss, widow of Warner H. Curtiss, late captain and provost-marshal of the Sixth Congressional district of Iowa, and pay her a pension of $30 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In line 7 strike out "twenty" and insert "twelve."
Insert after the word "month," in line 8, "and $2 per month additional for each of her two children during minority."

Mr. DINGLEY. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. PICKLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5710) granting a pension to Eleanor L. Curtiss, having carefully examined the same, respectfully submit the following report:

Warner H. Curtiss was appointed captain and provost-marshal of the Sixth Congressional district of Iowa on April 30, 1863; he took the oath May 9, 1863, and was honorably discharged October 31, 1865. He died March 5, 1895, leaving a widow and two children, both of whom are minors at the present time. At the date of his death he was drawing a pension of $12 under the act of June 27, 1890, for total loss of right hand.

His widow, the beneficiary named in the bill, filed application under the act of June 27, 1890, and also applied for the accrued pension due her husband at his death. Both claims were rejected June 12, 1895, on the ground of "no title, the above-named man not having been regularly mustered into the service."

The fifth subdivision of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes mentions the class of officers to which the husband of this widow belonged. They were held to be pensionable under the act of 1890 until November 24, 1893, when the Department adopted a contrary rule.

The widow is without other means of support than her daily labor. Your committee respectfully recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments:

In line 7 strike out "twenty" and insert "twelve."
Insert after the word "month," in line 8, "and $2 per month additional for each of her two children during minority."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside this bill to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. HOOKER. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 61, yeas none.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS D. WALKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6483) granting an increase of pension to Thomas D. Walker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas D. Walker, late a private in Company B, Fourth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. DALZELL. Let us have the report read, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. PICKLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6483) granting increase of pension to Thomas D. Walker, have carefully examined the same, and respectfully submit the following report:

The soldier enlisted as a private in Company B, Fourth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, on August 20, 1861, and was mustered out and honorably discharged on August 17, 1865.

He applied under the law of June 27, 1890, and was allowed $6 per month on account of general debility. April 22, 1895, he made application for increase on account of increased debility and old age. June 19, 1895, the medical examination shows that he is "totally unable to perform manual labor and his condition is not the result of vicious habits. Disabled by piles, six-eighths; by disease of heart, four-eighths; by injury to hip and back, ten-eighths; general debility, six-eighths." He was allowed an increase of but $2, however, because he had not alleged the several specific disabilities found by the examining board.

The soldier is 66 years of age, and has no means of support.

Your committee respectfully recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CARRIE L. YEATON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1924) granting a pension to Carrie L. Yeaton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Carrie L. Yeaton, widow of Lewis D. Yeaton, late a private in Company F, Eighth Maine Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $8 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

Strike out, in lines 4 and 5, the words, "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 8, strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY], who reported this bill, is familiar with the facts, and can make a statement that I think will satisfy the committee, without the reading of this long report.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman can make a statement.

There was no objection.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in this case except a question as to the marriage of the soldier to the person named in the bill. The soldier was married, but I do not have the date before me at this moment. It is stated in the report, however. Subsequently he separated from his wife, and in 1873 was married to the lady in whose interest this bill is offered. She believed him to be a single man and she lived with him for twenty-one years and bore him three children. They were during that time recognized as husband and wife. The first wife, in 1882, I think it was, obtained a divorce and subsequently died. The soldier and this woman continued to live together until the death of the soldier. He died of disease contracted in the service, and this lady asks for the $12 a month that she would be entitled to under the law.

Mr. PICKLER. And this is a Senate bill.

Mr. SULLOWAY. It is a Senate bill. Twelve dollars is all that is asked here. That is all there is in it. It is a question whether you will say, under the circumstances, she shall receive it or not.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing the matter with this bill! The trifling fact that the soldier had another wife living when he married this woman ought not to stand in the way! I do not see the necessity of having the report read or having it spread on the RECORD so as to show that there is anything to entitle this widow to a pension!

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable report.

NEIL McNEIL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1820) granting a pension to Neil McNeil:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Neil McNeil, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 a month.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let us have the report, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1820) granting a pension to Neil McNeil, report as follows:

This man alleges that about August 20, 1862, at the request of Capt. Richard Stout, he, with a number of others, joined Company B, Ninth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, to assist in protecting the settlers on the frontier against the Indians.

The company was divided into squads of about 15 men each, and he had command of one of the squads.

That on September 3, 1862, in what was known as the battle of Acton, an engagement with Indians, he received a gunshot wound in the left arm, about 4 inches from the shoulder, said shot cutting the upper tendon of the flexor muscle, by reason of which he is much disabled in the performance of the labor required in his occupation as a farmer.

The above allegations of McNeil are corroborated by the sworn statements of N. R. Thompson and Jacob A. Wolverton, members of Company B, Ninth Minnesota Volunteers, with which McNeil was serving when wounded.

William Reems, another member of the company, testifies under oath that he was wounded at the time and place and under the circumstances alleged.

The evidence establishes beyond question the fact that McNeil was wounded in battle while serving with United States soldiers and under command of United States officers.

The board of pension examining surgeons find, describe, and rate the wound, but the Pension Bureau can not admit it, as claimant was not enlisted or mustered into the United States service. Your committee consider the bill one of merit, and recommend that it be amended by inserting after the name "Neil McNeil," in line 6, the words "of Dayton, Hennepin County, Minn.," and that as amended the bill do pass.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

OLIVER DODGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3496) for the relief of Oliver Dodge, and to place him upon the pension roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Oliver Dodge, adopted father of George Alger, late private Company F, Tenth Michigan Infantry, upon the pension roll at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear the report read.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3496) for relief of Oliver Dodge, having carefully examined the evidence in this case, report as follows:

George Alger, when about 2½ years of age, was given by his mother, who had been left destitute by her husband, to Oliver Dodge, who cared for, fed, clothed, and educated him until he was about 17 years of age, when he enlisted in Company F, Tenth Michigan Infantry, November 18, 1861. He served continuously until February 23, 1864, when reported missing in action. The muster-out roll of his company shows that he died at Andersonville, Ga., August 13, 1864, while a prisoner of war. Oliver Dodge, the beneficiary of this bill, is now 77 years of age, disabled for work, and without means of support. If he were the father of the soldier he would be pensionable, but as he is not he has no title to pension under existing law.

Your committee are of opinion that since he acted the part of a father to the soldier he should receive the same benefit in his old age that he would were he the father, and they therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ERDMAN. Only one word. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is a foster father. We have given foster mothers pensions; but this is the case of a foster father.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania would have this committee believe that this is something new. It is on a par with the thrusts he makes from time to time here. This foster father took this boy when he was 2½ years old and cared for, clothed, fed, and educated him until he was 17 years of age, when he went into the Army; and the boy when in the service died at Andersonville. This foster father is now 77 years of age, without means of support, and time and time again Congress has given relief in such cases as this. He was not the father of the boy, or he would be pensionable at the Pension Office; but to all intents and purposes he was the father of the boy, because he cared for him, educated him, and had charge of him until he went into the Army. The gentleman, I suppose, just wants this old father, who is now 77 years old, to go to the poorhouse rather than grant relief which is in the line of the action of Congress time and again in this connection.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman knows very well that this foster father did not legally adopt this child.

Mr. PICKLER. I know no such thing.

Mr. ERDMAN. Your report does not show that he did.

Mr. PICKLER. The report does not show everything in a case.

Mr. ERDMAN. Exactly.

Mr. PICKLER. The report shows the facts. Now, I suppose the gentleman wants the committee to look up the records to see whether the boy was technically adopted. I do not think in the case of an old man who is 77 years of age that this country is going to be technical about going to the relief of those old men who reared these soldiers who died at Andersonville. [Applause.]

Mr. SNOVER. I wish to say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may possibly be relieved with a knowledge of the fact that on or about the time the bill was favorably reported in this case the person named in the bill died, which will make it unnecessary for the House to further consider it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move that the Committee of the Whole recommend that the bill lie on the table?

Mr. SNOVER. I make that motion.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the object of that?

The CHAIRMAN. It is done on the statement of the gentleman that the beneficiary has died since the report was made.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH J. HUDSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4363) to increase the pension of Joseph J. Hudson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Joseph J. Hudson, late a member of Company I, One hundred and tenth Regiment of Illinois Infantry, from twenty-four to seventy-two dollars per month.

Mr. MILNES. Read the report.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4363) to increase the pension of Joseph J. Hudson, submit the following report:

Claimant enlisted August 12, 1862; was discharged June 24, 1863, for this disability—"atrophy of the muscles of both forearms following an attack of typhoid fever since enlistment." He applied for pension for lumbago and spinal disease, and was pensioned for rheumatism at $8 from discharge, and at $12 from March 3, 1873.

Some one having reported that his rheumatism existed prior to his enlistment, his case was specially examined and he was dropped from the pension rolls.

He appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, who directed his name to be restored for rheumatism.

In this investigation it was developed that when 8 or 10 years of age he had an attack of nervous fever, which left him with contraction of the tendons of both forearms and some deformity of the wrists.

In his restoration he was rated at twelve-eighths "eliminating disease of spine and deformity of wrists, which appear to have existed prior to enlistment." This is true so far as deformity of wrists is concerned, but your committee have searched in vain the record to find any evidence showing claimant to have had any spinal disease upon or before his enlistment; and for twelve or more years there is no evidence to show that he was afflicted with any disease whatever except this slight deformity of wrists, which did not prevent his being accepted as a soldier on enlistment.

The medical referee of the Pension Office, notwithstanding the above state of affairs, in an opinion January 4, 1896, affirming rejection of an increase, says:

"It is not possible for me to state the nature of the sickness prior to service, but whatever it was it caused contraction of various tendons, and the present condition of the pensioner appears to be a continuation of this early trouble."

The board of United States surgeons who examined this soldier say:

"He can not bear his weight on his feet for a moment. There are several points of bony deposits on the dorsum of feet. This condition of hands and feet is result of a long standing case of articular rheumatism. He is able to do nothing whatever and requires a constant attendant."

It is admitted that the rheumatism for which this soldier is pensioned is of service origin. His condition is most pitiable, being unable to do a thing to help himself. Constant attention from attendants is required in his case. We think the evidence fairly shows that this condition is the result of disease contracted in the service, and not from the nervous fever or from the deformity of wrists of twelve years prior to enlistment. Whether the medical referee or the committee are correct in this, we submit that justice and charity alike demand that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SOPHIA D. CLENDENIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1894) granting a pension to Sophia D. Clendenin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension roll of the United States the name of Sophia D. Clendenin, widow of the late Col. D. R. Clendenin, of the United States Army, and pay her during her natural life and widowhood a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, the Senate bill for the same purpose grants precisely the same pension as the House bill, and the Senate report is substantially the same as the House report, and I ask consent that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that is done, Mr. Chairman, let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1894) granting a pension to Sophia D. Clendenin, submit the following report: David R. Clendenin, late the husband of claimant, was first commissioned May 10, 1861, by President Abraham Lincoln, as first lieutenant Fifth Regiment, Third Brigade, Militia of the District of Columbia. On September 18, 1861, he became major Eighth Illinois Cavalry. He was promoted lieutenant-colonel of same regiment December 5, 1862, and colonel and brigadier-general of volunteers by brevet in 1865 for meritorious services. He became major of Eighth United States Cavalry January 22, 1867, lieutenant-colonel Third United States Cavalry November 1, 1882, colonel Second United States Cavalry October 29, 1888, and was retired April 20, 1891. He died March 5, 1895.

His widow, the claimant, shared his dangers in the field. She is now in feeble health and straitened circumstances.

The services of Colonel Clendenin in four years of war were especially meritorious, receiving the commendation of Generals Lew Wallace, Hunter, Kautz, Foster, and Elkin. In his service in Texas, in Indian campaigns since the war, he received the special commendation of Governor Ross, of Texas, and United States Collector Cooke for his vigilance in preserving order on the frontier.

His widow is now on the pension roll at $25 per month under general law. It is insufficient for her support, and in view of the distinguished services of Colonel Clendenin, your committee recommend that this bill do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WOOD] that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill?

There was no objection.

The Senate bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

On motion of Mr. WOOD, the House bill (H. R. 1894) was laid on the table.

ELLEN KINGSLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1215) granting a pension to Ellen Kingsley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ellen Kingsley, widow of Henry E. Kingsley, late of Company F, Second New York Cavalry Volunteers.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to, inserting after the words "pension roll" the words "at $8 per month."

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. ANDREWS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1215) granting a pension to Ellen Kingsley, adopt as their own the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, No. 137, herewith, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Insert, after the word "roll," in line 4, the words "at $8 per month."

[Senate Report No. 137, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions have considered the bill (S. 1215) granting a pension to Ellen Kingsley, and submit the following report:

The petitioner was the wife and is, your committee believes, the widow of Henry E. Kingsley, who, according to the records of the War Department, was enrolled and mustered into the service of the United States August 23, 1864, as a private in Company F, Second New York Cavalry, to serve one year, and that he was mustered out with the company June 5, 1865, at Alexandria, Va.

From affidavits on file in this case it appears that the petitioner married the soldier in 1856, and that after the war they resided in New York State until 1871, when they moved to Nebraska. In May, 1875, the husband of the claimant suddenly disappeared and has never been seen since by anyone known to the family. He has never applied for a pension, nor is his address known to the Army and Navy Survivors' Division of the Pension Bureau. There is also ample evidence on file to prove that the claimant has never remarried; that her husband has been mourned as dead for many years, and that every effort has been exhausted to find him.

As shown by affidavits of neighbors and her family physician, the claimant is absolutely without any property of any kind, is dependent upon charity for her support, and in addition she has inflammatory rheumatism in a chronic form, obliging her to use two crutches in order to move about, also affecting her hands. On account of her physical condition she is totally incapacitated from earning a living. The claimant made application for pension, but as she is unable to prove absolutely the death of her husband the claim could not be allowed.

From the facts set forth your committee is of the opinion that the soldier is dead, and inasmuch as the claimant is living on the charity of her friends and is in such a pitiful condition physically, and as there are precedents of special legislation of this kind, the passage of the bill is recommended.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMUEL GOLDWATER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 404) granting a pension to Samuel Goldwater.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $15 per month, the name of Samuel Goldwater, late of Company A, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, National Guard.

Mr. MILNES. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. CROWTHER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 404) granting a pension to Samuel Goldwater, have examined the same and beg leave to report:

The claimant served a short time in the Missouri militia, and shortly after discharge suffered from an affection of the eyes, which he alleged was the result of sunstroke received while in the Army. He is now almost, if not totally, blind. The physicians who examined the case gave it as their opinion that the disease was occasioned by sunstroke, but the evidence submitted failed to prove that fact conclusively, and hence the case was rejected by the Pension Bureau.

The testimony shows that claimant is a man of good reputation and high integrity.

Your committee recommend that the word "fifteen," in the fifth line of the bill, be stricken out and the word "twelve" inserted in lieu thereof, and as so amended the bill do pass.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I commend this report to gentlemen on the other side as an illustration of what is deemed in this body sufficient ground for granting a pension. This report says that the claimant served a "short time" in the Missouri militia, but it does not state how long. It speaks of the "Missouri militia" without specifying what particular branch it referred to, when there were half a dozen kinds of Missouri militia. It says that he was discharged on account of "an affection of the eyes" without telling what the affection was. Yet this report pretends to set forth in these few brief lines sufficient information to justify Congress in granting a pension!

Mr. DINGLEY. Was this soldier ever in the United States service?

Mr. PICKLER. He was a member of the Missouri militia that were never technically mustered into the service, but were under command of United States officers and actually served in the Army.

Mr. DINGLEY. How long did he serve?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not remember.

Mr. ERDMAN. Probably he served a day or an hour.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, well, "probably" he served five years. If we are going to suppose about it we can suppose any period we please. These Missouri militia, while they were not all mustered into the service, were technically, as I have said, under the command of the United States officers and rendered very efficient service. They were out during the Price raid and other raids. They served whenever the United States called upon them. They saved Missouri to the Union. They protected the Union people of that State. They kept out invasion of Missouri from the rebel side, and they were as valuable as any other soldiers engaged in service in that region. There are several classes of the Missouri militia; but, as to most of them, if they had applied for pension before a certain date they would have received it under the general law. This man belongs to the class of militia that can not get pensions regularly in the Pension Office, and in such exceptional cases it has been the practice of Congress to grant pensions. This is no new question. This is right along the line of precedents. This bill is a Senate bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 466) granting an increase of pension to William Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Brown, late of Company D, Eighth Regiment Michigan Cavalry, at the rate of $30 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill, but I would like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 466) granting a pension to William Brown, adopt the accompanying Senate report (No. 66) as their own, and respectfully recommend its passage.

[Senate Report No. 66, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 466) granting a pension to William Brown, have examined the same and report:

The petitioner, William Brown, was a member of Company D, Eighth Regiment Michigan Cavalry; enlisted on the 21st day of March, 1864, and was discharged March 10, 1865. He was wounded and taken prisoner August 2, 1864, and the record of the War Department shows him to have been a prisoner about one hundred and forty days. It is also shown by papers herewith submitted that he is unable to perform any manual labor, and is unable to procure the evidence necessary to entitle him to the pension allowed by law for the disabilities from which he is suffering, for the reason that said disabilities were incurred while a prisoner of war in the hands of the enemy, and he was discharged soon after his escape from prison without having opportunity to be sent to a hospital and thereby make a hospital report; therefore he does not know the address of any comrade who was a prisoner with him, or who knows him, and could give evidence in his case. He was confined at Andersonville and Florence, making his escape on December 15, 1864; then he resided at Annapolis; when strong enough to travel, was sent home on a furlough, and was sick for two years thereafter with disease of the bowels. The committee submit the following affidavits of disease of which he is now suffering:

Dr. C. M. Cannon, M. D., testifies:
"I was the family physician of Rev. William Brown during the conference years of 1888, 1889, and 1890, and during those three years he suffered from rheumatism and valvular disease of heart continually. He also had necrosis of the upper jawbone, which was caused by an injury in the late war. This kept up a constant discharge, rendering him unable many times to preach. He is totally unable to do any kind of work and is very poor. He will very soon be out of support, as the decay of the jaw will soon terminate his ministerial career, and, in my opinion, his life also."

"C. M. CANNON, M. D."

"ALDEN, MINN., February 1, 1892."

Dr. D. L. Kenyon, of Worthington, Minn., certifies that he has been acquainted with Rev. William Brown a year and a half; that he was his family physician; that he is suffering from a necrosis of the superior maxilla, resulting from a wound received from a revolver in the hands of a rebel the morning he was taken prisoner; that he is suffering from a catarrhal inflammation of the stomach and bowels, and has been ever since his prison life; that he is in very feeble health; that he can not perform manual labor. It is very probable that Rev. William Brown will not be able to continue his relation to the church as a preacher because of his feeble condition.

Hon. JAMES H. KYLE, United States Senator from South Dakota, who is personally acquainted with the petitioner and his condition and all the facts in the case, appeared before the committee and made the following statement:

"I desire to say that I have known Mr. Brown for several years. He is a Methodist minister, in poor circumstances, is frail in body and suffers almost continually from the effects of wounds received in the war. I know he is often prevented from doing his work for the above reason, and more frequently talks, when to do so causes great pain. Anyone even casually acquainted with Mr. Brown would know that physically he is unable to do any work."

Your committee, in view of all the circumstances in this case, recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment to the title, so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William Brown."

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I know this gentleman very well, and I know that the facts are as stated in the report.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY NEWMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1044) granting a pension to Mary Newman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Newman, blind and dependent daughter of Thomas G. Newman, now deceased, late of Company K, Ninth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, who was a pensioner under certificate No. 328003, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month during her life.

An amendment fixing the amount of the pension at $12 a month was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. I should like to hear the report.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the first paragraph of the report presents a very complete statement of the case, and the remainder of the report is made up of affidavits substantiating the statements.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman make a brief statement of the facts?

Mr. CROWTHER. I suggest that the reading of the first paragraph of the report, which contains the gist of the case, will give the desired information.

The first paragraph of the report was read, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Your petitioner, Mary Newman, of the city of Hannibal, Mo., respectfully represents that she is the only child of Thomas G. Newman, who was a private soldier in the late war, a member of Company K, Ninth Regiment Missouri State Cavalry, and that her father received an honorable discharge from the Army, and afterwards drew a pension of $8 per month, his pension certificate being No. 328003.

She further represents that her father, on May 15, 1864, died in the city of Hannibal and left her an orphan and entirely dependent upon charity. Your petitioner was born November 15, 1868, and has been almost entirely deprived of the use of her eyes since her birth, and at present there are no hopes of her recovering her sight, and she is unable to see to do anything save with difficulty; walk without someone leading her. And not only is your petitioner almost blind, but she is a confirmed invalid, having suffered for years.

And your petitioner prays that you will by special act grant her such pension as may in such case seem just to you in order that she may no longer be an object of charity, and that she may not be obliged to suffer want in addition to her other great affliction.

MARY NEWMAN,
By W. A. PARKER,
Attorney in Fact.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, all the facts in the case are contained in that paragraph.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

C. E. PHILBROOK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 739) granting an increase of pension to C. E. Philbrook.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of C. E. Philbrook, widow of Alvah Philbrook, major of Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $30 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension she now receives: Provided, That no claim for arrears shall be allowed by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill that ought to pass. It is clearly in the line of precedent. I desire, however, to ask this Committee of the Whole to consider another question in connection with this bill. There is a good deal of inquiry as to how long we are expected to stay in session under the order of the Committee on Rules. The Committee on Rules have very kindly given us two days for the consideration of this pension business, and as there is a probability of an early adjournment, it is not likely that they will be able to give us any more time during the remainder of the session. We have a long Calendar before us. As has been demonstrated by the cases that we have considered so far, most of the beneficiaries of these bills are old and helpless and needy. Gentlemen must have noticed that of the bills that we have taken up for consideration this morning two have been laid aside because the beneficiaries have died since the reports were made. I speak of these facts as showing the necessity of considering these pension bills as rapidly as possible.

Now, with the requirement that each report shall be read, a good deal of time is consumed upon each bill, and we get along rather slowly. The question is, What is reasonable, under the circumstances, as to the length of the day's session? On that point I desire to say to gentlemen that this is the anniversary of the battle of the Wilderness, and the soldiers of the Union stayed there all night. [Applause.] I am in favor of sitting here as long as gentlemen think it is reasonable to stay with us. The Committee on Invalid Pensions are very desirous, of course, that this committee shall continue in session as long as possible. Just what we may do—whether to remain in session continuously; whether to try to take a recess after a while until this evening; whether to have another recess reaching over until to-morrow morning—are questions which I hope we shall consider during the course of the next hour, so as to come to some conclusion as to what we shall do.

I think, Mr. Chairman, this is an extraordinary occasion. These cases come from almost every State of the Union. There are very few gentlemen on the floor who have not been before the Committee on Invalid Pensions or some of these other committees asking the consideration of their bills, and as many of these gentlemen have already expressed to members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions their willingness to stay here, if necessary, all night, I trust that patriotic consideration will induce gentlemen to do all that they can in behalf of these poor people whose bills are on this Calendar and who are generally old and helpless. I believe it is our patriotic duty to forego ordinary considerations of convenience and stand by this Calendar as long as it is reasonable for us to do so. [Applause.]

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions this question: If we sit here until 5 o'clock, then take a recess until 8 o'clock, then sit until half past 10 o'clock, then take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, will that be satisfactory to the committee? If so, I think it will be so to the House.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not care to meet that question now. As we get further along we can decide whether and when a recess shall be taken. I do not care to agree to anything so long in advance.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying this bill aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The question was decided in the affirmative.

NANCY CARSON BLUNT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 246) granting a pension to Nancy Carson Blunt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy Carson Blunt, widow of Maj. Gen. James G. Blunt, deceased, and pay her a pension at the rate of $75 per month from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of $30 per month she is now receiving.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only a word in explanation of this bill. General Blunt resided in Kansas when the war commenced. He did not wait until a commission was tendered to him before enlisting in the Army. He enlisted as a private soldier in the first company organized in his county. He was made lieutenant of that company, and on account of meritorious services was advanced rapidly from grade to grade until, in April, 1862, he was a brigadier-general. In April, 1863, he was a full major-general, and, so far as I have been able to ascertain, he was the only full major-general who rose to that position from the volunteer forces west of the Missouri River. He was a born soldier, and distinguished himself in every engagement in which he participated.

The claimant here, Mrs. Blunt, was the wife of his early manhood. She was his wife during the war. While he was in the field or on the march she was at home caring for her two children. She helped to bear the burden and hardships of the war. She is now well advanced in years, and I trust there will be no objection to granting this increase of her pension. The report is very short, and I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The committee to whom was referred the bill (S. 246) granting a pension of $75 per month to Nancy Carson Blunt, widow of Maj. Gen. James G. Blunt, in lieu of the pension she now receives, having carefully examined the facts and circumstances in evidence as well as the age and necessitous condition of the applicant, and the brilliant and magnificent record of General Blunt, earnestly recommend the passage of the bill as it came from the Senate, and respectfully adopt the report (S. 189) of the Senate Committee on Pensions.

[Senate Report No. 189, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

Mrs. Blunt is the widow of the late Maj. Gen. James G. Blunt. She is now drawing a pension of $30 per month.

General Blunt was commissioned as brigadier-general of volunteers April 14, 1862; a major-general of volunteers March 16, 1863, and he accepted the commission May 1, 1863.

Major-General Blunt went into the war at the beginning as a lieutenant of a Kansas regiment, and was advanced, by reason of meritorious service, through different grades to brigadier-general and major-general, and was mustered out of the service June 29, 1865.

General Blunt's services were of vital importance to the Western border, and his bravery and daring appear plainly enough in the official records of the war of the rebellion. He undoubtedly incurred a malady from exposure in the field that caused his death and left his widow without means.

His record is a brilliant one, as will appear from the appended statement furnished by the War Department, and your committee are of the opinion that it entitles the widow to a much higher rate of pension than she is now drawing.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "one hundred," in line 8, and substituting the words "seventy-five." As thus amended, the passage of the bill is recommended.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 10, 1896.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 8th instant, addressed to the Adjutant-General of the Army, and by him transmitted to-day to this office, to which the subject pertains, in which you request a statement showing the military and medical record of the late Maj. Gen. James G. Blunt, of United States Volunteers, for the use of your committee in the consideration of Senate bill No. 246, I am directed by the Secretary of War to inform you that the records show that James G. Blunt was commissioned brigadier-general of volunteers April 14, 1862, to rank from April 8, 1862; that he accepted the commission April 22, 1862; that he was commissioned major-general of volunteers March 16, 1863, to rank from November 29, 1862, and that he accepted the commission May 1, 1863.

He commanded the Department of Kansas from May 5, 1862, to some time in September, 1862; the district of Kansas, Department of Missouri, from September, 1862, to May, 1863; the district of the frontier, Department of Missouri, from May, 1863, to October, 1863; the district of the frontier, Department of Kansas, from February 28, 1864, to April 18, 1864; the district of upper Arkansas, from August 2, 1864, to October, 1864, and the district of south Kansas from October, 1864, to June 3, 1865.

He was on special service in Kansas and Arkansas from October, 1863, to February 28, 1864, and on duty at the headquarters, Department of Kansas, from April, 1864, to August, 1864.

On June 3, 1865, he was ordered home to await orders, and he was honorably mustered out of service under Special Orders No. 407, paragraph 37, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, dated June 29, 1865.

No medical record of this officer has been found.

Very respectfully,

F. C. AINSWORTH,

Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,

Chairman Committee on Pensions, United States Senate.

Mr. CROWTHER. I move to amend by striking out "seventy-five" and inserting "fifty," so as to make this pension $50 a month.

Mr. BRODERICK. I hope this motion will not prevail. Ever since the war closed it has been the practice to give to distinguished generals and their widows large pensions. A large number of the more prominent generals have been so pensioned, and among them some who never attained the distinction that General Blunt did. A great many widows of soldiers have received pensions of $75 and $100. General Blunt from the day the war commenced was in the service. From the firing of the first gun he was active, energetic, and heroic until the close of the war. And now when his widow, an aged lady, is left alone and without property, I say it is wrong to reduce her pension below the amount proposed in the bill.

This bill passed the Senate without a dissenting voice, and it ought to be concurred in here without any dissent. I regret very much that a gentleman on the committee should make this motion. It ought not to prevail, and I trust it will not.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment of my colleague from Missouri will not prevail. I do not believe when he reflects upon the matter that he will insist upon it himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas that the time has been exhausted in favor of the bill. The remaining time belongs to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CROWTHER. I will yield to my friend from Kansas one minute.

Mr. BLUE. I will simply use that one minute to say that this is the only man that I remember, and I think it is unquestionably true, the only man among the volunteers west of the Mississippi River who rose from the ranks to be a major-general. The unanimous report of the Committee is in favor of the action proposed here and the amount that the bill carries.

General Blunt was not of that character of general officer who was a mere general in name, but he went into the thickest of the fight in every contest in which he participated, and the long list of battles in which he took part entitled him to the rank and the promotion he received.

Mr. BRODERICK. And it should be remembered that he never lost a battle.

Mr. BLUE. And as my colleague says, he never lost a battle—

Mr. VAN HORN. And did not wait for the enemy to hunt him, but hunted them himself.

Mr. BLUE. Yes; that is correct Mr. Chairman. As stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VAN HORN], he did not wait for the enemy to hunt him.

While I have not participated in the action of the House in granting large pensions to the widows of distinguished soldiers, this is a case that I think is exceptional in its merits, and the pension of $75 per month should be granted her.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to agree to the statement of my colleague from Kansas in regard to the military record of Gen. James G. Blunt. But we are not considering now a pension for General Blunt. We are considering a pension for his widow; and it has been the rule that amendments have been made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to reduce the amounts to be allowed to the widows of general officers to the sum of $50 a month. We believe that that sum amply covers any case that comes before us. We think it large enough, and there should not be this invidious distinction between the amounts allowed to the widows of general officers and the amounts voted to the widows of private soldiers, many of whom ought to have been general officers themselves.

Mr. POOLE. The gentleman of course only speaks for himself and not for the Committee on Invalid Pensions. We made a unanimous report on the bill, fixing it at $75 a month; and I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CROWTHER, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected. [Applause.]

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH A. SARGENT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6111) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Sargent.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth A. Sargent, of Manchester, N. H., dependent mother of Capt. John B. Sargent, late of Company B, Tenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $17 per month.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6111) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Sargent, having carefully considered the same, respectfully report:

Elizabeth A. Sargent, mother of First Lieut. John B. Sargent, late of Company B, Tenth New Hampshire Volunteers, is 81 years of age, is possessed of no property whatever, is supported entirely by charity, and her physical condition is such that she can live but a short time.

Lieutenant Sargent was a brave and faithful soldier and officer, and was pensioned at the time of his death. He left a minor daughter, who drew a pension from her father's death until December 12, 1895, when she became 16 years of age. He left no widow.

The mother is now a widow, and has been since 1855. She was wholly dependent on her son for support, and during his lifetime he provided and cared for her as long as his health permitted him to earn the means with which to do so.

In view of the clearly established facts, your committee earnestly recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, my colleague, [Mr. SULLOWAY] in reporting this bill, has been led into some error, I presume, by the statements which have been made to him. This lady is now in a home for elderly people in Manchester, N. H., and is properly cared for, and her wants supplied.

The report says that this soldier left no widow. Perhaps in the legal sense of the word that is true; but as a matter of fact his wife, whom he married in 1863, is still living, and the daughter—of whom the report speaks as being 16 years old, is with her mother and is being educated, or an attempt is being made to educate her by her mother from the proceeds of her own unaided toil.

The facts are these: That after having lived with the soldier some twenty-odd years she, by reason of his vicious habits, was compelled to seek a divorce, which she obtained. The daughter has always remained with the mother. When the soldier died—he died in Pittsburg, Pa.—this woman, who was his wife during the war, sent for his remains, paid all of the expenses of the funeral, and interred them with honor in the city of Manchester, N. H.

I have introduced a bill (House bill No. 7536), which is now pending before the Pension Committee, to pension this woman, who procured a divorce not through any fault of her own, but entirely through the fault of the soldier.

Now, there is not a word to be said against this soldier's mother. She is an elderly lady, and is in the Home for the Support of Elderly Ladies in Manchester, and not in an almshouse, but in an establishment where she has good care. The question for the committee is whether, under these circumstances, the mother should be pensioned while the woman who is really his widow and supporting and educating his daughter, shall go without. That is all there is to the case. My own desire is that the case lie on the table until the other bill is reported.

Mr. HOOKER. Why not amend the bill by substituting the widow for the mother, if she is entitled to it?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The only question is on the fact of her having obtained a divorce only a year or two before the death of the soldier. I think my colleague will agree with me that this is a fair statement of the case.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the report cites the facts literally. This mother is cared for in an institution in the city where I live. She is absolutely without any means whatever. She has been a widow since 1855; and the son, this soldier, cared for her until he died, which event took place in Pittsburg, Pa., I think.

Now, this woman, who was once his wife, got a divorce from him years ago, and I say in this report that he left no widow. If she is his widow, then I do not understand the meaning of the word. He left no widow. He left this dependent mother, 80 years old, without a penny, and I submit to this House that the mother is the one who should receive this pension. His wife having abandoned him, having got a divorce and fled away from him, should not come in here to-day, years after that happened, and deprive the mother, whom he cared for so long as he had any means, whom he cared for in his early boyhood, of the privilege and the right which she has under the law, to take this pension of $17, he being a first lieutenant. That is exactly the situation here, gentlemen, and I submit that the mother should have a pension.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, let me say that this man's wife never fled away from him, but that he went into the West, away from her. Now, I move to strike out the words "Elizabeth A. Sargent, dependent mother," and to insert the words "Fannie J. Sargent, widow."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "Elizabeth A. Sargent, of Manchester, N. H., dependent mother," and insert in lieu thereof the words "Fannie J. Sargent, widow."

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a point of order against that amendment. I do not think that on a private pension bill it is in order to strike out one beneficiary and insert another. It seems to me the amendment is out of order. We have no jurisdiction to do anything of the kind.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a novel point, but the Chair is of the opinion that it would be germane to the question of pensioning the relative of this deceased soldier and that the committee could strike out the name of a wife and insert children.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from New Hampshire say there was a widow in this case?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN], that there is a woman who married this soldier in 1863. She was his wife during the war. In 1885 she obtained a divorce from him on account of his vicious habits. At that time he had not been supporting her, but she had been supporting him for some time. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

The amendment of Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire was rejected. The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH NEW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1051) granting a pension to Elizabeth New, widow of Jethrow New. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth New, widow of Jethrow New, late captain of Company D, Twenty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, of the war of 1861.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. KIRKPATRICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1051) granting a pension to Elizabeth New, widow of Jethrow New, report as follows:

The facts in this case are truly and correctly set forth in the report (No. 54) of the Senate Committee on Pensions, and to avoid repetition the same is adopted as the report of this committee.

Your committee therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The following is the Senate report:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1051) granting a pension to Elizabeth New, have examined the same and report:

"A similar bill was introduced in the Fifty-third Congress, referred to the Pension Committee, reported favorably, and passed the Senate.

"The facts are as follows:

"Jethrow New was an officer, serving successfully both as Lieutenant and captain of Company D, in the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry in the war of 1861. He was mustered into the service September 2, 1861, and was discharged therefrom November 24, 1862, for very serious disabilities incurred in the service.

"He was a pensioner of the United States from November 21, 1862, the day after his discharge from the service, until April 9, 1881, at the rate of $7.50 per month, and from the latter date to the time of his death at the rate of $15 per month. He died very suddenly at his home at Green Oak, Fulton County, Ind., on the 27th day of February, 1887.

"The claim of his widow, Elizabeth New, in whose behalf this petition was filed, has been rejected by the Pension Bureau upon the ground of want of proof that his death was due to the disabilities incurred by him in the military service aforesaid. The husband was pensioned, as appears from the records, for chronic bronchitis, chronic diarrhea, loss of sight of the left eye, and special results. The following is a description of his condition as given by the board of examining surgeons at Lafayette, Ind., October 26, 1881:

"Total blindness of the left eye; right lateral curvature of the spine; epiglottitis paralyzed and displaced. Perhaps no man living has so gnarled a spine. From it there is perfect paralysis of the epiglottis. It stands wide open, like an abandoned old gate on its rusty hinges, never to be closed. Of course deglutition is impossible, and he has several times nearly suffocated in attempting to swallow solid food."

"The condition of the deceased husband is shown by the record to have continued unchanged up to the time of his death, and besides the medical testimony there is evidence in the record of his friends and neighbors—among others, his nearest neighbor—to the fact that he remained totally unable to perform any kind of manual labor whatever; that he was unable for a year before his death to take anything but liquid food; that he was extremely thin in flesh, very feeble, and debilitated; that he was subject to attacks of wheezing spasms of coughing and smothering.

"This evidence also shows that his death was very sudden; that no physician or other person was present immediately at the time; that he was found dead within twenty minutes after he had spoken to a neighbor about his helpless condition. The committee is of the opinion that the cause of his death was without doubt the disabilities aforementioned, incurred by him in the military service. The applicant, his widow aforesaid, is 72 years old, in very moderate circumstances, and we therefore return herewith and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WALLACE M'GRATH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 247) granting a pension to Wallace McGrath.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Wallace McGrath, late lieutenant and aid-de-camp of the Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers, and grant him a pension at the rate of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. KIRKPATRICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 247) granting a pension to Wallace McGrath, submit the following report:

The facts in this case are fully set forth in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, and to avoid repetition the same is referred to and adopted by this committee. Your committee therefore reports the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The Senate report is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 247) entitled 'A bill granting a pension to Wallace McGrath,' have examined the same and report:

"That on the 1st day of August, 1890, he was granted a pension of $12 per month for locomotor ataxia, which sum he claims is not nearly commensurate with the degree of his disability.

"It appears from the evidence that he enlisted on the 23d day of September, 1861, and served until January 27, 1865. That on the 27th day of May, 1864, near Altoona, Ga., while in actual service, he was wounded in the breast; that at such time he was standing on a steep sidehill, and from the force of the blow received he was thrown violently part way down the hill and against a tree, being struck in the small of the back. He suffered severely from his wound and the injury thus received.

"At the time of his enlistment he was a strong, able-bodied man. From and after his wound, received on May 27, 1864, he suffered from pain in the back and was from that time forward unable to stoop over or pick up anything on the ground or floor without suffering great pain. That his injury increased from such time forward until he became unable to walk without the assistance of crutches and a nurse to attend him; that for the last four years or more he has been wholly unable to go about without assistance, and is wholly disabled as a result of the injury so received as aforesaid.

"The writer of this report is personally acquainted with the applicant, knows him well, and has seen him frequently within the last four years at the Soldiers' Home at Leavenworth, Kans., and from his own personal knowledge believes his injury to be permanent. And as further evidence of his entire disability your committee begs leave to submit a letter from Col. Andrew J. Smith, governor of the National Military Home, Leavenworth, Kans., dated December 27, 1895, and addressed to Hon. LUCIEN BAKER, which is hereto attached, marked Exhibit A, and which is made a part of this report.

"That the pension which the applicant now receives for and on account of locomotor ataxia is wholly inadequate to his injury; that under the law for permanent disability he would probably be entitled to $72 per month, but in order to avoid any question we think it would be well to grant him the intermediate rate of $50 per month, as provided by the act of Congress of July 14, 1892, this rate being granted for a disability in such a degree as to require the frequent and periodical, though not regular and constant, personal aid and attendance of another person.

"Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the word 'volunteers,' in the seventh line, and adding in lieu thereof the words 'and grant him a pension at the rate of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.' As thus amended we recommend the passage of the bill."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ROYSE. Mr. Chairman, is there not an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the amendment referred to in the report is a Senate amendment, which was acted upon in the Senate.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. ANNIE E. COLWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1931) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Annie E. Colwell.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that Senate bill 2514 be substituted in the place of this bill. The two bills are exactly alike.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place on the pension rolls the name of Mrs. Annie E. Colwell, widow of Thomas W. Colwell, sergeant of Company C, Second Regiment Ohio Infantry, Mexican war, and first sergeant of Company H, Fifth Ohio Cavalry, war of 1861 to 1865, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension she now receives.

The report (by Mr. LAYTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1931) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Annie E. Colwell, having examined the evidence in the case, report:

Thomas W. Colwell, husband of claimant, served in Company C, Second Ohio Volunteers, in the Mexican war, from August 10, 1847, to July 25, 1848, and in Company H, Fifth Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, from October 31, 1861, to November 29, 1864, when he was mustered out as first sergeant, having held that rank about two and one-half years. He was killed by accident in 1867, never having applied for a pension. He was married to the claimant in 1848, and she has never remarried since his death. She is now pensioned at $8 as a Mexican war widow. She never applied for pension on account of her husband's services in the war of the rebellion.

She is now 72 years of age. She is now totally blind, and has been so for over twenty-one years last past.

She has no property or income whatever except her pension of $8 per month, and with that exception is wholly dependent upon friends for her support, having no relatives living. She is of excellent character.

To recapitulate: Her husband served through two wars and was never pensioned. She was his wife during the war of the rebellion, is 72 years old, totally blind, destitute of property, without relatives on whom to call for aid, and with absolutely nothing except her pension of $8 per month, which is altogether inadequate to supply her needs in her age, blindness, and helplessness.

In view of these facts, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] objects.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a case where the husband was killed by accident in 1867, and if we pension his widow we determine that his death was due to army service.

Mr. TAFT. She is already pensioned for $8.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Subsequently,

Mr. TAFT said: Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to recur to the bill H. R. 1931. There was a mistake in regard to it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] did not intend to object to substituting the Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] asks unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 1931, and to substitute therefor the bill S. 2514. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly, the bill S. 2514 was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

By unanimous consent (on motion of Mr. TAFT), the bill H. R. 1931 was ordered to lie on the table.

MRS. MARY L. ALESHIRE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4724) to increase the pension of Mrs. Mary L. Aleshire.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of Mary L. Aleshire, widow of Capt. Charles C. Aleshire, late of the Eighteenth Ohio Battery Light Artillery, be, and the same is hereby, increased from $8 per month to $20 per month; and the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place her name on the roll at the rate of $20 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary L. Aleshire, widow of Capt. Charles C.

Aleshire, late of the Eighteenth Battery Ohio Light Artillery, on the pension roll and pay her a pension of $20 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving."

Mr. SPALDING. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. LAYTON) was read, as follows:

The soldier served as captain of Company G, Eighteenth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, from May 21, 1861, to August 23, 1861, and as captain of Eighteenth Ohio Battery Light Artillery from September 13, 1862, to June 29, 1865. He was appointed second lieutenant in the Third United States Artillery August 8, 1866, promoted to first lieutenant February 5, 1867, and served faithfully and efficiently until November 15, 1870, when he was honorably discharged, after a total period of service of seven years and four months.

Captain Aleshire has a hospital record of treatment for "bubonocoele," or inguinal hernia, from December 23, 1863, to January 20, 1867. He applied for pension July 31, 1885, and was pensioned at $20 per month from that date for "left inguinal hernia," after special examination.

Widow was married to soldier June 6, 1867, and was pensioned under act of June 27, 1890, at $8 per month from July 31, 1890, the soldier having died April 23, 1889.

The immediate cause of the death of the soldier is not shown by the evidence on file in the Pension Bureau. The claimant files an affidavit with the committee in which she alleges:

"My husband was a great sufferer for long years prior to his death, and the services of a physician were frequently, it might be said almost constantly, needed to mitigate and alleviate his sufferings. He had bronchitis and was troubled with a bad rupture, which was so difficult to control that it frequently baffled the skill of the best physicians, which caused him constant and often intense pain, and which I believe was the primary cause of his death."

Dr. James Johnston certifies to Captain Aleshire's great suffering from hernia, and of his frequently consulting this physician professionally for his trouble after his discharge from the service; that the physician often examined him and fitted a truss on him at different times, and that he had a very bad rupture, which was very hard to control by a perfect-fitting truss, and that he knows that Captain Aleshire suffered a great deal from this cause; that from the nature of his disabilities and his general physical condition it is fair to presume that the remote cause of his death was due to disease contracted in the service.

Col. John L. Vance, who was a gallant soldier and an ex-member of Congress, certifies and states that his relations with Captain Aleshire, from his early boyhood until his first enlistment, and from the time of his leaving the service until his death, were intimate; that he frequently heard him complain of suffering intensely from troubles originating while in the volunteer service, and particularly did he suffer, and was incalculably prostrated at times, from rupture. He believed and was advised, and those of his friends acquainted with his sufferings believed, that he was broken down in health by the service, and, "in my judgment," Colonel Vance says, "his death was the result thereof."

Mrs. Aleshire is advanced in years, in feeble health, and has no property or means of support except the pension she is now receiving.

From the facts presented, your committee believe the bill is meritorious, and therefore earnestly recommend its passage with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary L. Aleshire, widow of Capt. Charles C. Aleshire, late of the Eighteenth Battery Ohio Light Artillery, on the pension roll and pay her a pension of $20 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. SARAH MARTIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4994) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah Martin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Sarah Martin, widow of Jonas Martin, late private Company F, Twenty-ninth Michigan Infantry, the pension granted her under the act of June 27, 1890, by certificate No. 21127, without any deduction on account of pension previously granted her January 16, 1873, by the same certificate number.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, having carefully examined all the evidence relating to the bill (H. R. 4994) for the relief of Sarah Martin, report as follows:

Jonas Martin, who was the husband of the beneficiary of this bill, enlisted September 3, 1864, in Company F, Twenty-ninth Michigan Volunteers, and was mustered out June 17, 1865. He was treated while in service, as shown by the records, for chronic rheumatism and chronic bronchitis. He died in 1874 from disease of lungs, and his widow filed a claim for pension under the general law, which was allowed, and she drew pension until 1886, when her name was dropped from the rolls on the ground that it had been disclosed by a special examination that the disease of lungs from which the soldier died was not incurred in the service, but existed prior to his enlistment.

On July 31, 1890, the widow filed a claim under the act of June 27, 1890, which was allowed, and under departmental decision of September 12, 1891, that pension should not be withheld. She was again paid pension until April, 1894, when a reissue was made to withhold payment to recover what had been paid her under the general law. In March, 1895, another reissue was made to recover, it appearing that the reissue made in 1894 was not broad enough, to recover all that she had received. These are the facts in the case. The object of this bill is to prevent the Pension Office from withholding from this widow the pension which has been allowed her under the act of June 27, 1890, and which, as shown by the evidence in the case, she needs for her support. The Government can not withhold this widow's pension without violating the principle laid down in sections 4734 and 4747, Revised Statutes, which are as follows:

"SEC. 4734. The provisions of law which allow the withholding of the compensation of any person who is in arrears shall not be construed to authorize the pension of any pensioner of the United States to be withheld.

"SEC. 4747. No sum of money due, or to become due, to any pensioner shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, whether the same remains with the Pension Office or any officer or agent thereof, or is in course of transmission to the pensioner entitled thereto, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of such pensioner."

Your committee are of opinion that the pension should not be withheld, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELMIRA E. DUSTIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3578) granting a pension to Elmira E. Dustin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elmira E. Dustin, of Sycamore, widow of Gen. Daniel Dustin, late colonel of One hundred and fifth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $50 per month.

Mr. SPALDING. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. Wood) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3578) granting a pension to Elmira E. Dustin, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case is the widow of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Daniel Dustin. She was soldier's wife before and during the war. She is now past 70 years of age, and has no means or property whatever except a house and lot in the small village of Sycamore, Ill., where she lives, and which is of no more value than $1,200, and the rental value of which is not more than $8 per month.

Daniel Dustin enlisted September 18, 1861, and was mustered as captain of Company L, Eighth Illinois Cavalry. He was promoted major of same regiment January 8, 1862. His resignation was accepted September 8, 1862, to enable him to accept promotion as colonel of One hundred and fifth Illinois Infantry.

He was mustered as colonel of One hundred and fifth Illinois Volunteers September 9, 1862. October 31, 1864, he was in command of Third Division, Twentieth Army Corps; December 31, 1864, to April 30, 1865, he was in command of Second Brigade, Third Division, Twentieth Army Corps. He was mustered out as colonel of One hundred and fifth Illinois Infantry. He was brevetted brigadier-general of volunteers March 16, 1865, for gallant services in the campaigns in Georgia and South Carolina.

In view of the distinguished services of this officer and the need of his widow, her age and feebleness, the committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FREDERICK GRAMM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 61) for the relief of Frederick Gramm.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to so amend and correct the military record of Frederick Gramm, late a private soldier in Company B of the Fifty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, as to remove the charges of desertion, and to show that said Gramm was captured by the enemy on June 25, 1862, and paroled on June 28, 1862, and permitted by Major-General Grant, commanding the district, to pass from Memphis, Tenn., to his home in Ohio to remain until notified of his exchange or otherwise ordered, and duly exchanged by General Orders, No. 10, War Department, January 10, 1863, and ordered to return to his command, and absent without leave until March 5, 1863, when he enlisted in the Navy of the United States for two years, served faithfully, and was honorably discharged at the expiration of his service: Provided, That no pay or allowances shall become due by reason of this act.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I would like the report to be read in this case.

The report (by Mr. BISHOP) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 61) entitled "A bill for the relief of Frederick Gramm, of Ironton, Ohio," beg leave to submit the following report:

This is a bill providing for the removal of the charge of desertion from the military record of Frederick Gramm, late a private in Company B, Fifty-sixth Ohio Volunteers, and for granting such soldier an honorable discharge. A bill identical in form with such House bill passed the Senate in the Fifty-fourth Congress and has been referred to your committee.

Your committee would therefore recommend that such House bill do lie on the table, and that such Senate bill do pass.

The facts upon which such soldier relies for the favorable consideration of the bill for his relief, which have been found to be true by your committee, are as follows:

The soldier enlisted in Company B, Fifty-sixth Ohio Volunteers, November 13, 1861, to serve three years. He was captured June 25, 1862; paroled June 28, 1862; was permitted by General Grant, his commanding officer, to go to his home in Ohio to await his exchange. He was exchanged in January, 1863, and was notified only by general orders published in the newspapers.

After such exchange, in March, 1863, he enlisted in the gunboat service of the Mississippi for two years, and was honorably discharged from such gunboat service at the expiration of such enlistment.

The only mistake made by such soldier was in not reporting to his regiment and getting a transfer from his regiment to the gunboat service. He received no bounty by reason of such reenlistment, but did receive a slightly increased pay. By reason of such reenlistment such soldier was marked on his company rolls as a deserter.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish the further reading of the report. I desire to say that it appears that this man received no bounty by reason of such reenlistment, but he did receive slightly increased pay. It seems to me that this is in the nature of a bounty. Here is another case of a deserter, which I think has no merit in it; and I move that the bill be laid aside with an unfavorable report.

Mr. FENTON. I hope that motion will not prevail. This is a very good case, and only shows an indiscretion of a boy who served during the war. He has an excellent record, and it was only an error which he made by lack of knowledge of military law. It is a clear case and a good one, and the boy served throughout the war.

The question was taken on the motion to report the bill with an unfavorable recommendation, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT. I object.

The question was taken on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 109, noes 1.

So the motion was agreed to. [Applause.]

PATSEY E. BROADDUS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4481) granting an increase of pension to Patsey E. Broaddus, of Marion, Kans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase and pay a pension of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by her, to Patsey E. Broaddus, of Marion, State of Kansas, widow of Green B. F. Broaddus, late first lieutenant of Company H, First Kentucky Cavalry, Mexican war, and major Eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry in the late war.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4481) granting an increase of pension to Patsey E. Broaddus, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

Mrs. Broaddus is the widow of Green B. F. Broaddus, who served from June 8, 1846, to June 8, 1847, as first lieutenant Company H, First Kentucky Cavalry, in the war with Mexico. He also served from January 15, 1862, to April 26, 1863, as major of the Eighth Kentucky Infantry in the war of the rebellion. He was discharged from the last service because of disease of eyes originating in the line of his duty.

Major Broaddus died September 24, 1875, and his widow made application for a pension, declaring that his death was caused by a congestive chill resulting from disease contracted in the service. Much testimony was furnished in support of her claim, but the same was not accepted as sufficient by the Pension Bureau, and the claim was rejected. She subsequently filed an application under the act of January 29, 1887, based upon his Mexican war service, and the same was allowed at $8 per month, which sum she is now receiving.

The testimony accompanying the bill shows that the claimant has no property save a small dwelling house and some unproductive farm land near Florence, Kans., and that she is without income or means upon which she can depend for a support. It is further shown that she has been a confirmed cripple for thirty-five years, and that she is unable to walk or perform manual labor, and requires the constant attendance of another person; her muscles are wasted away and shrunken, and her limbs drawn at right angles, and her condition is such that she has to be as carefully attended as a child.

The facts are shown by the testimony of Dr. T. J. Cowry, Josephine Burton, J. R. McLean, and numerous other citizens of Marion County, Kans.

In view of the valuable service of the soldier in two wars, and in the light of the helpless condition of the widow, your committee are constrained to recommend the passage of the bill, believing as we do that the circumstances are such that no dangerous precedent will be established by favorable action in this case.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the pension provided for in this bill?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Twenty dollars a month. She is as helpless as a child, and she only gets $8 a month.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill provides for $20 a month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY MARTIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1890) granting a pension to Mary Martin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mary Martin, widow of James Martin, late of Company C, One hundred and twenty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. SPALDING. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. McCLELLAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1890) granting a pension of $12 per month to Mary Martin, widow of James Martin, late of Company C, One hundred and twenty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, having carefully considered the same, respectfully report as follows:

The claimant was married to the soldier in 1853, and has never since been married. The soldier was mustered into the service August 2, 1862, and served with his command until September 10, 1863, when he was captured at Bealton. He was held a prisoner until November 20, 1864; was then paroled and sent to Camp Parole, Annapolis. On December 4, 1864, he received a furlough for thirty days, and returned home to visit his wife and children, who lived at Troy, N. Y. A few days before the expiration of his furlough he left his home to return to Camp Parole. He did not reach there, and since that time he has not been seen nor heard from by the claimant or by any member of his family, although diligent inquiry was made to ascertain his fate.

The claimant was left with three small children, whom she brought up by her own unaided efforts. She is now nearly 70 years of age, in bad health, lame, and decrepit, unable to work, without means, and in want of the necessities of life. She has twice applied for a pension—once under the general law and once under the act of June 27, 1890. Her claim under the general law was rejected for want of evidence showing her husband's death. Her claim under the new law was rejected on the ground that the soldier did not receive an honorable discharge.

Your committee think the circumstances raise a presumption that the soldier was prevented by some accident or foul play from rejoining his command, and that his death must likewise be presumed.

They recommend that the bill pass with the following amendment:

In line 5 strike out the word "of," between the words "late" and "company," and insert in lieu thereof the words "a private in."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELVIN BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2373) granting a pension to Elvin Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elvin Brown, a private of Capt. George A. H. Blake's Company A, Second Regiment of United States Dragoons, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month from the passage of this act, in lieu of that which he now receives.

Mr. SPALDING. The report.

The report (by Mr. HARDY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2373) granting a pension to Elvin Brown, have considered the same and report:

The claimant was a private in Company A, Second United States Dragoons, and served from August 13, 1839, to August 13, 1844. During this period he participated in the Florida Indian war, and he has been allowed the pension of $8 per month provided by the act of July 27, 1892, for veterans of that war.

The testimony accompanying the bill shows that Mr. Brown is now about 76 years old, impoverished financially, and so disabled by old age and disease of the heart as to be unable to do anything toward securing a comfortable support. He has a small property in the vicinity of Terre Haute, Ind., which is mortgaged for nearly its full value, and he has to depend for the necessities of life upon his small pension.

In view of the facts stated above the passage of the bill is recommended, with an amendment inserting the initial "J." in the claimant's name; so as to read "Elvin J. Brown."

Mr. DINGLEY. What pension is allowed by the bill as amended?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty dollars.

Mr. DINGLEY. This is a case to increase the pension of a Mexican soldier simply on account of his old age?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. He is 76 years old and very impoverished.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suppose the most of these Mexican pensioners are about that age.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. There are several precedents for this. The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MATILDA GRESHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 616) granting a pension to Matilda Gresham, widow of the late Walter Q. Gresham, at the rate of $100 per month.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Matilda Gresham, widow of Walter Q. Gresham, late a brigadier-general, at the rate of $100 per month.

Mr. SPALDING. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. WOOD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 616) granting a pension to Matilda Gresham, widow of the late Walter Q. Gresham, at the rate of $100 per month, beg leave to report:

Matilda Gresham was the wife of Gen. Walter Q. Gresham before and during the war, and remains his widow since his death.

The services of General Gresham in military and civil life are well known. From the best information the committee can get Mrs. Gresham is in feeble health. She has a small farm in southern Indiana, left by the General, which does not yield income sufficient for her support.

In view of the meritorious service of General Gresham and the need of his widow, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the words "one hundred" be stricken out and the word "fifty" inserted in lieu thereof.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I hope that amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 strike out the words "one hundred" and insert the word "fifty"; so as to read "at the rate of $50 per month."

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, this is one exception that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has made in granting $100 pension. I trust that this amount will not be reduced. This is the first bill that I have advocated this session at this amount for a widow. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I believe this is an exceptional case, and I shall not detain the committee. The history of Walter Q. Gresham is too well known in this country. His distinguished services as a soldier were not exceeded by those of any other general of his rank in the Army. His distinguished civil service, dying in the harness as he did as Secretary of State during this Administration, and all these matters, point us to his history and make it an exceptional case. I believe that this House and this committee owes it to itself and to the memory of General Gresham to give this lady a pension in keeping with the rank of her husband and his great attainments in this country. His friends were legion this country over. While this is an exceptional case, as I admit, I believe that it is a case where the pension ought to stand at $100 a month.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, with due deference to the distinguished gentleman who presides over the Invalid Pensions Committee, I am compelled to disagree with him upon this question. There is no reason why we should give the widow of General Gresham any more than we give the widow of any other distinguished general. There is no reason why we should give her any more than we give to the widows of other distinguished soldiers who fought during the war. These widows are upon a common level as to their title to pensions, and these distinctions should not exist to such an extent as they have existed in the passage of many bills in this House. So far as the distinguished services of General Gresham are concerned, I agree with the gentleman, but we are not legislating for General Gresham; we are legislating for his widow, and it must be remembered that there are thousands of the widows of soldiers just as much entitled to pension as the widow of General Gresham.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "seventy-five," and in that connection I wish to say this: A few moments ago, by the margin of one vote, the pension of the widow of General Blunt was fixed at $75 a month. I have nothing to say in disparagement of General Gresham, but he certainly was very generously remembered by this Government, and if his widow at this time is not well provided for it would seem that there must have been some improvident management somewhere. General Gresham was upon the pay roll of this nation almost incessantly, at a large salary, from the time he left the Army until his death, and it seems to me that $75 is a very generous pension for his widow under the circumstances.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I hope neither the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CROWTHER] nor the motion made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] will prevail. The Committee on Invalid Pensions have brought in a bill authorizing the granting of a pension of $100 per month to the widow of General Gresham.

Mr. PICKLER. The bill has already passed the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Yes; the Committee on Invalid Pensions have recommended the passage of this bill and it has already passed the Senate, and in view of all the past services and relations of General Gresham which have been referred to, and which must always be referred to in a complimentary manner, if the truth is told, relations as a soldier, as a judicial officer, and in the high position of Secretary of State, we are assured that there is something due to the widow whom he has left, as is stated here, in almost destitute circumstances. I think it would be unjust, unkind, unbecoming the feelings heretofore exhibited in this body with respect to the granting of pensions, to reduce in any measure the amount reported from the Invalid Pensions Committee, and I hope this bill will pass as it has been reported to the House, at the rate of $100 per month.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if the question were entirely a new one as to the granting of pensions of $100 a month or $2,000 a year to the widows of eminent commanders in the late war, I might have a different opinion from what I now have, but, without having an intimate knowledge, I have yet a general knowledge of the condition of the family of General Gresham, and having also knowledge of his eminent services as a soldier in the late war, in view of these facts and conditions, it is not in my heart to refuse to vote for this bill. I am inclined to think that we will do but simple and exact justice in the line of precedent if we pass this bill, and my heart and my judgment both concur in favor of it. [Applause.]

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, if the time of the committee allowed I might say some things that would help to convince anybody here who doubts the propriety of passing this bill as it has come to us from the Senate, but I shall not take up time in that way. I do sincerely hope that both the amendments proposed will be voted down, and that we shall give to this widow such a pension as is provided in the Senate bill. It is true that the husband of this lady did draw a salary from the Government, but the salaries paid by the Government of the United States are not such as to enrich anybody, and although he may have drawn a salary for a long time, he rendered the fullest service for every dollar he received. I repeat that I sincerely hope both these amendments will be voted down and that the bill as it came from the Senate will be cordially and promptly passed by the House. [Applause.]

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, it is to be remembered that we are not pensioning the widow of General Gresham for any of his distinguished civil services. The pension can be paid only for his services as a military officer. Now, the highest rank that General Gresham held during the war was that of brigadier-general—major-general by brevet. This very day, in the case of another distinguished Union officer, General Blunt, we have cut down the pension to $75 a month. Yet he was a full major-general. How can we, in justice, vote to the widow of General Gresham any more than we vote to the widow of General Blunt? How, indeed, can we in justice vote as much, because General Blunt had higher rank than General Gresham? I appeal to members to act upon this case as they would act upon any other case, on the basis of the military services rendered, and to do even and exact justice to this widow and all the other widows of officers of the same rank.

The amendment of Mr. BLUE to the amendment offered by Mr. CROWTHER was rejected.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CROWTHER, the Chairman declared the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. CROWTHER. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, yeas 62; so the amendment was rejected.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARY A. FREEMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2189) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Freeman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Mary A. Freeman, widow of Andrew V. Pritchard, late a private in Company H, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Mexican war, from and after the passage of this act, at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I stated about an hour ago that the Committee on Rules had given us two days for the consideration of these bills; that this was the anniversary of the battle of the Wilderness; that we were getting on slowly in the disposition of this Calendar owing to the fact of every report being read; that most of these bills were cases of persons who are old and helpless; that among the bills reached to-day were two in which the beneficiaries have already died; and I asked and urged the Committee of the Whole to continue in session for a reasonable portion of this legislative day. I understand the Committee on Rules did not understand the matter as I do; that they did not suppose we would continue in session to-day longer than till the ordinary hour of adjournment. I did not so understand the rule, and clearly the rule makes no such limit; and I think it is with this Committee of the Whole or the House to determine the matter.

My opinion is that with these 400 cases on the Calendar, and with only these two days set apart for their consideration, we might take a recess (if the House should think best) until about 8 o'clock, sit for a reasonable time this evening, and then take a recess until probably 9 or 10 o'clock in the morning, accomplishing what we could by 12 o'clock to-morrow. [Cries of "That is right!" and applause.] If we do this, and if we have the other day that the Committee on Rules has given us, and if we do at our Friday night sessions as much as we ordinarily do, we shall not be able to get through more than two-thirds of these bills on the Calendar. I fear there would be a third of these cases which would go unconsidered.

My statement a while ago in regard to this matter was made before I knew that there was any difference of opinion on this question. I think that under the circumstances I shall, after the pending bill is disposed of, move that the committee rise in order that the House may determine whether we shall take a recess. I do not want to press my individual opinions contrary to the wishes of the House, but certainly, as the Invalid Pensions Committee and the other committees reporting these bills have worked upon them industriously, and as the persons for whose relief the bills are reported are deserving, as many of them are old and helpless, and as from day to day some are dying, it does seem to me that we ought to forego some considerations of convenience and stay by this Calendar. That is my opinion.

The Committee on Rules might safely trust this House to take care of pension legislation, and if a majority of this committee desire to go on with this calendar of private pensions, as I am sure they do, they should be allowed to do so without obstruction by the Committee on Rules.

The Committee on Rules does not now desire to stand by the rule reported, but wants to give it an interpretation that defeats private pension legislation by restricting the hours this committee shall sit.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, the original proposition made to the Committee on Rules was that there should be an additional night in each week assigned for the consideration of legislation of this kind. It was thought best that we should not adopt any such rule, because it might be held to be a precedent at subsequent sessions of Congress when no such rule would really be necessary. It was therefore determined, with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that these two days should be set apart—Wednesday of this week and Wednesday of next week—for the consideration of pension cases and such other cases as are in order on Friday evenings. It never entered the mind of any member of the Committee on Rules—and I venture to say it did not enter the mind of the gentleman who presides over the Committee on Invalid Pensions—that the day mentioned in the rule would be an exceptional day. It was supposed that we should proceed under the provisions of the rule until the regular hour and then adjourn, as we are in the habit of doing when we consider other legislation.

Now, I submit to the committee whether or not it is wise for us to make legislation of this kind exceptional—whether it is wise for us to continue this legislative day for the consideration of such bills as we have been considering, when we accord to no other kind of legislation such exceptional opportunities. Let me call the attention of the committee to the fact that we have passed to-day, I suppose, in the neighborhood of 60 bills.

A MEMBER. Seventy bills.

Mr. DALZELL. It is suggested that we have passed somewhere in the neighborhood of 70 bills. Now, that is a remarkably good day's work. And gentlemen must bear in mind that all these bills have to be disposed of in the House. We are operating to-day, not under the ordinary rules of the House, but under a special rule; and without expressing any decided opinion on the subject, I suggest whether or not these bills will be in order for consideration in the House except on the second day mentioned in this special rule—to wit, next Wednesday. And if that be so, then all of next Wednesday will be occupied in disposing of the bills already passed by the Committee of the Whole.

Now, I submit whether or not the record that we make would not be a more creditable record in the interest of the soldier, in the interest of the friends of this kind of legislation, if we adjourn as we ordinarily do at the usual time, and let the bills take their regular course. I am not opposed to this character of legislation. On the contrary, I have favored putting this proposition through—

Mr. HEPBURN. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Did you not expect that under this rule this class of bills now on the Calendar would be disposed of in the two days?

Mr. DALZELL. No; I can not say that we did. In fact, a very little calculation would demonstrate mathematically the fact that that could not be done.

Mr. HEPBURN. Could it not be done by extending the legislative day?

Mr. DALZELL. If the legislative day is extended you could not pass the bills on the Calendar through the House and the Senate.

Mr. PICKLER. Why?

Mr. DALZELL. Because you have not the time. You would not have the opportunity.

Mr. PICKLER. I am informed that they pass on Tuesdays every pension bill on the Senate Calendar.

Mr. DALZELL. If you extend the legislative day, you can not pass the bills that you will dispose of in Committee of the Whole through the House. That is the point.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, there is another session of this Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. I did not get at quite the exact language he used, and do not understand one thing to which he has referred. We are now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. These bills must be reported back to the House.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, you say that they can only be considered in the House on Wednesday, when this business comes up again?

Mr. DALZELL. I should take it that they could only be considered on the day that this special order would operate again. We are not operating under the ordinary rules of the House to-day, but under a special order.

Mr. PICKLER. But these are the same bills that are considered on Friday nights; we are considering them exactly in the same way, and I think they would be in order on Fridays, just as the other bills would be.

Mr. DALZELL. That would be undoubtedly true if you were not operating under a special rule.

Mr. PICKLER. But the special order declares what bills are in order, and that they shall be considered just as at the Friday night sessions.

Mr. DALZELL. I have said all I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, on this subject. I submit, therefore, especially to the friends of this kind of legislation, whether it is not the wisest thing we can do to pursue our usual course with this business, just as we do with all other matters. It is, of course, for the House to determine.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, that simply means that the great mass of pension bills on this Calendar will simply be reported to the House and nothing more. You can not pass 400 bills as you pass ordinary bills from the committees of the House. This presents an entirely different case, and needs no argument.

The gentleman talks of the number of bills passed in different Congresses. Why, I remember in the Fifty-first Congress when in one evening we passed 45 bills; and I never heard any complaint about that.

Now, the question, Mr. Chairman; and I am sorry that there is a misunderstanding between myself and the Committee on Rules. The matter came up as the gentleman has stated it. I asked for Monday night, about three weeks ago, in addition to the usual Friday night sessions. It was then thought better that we should have two day sessions instead of night sessions for this business. That suited me—perhaps I suggested that myself. But that was about three weeks ago, and three Monday nights have gone by since that time. If we had been given Monday nights at the time I asked it to the end of the session it would have given us more time than is now provided, even if we stay until noon to-morrow.

Now, I never had an idea, and never had such an opinion, it never entered my mind, that the Committee on Rules had reported the rule here with a string to it. I noticed—I do not know how it came there—but I noticed in the newspapers this morning a statement in regard to this pension matter, that probably there would be a continuous session under this rule; and I heard no objection to it until about 4 o'clock, when I made a statement that keeping in session here to consider these bills to-night was a very good and proper way to honor the anniversary of the battle of the Wilderness.

Of course I do not know what gentlemen mean—I do not know what they are driving at when they ask if it would not be better to adjourn now and not press the consideration of these bills. This is a class of business that comes up on Friday nights, and it would be as well done to-night as on Friday night. I can not understand why, if the committee or the House desires to proceed with the business, they could not do so. As for myself, if I had my own way about it, I would not adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow. [Applause.] The men we are trying to help stayed in the field day and night, year in and year out. They are old and helpless now, and their widows are old and helpless. It is a duty we owe to them to continue this matter and dispose of these bills.

I am subject, of course, to what the majority desire to do; but I wish to make emphatic the statement that I had no idea—I am as innocent as a lamb [laughter]—as far as trying to keep the House in session differently from what the Committee on Rules understood. I never dreamed that we were to be limited in any unreasonable way. The matter was before the House for its consideration and not a word was said about anything of the kind. In fact, it was before the House for several weeks. I have been trying to get unanimous consent at different times for its consideration. The rule says that we are to have the two legislative days, the only exception being that it shall not interfere with appropriation bills. What is a legislative day? Why, it is just as long as the House desires to stay in session within twenty-four hours.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to remind the gentleman, if he wants to properly commemorate the battle of the Wilderness, that that battle continued for six or seven days, and we shall have to continue—

Mr. PICKLER. Allright! Thank God, I wish we could, until we clear up all these remaining bills. Are you willing to stay and clear them all up?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Every one on this side of the House except the gentleman from California is willing.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this discussion is wholly unnecessary. If the Committee on Rules had intended to modify the meaning of a legislative day, why was it not done in the rule? There was nothing mentioned at that time. There was no suggestion, as I understood it, that this day was to be different from any other legislative day. What are gentlemen disturbed about? We have passed about 100 special bills during this session of Congress, and $20,000 per annum will pay the expense.

Mr. ERDMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ERDMAN. Has debate been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks debate is exhausted upon this bill.

Mr. BLUE. I understood this was a discussion in regard to what we should do.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate has been upon this bill.

Mr. BLUE. I understood it was by unanimous consent that it was going on.

A MEMBER. Regular order.

Mr. BLUE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. LATIMER. I object.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Chairman, is there a bill pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a bill pending, and debate has been exhausted on that bill. [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

RUSSELL N. REYNOLDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1100) granting a pension to Russell N. Reynolds.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Russell N. Reynolds, late of Company E, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $20 per month.

Mr. BLUE. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that when you consider the fact that if we should devote the rest of this week and the full time of each legislative day to the consideration of these bills, it would not exceed in the aggregate an expenditure of $60,000 per annum, there is nothing for gentlemen to be concerned about here. You pass measures in five minutes that involve expenditures of $100,000 per annum, and nobody asks any question about it. At the commencement of this session I criticized this Committee on Invalid Pensions because I thought they were not moving in a methodical way. I am satisfied now that these bills that are reported here have been carefully and thoroughly digested and that they are meritorious. The committee, having received several criticisms at the beginning of the session, have acted judiciously and carefully since. It does seem to me that when the general public business of this House for this session has been practically passed upon, and nothing is left except the reports of conference committees, this House can not better dispose of the time than by addressing itself to the consideration of these special pension bills. [Applause on the Republican side.] Let us do what we have a right to do. This House has adopted this rule. It has by its vote given us a legislative day in which to consider these bills. Let us take a recess until 8 o'clock and continue here until half past 10 this evening; then take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow and work from that time on until 12. [Applause.]

Mr. SPALDING. Let the report on this bill be read, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1100) granting a pension to Russell N. Reynolds, submit the following report:

This bill passed the Senate, and the following report made by the Committee on Pensions is adopted as the report of this committee:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1100) granting a pension to Russell N. Reynolds, have examined the same, and report:

"The claimant in this case enlisted May 2, 1864, and was honorably discharged September 22, 1864. After several rejections by the honorable Commissioner of Pensions the claimant's pension was finally allowed him under the act of June 27, 1890, at the rate of $10 per month, for injury to ankle and disease of heart, both of which disabilities were incurred in line of duty.

"Upon an application for increase afterwards filed, the Pension Office determined, on March 14, 1894, that an increase should not be granted, but that the pension should continue at the former rate of $10 per month.

"The evidence in the case shows that claimant is totally incapacitated from the performance of labor, and that he is without means of support except his pension.

"Your committee therefore recommend that the bill be amended by adding thereto the words 'at the rate of $20 per month,' and that the bill as amended be passed."

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill as amended by the Senate.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY CLARE KELLY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1493) granting a pension to Mary Clare Kelly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Mary Clare Kelly, widow of the late Benjamin F. Kelly, brevet major-general of volunteers, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 a month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. SPALDING. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1493) granting a pension to Mary Clare Kelly, report:

This bill has passed the Senate this session. The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which is adopted by this committee as its own, is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1493) granting a pension to Mary Clare Kelly, have examined the same, and report:

"A similar bill was introduced in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses and referred to the Committee on Pensions. It was reported favorably and passed the Senate at the rate of $50 per month.

"The facts are as follows:

"This is a bill to increase the pension of Mrs. Mary Clare Kelly, widow of Brig. Gen. Benjamin F. Kelly. General Kelly was a Virginian, and raised the first regiment for the defense of the Union from that State. The stand he took and his energetic and brave conduct were of the greatest value to the Union cause. He commanded the Department of West Virginia, and received a wound that was supposed to be fatal, but he recovered as if by a miracle. He became impoverished by reason of his Union sentiments and participation in the Federal service, and, having never recovered from the effects of his wound, he remained in poverty, leaving nothing for the support of his family. His widow was recently pensioned at the rate of $30 a month, which is the highest rate allowable under the general law.

"It has been the habit of Congress to increase the pensions of the widows of the higher grade of officers, especially in cases corresponding with that of General Kelly, and the committee regard this as a proper case for special legislation."

In view of these facts, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the Clerk report the amount of the pension granted by this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fifty dollars a month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE W. BAGLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1500) granting a pension to George W. Bagley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas George W. Bagley, a civilian employed in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, was, while acting as a carpenter, and under the direction of the military authorities and doing work connected with military operations, hurt and permanently injured and disabled: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $25 per month, subject otherwise to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of said George W. Bagley.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert the word "twelve."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to strike out the preamble.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1500) granting a pension to George W. Bagley, having examined and considered the same, report the same back to the House with an amendment and with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

It is shown by the evidence on file that said Bagley was in the service of the United States as a carpenter in the United States Railroad Construction Corps, being in the Quartermaster-General's Department, and in the gang of John W. Neafie, under General Nagle, superintendent of bridge construction, United States Military Railroad Construction Corps. In the prosecution of this work at Alexandria, Va., in December, 1862, said Bagley was ordered by said Neafie to go upon the roof of the railroad engine house at that place to make repairs. The evidence is conclusive that the said Bagley hesitated about going up on said roof on account of the danger involved, but did so against his own wishes and remonstrances, and under the orders of his superior; that while engaged in that employment the roof gave way, he fell, severely and permanently injuring himself, among these injuries breaking both legs, one twice and the other in three places. He was afterwards confined in the hospital at Alexandria, following these injuries, for several months, and has since been a cripple and unable to perform manual labor to any considerable extent.

The said G. W. Nagle, who was in command of the Corps in which Bagley was at the time of his injury, has made affidavits of the facts in Bagley's case, and in very strongly recommending a pension for him describes the character and duties of this Corps, from which we quote in part as follows:

"The men employed in the United States Military Railroad Construction Corps were not enlisted men; no one connected with military railroads during the war held a commission, except Gen. D. C. McCallum and Gen. Herman Haupt. The work of the Construction Corps was considered of a military nature; bridges were built by them in the face of the enemy's batteries; the men were treated by our Government and the enemy, when captured, as soldiers, and they were exchanged or paroled the same as enlisted men."

"All the men and officers connected with the Construction Corps were under military orders all the time. An order to open a railroad or rebuild bridges came from the War Department. The order to rebuild the roof of the roundhouse at Alexandria, Va., where Mr. Bagley met with his accident, came through Gen. D. C. McCallum, and must be considered a military order. Every move made on the United States military railroad, whether the moving of trains containing troops or supplies or the construction of the roads or buildings on the roads, were ordered by military and for military purposes. Furthermore, the above roundhouse was within the Government stockade, the ingress and egress of which was under guard at all times."

It will be seen that this employment, while technically civilian, was entirely military in its character and real surroundings, and that this claimant was at the time (Alexandria being a military headquarters, and the railroad, whose engine house was being repaired at that time, being used by the Government in its military operations) in actual military employment and acting, to all intents and purposes, in defense of his Government.

The committee are of the opinion that as a general rule pensions should not be allowed except to men actually enlisted, but the circumstances surrounding this particular case are such as to warrant favorable action.

The committee recommend the following amendment:

In line 5 strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

And as so amended the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, there is a bill before the Committee on Invalid Pensions to pension all the bridge constructionists. There is a number of them; so we are taking out one now and making him a favorite, and the 700 others who have applied to us in a general bill are left to go hungry. [Cries of "Vote!"] The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

NATHAN KIMBALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1435) granting an increase of pension to Nathan Kimball.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nathan Kimball, late a brigadier-general in the United States Army, at the rate of $100 per month.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, just a few words of explanation upon this report. When this Senate bill came to our committee and was referred to me for consideration, I was inclined to favor a recommendation of $72 per month instead of $100; but a careful inquiry into the physical and financial condition of General Kimball led me to believe that $100 per month, as proposed in the Senate bill, would no more than meet his necessities. He is suffering constantly from the results of wounds for which he has been pensioned formally under the general law. He needs constantly one attendant, and a greater portion of the time two attendants. In order to care for his necessities, for medical attendance made necessary, and the expense incident thereto, and the care, as I have suggested already, your committee were led to conclude that $100 ought to be allowed in this case, and I hope the bill will pass for that amount.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "one hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seventy-five."

Mr. ALLEN of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word. I know that the statement that has been made by the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. ANDREWS] is absolutely true. General Kimball lives in Ogden, Utah. He has to have one personal attendant all the while, and at times, as stated, two. He is 74 years of age. He fought in 20 pitched battles in the late war. He led the right in the attack on Maries Height at Fredericksburg, and was wounded in the right thigh and foot, from which wounds he now suffers. He was brevetted major-general during the war for gallant services, and recommended for promotion to the rank of major-general by Winfield Scott Hancock. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARGARET A. KIDWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3113) granting a pension to Margaret A. Kidwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Margaret A. Kidwell, who was the wife of Henry Kidwell, late private of Company H, Second Regiment Missouri Artillery.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3113) granting a pension of $12 per month to Margaret A. Kidwell, who was the wife of Henry Kidwell, late private of Company H, Second Missouri Artillery, having carefully examined and considered the facts and circumstances in evidence, respectfully report as follows:

Henry Kidwell enlisted March 23, 1864, and was honorably discharged November 20, 1865.

He filed application for pension October 20, 1869, for gunshot wound of left hand, which was allowed after special examination February 2, 1885, at $4 per month from date of discharge, and which was increased to $6 per month from April 24, 1889. He committed suicide by hanging himself at National Military Home, Leavenworth, Kans., November 24, 1889.

From the mass of testimony presented to your committee it is learned that soldier exhibited signs of mental weakness and derangement directly after returning home from the Army. At times he would go to work vigorously for a few days and astonish the neighbors with wonderful amounts of labor, and again would droop into melancholy and unsocial habits and brood over imaginary wrongs. Again, he would wander from home for days without giving notice of his departure or his destination to his family, and would return as surreptitiously as he departed.

His mind became constantly weaker and his conduct more strange. He would sell all his property and remove to some other locality, even when his prospects seemed fairly bright. He was unsocial, gloomy, and morose, and his mania increased until it became of dangerous tendency, and his wife found a butcher knife in the bed. Asked what he intended to do with it, he spoke of the beautiful corpse their infant daughter would make. The neighbors had him examined for lunacy, and he was placed in the insane asylum at Osawatomie, Kans., December 4, 1878, and discharged therefrom July 8, 1879. He told the special examiner in 1883 that he had been in an insane asylum for several years and his memory was gone. He was confined in the State Insane asylum of Kansas again May 20, 1888, and released as restored September 23, 1888.

He was at different periods in the National Military Home at Leavenworth, Kans., and at intervals at home with his family, but his conduct and acts constantly became more erratic and his wanderings more frequent. He once went to Texas, and at all times after service seemed to possess a disposition to wander.

At one time, after being twice in the asylum, he sent notice to his wife from a distant part of the State that unless she immediately came to him he would get a divorce from her. She ignored the invitation (having the family to care for), and the report became currently circulated, by him most probably, that he had been divorced; but this is believed to have been one of his hallucinations, as no record of divorce has been found, so far as your committee has been advised. After this report was circulated he again came home, but soon went away and entered the Soldiers' Home again. Because of her almost destitute condition, the burden of supporting the family, and the circulation of reports of divorce, and the difficulty of securing satisfactory proof tracing his insanity to causes originating in service, as he never had a regular physician or lived long enough in one locality to enable neighbors to fully understand his peculiarities, the widow has not applied for pension, being advised that an effort in that direction was useless.

She is now advanced in years, in needy circumstances, and a large number of neighbors, county officials, and representative citizens ask Congress to pension her by special bill and prevent her from becoming a charge on public or private charity.

Your committee therefore earnestly recommend the passage of the bill, after being amended by striking out all after the word "artillery," in line 7.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this soldier committed suicide by hanging, and here it is distinctly traced to service origin!

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the amount?

The CHAIRMAN. Twelve dollars per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The question was taken on ordering the bill to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ERDMAN. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 8.

Mr. ERDMAN. We ought to have a quorum on this important question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman raise the point of no quorum?

Mr. ERDMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN (after a count). One hundred and six gentlemen are present. [Applause.] The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope a hundred men will stay here.

CATHERINE SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1522) granting a pension to Catherine Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catherine Smith, widow of the late James Smith, a private in Company I, Sixteenth Indiana Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $12 per month, and the further sum of $2 per month for each of the three children of said soldier until they respectively become 16 years of age.

Mr. SPALDING. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of Kansas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1522) granting a pension to Catherine Smith, widow of the late James Smith, a private in Company I, Sixteenth Indiana Infantry Volunteers, at $12 per month, having carefully examined and considered the facts and circumstances presented, respectfully adopt the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, and recommend the passage of the bill. The report is as follows:

The evidence in this case shows that the claimant, Mrs. Catherine Smith, made application to the Pension Office for a pension as the widow of James Smith, late a private in Company I, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. A pension certificate, No. 291450, was granted to her at the rate of $8 per month, with the additional sum of $2 per month for each of her children under 16 years of age. This amount of pension was paid until February 12, 1895, when said pensioner was dropped from the rolls on the following grounds, viz:

1. That her husband, James Smith, or James C. Smith, is still living and residing at Oxford, Ohio, and has made application for pension.
2. That claimant was unable to furnish satisfactory evidence that her husband was ever an enlisted man in the service of the United States.
3. That he had never been honorably discharged.

The pensioner, said Catherine Smith, then made application to the Pension Office for restoration to the rolls, but her claim was rejected.

As to the first objection made by the Pension Office, the evidence fully shows that the James or James C. Smith now residing in Ohio, and who was a private in Company C of the Sixteenth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, is not the James Smith who enlisted October 24, 1864, in Company I, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and was afterwards transferred to the Thirteenth Indiana Cavalry, and who was legally married to said Catherine Smith, and died in Salina, Kans., December 30, 1886.

In answer to the second and third objections of the Pension Office, Col. F. C. Ainsworth, in an official communication dated March 26, 1895, states that the records in the War Department show "that this soldier (said James Smith) was enrolled and mustered into service October 24, 1864, as a private in Company I, Sixteenth Indiana Infantry Volunteers, to serve one year. He appears to have served faithfully until June 29, 1865, when he was transferred to the Thirteenth Indiana Cavalry Volunteers. But as he failed to join the last-named regiment, which remained in service until November 18, 1865, he became constructively a deserter from June 29, 1865. Upon consideration of the record as above set forth, it has been determined that relief can be afforded in this case by this Department under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889. The constructive charge of desertion heretofore standing against this soldier as his final record has therefore been removed, and he has been honorably discharged to date from June 29, 1865, that being the date when he left the service."

The evidence fully shows that said soldier, James Smith, was legally married to said claimant, Catherine Smith, on the 16th of October, 1877, at Salina, Kans., and had by her three children, as follows: William E., born February 7, 1883, age 16 February 6, 1899; Jessie E., born February 28, 1884, age 16 February 27, 1900; Mamie E., born December 3, 1885, age 16 December 2, 1901.

There is some evidence tending to show that the disease of which James Smith died was contracted in the service. The evidence also shows that said Catherine Smith is a deserving woman, but in destitute circumstances, and supports herself and the three children of said soldier, James Smith, by her daily toil, excepting such charity as she receives from the Grand Army post and other friends.

Your committee is of the opinion, from the foregoing statement of facts, that said Catherine Smith is entitled to a pension of $12 per month, and the further sum of $2 per month for each of the soldier's three children until they respectively arrive at the age of 16 years.

The writer of this report has abundant testimony from personal acquaintances of high character who are familiar with the family history of this claimant, and he has no doubt about the identity of her late husband as she states it to be.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill be amended by adding the words "and the further sum of $2 per month for each of the three children of said soldier until they respectively become 16 years of age."

And so amended, your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

RANSOM C. HAZELIP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5050) for the benefit of and granting a pension to Ransom C. Hazlip, late a private soldier of Company G, Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, and first lieutenant of Company B, Thirty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Mounted Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll of the United States of America the name of Ransom C. Hazlip, late a private soldier of Company G, Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, and afterwards first lieutenant of Company B, Thirty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Mounted Infantry Volunteers, of the United States Army, in the late war of the rebellion, at the rate of $50 per month, to be paid quarterly as pensions are now required to be paid by law.

Mr. DALZELL. Let us have the report read, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. ANDERSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5050) granting a pension to Ransom C. Hazlip, report as follows:

Claimant alleges that in February, 1862, he enlisted in Company G, Eleventh Kentucky Infantry, resigning the position of county and circuit court clerk to do so; that he went with the regiment, doing regular service, as did the other members of the company, until the battle of Shiloh, in which he took part; that in said fight he was injured by concussion of a shell, causing impairment of hearing, most severe in the left ear. After the battle, while camping on the battle ground, he contracted chronic diarrhea, by which he was reduced almost to a skeleton. He had joined the regiment after its muster in, and so he had not been mustered in, and was permitted to go home.

As soon as he recovered to a sufficient extent to do so, he again entered the service, this time as first lieutenant Company B, Thirty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Infantry, and while in this organization, in July, 1864, went out from Munfordville, Ky., on a scout, and from the hardship and exposure on that trip contracted something like rheumatism and disease of kidneys. He now asks that he be pensioned by special act for impaired hearing and chronic diarrhea, contracted while serving with Company G, Eleventh Kentucky Infantry, and results thereof, and for rheumatism and disease of kidneys and disease of heart and stomach, results, contracted while first lieutenant Company B, Thirty-fifth Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry. He asks this special act because he has no title under existing law for the disabilities incurred while serving with the Eleventh Kentucky Infantry. He is totally disabled for manual labor and in need of the pension.

The sworn testimony of Watson Farris, Alex. Hayes, and William L. Hazlip, who are shown by the records of the War Department to have been in Company G, Eleventh Kentucky Infantry, and present, corroborates the claimant's allegations as to disabilities incurred while serving with Company G, Eleventh Kentucky Infantry; and that of James C. Kinkade, Charles W. Decker, John W. Hayes, Samuel P. York, and Andrew J. Hack, corroborates his allegations as to incurrence of disabilities while first lieutenant Company B, Thirty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Infantry, and their testimony, together with that of Drs. S. B. Johnson and A. J. Staton, and Mr. George W. Oiler, shows the continuance of his disabilities since discharge and that he is now totally disabled for manual labor.

From the evidence presented your committee believe his disabled condition to be due to his service in the war, and they recommend that the bill be amended as follows:

Amend the title by striking out all of it except the words "A bill granting a pension to Ransom C. Hazlip."

Amend the bill by striking out, in line 6, the words "late a private soldier of" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "who served with"; and by striking out, in line 10, the word "fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty"; and that as amended the bill do pass.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend the title by striking out all of it except the words "A bill granting a pension to Ransom C. Hazlip."

Amend the bill by striking out, in line 6, the words "late a private soldier of" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "who served with"; and by striking out, in line 10, the word "fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty"; and that as amended the bill do pass.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MAUD ARDELLE BLISS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 145) granting a pension to Maud Ardelles Bliss.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maud Ardelles Bliss, dependent and invalid daughter of John W. Bliss, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month, payable to her legally constituted guardian.

Mr. MILNES. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 145) granting a pension to Maud Ardelles Bliss, having carefully considered the same, adopt the accompanying Senate report (No. 56) as their own, and respectfully recommend its passage.

[Senate Report No. 56, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 145) granting an increase of pension to Maud Ardelles Bliss, have examined the same and report:

The beneficiary under this bill is the daughter of John W. Bliss, late a private in Company B, Fourth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry. Mr. Bliss served long and faithfully in the Union Army, his health suffering greatly from hardships and exposure. It is said by those who knew him intimately that he had pensionable disabilities when discharged from the service, but he was a proud and patriotic man and did not make application so long as he could earn a living. A few months ago he applied for a pension, being at the time in ill health and destitute circumstances, but he died before the Pension Bureau had time to consider his claim.

Claimant is an orphan, and has been deformed and sick from early infancy. She is in her sixteenth year and weighs only 48 pounds. The appended certificates state specifically her condition, Dr. Simpson giving it as his opinion that she is destined to a life of invalidism. There are many precedents for this legislation. Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEVI T. E. JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2317) to increase the pension of Levi T. E. Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Levi T. E. Johnson, late a member of Company B, Fifty-second Indiana Volunteers, from ten to fifty dollars per month, subject to the conditions and limitations of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. SPALDING. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. Wood) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2317) to increase the pension of Levi T. E. Johnson, submit the following report:

Your committee have examined the evidence in this case and find:

Claimant enlisted October 21, 1861, and was discharged September 24, 1862, for disability—"affection of spine; cause, probably, exposure on duty."

In 1870 he applied for pension on account of cold which settled in lungs and right side. It was allowed, for disease of right side and resulting disease of lung, at $4 from date of discharge and $10 from June 9, 1888.

In a declaration for increase filed in 1885 he alleged blindness from disease of eyes resulting from the debility from pensioned causes. In a declaration filed December 4, 1888, he swears that his disease of eyes has been coming on for about nine years. The medical division declined to accept the disease of eyes due to pensioned causes.

This soldier is now totally blind. He is in a pitiable condition, and is a deserving object of the bounty of his Government.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out of the sixth line the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty"; also strike out the word "member," in fifth line, and insert in lieu the word "private," and change word "Bureau" to "law," in line 7, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BURRELL. Mr. Chairman, this claimant was a brave soldier. He has now lost his sight. I do not know that it can be shown definitely that the loss has resulted from his service in the Army, but at any rate he is now totally blind, and it seems to me that he ought to be entitled to $50 a month. I therefore move to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman that the original bill provides for a pension at $50 a month, and one of the amendments recommended by the committee is to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty." If the gentleman desires, he can demand a separate vote on that amendment.

Mr. BURRELL. Then I will ask this committee to vote down that amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist on that. Thirty dollars is, I think, a good, fair pension in this case. That is the rate for total inability to perform manual labor.

Mr. BURRELL. We have been voting $50 a month to others, we have given $50 a month to the widows of soldiers, and when a man comes who has himself rendered valuable service to his country and when he is totally blind, I think that that is not too large an amount of pension for him.

Mr. HOPKINS. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that if this claimant is totally blind and must have an attendant $50 is little enough.

Mr. PICKLER. The report does not show that he is totally blind, does it?

Mr. BURRELL. He is so. I know him.

Mr. HOPKINS. I hope that my colleague's motion will prevail.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of granting this man $50 a month. Here is a worthy case, a case where an old soldier is totally blind. We have gone on and voted $100 a month to the widows of soldiers who were no more gallant or brave than this man was, but here we have the soldier himself, a man who fought bravely for his country in the war, and it is cases of this kind that ought to occupy the attention of this House. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Illinois will prevail.

On a division, on the motion of Mr. BURRELL, there were—ayes 8, noes 56.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to call for a quorum on this pure charity.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. PICKLER. He is a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and he makes the point of no quorum on one of its bills!

Mr. ERDMAN. Yes, sir; on charities of this kind all the time.

The CHAIRMAN (after a count). There are 81 members present.

Mr. PICKLER. There is only one thing to do, Mr. Chairman; that is to have the roll called.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, when the following-named members failed to respond:

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise and report the absentees to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE reported that the Committee of the Whole House had found itself without a quorum, whereupon he had directed the roll to be called, and now reported the list of absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the names of the absentees.

The names of the absentees having been read,

The SPEAKER. These names will be entered on the Journal.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER (having put the question). The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the yeas and nays on the adjournment.

Several MEMBERS. There is no quorum here.

Mr. PICKLER. We will see whether you will crowd it down this way. We want the yeas and nays on this question. We do not want any such infernal snap judgment as this. [Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota is not in order.

Mr. PICKLER. We had 100 members here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 37—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PICKLER (after the roll call had begun). We had 100 members here.

Mr. PAYNE. I insist that we should have order.

Mr. PICKLER. I am stating the truth, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should take his seat. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The Clerk resumed the call of the roll; but Mr. PICKLER continuing to speak.

The SPEAKER said: The House will please be in order; and the gentleman from South Dakota will take his seat.

Mr. PICKLER. That I will do with great pleasure.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 38, nays 58, not voting 259; as follows:

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present when his name should have been called, and failed to hear it?

Mr. HULICK. I came in while the call was proceeding, but I think after my name was passed on the list.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the Chair can not entertain the request of the gentleman.

Mr. HULICK. If permitted to vote, I should have voted in the negative.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. PICKLER. I move a call of the House.

Mr. LACEY. Under Rule XV, clause 4, must not the call be ordered without further action?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this is not one of the cases covered by the rule, as a quorum is not needed to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. Is a motion to adjourn in order?

The SPEAKER. It is, pending a call of the House.

Mr. PICKLER. What becomes of my motion for a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. The motion is pending.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WILLIS, there were on a division—ayes 51, noes 38.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 48, not voting 255; as follows:

By Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE: Petition of citizens of Bellevue, Pa., protesting against the acceptance of the Marquette statue—to the Committee on the Library.

Also, resolution of Iron City Lodge, No. 36, American Protestant Association, protesting against appropriations for Indian contract schools—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STRONG: Petition of Dr. W. W. McIlvaine and Hon. A. K. Rarey, of Kenton, Ohio; also petition of Charles Collier, W. W. Stevenson, and Godfrey Sutermeister, asking for a pension for Jacob Sherman, late a private in Company 9, Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TATE: Petition of Benjamin Davis in support of House bill granting him a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNE: Remonstrance of the Commercial Club of St. Paul, Minn., against the obstruction of navigation by the building of a bridge across the Detroit River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts: Petition of C. A. Keith and others, of Webster, Mass., protesting against the passage of House bill No. 4566, relating to second-class mail matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 7, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. QUAY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of District Assembly No. 9, Order of Knights of Labor, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the passage of the so-called Phillips bill, authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present a memorial of the Association of American Physicians, and also resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Medical Society of the County of New York, on the subject of vivisection in the District of Columbia. I move that the memorial and resolutions be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Vandalia, Fayette County, Ill., signed by the officers, Belle P. Whitney, president, and Cora B. Phillips, secretary, praying for the enactment of legislation raising the age of consent from 16 to 18 years in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by the Association of the Central West Illinois Congregational churches of Peoria, Ill., expressing their indignation at the atrocious persecution of their fellow-Christians in Armenia, and especially of their suffering brethren of the American Board; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SEWELL presented a petition of the Trades League of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the Delaware River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of American Waiters' Union, No. 20, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the Government ownership and control of telegraph lines; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. ELKINS presented the memorial of R. T. Wetzel and 37 other citizens of Jackson County, W. Va.; the memorial of W. H. Ramsey and 70 other citizens of Hundley, W. Va., and the memorial of E. T. W. Hall and 57 other citizens of Freemansburg, W. Va., remonstrating against placing the statue of Père Marquette in Statuary Hall, and praying that it be immediately removed; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of the Trades League of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that an appropriation of $500,000 be made for improving the Delaware River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SPECIAL LIQUOR-TAX RECEIPTS.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I present the petition of W. O. Smith and 175 other citizens of Randolph County, Ind., praying for the passage of Senate bill 239, which proposes to prohibit the issuance of special liquor-tax receipts to persons other than those who are authorized by State laws to engage in the business of selling intoxicating liquors. The petitioners, in addition to setting forth their special request, add that they believe the enactment of such a law would aid in preserving peace and order in every community, and would greatly improve the public morals.

In connection with the petition, which I wish to have referred to the Committee on Finance, I want to call the attention of such members of the Committee on Finance as may be present to some very pertinent information on this subject.

I wrote to the probate judge in each of five different counties in Kansas, asking them to furnish me with a statement showing the number of permits to sell intoxicating liquors that had been issued in each of those counties and were in force at the date of my letter. By our law the probate judge of each county, and he alone, is authorized to issue permits to engage in the business of selling intoxicating liquors. We try to limit it as far as we can to druggists. Then I asked the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to furnish me with a statement of the number of special liquor-tax receipts that had been issued to persons who were engaged in the business of selling liquor in those same counties and at the same time. I have here his statement and the statements of the probate judges.

I observe that the chairman of the Committee on Finance is now present.

I find from the statement of the Internal Revenue Commissioner that in Leavenworth County, Kans., there were 248 special liquor-tax receipts in force on the 1st of March of this year. Then by turning to the letter from the probate judge of that county, who is authorized to issue State permits to persons to engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors under the State law, I find that there are only 2 State permits in force in that county, and as there were 248 United States special liquor-tax receipts issued, it is shown that 246 persons are selling liquor in that county in violation of the State law.

Then, in Shawnee County, in which the capital of the State is located, the Internal Revenue Commissioner informs me that 73 special liquor-tax receipts have been issued by the United States authorities, and there are only 25 State permits in force issued by the probate judge under the State law. So we have the difference between 73 and 25 as the number of persons who are engaged in the sale of liquor in that county in violation of the State law.

In Sedgwick County there were 120 special United States liquor-tax receipts issued and 12 State permits issued. The difference between 120 and 12 shows the number of persons engaged in that county in the sale of liquors in violation of the State law.

In Reno County the number of United States tax receipts was 25 and of State permits 3, showing 22 persons in that county engaged in selling liquors in violation of the State law.

In Dickinson County there are 37 special liquor-tax receipts issued and only 9 State permits, the difference between 37 and 9 showing the number of persons engaged in the liquor traffic in that county in violation of the State law. I submit the figures in tabulated form:

Special liquor-tax receipts and State permits to sell intoxicating liquors in five Kansas counties, March, 1896.

County.	State permit.	United States tax receipts.
Leavenworth	2	248
Shawnee	25	73
Sedgwick	12	120
Reno	3	25
Dickinson	9	37
Total	51	503
Average	101	503

Mr. MORRILL. Of course the Senator from Kansas has read the law of the United States on this subject. It does not shield any violation of the State laws where there are State laws upon the subject. Therefore, all the statements which are made by the Senator from Kansas merely show that the people of that State will not enforce their own laws.

Mr. PEPPER. The point I make is that if any person intending to violate the State law asks for a special liquor-tax receipt and pays for it and gets it, that proceeding will protect this man so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, and he cares less for the State law than he does for the United States law.

I wish to call the attention of the Committee on Finance specially to the point that our people make in this matter. Our position is that we can better enforce the laws of the State if there is not this apparent and real protection afforded to the illicit sale of liquors by the issuance of Government tax receipts.

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask the Senator from Kansas how there can be that real protection from the mere fact that the Government collects a tax?

Mr. PEPPER. The real protection is this way, Mr. President. I go to the internal-revenue collector and ask for a special liquor-tax receipt. He asks me no questions. I pay $25 for my receipt and go away and set up a little gin shop in some alley or in some out-of-the-way place, and so far as the United States marshal is concerned I am absolutely protected; that is to say, he does not interfere with me. The State law is violated, but by some hook or crook, by personal acquaintance or financial or commercial acquaintance with the police officer or other local personage who is charged with looking after those things, I am permitted to go unscathed. Now, if we can limit the traffic to the State law alone, I think, just as the petitioners say, that it will aid very much in enforcing the laws of the State and in maintaining peace and good order.

Mr. QUAY. Is there anything in the laws of Kansas to prevent the prosecution and conviction of a man who has paid the United States tax for the sale of liquor?

Mr. PEPPER. No; there is no protection of that kind, but he knows he is relieved from prosecution by the United States authorities for selling. He has that advantage in his favor, to say the least; and it is a good deal.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator from Kansas must know that the fact that a man has paid a tax and a receipt can be produced is prima facie evidence in Kansas and other States of the violation of the State laws, and therefore it furnishes additional testimony in the States to the people who want to enforce the law.

Mr. PEPPER. That is very true; but I will state the difference, if the Senate will bear with me just a moment while this subject is up; it is very important. I had several letters from friends in New Hampshire who brought to my attention the same point that the Senator from Iowa presents. But we are altogether differently situated in the Western country from what they are in New England, where the villages are almost adjoining one another. We have some counties in Kansas as large as the entire State which the honorable Senator from Vermont so ably represents in this Chamber. We have large areas to travel over in order to reach the office of internal-revenue collector. From the southwestern portion of the State of Kansas, to reach Leavenworth, where the internal-revenue commissioner has his office, we would have to travel 450 miles in a direct line. So the collecting of information from the office of the internal-revenue collector is not a matter of ease and comfort. But the county seat is not many miles away, and under our laws the probate judge, whose office is at the county seat, and he alone, is authorized to issue permits to sell liquor. We can go to that office without much trouble. He advertises in the county papers before the permit is issued, setting forth the application of Richard Roe or John Doe for authority to sell liquors, and to any person opposed to it it is notice, and it is a public record easy of access. But it is not so in the case of the revenue collector.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire simply to ask a question. I think I am correct in stating that some persons in my State have protested against what the Senator desires to accomplish on the very ground the Senator from Iowa has raised—that the tax receipt is additional proof in the prosecution of these cases.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to add that in my State the moment it is ascertained a man has taken out a license he is prosecuted by the State officers.

Mr. PEPPER. I only want to say a single word by way of addition. The nearness of the citizens of the New England States to the internal revenue office is a great point in favor of their argument, while the great distance of the office from most of our people in the West is an argument against it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHILTON. In connection with the subject to which the Senator from Kansas refers, I present the petition of W. H. Ketchum and sundry other citizens of Wichita County, Tex., and the petition of A. Tulloh and sundry other citizens of Parker County, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting United States revenue licenses from being issued in local-option districts. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Finance. The motion was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to take up for consideration House bill 2698, a bridge bill about which I desire a conference with the House of Representatives. It is important to have an early conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information. The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not desire to interrupt the reading of the bill before it was concluded, so that the time of the Senate might not be again taken up in its reading; but as I was not aware that the bill had been brought in from the committee, I should like to have the Senator from Missouri let it lie upon the table until I can have time to look at it before it is passed upon by the Senate. I have no desire to delay the measure, but it is a very important bill, about which there seems to have been a good deal of controversy for some time past, and I should be glad to have an opportunity to look at the provisions of the bill before it is finally considered by the Senate. It has now been read, and if the Senator will allow it to lie on the table for the present I will see him further on the subject, and he can call it up hereafter.

Mr. VEST. Of course, I can not decline such a request. My only object is to get the bill into conference.

Mr. CULLOM. I am aware of it.

Mr. VEST. We have passed the bill through the Senate twice; it has passed through the House twice; and the two bodies have been unable to agree upon a measure.

Mr. CULLOM. As I caught the reading of the bill, I infer that this is not exactly the bill that was passed by the Senate before.

Mr. VEST. It is not the bill the Senate passed at the present session. It is the same bill that the House passed in the last Congress and sent to us. We passed a bill at the present session and sent it to the House, and they have sent back to us the bill which they passed in the last Congress.

Mr. CULLOM. So I understand.

Mr. VEST. It never can be adjusted except by a conference.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no doubt that is true, but at the same time I should like to satisfy myself that the bill is as we want it before it gets into conference at all.

Mr. VEST. I wish to say to the Senator from Illinois that the Committee on Commerce had a special hearing upon this bill. They notified all the parties interested to come before us, which they did, and we heard them patiently and carefully and cross-examined them; and the bill which we have reported is the best we can possibly do under the circumstances.

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire of the Senator from Missouri if it was developed after the hearing or pending it that the bill satisfies both elements that came before the committee for a hearing?

Mr. VEST. No; it is impossible to make a bill that does. The river interests want one thing and the railroad interests want another; and then the interest in which I am more interested than any other, the people of East St. Louis and the city of St. Louis, the large body of the producers, want a bill entirely different from the measure either of the other interests wants. We had the difficult task before us of making a bill which we thought would be just to all parties.

Mr. CULLOM. The interest that I represent is the people of Illinois, and I have no special interest except to deal fairly with the railroads or any other corporation.

Mr. VEST. This bill is the very best we can possibly do, and if there is no objection to it I should like—

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow it to lie on the table for a time I should be glad.

Mr. VEST. I shall call it up as soon as possible, for I want to get it into conference.

A. P. BROWN.

Mr. GEAR. I ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. 1602) for the relief of A. P. Brown, late postmaster at Le Mars, Iowa.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $888.98 for the purpose of reimbursing A. P. Brown, late postmaster at Le Mars, Iowa, for loss sustained by reason of burglary of postage stamps and money from that post-office on January 9, 1894.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to call up for passage the bill (S. 759) granting a pension to Carrie A. Moody.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to submit a report?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed until morning business is completed. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Pennsylvania upon the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. CULLOM. I rise to make an inquiry rather than for any other purpose. I understand that yesterday evening an agreement was made by unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bond resolution immediately after the morning business today. There seems to be a disposition to call up bills, and therefore I ask leave to call up the conference report on the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, if it is in order to do so.

Mr. SHERMAN. A conference report is always in order.

Mr. BATE. I suggest that the conference report has just been laid on our tables, and we have hardly had time to investigate it. I suggest to the Senator that he had better defer it. It went over in order to be printed, and the object of the delay would be defeated if Senators are not given an opportunity to look at it before the report is called up.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to waiting, if that is the desire of the Senate, but it seems to me we ought to get along with the appropriation bills at some time or other.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 813) for the relief of Annie R. Chesley, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2978) to provide an American register for the steamer Menemsha, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1623) for the relief of Cumberland Female College, of McMinnville, Tenn., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 586) to fix the rank and pay of certain retired officers of the United States Army, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1368) prescribing the qualifications of soldiers and marines of the United States, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2605) granting a pension to Henry V. Andrews, of Fulton County, Ill., a survivor of the Black Hawk war;

A bill (H. R. 3221) granting a pension to John Dalton;

A bill (H. R. 3234) granting a pension to Williamson Durley; and

A bill (H. R. 5854) granting a pension to John Caster.

Mr. SHOUP, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of Henry H. Schrawder, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5481) to restore the lands embraced in the Fort Lewis Military Reservation, in the State of Colorado, to the public domain, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2054) to correct the military record of Charles W. Rinehardt and to grant him an honorable discharge, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4787) to establish the port of Conneaut, in the State of Ohio, as a support of entry in the district of Cuyahoga, in said State of Ohio, reported it without amendment.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7973) to establish a railroad bridge across the Illinois River near Grafton, Ill., reported it without amendment.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2980) to provide a life-saving station at or near Point Bonita, at the Golden Gate, in the State of California, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration at this time the bill (S. 1035) authorizing the Sioux City and Omaha Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation, in Thurston County, Nebr., and for other purposes. It will not lead to any discussion. It is a mere matter of form.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the morning business ought to be concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not yet been concluded. Bills and joint resolutions are next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. When the order of resolutions is reached, I desire to submit a resolution.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TURPIE (for Mr. VOORHEES) introduced a bill (S. 3082) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Johnson Gilbert; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (for Mr. VOORHEES) introduced a bill (S. 3083) granting an increase of pension to Isaac D. Campbell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon introduced a bill (S. 3084) for the relief of Lizzie Haggy, as administratrix of the estate of Frank B. Smith, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SQUIRE introduced a bill (S. 3085) granting a pension to Burton Packard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 3086) to amend the military record of John H. Lamson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3087) to incorporate the National Society of Colonial Dames of America; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

DELAY IN SEED DISTRIBUTION.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be directed to immediately communicate to the Senate the reasons for the delay in supplying seeds for distribution.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1743) for the relief of the widow of Thomas L. Young. It will take but a moment to put the bill on its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President—

Mr. SHERMAN. It will take but a moment.

Mr. HARRIS. A unanimous-consent agreement was made late yesterday evening that immediately after the routine business this morning the resolution proposed by the Senator from Kansas should be taken up and proceeded with and the final vote taken not later than 4 o'clock to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was not present at the time the agreement was made. I am willing to abide by it, but I hope this bill will be allowed to pass. It will take but a moment. It proposes to allow the widow of a gallant soldier about four or five hundred dollars back pay.

Mr. HARRIS. I state the fact. I shall not object. I have not a word to say upon the pending resolution, but the unanimous-consent agreement requires a final vote at 4 o'clock. I give notice to the Senate that that is the agreement and it will be insisted upon.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I will not violate any agreement of the kind, although I hoped that the Senate would pass this little bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 862) for the relief of the receivers of the Towboat Association of New Orleans, La.

The message also requested the Senate to furnish the House with a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2501) for the relief of James Sims, of Marshall County, Miss., the original having been lost or misplaced.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7395) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to reconvey to the former owners a certain tract of land in Valverde County, Tex.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3013) to amend section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to improve the merchant-marine engineer service, and thereby also to increase the efficiency of the Naval Reserve; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. PAYNE, Mr. HOPKINS, and Mr. COOPER of Florida managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7542) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BOUTELLE, Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania, and Mr. CUMMINGS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 129) for the relief of Capt. George H. Perkins;
A bill (S. 661) to amend section 2880 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fixing a time for vessels to unlade;

A bill (S. 1846) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate condemned cannon to Custer Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Leavenworth, Kans., and Mathies Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Burlington, Iowa;

A bill (S. 1872) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange in behalf of the United States the tract of land at Choc-taw Point, Mobile County, Ala., now belonging to the United States and held for light-house purposes, with the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad Company for any other tract or parcel of land in said county equally well or better adapted to use for light-house purposes;

A bill (S. 1904) to regulate marriages in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 152) granting a pension to Mary Ann Tracy;
A bill (H. R. 491) granting an increase of pension to Francis Walsh, of Stockham, Nebr.;

A bill (H. R. 372) for the relief of James Duke;
A bill (H. R. 577) granting a pension to Lydia A. Taft;
A bill (H. R. 1139) granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt;
A bill (H. R. 1889) granting an honorable discharge to F. L. Taylor from December 2, 1864;

A bill (H. R. 2735) for the relief of Enoch Davis;
A bill (H. R. 3018) to amend the act approved March 3, 1891, granting the right of way upon the public lands for reservoir and canal purposes;

A bill (H. R. 3544) empowering and directing the Secretary of the Navy to furnish not more than four pieces of condemned cannon to the village of New Rochelle, N. Y.;

A bill (H. R. 4456) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the cemetery association in the city of St. Paul, Minn., to be used at or near the foot of the soldiers' monument in said cemetery;

A bill (H. R. 4887) granting a pension to Sarah G. Ives;
A bill (H. R. 4968) granting a pension to Helen A. Jackman, dependent daughter of Lieut. William Jackman, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 5254) granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer G. Howell, late a private in Company F, One hundred and sixtieth New York Volunteers; and

A bill (H. R. 6505) to revive and reenact an act to authorize the construction of a free bridge across the Arkansas River, connecting Little Rock and Argenta.

JAMES SIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2501) for the relief of James Sims, of Marshall County, Miss.; and, by unanimous consent, the request was ordered to be complied with.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Kansas.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. PEPPER, providing for investigation generally of all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended, on which the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a very short time to take part in the discussion of the resolution?

Mr. HILL. I have no objection, if I can have the floor when the Senator from Illinois gets through.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I was gratified yesterday afternoon to listen to the very frank and explicit statement of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. He said that if the policy of the maintenance of the existing gold standard was to be maintained, then there was no room for questioning the conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury. I have felt that that was the real question involved in this discussion, and that the animus of the resolution proposed by the Senator from Kansas was to affect the public mind with reference to that question.

I do not suppose that any Senator questions the integrity of the Secretary of the Treasury. His judgment may possibly be disputed or the correctness of his acts may be questioned. Perhaps I ought to except the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] from that general statement. I have opposed this resolution because I believed, as I now believe, that it is an illegitimate means of procuring the material to unfavorably affect the public mind in respect to these questions.

Mr. President, no time in the history of this country required a greater degree of frankness from representative public men than the present. The temper, the feeling, and the interests of the American people alike demand that the monetary policies of the United States should be settled in the approaching elections. There ought to be now no disguise on the part of political parties. They ought to avow themselves frankly on this question, and no incidental or improper or irrelevant influences ought to be invoked to distract the public attention from this most interesting and most important question.

I regret to say that the platforms of both the Republican and Democratic parties adopted by their national conventions in 1892, which were thought at the time to be sufficiently clear and comprehensive, are not so. It is now conceded by all that the Republican platform adopted at Minneapolis in 1892 under existing conditions can no longer be relied upon as a definition of the pending issue between the supporters of the existing legal and commercial standard of value and the advocates of the standard of value which would follow and be produced by the unlimited coinage of enforced legal-tender silver upon the ratio of 16 to 1. The language of the financial clause of the Republican platform adopted at Minneapolis on the 10th day of June, 1892, is as follows:

The American people, from tradition and interest, favor bimetalism, and the Republican party demands the use of both gold and silver as standard money, with such restrictions and under such provisions, to be determined by legislation, as will secure the maintenance of the parity of values of the two metals, so that the purchasing and debt-paying power of the dollar, whether of silver, gold, or paper, shall be at all times equal. The interests of the producers of the country, its farmers and its workmen, demand that every dollar, paper or coin, issued by the Government shall be as good as any other. We commend the wise and patriotic steps already taken by our Government to secure an international conference to adopt such measures as will insure a parity of value between gold and silver for use as money throughout the world.

But the Senator from Montana, chairman of the Republican national committee and the official representative of that party, in his late speech on this floor, supported the unlimited coinage of silver dollars, containing 412½ grains of standard silver, with full legal-tender quality for all debts, public and private; and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who assisted in the preparation of the Republican platform, and who, like the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], strenuously supports the free coinage of silver, agree in asserting that their opinions and conduct are alike in perfect harmony with the Republican platform of 1892. And some Democrats take the same liberty with the Democratic platform adopted in Chicago on the 22d of June, 1892, which is as follows:

We denounce the Republican legislation known as the Sherman Act of 1890 as a cowardly makeshift, fraught with possibilities of danger in the future, which should make all of its supporters as well as its author anxious for its speedy repeal.

As an expression of opinion it may be questioned; as a prediction it is in a sense undoubtedly true.

We hold to the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country, and to the coinage of both gold and silver without discriminating against either metal or charge for mintage; but the dollar unit of coinage of both metals must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value or be adjusted through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as shall insure the maintenance of the parity of the two metals and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in payments of debts, and we demand that all paper currency shall be kept at par with and redeemable in such coin. We insist upon this policy as especially necessary for the protection of the farmers and laboring classes, the first and most defenseless victims of unstable money and a fluctuating currency.

The Democratic convention did not, like the convention of the Republican party, puzzle itself nor attempt to puzzle the people of the United States by professing devotion to that equivocal and now uncertain doctrine termed "bimetalism," but proceeded at once to declare and define the Democratic doctrine as it was then understood by the party. It denounced the "Sherman Act of 1890," which provided for the unending and perpetual purchase of silver bullion at its market price, with a pledge by the Government to maintain a parity between the two metals, silver and gold, as "a cowardly makeshift, fraught with possibilities of danger in the future." It then declared that "we hold to the use of both gold and silver as the standard money of the country, but the dollar unit of coinage of both metals"—referring, of course, to the unit of value established by the act of 1873—"must be of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value."

This language was understood by the whole country to commit the Democratic party to the maintenance of the value and acceptability of the silver coin with the gold coinage under the act of 1873. If there was at any time any doubt as to the position of the Democratic party on this subject, or as to the meaning of the platform, it was removed by the emphatic language of the candidate nominated for the Presidency by the same convention.

In his letter of acceptance he said:

* * * The people are entitled to sound and honest money, abundantly sufficient in volume to supply their business needs.

But whatever may be the form of the people's currency, national or State, whether gold, silver, or paper, it should be so regulated and guarded by governmental action or by wise and careful laws that no one can be deluded as to the certainty and stability of its value. * * * Every dollar put into the hands of the people should be of the same intrinsic value or purchasing power. With this condition absolutely guaranteed, both gold and silver can be safely utilized upon equal terms in the adjustment of our currency.

In dealing with this subject no selfish scheme should be allowed to intervene, and no doubtful experiment should be attempted. The wants of our people arising from the deficiency or imperfect distribution of money circulation ought to be fully and honestly recognized and efficiently remedied.

It should, however, be constantly remembered that the inconvenience or loss that might arise from such a situation can be easier borne than the universal distress which must follow a discredited currency.

And the present distinguished Vice-President, in his letter accepting the nomination, after indorsing what had been written by Mr. Cleveland, and still speaking for the Democracy of the United States, said:

* * * The convention also declared its position on the currency question in no unmeaning words. To this plain and unequivocal declaration in favor of sound, honest money I subscribe without reservation or qualification. A safe circulating medium is absolutely essential to the protection of the business interests of our country, while to the wage earner or the farmer it is all important that every dollar, whatever its form, that finds its way into his pocket shall be of equal, unquestioned, and universal exchangeable value and of equal purchasing power.

After these resolutions adopted by the convention in favor of maintaining the equal value of every dollar coined under the authority of the United States, and with the full knowledge that the act of 1873 made the gold piece containing 25.8 grains of standard gold the unit of value, and the gold coinage of the United States, predicated upon that unit, the standard of value, the Democratic candidates, in their letters of acceptance, covered the whole ground of the resolutions, and committed themselves, in substance and effect, to that which was then and still is the Democratic doctrine—that every dollar coined or issued under the authority of the United States, whether of silver or paper, should have a value at all times equal to gold coin in the markets and in the payment of debts.

Mr. Cleveland was elected to the Presidency upon that as well as other important issues, and since his accession to that high office, aided by that distinguished Democrat and statesman, that pure and honest man, John G. Carlisle, and in spite of opposition from unexpected quarters, has steadily and conscientiously, to the full extent of his constitutional powers, adhered to and sought to maintain the doctrine of the Chicago platform as interpreted in his letter of acceptance.

But, Mr. President, the "world do move," and the meaning of words changes in their practical application to altered conditions, and it is now very certain that the American people no longer rely upon the money resolutions of the Minneapolis and Chicago conventions for an accurate definition of the issue which they intend to settle in the approaching Presidential and Congressional elections. Mr. President, our countrymen are intensely practical, and from that cause prefer to consider concrete measures proposed to them rather than to speculate upon abstract and remote results.

Those who favor the unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, with enforced legal-tender quality for the payment of all debts, public and private, tender to the country a single issue which in itself is clear, and in its language plain and easily understood, and from which every man can hope for such advantages to himself as his reason or even his imagination can suggest. The operative miners want employment and wages which they promise themselves from the unlimited coinage of silver. The corporations and capitalists who own both the gold and the silver bullion anticipate from the adoption of the free-coinage measure an improved local market for their silver. They know that their gold will find a remunerative price either from the necessities of those who have incurred gold obligations or in all commercial countries where the gold standard of value is recognized. Some want and promise themselves cheaper money and higher prices; others, reckless of consequences, desire place, and still others hope for personal advantages growing out of the confusion which will attend the disturbance of values and depreciation in the standard of value as a consequence of the free coinage of silver.

The advocates of free coinage are bold leaders and expect, not altogether without reason, to control the national conventions of both political parties; but, doubtful of success, some of them are willing to offer to manufacturers protection by tariffs in exchange for advantages for silver bullion. No danger now more seriously threatens the American people than does a probable and possibly successful combination between two powerful and corrupt property interests, the one demanding that the consumers of the necessities and conveniences of life shall be taxed to pay profits to the manufacturers and the other anxious to expel gold coin from use in the United States, where it obstructs the use and depresses the price of silver in the local market.

That the apprehensions I have expressed are not wholly without foundation, I need only remind the Senate of a scene which occurred here lately in which the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Connecticut were actors, and to the speeches of the chairman of the Republican national committee and the Republican Senators from the silver States, who, in avowing their devotion to the doctrine of protection, said nothing "unmanly," but still held out hopes of an ultimate treaty for the advantage of both contracting parties.

I also send to the Secretary and ask him to read a clipping from one of the newspapers of this city, which affords an intimation touching the same point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

"The Pennsylvania manufacturers who were in Washington Thursday in conference with the silver Senators represented at least $150,000,000 of capital," said Mr. W. T. Prince, of Philadelphia, at the Normandie. "They are the men who furnished 'the fat' that John Wanamaker collected in the Harrison campaign of 1888. They are willing to put up again, but they must have the strongest assurance that they will get a quid pro quo before any Presidential ticket gets a dollar of their money. Their business is stagnant, and the immediate future holds no promise. If they can make terms with the silver people whereby protection will be given them, they are willing, yes, anxious, to strike an agreement. They understand fully that no tariff bill can pass both Houses of Congress unless concessions are made to the white metal, for the champions of silver in the Senate are masters of the situation. It is a cold matter of business with these textile millionaires, and they are eager to give and take. They do not think free silver is an unmitigated evil, and something must be done to start the wheels of commerce once more."

"I look on this conference as likely to prove of far-reaching importance. It may mean the putting out of an independent silver ticket, with a platform of one plank—silver and protection. Such a ticket will prove vastly attractive to thousands of voters, and if headed by such a man as DON CAMERON would be dangerous to any regular partisan ticket that could be put out."

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the existing standard of value in the United States is American gold coinage, of which the one-dollar gold piece of the weight of 25.8 grains of standard gold is the unit. This asserted fact will not be denied. It was established by the act of 1873, and has been maintained by the policy pursued by the Treasury Department under all Administrations since that act and by the course of business throughout the United States.

It was confirmed by the act of February 28, 1878, which, under the deceptive title of "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore the legal-tender character thereof," provided "that there shall be coined at the mints of the United States silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains of standard silver, which coin, together with all silver dollars heretofore coined by the United States of like weight and fineness, shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all debts, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract." And it was further directed by the act that the Secretary of the Treasury should purchase from time to time silver bullion at the market price thereof, not less than $2,000,000 worth per month nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month, and cause the same to be coined monthly, as fast as so purchased, into such dollars. This act recognized the standard of value established by the act of 1873 by referring to the market value of silver bullion, which could, of course, be expressed only in terms of gold. The same is true of the act of July 14, 1890. That act, in addition to authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver bullion at the market price thereof, which must, of course, have reference to the gold price of silver bullion, treating it as a mere commodity, authorized the issue of Treasury notes in payment for purchases of silver bullion to the amount of the cost of the silver bullion, and the Treasury notes issued in pursuance of the act were given only limited legal-tender qualities. This act contains a provision that—

Upon the demand of the holder of any of the Treasury notes herein provided for, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, redeem such notes in gold or silver coin, at his discretion.

And then follows, in the same connection, and as a part of the same sentence, the controlling mandatory declaration:

It being the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio or such ratio as may be provided by law.

The act of November 1, 1893, which repeals so much of the act of July 14, 1890, as directs the Secretary of the Treasury to "purchase from time to time silver bullion and issue in payment of such purchases Treasury notes," again asserts the policy of the United States to continue the use of gold and silver as standard money of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value; and it asserts that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetallism "as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States in the markets and in the payment of debts."

The policy of the Secretary of the Treasury in the administration of the laws providing for the payment of the public debts and obligations has been based upon the idea and intended to promote the policy of the maintenance of the standard of value established by the act of 1873.

It is asserted that the public debt, including what are termed "greenbacks," and the Treasury notes issued under the act of July 14, 1890, "are by their terms payable in coin." The Secretaries of the Treasury under all Administrations have, in order to maintain the standard of values established by the act of 1873 and to maintain the parity between the two metals, and in that way keep the pledge given to the public, allowed creditors the option of payment in gold or silver coin, at the discretion of the creditor. My object thus far has been to prove that there exists in the United States a "legal and commercial standard of value."

The second point I present for the consideration of the Senate and the country is that the "unlimited coinage" by the United States of silver dollars of 412½ grains of standard silver with forced legal-tender quality for all debts, public and private, would subvert the existing legal and commercial standard of value by establishing a standard of value based upon silver coinage only. The truth of this can not truthfully and will not, as I suppose, be denied. It has not been denied on this floor. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who is one of the ablest and most earnest of the friends of the unlimited coinage of silver dollars containing 412½ grains of standard silver with legal-tender quality, in his exhaustive speech in the Senate on the 13th of March admits as much, for he expressly declared that one of the desirable objects expected to be accomplished by the free coinage of silver by the United States alone is to destroy the gold standard of value and substitute another standard in its place. He did not claim that free coinage would enhance the value of the silver dollar proposed to be coined to an equal commercial value and acceptability with the gold dollar of American coinage, for that would be to maintain the gold standard, but his insistence was that free coinage would enhance the value of the silver dollar "some" and depreciate the value of the gold dollar "some," so that by the enhancement of the value of the one and a reduction of the value of the other the two would reach a point of value common to both. It seems a logical conclusion from the opinion thus expressed by the Senator from Missouri that the point at which the coins of the two metals would become equal in value would necessarily thereafter be the standard of value.

Without availing myself of the admission of the Senator from Missouri, I maintain that the unlimited coinage of silver dollars containing 412½ grains of standard silver with forced legal-tender quality for all debts, public and private, would subvert the existing legal and commercial standard of value, not in the manner the distinguished Senator supposes, but by causing the disuse of gold coin in all ordinary legal and commercial transactions.

Congressional legislation with respect to the coinage of silver must of necessity be local in its direct effect upon the value of silver bullion. It may be admitted that legislation may add "some" to its commercial value by conferring upon silver coin the full legal-tender quality, but it is impossible, as is conceded by him, by an act of Congress alone to make silver dollars equal in commercial value or acceptability to the dollar of gold. Therefore under the operation of unlimited-coinage laws upon the proposed ratio gold would become a commodity, and like all commodities it would seek the best market, and that best market would be found, not in the United States, but in commercial countries where silver is not favored by partial local laws. The Senator from Missouri, like all other advocates of the free coinage of silver upon the ratio of 16 to 1, denounces and condemns what they accurately enough call the gold standard of value, which, by the way, is the existing standard, and advocates another or some other standard of value which would be determined by money more easily obtained than gold coin, and therefore of less commercial value than gold.

The Senator proposes to reach the future standard of value by a policy which would lessen or depreciate gold in the United States to a point at which it would meet the enhanced price which would be given to silver coin by an act of the American Congress, and when the coins of the two metals became or reached a common value the country would have the bimetallic standard.

I will not at present attempt to show the vanity of this hope of the Senator, or in what respects it runs counter to all that is known of the science of money or the experience of the world, but will now attend to the single consideration of the fact that this most favorable view of the effect of the free and unlimited coinage of legal-tender silver would result in the disturbance of all values, produce infinite confusion, and practically revolutionize not only the business relations of the people of the United States with each other but with all foreign countries.

I do not wish to treat the theory advanced by the Senator from Missouri and others who agree with him in favoring the free coinage of legal-tender silver on the proposed ratio too seriously, for gold would disappear from circulation and would in that way and no other contribute to an increase in the value of silver coin.

The unlimited coinage of silver, with legal-tender quality, on the ratio of 16 to 1 would operate precisely as would a law prohibiting the coinage or use of gold coin in the United States, and give to silver the monopoly of American coinage.

I return to the proposition that silver coin would rise in value by the depreciation or disappearance of gold coin. It will be observed that no one of the advocates of free coinage professes to know or predict what would be the exact relation between the standard of value now existing and the standard which would be produced by the policy they propose.

I ask, Will free coinage produce a silver dollar worth 50, 60, 70, 80, or 90 cents as compared with the gold dollar? Will the Senator from Missouri or any other Senator tell me? Will the Senator from Nevada give the country the benefit of his opinion upon this most important point?

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator want an answer now?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; at this moment. I should be gratified to have it now.

Mr. STEWART. I should hope that the relative value of the coins of both gold and silver would be less than the present value of gold; that is, I should hope that the addition of silver coin as standard money would increase the volume of standard money—which controls the volume of all other moneys and of credit—to such an extent as would stop the fall in prices and make it profitable again to enter into business. To just what extent it would do that is, of course, uncertain. It would take a very large amount of silver to largely advance prices. We had some experience in that line when we had a money famine by reason of the Spanish-American wars for nearly half a century, and prices had fallen in consequence thereof about 50 per cent; in other words, coin had advanced 100 per cent, had doubled in its purchasing power, and had advanced almost as much as gold has advanced since the demonetization of silver during that half a century. It was a sore trial to the Old World. We stood it better than they did on account of the new lands in the Mississippi Valley, which were being settled at that time; but the annual product which was being received amounted, on the average, during that period, from 1810 to 1850, to about $40,000,000 per annum of the two metals. There was a little more than that between 1845 and 1850, in consequence of some discoveries in Russia. In two years from the discoveries the annual product of the two metals rose to over $200,000,000. The product of gold alone rose to about $190,000,000 or $196,000,000, so that the product of both metals was over $200,000,000. That increase of supply went on. It kept up during the first decade, and, in fact, kept up for twenty years. This vast increase, which almost quadrupled the output, and in twenty years doubled the standard coin of the world practically, did not raise prices more than from 18 to 24 per cent. The new activities absorbed them rapidly. There was a great boom in property, the world was set to creating property, and more prosperity was occasioned than had been the case in any century.

The question as to how great an extent the silver we could obtain would advance prices it is impossible to determine. It would not advance them so much, I am afraid, as we hope, for the reason that all the silver—

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator is not answering the question. The Senator from Illinois wants to know what the relative value of silver and gold would be if the mints were opened to the free coinage of both—what would be the commercial value?

Mr. STEWART. I thought the Senator from Illinois wanted to know what would be the relative value of our present standard with the standard we should have by adopting the two.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Nevada permit me?

Mr. STEWART. I want to answer the question of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. VEST. I want to understand the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Do the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. PALMER. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. STEWART. I will also yield to the Senator.

Mr. VEST. I simply want to ask the Senator from Illinois, in order to understand him, Does he refer to what is called the commercial value of silver and gold, or does he refer to the legal-tender value?

Mr. PALMER. The commercial value.

Mr. VEST. Then the Senator's question is, What would be the effect of opening the mints to the free and unlimited coinage of silver on the commercial value of the two coins, the gold dollar and the silver dollar?

Mr. DUBOIS. In other words, the Senator from Illinois wants to have stated whether silver would be worth 50, 60, 70, or 80 cents in gold.

Mr. STEWART. I will address myself to that point. I did not so understand the question. I understood it to refer to another point.

The relative commercial value of the two metals, I think, would be equalized at the ratio of 16 to 1 by opening the United States mints. I have several reasons for that. In the first place, there are now no bimetallic countries of any importance, if there are any. France for seventy years maintained the equilibrium of exchange between the two metals by keeping her mints open. Not that France was able to take or that she did take of either of the metals any considerable quantity, but the fact that she was a bimetallic country and that any person in the world could obtain a given price for his gold or his silver as fixed by the French ratio regulated the relative value of the metals throughout the world.

Now, if the United States, which relatively is quite as great as France was during that time, should undertake to pay a given and fixed price for gold and another fixed and given price for silver, it would necessarily fix that price all over the world, for no one would sell silver for less than the United States price. That is the way it operated before. Knowing that the United States would be able to take it all, that would satisfy everybody, and create an equilibrium between the two. I have no doubt. And I have no doubt of that because the silver is now all absorbed. There is not so large a quantity to be absorbed by the United States as many suppose. It is all taken now and used. There is no silver bullion in the world of any consequence, and the additional demand in the United States would take it to par. When it was thought the United States was going to open its mints silver came very near going to par. On the mere idea that we were to open our mints silver went to $1.21; but when it was ascertained that our mints were not to be opened, that there was to be a limitation upon silver, and when a combination was formed between the Director of the Mint and foreign bankers that there should be no purchasers in the market except the United States and certain syndicates of foreign bankers, that fixed the price, and they put it down where they pleased; but if the price had been fixed by the opening of our mints silver would have gone to par, because nobody would have had any object in bringing silver here except to buy our commodities, and silver, therefore, would have been at the same price everywhere else as here, and it would not be brought here. There is no doubt in my mind but that the opening of our mints to the free coinage of silver would create a parity between the two metals at the ratio of 16 to 1.

But I will say to my friend while I am on the floor that, if it did not, we have the concurrent opinion of every bimetallic and economist in Europe that it would be disastrous to Europe and to our great advantage. They say that if we should open our mints before an international agreement is secured Europe will be more in danger from that than from anything else. A German writer, in an article recently published advocating bimetallicism and showing the danger that Europe was in from the invasion of Asia by having the manufacturing of the Western World transferred to the Orient, stated that he looked upon that as a great calamity. He says, "If the United States should act without us, ruin absolute would come." So there is no possible danger of injury to the United States from opening our mints. It is the concurrent opinion of every bimetallicist in Europe that we should be benefited. They say we should all be benefited by an international agreement, but if the United States alone should adopt the free-coinage policy, the United States would receive the special benefit and Europe would receive great injury. That is their concurrent opinion. Whether it would equalize the commercial value of the two metals or not is immaterial. It would operate to our advantage and its results must necessarily be good to this country.

Mr. PALMER. I asked a question—

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator desires to answer my question I do.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish, if the Senator will allow me, to suggest that the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] has given a very apt and appropriate answer to that question in his Elmira speech of December 4, 1892, and inasmuch as this question is now up, if the Senator from Illinois will allow me, I will have an extract read from that speech.

Mr. PALMER. If the extract is an answer to my question I have no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. It is directly an answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator will listen to my question, it is this: Will free coinage produce a silver dollar worth 50, 60, 70, 80, or 90 cents as compared with the gold dollar?

If the extract the Senator wishes to read is an answer to my question, I shall be very glad to hear it.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the Senator's question to be, Will the free coinage of silver bring the bullion price of 412½ grains of standard silver equal to 25.8 grains of standard gold?

Mr. PALMER. That is the opinion of the Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the question. The Senator wants to know if it will do it.

Mr. PALMER. No, I do not ask that. I ask what would be the difference in the relative value of the two?

Mr. BUTLER. After we have free coinage?

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from New York in his Elmira speech—

Mr. PALMER. The Senator might just as well answer me himself.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to quote a most eminent authority.

Mr. PALMER. I had asked the question, and if the Senator has an answer to the question, I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I will give the answer in the language of the Senator from New York instead of my own.

Mr. PALMER. I can read the answer of the Senator from New York myself if the Senator from North Carolina will furnish it to me.

Mr. BUTLER. In what the Senator from New York said in that speech I fully concur, and therefore I can state it as my opinion. In a very able argument reviewing the Republican position, showing that they had promised to make the intrinsic value of the two metals equal and had failed, after criticising the Republican methods, the Senator from New York said—

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from North Carolina will permit me to say—I am not sure whether he is a lawyer or not; I hope he is—

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to read what the Senator from New York said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. PALMER. I am endeavoring—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to know whether the Senator yields.

Mr. PALMER. Oh, yes; I yield for an answer to my question.

Mr. BUTLER. I will read this answer made by the Senator from New York, in which I concur:

Did ever anything but free bimetallic coinage, down to 1873, make our gold and silver dollars equal by every test? Did ever free bimetallic coinage, down to 1873, for one hour fail to make the silver dollar equal to the gold dollar, whether at mint or crucible, or at any market in the wide world?

Then a little further on he says:

But to maintain a parity implies the existence of a parity. No parity exists between the two. Melt the gold coin and it can be recoined again and again, a gold dollar, for its private owner, because gold has free coinage, and 25.8 troy grains are the fixed weight of the gold dollar. Melt the silver coin and it can not be recoined for its private owner. It can be sold to the Treasury, but for 75 cents or less, because silver has not free coinage, though 412½ troy grains of silver are indeed the present weight of the silver dollar.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator understands himself to be answering my question I state to him that, in my judgment, he is not, and I decline to yield further. I ask this question because I want a direct answer to it.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, here is something, if the Senator will allow me, which bears directly on that question.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator will pardon me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois declines to yield further. The Senator from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PALMER. I have asked a plain, direct question, to which I have received an immense amount of wind in answer, not pertinent, and I decline to yield further.

The country should know what the expectations of the leaders of the free-silver movement are on this subject. The Senator from North Carolina gives me the views of the Senator from New York. I asked a specific and precise answer, and that ought to be an end to the matter, because this question is a vital one, and gentlemen who favor the free coinage of silver on the ratio of 16 to 1, if they mean anything else, if they mean that the free coinage of silver is a mere experiment, ought to say so. The interests involved are too great to allow of a mere experiment. The advocates of free coinage will not venture to say to the people of the United States, who are now considering this question so earnestly, that they have no certain views upon the subject or that they merely propose the unlimited coinage of silver as an experiment. The interests involved are too great to allow of a mere experiment. But, Mr. President, I venture the assertion that no leader of the free-coinage movement will undertake to give a plain, precise answer to the question: "What will be the commercial value of the silver dollar of 412½ grains under unlimited coinage compared with the present value of the dollar of gold?"

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, for fear the Senator should think that we acquiesce in that statement, I say emphatically the silver dollar will be the equal of the gold dollar.

Mr. PALMER. What, then, did the Senator mean the other day when he said that free coinage would increase the value of silver some and depreciate the value of gold some?

Mr. COCKRELL. And bring them to an equality.

Mr. PALMER. An equality? Then I suppose the Senator will agree with me that the point at which they become equal will be the standard of value, and not the existing standard of value. Still there is that indefiniteness about what point they will unite.

The importance of an answer to this question is found in the fact that all values in the United States are now based upon and are determined by American gold coin, and the further fact that in the event of the enactment of a law authorizing the unlimited coinage of silver dollars of 412½ grains of standard silver with full legal-tender quality that dollar will be the standard of value.

The silver dollar will rise in value until it meets the descending value of gold coin is the theory of the Senator from Missouri. What will be the exact relative value of the silver dollar when the two coins become of equal value? What will be the exact point of relative value when the silver dollar advances some and the gold dollar recedes some? Where will they unite, and what will be the standard of value when that point of union is reached? I have said that all values are now determined by gold coin. Then all values will be determined by silver coin; that is, as much as silver will rise, because gold will not remain to abide the competition.

Let me assume that the value of the local American silver dollar after free coinage will be 60 cents as compared with the gold dollar—the present standard. I will accept any other comparative value for the silver dollar which the Senator from Missouri will distinctly name, though I have already offered to advance beyond the 50-cent dollar, which it is thought by many will be its actual commercial comparative value after free coinage of the silver dollar. Upon the comparative basis of the 60-cent dollar the public obligations of the United States of all kinds, including contracts already made for the building of ships, the construction of harbor defenses, the improvements of rivers and harbors, and for all other public purposes, the bonds, the greenback circulation, the silver certificates, and the Sherman notes would at once lose 40 per cent of their present value. The invested educational funds of the States, counties, cities, and school districts of the several States, and the contributions of liberal persons, which now exceed $200,000,000, would at once depreciate 40 per cent, involving a loss of eighty millions to that invaluable fund, most of which would fall upon that most useful and ill-paid class, the teachers in the public schools. The pensions given by a grateful country to the wounded, maimed, and disabled soldiers and their widows and orphans, and now amounting to about one hundred and forty millions, would be lessened in purchasing power some $56,000,000. The funds in the hands of trustees and guardians, the deposits by the industrious in the savings banks, amounting to many hundreds of millions, would shrink in the same proportion. The wages of labor would be shorn of nearly half their purchasing power; the hundreds of millions invested by provident persons in life and property insurance would be enormously lessened, defeating the sagacity of the prudent, and the systems of national, State, and local revenue and taxation would require readjustment to meet altered conditions.

Mr. President, what are the advantages offered to the country as an equivalent for adopting this startling alteration in the monetary situation—an alteration which will affect and disturb the social and business affairs of every person in the United States and the political and commercial relations of the United States with all other countries?

One of the results promised the people by the adoption of the unlimited coinage of silver with forced legal-tender quality for all debts, public and private, is "more money," "higher prices."

Mr. President, the effect of the free coinage of silver on the ratio of "16 to 1" will be the disappearance of gold coin from the channels of circulation. It never has been proved—at least, no instance can be found in the commercial history of any country—where two coins differing in commercial value, as the dollar of gold and the dollar of silver, were in use at the same time. It is not possible. The commercial instincts of men induce them to go to the best market for their products; and the Senator from Nevada yesterday, or on a former day, made the just remark that, notwithstanding free coinage, the value of silver all over the world would be the same. If the proposition of the Senator from Missouri is correct and if the Senator from Nevada is sound in his views, the whole volume of silver money throughout the world would be lifted up to that plane to which the Senator from Missouri looked with so much confidence.

The pledge of the Government to maintain the parity between the coins of gold and silver will of necessity be abandoned, for no gold coin will be collected, either at the ports or for internal-revenue taxes, nor can gold be borrowed to sustain the credit of the Government.

The 426,289,916 silver dollars in the Treasury and in the hands of the people, which now have the commercial value of gold, will, upon the hypothesis of 60 cents as the commercial value of the "new dollar," unsupported by gold, have only the same value, and all credit money and all credits will shrink in commercial value in the same proportion.

It is true as a general proposition that an increase in the quantity of money of final redemption favorably affects prices, but the necessary result of the unlimited coinage of silver on the ratio of 16 of silver to 1 of gold would be to expel gold coin from general circulation in the United States and leave the country dependent upon silver coin alone. The disappearance of gold coin and gold credits would be immediate. It would anticipate the free coinage of silver, which would be gradual.

It is probable, therefore, that the full effect of a law providing for the free coinage of silver would be a scarcity of even the relatively cheaper money. The "dollar" coined under the measures proposed would, in fact, be a new coin, heretofore a stranger to our monetary system. It would be known in legislation as a dollar; but the dollar coined under the act of 1857 had the commercial value of the gold coin, and the American dollar was worth nearly 3 per cent more than the gold-dollar unit of value fixed by the act of 1873. Here the proposition is made to establish a monetary system upon the basis of a metal which has but little more than half the commercial value of the coin it proposes to supersede.

I repeat that the passage of a law which would authorize the free coinage of silver on the ratio of 16 to 1 would not be followed by an increased quantity of money, but its enactment would produce an unexampled stringency like that which followed the collapse of all the State and local banks in 1857 to 1861. There is no fact which should be more distinctly brought to the attention of the country, pending this discussion, than that the immediate effect of a clear determination by the American people to adopt a law providing for the free coinage of silver on the ratio of 16 to 1 would, in advance of the passage of such a law, overthrow public and private credit, and produce a severe money stringency which would provide ample employment and rich returns to the usurer and the sheriff. It is also true that the unlimited coinage of silver on the ratio of 16 to 1 would alter the commercial and political relations of the United States to all other nations and organized peoples of the world.

It would erect a commercial wall between the United States and all the gold-standard nations, the height and strength of which would be determined by the rate of exchange, and the rate of exchange would mark the difference between the value of the local silver money of the United States and the gold coin of commerce.

Our large foreign debt, which is mainly payable in gold coin, would of necessity be partially or wholly repudiated.

The railroads of the country and the States and municipalities who owe gold debts would be compelled to advance their rates and increase their taxes or submit to bankruptcy or repudiation. I do not believe in case of the adoption by Congress of the measure of the free and unlimited coinage of silver on the proposed ratio that the people will be able or willing to pay increased railroad rates or higher taxes, and such legislation would make the payment of debts by railroads and municipalities impossible.

Another compensation proposed by some of the advocates of free coinage is that, as one standard of values would be identical with that of the Asiatic countries and the South American States, we would be better able to compete with them in the cheapness of production. In other words, it is said that in the silver-using countries, like Mexico, Japan, China, and India, the silver dollar, or a silver coinage of equivalent value, will buy as much domestic productions of those countries, including labor, as the dollar of gold will in any of the so-called gold-standard countries. If this is so, it is an invitation to the American farmer and the American wage earner to adopt the habits and accept the prices for their products and their labor which are paid to the peons of Mexico and the ill-fed serfs of Asiatic countries, whose wages are a pittance, and who subsist upon insufficient food.

Mr. President, impressed by these considerations, it seems to me that it is the duty of every representative citizen to insist that the question of maintaining and adhering to the existing standard of value, to which all property in the United States and our systems of revenue and taxation for national, State, municipal, and educational purposes, our pensions, funds organized and invested for benevolent and charitable purposes, contracts on behalf of the nation and the State, the municipal, corporate contracts and obligations, the contracts between citizens, and, in short, all values are adjusted, and that of adopting by a law of Congress the uncertain and dangerous experiment of authorizing the unlimited coinage of legal-tender silver on the ratio of 16 of silver to 1 of gold, when the actual commercial ratio between the two exceeds 30 of silver to 1 of gold, an experiment which can have but one result, that of establishing a standard of value based upon doubly overvalued silver coin alone, should be clearly and distinctly brought to the attention of the American people. The movement favorable to the free and unlimited coinage of silver is supported by much of the speculative capital of the country, for it will be observed that miners and capitalists interested in gold bullion, confident in their ability to find a market for their gold, are anxious that silver alone shall be the money metal of the United States; and these powerful interests are seeking for allies in many quarters, and are offering to them solid inducements that will, to some extent, find acceptance.

This interest has, by snap conventions, captured some of the States and may control national conventions.

In the face of this strong, vigorous, aggressive element its opponents falter and hesitate. Candidates for the Presidency and for seats in Congress take refuge in silence the most profound, and leaders refuse to lead, or if they speak or prepare platforms for the acceptance of their friends they indulge in language which justly provokes criticism, an example of which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The severest Republican condemnation of the Ohio Republican financial plank comes from the Philadelphia Ledger, in whose words it is "a shuffling, evasive, complex, confusing, double-faced, insincere, and inconclusive statement; a mere trap for the catching of the votes of men of all sorts of financial opinions; a transparent bribe offered to the obtuse advocates of unsound, dishonest currency, as well as to those of sound, honest money; deceptive, misleading, a trick, a snare, and a lie, and meant to be so; the device of cunning, unscrupulous politicians, not of wise, honest statesmen." It is "in precise accord with Mr. McKinley's own financial declaration made in his recent Chicago address," the Ledger continues, and therefore it believes that "in view of Mr. McKinley's double dealing with regard to the financial question he should not be nominated at St. Louis. No one who in the South bids for the dishonest-money vote, and in the North the honest-money vote—Jannis-like, facing both ways—is fit to be the standard bearer of the Republican party in the coming Presidential campaign."

Mr. PALMER. All the indications point to the fact that the subject of that criticism will be the Republican candidate for the Presidency; indeed, I understand that the opposition has practically failed. I only protest that there shall be in this contest distinct, clear, precise platforms adopted by both political parties; and I have sought this morning to endeavor to clear away something of the confusion that attends this discussion. I have eagerly sought to know what will be the condition of the country or of its finances and its currency if the free-silver men succeed in the next election.

Mr. STEWART. We can answer that in a word. It will be prosperous.

Mr. PALMER. There is a sort of gratuitous promptness about that remark which lacks only one single element of usefulness, and that is precision. Will the Senator from Nevada tell me how we are to be made prosperous? I do not ask for a declamation, because when I feel well I am able to do all I want of that myself; but I ask Senators what will be the relative value of the new standard of value and of the existing standard? I have said that all values are now fixed by gold, and it seems to me that statesmen and financiers ought to be able to indicate with something like precision what will be the standard of value after they succeed in the policy they advocate.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President—

Mr. PALMER. In Mexico—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. PALMER. With great pleasure.

Mr. VEST. I did not intend to interrupt the Senator in the middle of a sentence. He was about speaking of Mexico.

Mr. PALMER. I will conclude the sentence. In Mexico no gold circulates. I know of no silver country where gold is used. I know of no reason why the silver dollar of the United States, after free coinage on the ratio of 16 to 1, should be worth more than the silver dollar of Mexico is now worth in comparison with gold values.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. PALMER. With great pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. Japan is on a silver basis, and the Bank of Japan has $31,000,000 in gold.

Mr. PALMER. How much of that circulates with the people?

Mr. STEWART. None of it.

Mr. TELLER. How much gold circulates here?

Mr. STEWART. None at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not a dollar.

Mr. PALMER. The Bank of Japan is said to have $31,000,000 of gold, and yet, as compared with gold, the silver is of very much less value. What it is I do not know. I have endeavored to get the rate of exchange of silver between Japan and the United States and Great Britain. I have failed; but at the same time I do assert, with the most absolute confidence, based upon a most careful investigation, that in no silver country is gold either the standard of value or is it used in the ordinary affairs of life.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Illinois mean to say that gold does not circulate in Mexico and in India? It circulates in small quantities, it is true, but the gold dollar represents the legal-tender functions which the silver dollar has in both India and Mexico. It is very true that after you leave the territorial limits of Mexico the commercial value of the Mexican dollar is some 52 or 53 cents, but the reason of that is on account of the limited export of Mexico. Mexico exports principally silver, a small amount of coffee, and a small amount of hides. But on the continent of Europe, where the Mexican dollar is worth 52 or 53 cents, the American dollar is worth 100 cents and exchangeable for gold.

Mr. PALMER. Why?

Mr. VEST. Because we export over $800,000,000 of products every year; because our agricultural exports are $505,000,000. As a banker told me at Carlsbad when he gave me gold for silver certificates, "That paper is just as good to me as gold, because with it I can buy anything that your country raises and pay any debt that is due to any American citizen." And yet this is always ignored by our gold friends; and we are told repeatedly that even in the event of free coinage the commercial value of silver must remain as it is or only a little better than it is to-day.

Mr. PALMER. Whatever may be the accident that determined the local value or the use of a silver dollar, so far as the United States is concerned, our silver dollar is of less commercial value than the Mexican dollar, treating it as a mere substance composed of standard silver. Whatever the accidents of business may determine, the great fact remains that in no case has it ever been found possible to maintain the free use of coin composed of metals so widely different in value.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator pardon me? I want to ask him a question. His original proposition, as I understand it, is that we are not warranted in the assumption that the free and unlimited coinage of silver would increase its commercial value. That is what I understand the Senator to claim.

Mr. PALMER. I have not said so.

Mr. VEST. Well, that is the tendency of his argument.

Mr. PALMER. I have asked the question with the greatest pertinacity, how much will it increase it?

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest doubt that it would put the two coins on a parity; that the silver dollar would be worth 100 cents as the gold dollar to-day is worth 100 cents, no more and no less. I can give the Senator my reason, but I do not choose to interrupt him now.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator will pardon me. I understand that his answer to me is that the dollar of 16 to 1, or 412½ grains of silver, will, in his judgment, be equal in commercial acceptability and value to the gold dollar of 25.8 grains.

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest doubt about it. The single fact that it is so in the United States will control its value with civilized nations. Now, let me ask the Senator—we ought to be entirely frank about this matter; it is a very great question—how does he explain, if we are not correct in this assumption, that in 1873, when the silver dollar was demonetized and the unit of value changed from a silver dollar to a gold dollar, the commercial value of silver immediately fell? Up to the day when that act was passed silver was at 3 per cent premium over gold. The day after it was passed the commercial value immediately went down in the United States and over the world.

In 1878, five years later, we restored the free coinage of silver to a limited extent. We provided by act of Congress in the Bland-Allison Act that there should be coined not less than two nor more than four million ounces a month. The statistics show (I have produced them here and they can be produced again in five minutes) that from the very moment when that act was passed the commercial value of silver went up. After the Sherman law repealed the Bland-Allison Act the price of silver commercially went down. We then passed a law for the purchase of four and a half million ounces of silver a month, but not to be coined. The result was a speculative advance in silver for about a week or ten days, and then, as every intelligent man knew, not giving it the right to coinage, silver immediately relapsed and went down, as it has continued to go down ever since.

Now, if that is not a mathematical demonstration that opening the mints to silver will increase its commercial value it is absolutely impossible to make it.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, what might be the effect of opening the mints of all commercial countries upon the value of silver I do not know. I know as little as my friends seem to know as to what effect upon the value of silver will be produced by free coinage. But I do know this. I say I know it, because I have the authority of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] for the statement I make. A difference of less than 3 per cent, as was the difference between gold and silver prior to the act of 1873, led to the exportation of substantially all the silver dollars. I make that statement upon the authority of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think I have stated it in that shape. There was very little silver coined into dollars prior to that act; only about $8,000,000, while about $150,000,000 in round numbers of silver was coined altogether. The main part of our coinage was foreign coin, made legal tender up to 1857. We were coining about two million a year in 1861 and in 1862. At the time of the passage of the mint act we were coining at the rate of $3,000,000 a year. But I should like to correct another error, if the Senator will allow me right here.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator will pardon me, I will submit to any correction, but at present I am interested in this particular point. I have quoted him as authority for two statements on the floor. One is that the difference between the value of gold and silver before the act of 1873 led to the exportation of silver dollars, and the second proposition, for which I quote him as authority (and I am exceedingly glad to be able to furnish authority from such a distinguished, influential source), is that notwithstanding the passage of a free-coinage law by the United States the value of silver will be the same throughout the world. I think I quote the Senator exactly.

Mr. STEWART. No; I say that whether you pass a free-coinage law or not, silver being internationally dealt with, there will be an equilibrium in the price of silver bullion all over the world, less the accidents of exchange.

Mr. PALMER. That proposition is one which I desire to make so distinct that it can not be misunderstood. The undertaking on the part of those who favor the free coinage of silver—I say the undertaking, the thing which they promise themselves—is that the silver of the whole world will be advanced by the passage of an act of Congress directing the free coinage of silver and will all be brought up to the value of gold; not the silver of the United States coined in the United States alone; not the silver coined in Mexico alone; not the silver coined in all countries where coinage laws exist; but if the proposition is true that notwithstanding the passage of a free-coinage law silver will have the same substantial value throughout the world, it follows that the Senator expects that the passage of a free-coinage law will lift all the silver in the world up to the parity with gold.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; and for obvious reasons. We have had object lessons to that effect very frequently. Whenever there has been a movement in this country toward free coinage it has raised the price of silver, and it raised the price of silver in India just as well as it did here. In 1890, when silver went up to 121 here, it went up to 121 on the same day in India and Japan and London and everywhere else. When it falls here, it falls there. There can not be a difference of price with regard to silver no more than there can be a difference in the level of the water of Lake Erie.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, if that proposition is sound, it will make no difference that in England, Germany, and France free coinage is not known, and that silver is not coined in those countries as in any other. I accept the theory that the use of silver will have some influence upon its commercial value.

Mr. STEWART. Also in this connection let me state what the Royal Commission said. It said the fact that the mints of the Latin Union of Europe were open—the French mints, for the others did not amount to very much—kept an equilibrium of exchange throughout the world and made gold and silver throughout the world practically one money for commercial purposes.

Mr. PALMER. Now, does the Senator say that is true?

Mr. STEWART. That what is true? The only difference that ever occurred between the price of silver in London and Paris was the difference in exchange between the two places. As long as the French mints were open there was an equilibrium of exchange throughout the world. The Royal Commission attribute the divergence between the values of the two metals to the breaking of the bimetallic tie, the closing of the French mints. There is no doubt if the price of silver in this country is 129 it would be so all over the world. That is perfectly obvious.

Mr. PALMER. And if the price of silver is 68 here it will be so all over the world?

Mr. STEWART. It will.

Mr. PALMER. That much, now, seems to be settled; and it is claimed by the Senator from Nevada that the unlimited coinage of legal-tender silver in the United States would advance silver bullion, not only in the United States, but all over the world, to 129.

Mr. STEWART. That is what we claim. I want to state further in this connection, that we may not be misunderstood, that bimetalism does not depend upon parity at all. Bimetalism is the double standard. It is the right of the owner of silver bullion and of gold bullion to have it coined into money. The opening of the mints and the right of the debtor to pay in the cheaper metal is all there is in bimetalism. The operation of bimetalism is to throw the entire demand upon the cheaper metal until it brings it up to a parity with the other. That is the way it operated for four thousand years. If silver was more convenient to get when the mints were open everybody would use silver, and the demand being thrown upon that, it would raise the parity.

But it is a mistake to suppose that the silver-standard countries can not obtain gold as easily as the gold-standard countries, and much more so. Russia is a silver-standard country. She accumulated in the last twenty years about $500,000,000 of gold because she had plenty of money and business was stimulated so that she had something to export. Now, the Argentine Republic owes large gold obligations. I am told that they can pay them as well as we can, but they will pay them with exports, and they can get as much for their wheat as we can. Mexico has gold obligations to pay, and she can get the gold to pay them with much easier than we can. They do not trouble her at all, because she has something to export. The trouble with us is that at the present price for our commodities, the gold price, we can not export and make a living out of it. Consequently we can not buy gold without a great sacrifice. We are becoming bankrupt because we can not buy gold. Now, see what our fixed charges are, which are—

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President—

Mr. STEWART. I will refrain.

Mr. PALMER. I have listened to the Senator with great pleasure, but I propose to leave the floor in a moment, being indebted entirely to the Senator from New York for the time I have occupied. I wish to state in conclusion that mere conjecture and speculation furnish no sufficient ground for legislative action. I refer to the Senator from Nevada, because he represents more distinctly than anyone else the free-silver party of the Senate, unless it may happen to be the chairman of the Republican national committee, who speaks, I have no doubt, not only for himself, but for his party. I said that I have sought to get clear and precise information upon certain important points, because I wish the country to understand them.

I know that the free coinage of silver will lead to the disuse of gold. It may be temporary, as Senators seem to think. I know that the result of free coinage will be to establish a standard of value different from that which now exists. I have sought to know from Senators who ought to know what that difference would be. It is very important to the debtor and creditor classes in Illinois that they shall know to what extent their values will be affected by this new standard of measurement. They feel the burdens of existing conditions. They are anxious to know if any better condition can be pointed out to them. They want certainty, clearness, all reasonable precision, and in this effort of mine to obtain clear and definite information as to what the expectations of free-coinage men are as to the relation between the two standards I can not get a word. We have this hope, this vain and illusory hope—a hope contradicted by all human experience—that by mere legislation you can bring up an ounce of silver, now worth 68 cents, to $1.29, which covers the comparative difference of the two dollars.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question.

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Desiring to reach a conclusion as to certainty in the measure of value, I ask the Senator from Illinois to state whether or not he agrees with the British Royal Commission that the purchasing power of gold has constantly appreciated since 1873?

Mr. PALMER. No; I do not agree with that statement.

Mr. CARTER. I ask the Senator whether he agrees with the further proposition that the prices of products of human toil and of the soil itself as measured in gold have depreciated in value since 1873?

Mr. PALMER. I agree with that.

Mr. CARTER. I will ask the Senator from Illinois then—

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana will pardon me.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to present the full question.

Mr. PALMER. I am asking questions now for the time being, and when the Senator gets through with my question it will afford me great satisfaction to answer his.

Mr. CARTER. I am endeavoring, if the Senator will allow me to conclude my question—

Mr. PALMER. I will yield to the Senator if he will answer my question. I want to know what will be the comparative difference between the standard of value the Senator proposes and the standard of value which now exists.

Mr. CARTER. I have been endeavoring to answer that question by asking the Senator from Illinois questions which in and of themselves will answer it.

Mr. PALMER. Oh, of course the Senator has.

Mr. CARTER. It is merely—

Mr. PALMER. And when I consent to that mode of interrogation the Senator can indulge in it.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Illinois, conceding the fact to be that prices of all the products of human toil, the products of land, whether in town lots or broad acres—

Mr. PALMER. I have not conceded that.

Mr. CARTER. Have been constantly decreasing in value since 1873—

Mr. PALMER. I do not want the Senator from Montana to make me responsible for the poetry of his speech.

Mr. CARTER. And that the purchasing power of the gold dollar has therefore increased, I ask whether or not the Senator, since certainty is desired, has any substantial hope to offer to the people of the country to expect a change in the current of perpetual and universal depreciation of prices under the gold standard?

Mr. PALMER. Now, I submit to the Senator from Montana whether he himself will say that that is an answer to my question. I asked him a distinct and plain question. I have given him an opportunity to answer it. Will he say to me frankly that he has told me what would be the difference by the standard of value produced by free coinage and the existing standard of value? That is the question I asked.

Mr. CARTER. My question was predicated upon the proposition presented by the Senator that certainty in the transaction of business is a necessity.

Mr. PALMER. I have never said that.

Mr. CARTER. I understood that to be one of the propositions presented.

Mr. PALMER. I am not responsible for anything the Senator has understood.

Mr. CARTER. Does the Senator now deny that certainty as to valuation of products by the measure or standard of value is essential to a fair and just line of transactions among men?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; I deny it.

Mr. CARTER. That is the only ground of contention between the friends of the gold standard and the friends of the bimetallic standard.

Mr. PALMER. I have often known ingenious gentlemen to seek to get an admission of their premises and then to suggest their own conclusion. I have been taught that in an argument no gentleman has a right to take anything for granted. Therefore, when the Senator asks me if I grant certain things I say I do not. The Senator must build up his own argument, based upon his own premises, and when he demonstrates his premises, to do which I will give him an opportunity in a moment, he can draw his conclusion.

I wish to say that I have lived in Illinois for sixty years. I have seen the time when lands—good tracts of land—were worth four or five dollars an acre. I have seen corn worth 10 cents a bushel. If the Senator will allow me just one moment I can perhaps state a significant fact in this connection. A neighbor of mine owed me $34. I was about leaving home for court, and he wanted to pay the debt in corn. I told him I would take it. I had one horse and very little idea of what the horse would need. He asked me where to put it, and I said in a little crib that stood back of my house. I was absent several days. When I got to town a number of fellows were waiting for me and they followed me, and when I got to my house I found that the 334 bushels of corn had not only filled the crib, but had actually covered it all over. Corn was worth 10 cents a bushel. Corn was burned in the field because it had no marketable value.

I have known pork, dressed hogs, at St. Louis to sell for $1.50 net. I have seen prices in that condition. I do realize the fact that there has been a decline of prices within a comparatively late period. Last year corn in Illinois, in my county, was worth 45 cents. But these were accidents.

This country, notwithstanding all that is said, is a flourishing one. There are changes in business. New machinery comes into use and takes the place of men. Employment is difficult to be found, especially in the lines that are termed skilled employment. This great social and economic change is going on. How it will result I do not know, but I will say that, in my judgment, whenever any party in this country succeeds in obtaining control of the Government and coins silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 and makes that silver a legal tender for all debts, public and private, we will witness—not I, because I do not think that party will come into power in my brief day, but those who live then will witness—conditions of a character that will be so far beyond anything we witness now that they will sigh for the return of the good times of 1896.

Mr. HARRIS. I believe I will ask the Senator from Illinois a question, if he will allow me. The Senator is eagerly anxious to know what effect the free coinage of silver will have upon what he chooses to call the commercial value of silver bullion.

Mr. PALMER. I ask what will be the commercial value?

Mr. HARRIS. Now, the question I want to ask the Senator from Illinois is this: If he were the owner of silver bullion and had the right to carry it to the mint and have each 412½ grains of that bullion coined into a legal-tender dollar which would pay as much debt and buy as much property as any other legal-tender dollar that exists within the limits of the United States, would he take less than a dollar for each 412½ grains of that silver bullion, or would any sane man who owns silver bullion, when he had the right to have it coined into a legal-tender dollar which would perform every function that any other legal-tender dollar can perform, take less than a dollar for each 412½ grains of silver?

Mr. PALMER. I have been lucky in getting every sort of an answer by my friends who favor the free coinage of silver except a direct answer.

Mr. HARRIS. My answer is that it will bring silver up to par value, to $1.29.

Mr. PALMER. The answer to that is that it would bring up the value of the silver of all the world, according to the theory of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. I would be glad to see it so.

Mr. PALMER. I do not believe it. It is contrary to all human experience. I grant that giving an additional use to silver may advance it probably to some extent, as the Senator from Missouri says; but I do not believe that the mere action of the American Congress in giving to silver all the powers that can be given to it will establish a parity between a dollar of gold and a dollar of silver.

Mr. President, I have occupied a good deal of time, and I beg pardon.

Mr. VEST. Let me ask the Senator from Illinois one question in regard to a statement he made. The Senator used the expression in his speech, in a very aggressive way, that the silver Democrats had made some progress through snap conventions. Will the Senator from Illinois explain to what convention he alludes?

Mr. PALMER. I will. I allude to the conventions held last year in Missouri and Illinois.

Mr. VEST. Missouri?

Mr. PALMER. Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. Last year?

Mr. PALMER. Last year.

Mr. COCKRELL. In 1895?

Mr. PALMER. In 1895.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was advertised for six months.

Mr. PALMER. The convention called in June, 1895, at Springfield.

Mr. VEST. Very good. What was there in the nature of a snap convention about the Missouri convention?

Mr. PALMER. An unnecessary convention must necessarily be a snap convention. It was called for the purpose of committing the Democratic party to free silver.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was called to give expression to the opinion of nine-tenths of those in the Democratic ranks of Missouri.

Mr. PALMER. Why give expression if the party was so united?

Mr. COCKRELL. Because a few men were trying to misrepresent us by telling the Administration that we were in favor of the gold standard.

Mr. PALMER. If the term "snap convention" shall be at all offensive I will withdraw it, but I will say that I know of no better term by which to describe it. The Senator will have to supply me with one. It was a convention called for the deliberate purpose of committing the Democratic party of Missouri, in advance of any actual necessity, to the free-silver dogma.

Mr. VEST. In other words, the Senator from Illinois is kind enough to suggest that the Democrats of Missouri could be brought up against their consent and made to utter declarations that they did not believe. Now, what power could make them do that?

Mr. PALMER. I have not said that.

Mr. VEST. That is the meaning of the Senator's statement, because the Senator says it was to commit them. Of course if it did commit them in obedience to their own wishes and opinions it was not a snap convention, but a perfectly fair and deliberate convention.

Mr. PALMER. They were convened by their managers.

Mr. VEST. They were convened by their own will. The Senator from Illinois can speak for his own people, but he can not speak for mine.

The Democrats of Missouri, nine hundred and ninety out of every one thousand are in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, and at every opportunity they have so expressed themselves. In the last convention held in Missouri, after due and deliberate notice, out of the whole State there were some dozen gentlemen who represented what they call the sound-money dogma, a catchword which is so false as to be almost infamous. It is an intimation that we who favor the free coinage of silver are in favor of unsound money, when the Senator has been combating here the idea that we can possibly be correct in saying that free coinage will make a silver dollar equal to a gold dollar. How can it be unsound money if the silver dollar will buy as much and pay as much debt?

Mr. PALMER. It will not.

Mr. VEST. We believe it will. The Senator answers it by saying he does not believe it.

Mr. PALMER. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. If that is logic, I am perfectly willing to leave it there.

Mr. PALMER. I say it is contradicted by all human experience.

Mr. VEST. I say it is not contradicted by all human experience. I say that prior to 1873 for eighty years in this country we had the aggregate of both metals, as Rothschild called it, gold and silver, for standard money, and we maintained them both, except that the white metal in 1873 was at 3 per cent premium over gold. For two hundred years in Europe gold and silver were maintained standard money. The Senator tells us human experience contradicts it. Never until 1873 in this country and until the coinage law demonetizing silver was passed was it supposed by the people of the United States that they would be called upon to do business with one metal as the standard money of redemption.

Mr. PUGH. The best way to settle it is to try free coinage.

Mr. PALMER. Free coinage has no attraction for me, even as described by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. That is not the question.

Mr. PALMER. The devising of a new dollar which has never existed in this country before or a coin that never existed in this country before—

Mr. VEST. The silver dollar?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; the silver dollar. I mean a silver dollar of 412½ grains of silver when the ounce of silver is worth but 68 cents.

Mr. VEST. What made it worth 68 cents? That is the question.

Mr. PALMER. The people did not want it.

Mr. VEST. It was made worth 68 cents, according to the Senator's statement, by closing the mints and taking away from silver its principal element of intrinsic or commercial value, which was the money element. After closing the mints and perpetrating this outrage upon the people of the United States, then they take advantage of their own wrong and say that the commercial value of silver has been lessened.

Mr. PALMER. In 1873 Congress passed a law for which I am not responsible. I believe there are Senators present who did vote for the law. But since that time legislation has been against silver, and you might as well attempt to resurrect a dead body and say that that body once lived and moved with all the energy and power of a perfect young life as to say that you can now, because it once lived, reinvigorate a metal and make it as valuable as it once was. The work is done. I did not do it. The world did it. It is done. Silver is worth 68 cents an ounce now to-day.

Mr. ALLEN. Measured by what standard?

Mr. PALMER. Gold is worth about $20.64 an ounce to-day, and the idea that you can make them of equal value involves an absurdity that appears to me incomprehensible.

Mr. VEST. Now I will proceed with what I have to say in regard to the statement of the Senator from Illinois about the snap conventions. As to the Senator's last remark, I have simply to make this assertion: If, as I have shown and as the Senator can not deny, prior to 1873, when the mints were open to both metals, silver was not only equal to gold but at 3 per cent premium over it, why is it not perfectly logical and rational to assume that if you undo that legislation the result will be what we contend it will be, that the parity between the two coins will be restored?

Mr. PALMER. Because, if the Senator will allow me, the business of the world is adjusted with respect to the new relations, and therefore we can not do that.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon. That is not true either, with great deference to him. The world is divided between the use of silver and the use of gold and the use of both.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Missouri tell me any country where both metals are used for coins except the United States?

Mr. VEST. They are both used in Mexico, in India, and in Japan, where $31,000,000 of gold is in the bank.

Mr. PALMER. For what purpose is it kept there?

Mr. VEST. It is kept there for all the purposes of gold anywhere, as a bank reserve, as money in circulation, as standard money of redemption; and yet no country in the world has advanced in civilization so rapidly as Japan. Almost unknown a few years ago, to-day Japan is in the front rank of Eastern nations and almost in the front rank of nations throughout the world. There is an evidence of the use of both metals, or of the use, if the Senator will have it, of silver alone. Yet we are told that nothing but disaster can come to the people of the United States if we now restore the old functions of silver, those which it had prior to 1873.

But, Mr. President, I wish to say one word in regard to the Senator's allegation about the Missouri convention having been a snap convention. I want to say now—and there is not a gold man in Missouri who will deny it, unless he is a lunatic—that the last convention in Missouri, deliberately called, upon full notice, after earnest and acrimonious discussion, was the most representative and the largest convention ever held in the State, every county and every township being represented. The Senator says men who were not leaders were at the head of the movement.

Mr. PALMER. I did not make that remark. I said leaders—

Mr. VEST. The Senator said the leaders did not lead.

Mr. PALMER. I said that.

Mr. VEST. Could the people of Missouri, the fifth State in the Union, have been brought into such a convention against their own consent and their own intellectual convictions? The people lead in this country, and the man who thinks he can lead them against their will ought to be put into a lunatic asylum and kept there for life. The people make the issue; the people assemble the convention, and a public man in the State of Missouri who would undertake to lead them against the free coinage of silver would be crushed so effectually that his remains would be unrecognizable.

Mr. PALMER. I am through, but I should like to say one word in reply to the Senator from Missouri. The Senator knows the extent to which leadership exists in Missouri as well as in other States, and his compliment to the people for their spontaneous movement has not about it the merit of any very great originality.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Illinois mean to say that all he has said to-day has been original? I think I have heard it in this Hall for the last eighteen years ad nauseam. If he has advanced a single original idea I should like to see it in print.

Mr. PALMER. That looks a little bit as if it were unkind.

Mr. VEST. I did not so mean it. The Senator said to me that what I said had no originality in it.

Mr. PALMER. No; I did not say—

Mr. VEST. The question is whether it is true or not.

Mr. PALMER. I did not use the expression in that form. There was nothing to justify the retort, which might provoke another retort of equal severity.

Mr. President, I am through. I yield the floor to the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

Mr. VEST. Of course I did not mean to say to my friend the Senator from Illinois anything personally disagreeable. If in the heat of debate I did so, I am sorry for it. But he certainly stated that what I said did not have the merit of originality. I was compelled to say that nothing upon the silver question is original. If there is an original idea upon it, the man who has discovered it is entitled to a patent beyond any question.

I was proceeding to say that if ever a convention of the people represented popular sentiment fairly, earnestly, and fully it was the convention held in Missouri to which the Senator has applied the epithet of being a snap convention.

I have—and it is all I shall say in connection with my personal history—struggled to the full extent of my limited ability to prevent the unfortunate condition of affairs in the Democratic party to-day upon this currency question. I stood here at the risk of severe criticism from men who agree with me in regard to the free and unlimited coinage of silver and begged the Democrats in this Senate not to thrust this issue upon us, if possible, but to hold the party together upon some conservative basis.

I went to the President of the United States in person, and to the Secretary of the Treasury, and undertook to show them what would result if it was attempted to force the Democratic party to the single gold standard. I told them that it was impossible to hold us together, whatever might happen to the Republican party, in which equal dissensions existed, but which had the cohesive power coming from being a minority party and which might cause them to survive this struggle for a short time, at least, in face of the great issue of protection to which that party is pledged. I stood here, as I have said, upon this floor, and was alienated by personal and political friends upon this side of the Chamber because I begged my party associates, if possible, to postpone at least this question in regard to the free coinage of silver until we could adjust other matters and crystallize the power of the party upon what I conceived to be its fundamental principles; but I also said, and say now, that if forced to the issue, I never would consent to monometallism, either of gold or silver.

That opinion is based upon my absolute conviction that there is not enough of either metal in the world to transact the business of mankind without oppression to a large majority. I believe that monometallism either of gold or silver is a dastard monopoly, which gives into the hands of the few the power to control the interests and the products of the many. But we have come now to that position when against all protest, all supplication even, the Administration has forced this issue upon us. We attempted when the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman Act was before the Senate to effect a compromise with the Administration upon this subject, and offered to support that repeal against our convictions, provided they would make some concession to silver as a money metal.

That compromise was rejected, and we were then compelled either to follow the money ideas of Mr. Cleveland, the President of the United States, and of the Secretary of the Treasury, who gave his adhesion to him, either to follow their lead in regard to this matter and separate ourselves absolutely from our own convictions and those of our people, or to follow the manly and honest dictates of our own judgment. In such a contingency no self-respecting public man could hesitate for an instant. I am, therefore, not responsible for this discussion or for similar discussions before the people of the United States.

Mr. President, this thing has come to that pass when manhood and decency will not permit us to stand here and be told that we are in favor of unsound money, that we are advocating snap conventions, and that we are attempting to lead the people in the direction of great disaster.

This morning I saw in the papers that our President had extended the civil service to something like 30,000 more employees of this Government. This Administration, therefore, has pledged the people of the United States, so far as it was possible, to the civil service reform, of which we have heard so much. One of the first elements of that reform is a divorce between the patronage of the Government and its political action. One of the burning tenets of this school is that the patronage of the Government should not be indirectly used for the purpose of influencing the political convictions or declarations of the people.

Some years ago a very dear friend of mine at my instance was made United States district attorney for the western district of Missouri; a man of eminent ability, of spotless character, who stands as high in the estimation of the people of Missouri as any man within its broad domain. When Mr. Cleveland was a candidate the second time for President, this gentleman, a Democrat belonging to the same school with myself, during the session of the United States Federal court at Kansas City, went at night to the adjacent villages within easy access of the place where the court was held and plead with the people to vote the Democratic ticket, which he believed represented the welfare of the country. I was astounded on picking up the St. Louis papers upon a certain fateful morning to find that my friend had been removed from office, without a hearing, simply because while United States attorney he had gone out and spoken for the party to which he and the President and myself belonged.

I took the train within ten minutes for Washington, arrived here, went to His Excellency, and asked him respectfully upon what ground he had perpetrated what I considered an outrage upon my friend, an eminent Democrat. He brought out a newspaper paragraph from a paper which had bolted the Democratic ticket the preceding summer, and also helped to beat the Democratic nominee for Congress. This paper had charged that Colonel Benton, my friend, while holding the office of United States attorney had been guilty of pernicious partisanship by advocating the cause of his party.

I knew the facts and had telegraphed to the judge of the court for a statement in regard to the way Colonel Benton had discharged the duties of his office and whether he had neglected them in order to give his attention to politics. Upon the next day the answer from the judge by telegraph reached me. I carried it to the President and said to him that I personally knew the incumbent had not been guilty of any dereliction or neglect of his duty in order to make speeches for the party to which he and I belonged. When the President discovered that there was no basis for his action, that this newspaper paragraph was simply groundless and dictated by personal or political motives, I will do him the justice to say that he immediately revoked the order; but, not satisfied with revoking it, he addressed a letter—published first in the press of the country—to Colonel Benton, in which he read him a lecture and said he revoked the order because he found Colonel Benton had not neglected his duties, but he wished it distinctly understood that while any man held office under his Administration he did not approve of his dabbling in political canvasses or endeavoring to put his opinions before the people of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will my colleague permit me to read what occurred at the Michigan convention recently?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Where does New York come in here? This is Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. One moment. I only wish to read a paragraph:

Tuscaloosa County sent 10 postmasters and 1 internal-revenue collector, and instructed them for silver, but they bolted instructions and voted against silver.

Mr. VEST. Let me understand of the Senator from New York whether I am taking his time?

Mr. HILL. I understood I had the floor.

Mr. VEST. I was not aware of it.

Mr. HILL. I had the floor and yielded to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. If the Senator from Missouri is nearly through, I will wait.

Mr. VEST. I am not disposed to raise the point of order, but I understood, with great deference to the Senator from New York, that the Senate had determined that no Senator could farm out the time here.

Mr. HILL. I did not farm out the time. I yielded to the Senator from Illinois, and I asked if I could be recognized after he was through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). The Chair will state that under the order adopted yesterday the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] was entitled to the floor this morning at the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from New York was distinctly entitled to the floor this morning; but the Senator had no right, under the unanimous-consent agreement, to give the floor to somebody else and then come in and claim it later.

Mr. VEST. I understand that to be the rule of the Senate.

Mr. HILL. The Senator does not wish to do me injustice? At the time I yielded I asked the Chair if I could be recognized after the Senator from Illinois had concluded, and the Chair expressly stated that he so understood.

Mr. TELLER. Of course the Senator could be recognized if nobody else wanted the floor, but he has no right to farm out the floor all the time.

Mr. HILL. I did not assume to farm it out.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is in perfect order.

Mr. HILL. I made the reservation which I have stated, and any Senator could have objected at the time if he desired to do so, but I did not assume to farm out the floor.

Mr. VEST. I was not in the Senate when it adjourned yesterday evening; I was called out by committee business; but I was under the impression that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] was proceeding in his own right, in his own time, and I am simply replying to some observations he made.

As I have said, the President of the United States, while he revoked this unjust order, accompanied it with the declaration that under his administration of the Government public officials whilst holding office should not dabble, as he expressed it, in political matters.

Now, what is the conduct of the Administration in regard to this money question before the people of this country? Mr. President, I say it with deep regret that this Administration has given its whole influence, all its patronage, all the power of eloquence and of logic on the part of its Cabinet officers to influence the opinions of the people of the United States and to influence the snap conventions of which the Senator from Illinois has spoken. There was not long ago—a year ago—a Democratic convention in Nebraska, and the next day it was flashed across the country that the people of Nebraska had decided for honest money, sound money—this being the cant falsehood that is used to entrap the innocent and ignorant voters. When the truth was known it was found the convention was made up of officeholders—postmasters, marshals, collectors of internal revenue—men who are living upon the patronage of the Federal Government, and whose lungs were filled with the air that came from the Treasury of the United States. This was a triumph of sound money! Where, then, was the civil-service reform that gives us to-day 30,000 new incumbents of offices who can only be removed for cause?

Why, Mr. President, there has not been a week when there was more than barely a majority of Cabinet ministers present in Washington to discharge the duties for which they are paid by the people of this country. They have been traversing their respective States, and even other States, haranguing the people in joint and single debate, denouncing the "silver lunatics," and talking about "unsound and depreciated money." Have we heard a single whisper of censure from His Excellency in regard to these proceedings? Have we heard any lecture from him such as was given to my friend when he dared to advocate the cause, the unbroken cause, of the Democratic party at that time?

But more than that. I do not read, as a rule, from newspapers, but I happen to have this statement, fortified by private letters, from the Adrian (Mich.) Press, whose editor is a man of high personal character and unquestioned veracity, and who was a delegate to the late convention in that State. The Senator from Illinois talked of snap conventions. Let the Secretary read that from an eyewitness who participated in that convention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

DELEGATES WHO BROKE AWAY FROM INSTRUCTIONS.

Of the 823 delegates elected to the convention, 723 were present either in person or by substitute, as shown by the first ballot. Four hundred and ninety-seven were elected under instructions from their county conventions to vote as a unit for a 16 to 1 silver resolution. Granting that the 45 absentees were all silver men, the silver cause ought still to have 452 votes in the convention.

As the vote for Judge McGrath (310) was a fair test of the relative strength of the first candidate of the Administration gold crowd and the first candidate of the silver, it follows that there were 142 silver backsliders in the convention.

Every mother's son of the 142 is presumed to have acquiesced to instructions of their home conventions to stand by the silver standard to the last ditch, yet they came to Detroit and bolted at the start into the camp of the gold-bug Administrationists, where they were received with open arms.

Here is where the backsliders came from, together with the number from each county: Barry County, entire delegation of 11 instructed for 16 to 1 and all deserted and went over to the gold-bug Administrationists. Calhoun, 14 instructed for silver; 13 turned traitors and voted with the gold bugs. St. Joseph, entire 11 delegates instructed for silver; 9 were backsliders.

Muskegon, 7 instructed for silver; all proved to be traitors. Oceana, all 7 instructed for the white metal, 4 deserted to the gold bugs. Iosco, all 5 instructed, 4 deserted. Lenawee, 23 instructed, 5 deserted. Hillsdale, 13 instructed, 3 deserted. Cass, 10 instructed, 1 deserted. Clinton, 11 instructed, 9 deserted. Newaygo, 4 instructed, 2 deserted. Menominee, 7 instructed, all backsliders.

In other counties where no instructions were given, silver men deserted as follows: Alpena, 1; Bay, 7; Berrien, 5; Charlevoix, 3; Cheboygan, 2; Crawford, 2; Grand Traverse, 2; Gratiot, 11; Jackson, 10; Lake, 1; Lapeer, 2; Marquette, 1; Midland, 1; Monroe, 1; Saginaw, 12; Shiawassee, 2; Van Buren, 3; Washtenaw, 4.

The silver men had a list compiled from the returns of county conventions showing that had every county sent the full number of delegates, and had there been no backsliding, they would have had, counting only instructed delegates, a majority of 161.

Chairman Stevenson's private figures yesterday morning—not the figures that were given out for publication—showed a majority of 88 for the Administration.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I caused that statement to be read instead of reading a much more lengthy one from the Detroit Tribune and another from the Cincinnati Enquirer, giving the details more in extenso; but I should not have had any newspaper articles read except for corroborating private letters on my desk, which any Senator is at liberty to examine. I have not telegraphed to the authors for permission to read them in the Senate, and therefore shall not do so; but they are here. They come from men for whose integrity and veracity I am willing to vouch; men who have held high positions, who were delegates in that convention, and who are now delegates to the national convention to be held at Chicago, and who depict a state of facts which are disgraceful to American public life. It is stated by one of those gentlemen that two-thirds—I learn from another source that all except one—of the postmasters of Michigan were on the floor of the State convention.

I am prepared for the facetious remark that the material for delegates must have been very poor if they could have been bought or seduced after they arrived in the great city of Detroit. Mr. President, those of us who know anything about conventions know how this proxy system can be used to trample upon the will of the people. We know that when money even for travel cannot be obtained by the agricultural classes of the country there are men holding public office under the Government of the United States ready to pay their own way with proxies in their pockets to represent upon the floor of the convention a constituency by whom they would be repudiated. This convention in Michigan no more represented the will of the Democratic party of that State than I represent the will of an English constituency to-day upon this floor. The statement that the Democrats of Michigan are not for the free coinage of silver is, in my judgment, as false as to say that the Democrats of the State of Missouri are opposed to it.

It was stated in Missouri prior to the last convention that the gold men or sound-money men would control the convention. Out of 800 delegates there were not one dozen sent there who did not favor the free coinage of silver. Even from the great commercial centers like St. Louis and Kansas City the delegates from every ward except one were in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of the white metal.

I am a delegate to the Chicago convention against my wish, sent there by my people to discharge a duty. I have stated, under much criticism in Missouri, that I was a Democrat under all conditions and intended to abide by the action of my party; that I was too old to hunt for a new political home; that I should die, as I have lived, in the party of Jefferson, devoted to his teachings and principles. But I serve notice now that if this convention at Chicago is to be made up of Federal officeholders, brought there to overawe and override the wishes of the honest majority of the Democratic party throughout the United States, it is no Democratic convention with me. I shall abide the will of the majority of my party, honestly and fairly expressed. I make no threat, but I want no misunderstanding. The Democratic party is a party of the people, controlled by an honest expression of their will, and not by Federal patronage.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I am rather surprised to observe that this is somewhat of a prelude to the national Democratic convention at Chicago. The date of that convention has been fixed for the 7th day of July, and I do not propose to anticipate any of the difficulties which will confront the Democracy at that time. While discussing the question of a snap convention between the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Missouri it was appropriate, I think, that they should both allow me to speak upon that question as an expert. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, in order to avoid having any snap convention in New York the Democracy of that State, I think, propose to have the latest convention of any that shall be held this summer. I did complain a little of Missouri Democrats in 1892 that, notwithstanding all the alleged wrongs which had been perpetrated against the Democracy of that State by Mr. Cleveland during his prior Administration, they made haste pretty early to declare in 1892 in favor of "free coinage and Grover Cleveland." I am not going to discuss those questions here now. Neither am I to be betrayed into a defense of the civil-service policy of the present Administration. At some other time I may have something to say upon that question. Neither am I going to discuss the question of the Michigan Democracy nor anticipate the result of the Chicago convention. As the vote on the pending question is to be taken within an hour, and I think it is understood that I shall occupy the time, I shall proceed immediately to discuss the real question involved here.

I take pleasure in saying that I do not concur in all which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has said. I do not understand that a snap convention can be one duly called by the regular officials of one's party upon ample notice. I do not agree with my venerable friend from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], who styled the convention of last year in Missouri a snap convention. I do not agree with the epithet used toward the convention in Illinois that was held last year. The convention in Missouri and the convention in Illinois held last year were both conventions called by the regular officials of the party, namely, by the State committee, after due notice, of which everybody was notified, and subsequently the conventions were held, after reasonable notice. A political party has a right, in my judgment, to meet at any time, upon due notice of its central committee, to discuss any question, to take any position upon the silver question or the gold question, or any other question involved; and those who disagree with the controlling powers of the party have no right to refuse to attend the primaries, but they should be ready always to attend the primaries, and attend the conventions, and then abide by the result.

I take but little stock myself in the clamors which are raised against so-called "snap conventions." They are usually simply the clamors of the defeated minority. The minority should attend the conventions, having ample notice, and should abide by the result.

I see that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] is in the Chamber, and before I proceed with my regular argument I wish to quote from a portion of his speech delivered the day before yesterday. The Senator said:

Here is a telegram from the Morgan syndicate sent on the 21st day of December to the President and Secretary of the Treasury, telling the Government officials that the gold can not be procured in Europe because the credit of the United States is so bad, and that if their bid of 104 is not accepted at once they will withdraw the bid and refuse to furnish the gold in the United States, knowing as they did, and as the Secretary knew, that all the gold not already in the Treasury had been thoroughly cornered by Morgan and the banks associated with him.

I ask the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, who, I assume, honors me with hearing me, to what telegram did he refer?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator will find in another portion of my speech an allusion to that same telegram, in which I state the facts. I simply alluded to it there, and the remark was brought out by a question of the Senator from New York. I referred to the telegram in the body of my speech.

Mr. HILL. I am reading from the body of the speech.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator is reading from a portion of the speech which was in response to his questions. Nearly everything in the speech of which the Senator complains was drawn out by himself.

Mr. HILL. I am not complaining of the speech. If the Senator is satisfied with it I am. I simply ask the Senator to what telegram he refers? He said, "Here is a telegram." The Senator had papers before him. Will he be kind enough to produce that telegram? [A pause.] Mr. President, I desired to know something in regard to this, and I addressed an inquiry to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and asked him to explain in regard to that telegram. With the kind permission of the Senate, I ask leave to insert the reply in my remarks. I seem to have mislaid it. The information, permit me to state for the benefit of the Senator from South Dakota, received in answer to my inquiry of the Treasury Department, which I supposed I had here at my disposal, is that neither the Department nor any of the officials connected with this matter ever heard of such a telegram; they know nothing in regard to it, and the first knowledge that they had of it was when their attention was called to the remarks of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If the Senator will permit me—

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then that will be one of the facts to be established by the investigation; and it makes it all the more pertinent and important.

Mr. HILL. Is that all the answer the Senator can make to my inquiry? No, Mr. President; that will not do. I pass it. Yes; that will be one of the facts to investigate in this proposed investigation, if it shall be undertaken, and I shall await, and ask the Senate to await, with much interest, as to whether that allegation of the Senator from South Dakota will be sustained. There I leave it, with the privilege of putting in the communication from the Department, to which I have referred.

The letter referred to is as follows:

[Personal.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 7, 1879.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your inquiry regarding the statement of Senator PETTIGREW, on page 4835 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that he had a telegram from the Morgan syndicate (so-called) sent on the 21st of last December to the President and Secretary of the Treasury in regard to a bid for bonds, I desire to say that no such telegram or letter from Mr. Morgan or any person representing or represented by him, and no such bid was ever received by or brought to the attention of the President or Secretary of the Treasury or any of the officials of this Department.

Yours, truly,

HON. DAVID B. HILL,
United States Senate.

W. E. CURTIS.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in the line of the argument which I have marked out, I wish to read a complaint addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury from the Chase National Bank of New York, of January 16, 1879. I ask leave to incorporate the letter in my remarks, and I shall not detain the Senate by reading it.

The letter referred to is as follows:

CHASE NATIONAL BANK, NEW YORK, TO MR. SHERMAN.

CHASE NATIONAL BANK, New York, January 16, 1879.

SIR: In responding to your favor of the 13th instant I beg to say that in discriminating on commissions in favor of a very few and against the many is a political mistake.

That the Treasury circular of the 1st instant does make such discriminations is quite apparent.

Prior to the 1st instant you gave one-quarter of 1 per cent to all subscribers without respect to amount.

Now you give as follows: Nothing on an amount under $100,000; one-eighth per cent on an amount of $100,000 to $1,000,000; one-fourth per cent on an amount of $1,000,000 to $10,000,000; and an extra one-tenth per cent on any excess over $10,000,000.

This practically and effectually excludes all banks that will not undertake to carry out one million subscriptions in six months, commencing January 1; and the banks that work up one million in the six months are placed at a disadvantage, for the three or four banks who subscribe for the 4 percents with a perfect abandon can and do give better terms by reason of the extra one-tenth which they reach out for, and which your revised scale of commissions gives them.

From your standpoint it is proper that you should exult over the enormous subscriptions obtained during the first two weeks after the resumption.

Pardon me for expecting that this apparent extraordinary success will in a few months be pronounced a misfortune.

My fifty years of observation in this financial bedlam justifies me in looking doubtfully on this overdoing, I fear, of a good thing.

Another point I desire to make: I decidedly dissent to the practice of leaving such enormous amounts of money in a few banks.

Your Department of the Government has a controlling power over the national banks, and no others can be depositaries of United States money.

It is true these deposits are amply, yes, doubly, secured; first, by bonds; and second, by a preferred claim on the banks' assets, a fact not generally understood.

As a matter of public interest, no bank should be intrusted with an amount of public funds so vastly disproportionate to its capital as is tolerated, and seemingly encouraged, in a few instances.

I am aware that some of the depositaries claim that their "surplus" is available as capital.

The bank department and you, as the supervisor of that department, should bear in mind that "surplus" can be divided among the stockholders, lawfully, without notice to depositors.

Capital is the only fixed security.

You will excuse me for taking an interest in the national banks as a whole rather than in less than half a dozen of them.

Hoping you will see propriety and justice in falling back on the popular scale of commissions adopted in your August appeal to the banks and the public.

I remain, very respectfully, yours,

JOHN THOMPSON.

HON. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HILL. I simply cite this letter for the purpose of showing that there were complaints then, as now, in regard to the distribution of the various bonds of the Government.

I also will introduce another telegram from Mr. SHERMAN to the First National Bank of New York, dated January 18, 1879, which I shall not trouble the Senate with reading, but ask to incorporate in my remarks.

The telegram referred to is as follows:

MR. SHERMAN TO FIRST NATIONAL BANK, NEW YORK.

[Telegram.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 18, 1879.

H. C. FAHNESTOCK,
Vice-President First National Bank, New York:

Can not vary from agreement stated in letter yesterday. See Morgan at his house to-morrow. He will arrange with you.

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Mr. HILL. I also wish to have incorporated in my remarks a resolution passed on January 24, 1879, by the United States Senate, not a resolution of investigation, but a resolution of inquiry of the Secretary of the Treasury, asking all information in regard to bonds, compensation, services to brokers, and in reference to all the alleged scandals which were said then to pertain to that matter. I do not think that there were any scandals in fact. The point I am making is that former Secretaries of the Treasury have been subjected to the same suspicions, to the same charges. They have been refuted, and so, I say, the present Secretary of the Treasury will amply refute these charges and time will vindicate him.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

RESOLUTION OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 24, 1879.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate of the amount of commissions or other compensation paid to bankers, brokers, firms, companies, syndicates, and individuals for services in negotiating the sale of bonds and other obligations of the United States, from the year 1862 until the present time; when and to whom such commissions or compensation was paid, and when paid to syndicates, firms, corporations, or companies, to state the names of the persons composing the same.

And also to inform the Senate whether any, and, if any, what amount of commissions or other compensation has been paid to bankers, brokers, firms, companies, syndicates, and individuals for services rendered in refunding any of the bonds of the United States; and if any such payments have been made, to state when and to whom made; and also whether interest has been paid on called bonds at the same time that interest was accruing on the bonds sold to redeem the same, and whether such double interest has been uniformly paid while the refunding operation has been in progress, or on bonds sold for redemption purposes, specifying whether there has been any exception to such payments of double interest, and who was Secretary of the Treasury at the time of such exception, and how much double interest has been paid on each class of bonds, and the total amount thereof, and whether the money received for bonds sold by any bank or syndicate has, in all cases, been allowed to remain on deposit with the national banks acting as Government depositories pending the call of bonds, specifying the names of the banks and the length of time during which the proceeds of the bonds sold have been left on deposit with each bank; and whether at any time any gold coin has been delivered by the Treasury to any parties concerned in the negotiation of United States bonds or otherwise in exchange for or upon the security of United States bonds or in advance of the payment thereof, pending any call of bonds on which interest was allowed or paid up to the date of maturity of the call; and also whether any money in the Treasury held for the payment of overdue called bonds has been left on deposit, without interest, in any Government depository, and what was the largest amount thereof at any one time, stating the names of the banks in which such money was deposited, and what security the Treasury held for the payment thereof when demanded.

"Provided, That information heretofore communicated to either House of Congress shall not be repeated, but references to the documents where the same is to be found shall be made, and names of subscribers to popular loans since June, 1877, to whom no commissions have been paid or allowed, may be omitted."

Attest:

GEO. C. GORHAM, Secretary.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, considerable was said in a recent discussion which was had about the necessity for a popular loan. The difficulty in awarding bonds to investors is very great. It is appreciated. Contained in the correspondence on page 618 of the book which I hold in my hand is a newspaper item, which I also ask permission to publish in my remarks, showing that the same tactics by bidders were resorted to then as now and that the same clamor of men who wanted to advertise themselves as disappointed bidders took place then. This is the item to which I refer:

After the 4 percents that have been offered were all sold, many large subscriptions were received, particularly from New York banks. These were not, of course, accepted. Some of them were forwarded to the Secretary after he had left the Department for the day. He is in doubt to-night whether these are all bona fide subscriptions, or whether those who sent them were not already aware that no more 4 percents were just now for sale, and whether they did not therefore make their offers for fame and not for the purpose of obtaining the bonds.

Mr. President, that is always the difficulty. When your loans are made in the Government there are men at the last moment making their bids when they know the Department is closed and the bids can not be accepted, and they do it simply for the purpose of advertising themselves. That was something like the situation with the Graves bid, and the situation with some other bids in this instance. This newspaper item simply corroborates that fact.

I also desire to have read a letter to Mr. SHERMAN from the Continental National Bank of New York, on page 623, and another from the National Bank of the State of New York to the Secretary, making complaints of unfair treatment, making complaints of favoritism, making against the distinguished Senator from Ohio the same charges that we have heard ringing in our ears for the last six months against the present distinguished Secretary of the Treasury. He certainly will understand me. I am simply pointing to these things to show that they were unfair then, as they are unfair now—not worthy of investigation then, as they are not worthy of investigation now. They were not investigated then, but the Senator from Ohio, the then Secretary of the Treasury, was asked to explain in regard to them, to which I will allude later.

The letters referred to are as follows:

CONTINENTAL NATIONAL BANK OF NEW YORK TO MR. SHERMAN.

CONTINENTAL NATIONAL BANK,
New York, April 7, 1879.

DEAR SIR: Since our Mr. Randolph's letter of Saturday, the parties from whom we received the $3,000,000 subscription, of 4th of April, have made formal demand upon us for the bonds. We supposed that your telegram declining to receive the same had set all question at rest. The parties now enforce their claim with the statement that others who subscribed similarly within the business hours of that day have been awarded their bonds.

The subscription in question is the one to which we referred in our first telegram, when we stated that there were "more to follow"; but as the particulars could not be made up until the day's work was over, they did not reach us until shortly after 3 o'clock, as has been the practice of the same parties with all the subscriptions they have made through us. They seem to think, therefore, that as their subscription was made entirely in the regular and established order in which their preceding ones had been made, they can hold us to the delivery.

We should, perhaps, add that the parties in question were not members of the syndicate whose bid we afterwards forwarded, nor had they any knowledge of its existence.

Respectfully,

HON. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington

FRED. TAYLOR, Cashier.

NATIONAL BANK OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, NEW YORK, TO MR. SHERMAN.

THE NATIONAL BANK OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
New York, April 7, 1879.

SIR: We telegraphed you to-day, as follows:

"Your letter of 5th received. One million seven hundred of our subscriptions were received by us about 12 o'clock. About one million three hundred were received between the hours of 12 and 2.30. Balance of subscription received after 3 o'clock.

"Our customers complain of serious loss, having made large sales same day against their subscriptions, presuming that the same would be accepted.

"If possible for you to accept the three million, or any part, please telegraph."

Confirming the above, we beg to add that the subscriptions comprising the amount, $1,700,000, were received about 12 o'clock in the day, and the certificates issued and letters written and both duly signed before 2 p. m. Having been notified in the meantime that additional subscriptions to a large amount would be sent in shortly, we thought to inclose the whole in one letter to you, knowing that there was ample time, the Washington mail closing at 7.30 p. m.; and, in consequence of the large amount, we took the precaution to telegraph as soon as our total for the day was ascertained, say 3.30 p. m., and requested an early shipment.

The subscriptions were made in every way in accordance with our usual custom; and, in consequence of your declining to receive them, our customers, who have long been prominent dealers in United States bonds and subscribers to large amounts through us, have been subjected to great disappointment and loss. We knew of no reason for any unusual haste in dispatching our letters, and deviated in no respect from our usual custom.

The subscriptions and the order of their receipt were as follows: $200,000, $1,500,000, $500,000, $250,000, $500,000; total, $2,500,000, received prior to 3 p. m. We beg to hand you herewith a letter just received from Messrs. Speyer & Co., for whose account the subscription first in order, $200,000, was received, which will serve to show our position in the matter and the view which is generally taken of the matter by all of our customers interested.

We beg to say, in conclusion, that we shall be greatly accommodated if the subscriptions, as stated, can be accepted; and we await your reply, hoping that the matter will be adjusted to the satisfaction of all parties. Your reply at the earliest possible moment will oblige,

Yours, very respectfully,

R. L. EDWARDS, Cashier.

To the honorable SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, Mr. Carlisle will survive these attacks; history will vindicate him as history vindicated the Senator from Ohio. The names of the critics and fault-finders who found fault with the Senator from Ohio are almost unknown, while the name of the Secretary will live in the future history of our country.

In the famous book written by the Senator from Ohio, which I presume every member of the Senate has, the Senator himself speaks of the difficulties in the way of resumption which he encountered. He speaks of the difficulties which encountered him in the great refunding period wherein he administered the office of Secretary of the Treasury. He gives in full in his book one of the contracts which I have already incorporated in my remarks. He thought the contract was for the best interests of the country. He speaks of it in this form in the book entitled John Sherman's Recollections of Forty Years in the House, Senate, and Cabinet, page 642:

The importance of this contract and the open publicity of the negotiation created quite a sensation in the newspaper press, which presented a medley of praise and censure. All varieties of opinion, from extravagant flattery to extreme denunciation, were visited upon me by the editors of papers according to their preconceived opinions. I made no effort at secrecy and no answer to either praise or blame, but freely contributed any information in respect to the matter to anyone, whether friendly or otherwise, who applied to me. Perhaps as accurate a statement as any of my opinions was made by George Alfred Townsend, over his nom de plume of "Gath," in the New York Graphic of April 12, 1878. He said, etc.

Then he said further, and I quote from the book, on page 646:

The Eastern press, almost without exception, gave its hearty approval of the contract made and the mode and manner of the negotiation. The leading papers in New York, including the Herald, Tribune, and Times, gave full accounts. In the West, however, where the greenback craze, or "heresy," as it was commonly called, prevailed, the press was either indifferent or opposed to the contract and to the object sought. It is singular how strong the feeling in favor of an irredeemable paper currency was in many of the Western towns and among the farming people. United States notes, universally called greenbacks, were so much better as money than the bank notes were before the war that the people were entirely content with them, even if they were quoted at a discount in coin. They were good enough for them. Any movement tending to reduce their number was eagerly denounced.

At the very time when the negotiation was being made the Senate Finance Committee was discussing the expediency of agreeing to the bill repealing the resumption act which had passed the House. The indications were that the committee had agreed upon a time when a final vote should be taken upon this bill, and that it would be favorably reported by a majority of 1.

Subsequently a committee was appointed, the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, and, under and in pursuance of a resolution which was passed, it proceeded to take up the matter. Then the charges poured in against Secretary Sherman. He says:

While I was congratulating myself upon accomplishing an important work for the people, I had aroused an animosity more bitter and violent than any I ever encountered before or since. I was charged, directly, by a correspondent of the National Republican, published in Washington, with corruption—

So is John G. Carlisle now charged with corruption—and that I was interested in and would make money through the syndicate.

Was I not right in saying yesterday that history is repeating itself?

It was said that I "came to the United States Senate several years ago a poor and perhaps an honest man. To-day he pays taxes on a computed property of over half a million, all made during his Senatorial term, on a salary of $6,000 a year and perquisites." My property at home and in Washington was discussed in this letter and the inference was drawn that in some way, by corrupt methods, I had made what I possessed. It is true that I found many ready defenders, but I took no notice of these imputations, knowing that they were entirely unfounded, for I never, directly or indirectly, derived any advantage or profit from my public life except the salary.

At one time it was alleged that a subcommittee consisting of Messrs. Ewing, Hartzell, and Crittenden had been in correspondence with leading bankers, financiers, and capitalists, and that information had been obtained which led to the conclusion that I had derived profit from the negotiation. It was said that the committee proposed to interview me upon the subject of my recent syndicate operations; that the syndicate would get about $750,000 commission, which could have been saved had outsiders been permitted to buy the bonds; that the committee had summoned members of the syndicate and bankers who were not admitted into the syndicate, but who wanted to be allowed to buy bonds without any commission; that the allegation was so well supported that a resolution was prepared authorizing the committee to investigate, but that this was unnecessary, as the resolution authorizing the Banking and Currency Committee to make inquiries concerning resumption conferred authority to inquire into this matter. The only sign of the alleged investigation was an inquiry from Mr. Ewing, which was answered by me, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 19, 1878.

SIR: In compliance with your request of the 18th instant, I inclose herewith a copy of the contract recently made with a syndicate of New York bankers for the sale of 4½ per cent bonds. The only previous correspondence on this subject was a letter sent to said bankers and one to the presidents of certain national banks, copies of which are inclosed.

In response to your question as to the amount of accrued interest that will be allowed to the syndicate at each payment on account of such sales, I have to reply that no accrued interest is paid to them; but, as you will see by the fourth paragraph of said contract, they are to pay the United States the amount of interest accrued on the bond up to the time of payment for it in addition to the premium of 1½ per cent. The interest on the 4½ per cent bonds accrued on the 1st of March, and therefore the interest is added from that date to the date of payment for the bonds.

The amount of commission to be paid is fixed by the law at one-half of 1 per cent, but out of this the associates are to pay all expenses incurred by them in the sale, and reimburse the United States all expenses incurred by it as stated by said contract in paragraph 5.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

HON. THOMAS EWING,
Acting Chairman Committee on Banking and Currency,
House of Representatives.

Mr. President, unquestionably all that is true. The point for which I read from this book that will live in history when the men who traduced SHERMAN are forgotten is to show that his worthy successor has been subjected to the same mean, vile, contemptible criticism, that the same charge is made against him of complicity with syndicates, of accepting commissions from syndicates, and so on.

The Democratic committee of the House of Representatives did not rush in to have an investigation. Oh, no, Mr. President; they did not propose to adopt a resolution offensive in its terms, as this was when it was first proposed. They sent a letter. They asked the Secretary's appearance at one time. Then subsequently he himself wrote the following letter:

MAY 21, 1878.

DEAR SIR: I notice the crazy barkings of Buell in the Post about the syndicate, and favors granted to it by me.

I wish to say to you that nothing would please me better than to have the Banking and Currency Committee examine into this matter, and I am quite sure you will be gratified that the result will be to my credit.

Now, mark these words—

I have no desire to dignify this by asking an investigation, but only to say to you privately, as a personal friend, that I court, rather than fear, such an inquiry.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

HON. THOMAS EWING,
House of Representatives.

So, Secretary Carlisle to-day did not wish to dignify the whole matter by asking for an investigation. He was willing to bide his time. As I said four or five weeks ago, when this discussion first began, I was not authorized to speak for the Secretary when opposing the proposed investigation.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator if Mr. Carlisle has written a letter similar to the one he has just read.

Mr. HILL. I will come to that in a few moments; I am glad the Senator has asked the question. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio took the correct position at that time when he said he did not wish to dignify the proceeding by asking an investigation, but he was willing at all times to appear before a committee of either House to answer any question. That is the way, sir, that Secretary Carlisle should have been treated by the Senate. Its Committee on Finance should have invited him to come before them and explain any transaction about which they had any doubt. That is the correct, that is the manly course. The Democrats on the committee, in my humble judgment, should have seen fit if they had any doubt—Mr. President, they did not have any doubt about it—

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to add a word or two to the remarks already made.

Mr. HILL. The Senator is at liberty to do so.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of that committee Mr. Buckner, of Missouri, I believe, was then chairman. Mr. Ewing was the most active member. They all asked me to come before the committee of the House, and I was examined there for days. A book of probably 100 or 150 pages gave all the details of the examination. I feel bound to say that they treated me very kindly, as I have no doubt Mr. Carlisle will be treated kindly by any committee. They asked all sorts of questions, and they received answers so fully that at the close Mr. Buckner was very complimentary to me; and that was the end of it. There were no further remarks made about it, so far as I know. That was in regard to resumption in 1878.

If the Senator from New York will allow me, I will state that I think myself whenever the slightest insinuation or doubt or charge is made against an officer, especially of the Treasury Department, about which there will be naturally a great deal of feeling, because there is a great deal of responsibility, the best way is for him to come before the two bodies of Congress and there give all the information he possibly can. I did that before a committee of the Senate and a committee of the House of Representatives, both of which were strongly Democratic at the time. I was fairly treated by them and very justly in their report.

Mr. HILL. I think the Senator also says in the letter which I read that he would not dignify the proceeding by asking for an investigation, which was true, and that is what Mr. Carlisle has done. He submitted to the newspaper attacks; he submitted to the attacks in the Senate.

Now, Mr. Boutwell did not escape either. In 1872, when he was Secretary of the Treasury, a proceeding was instituted rather offensive in its character, and it was started by a resolution. I read from the Congressional Globe:

NEGOTIATION OF LOAN.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Ways and Means, recommending the adoption of the following resolution: "Resolved, That in the opinion of this House the Secretary of the Treasury, in negotiating the loan authorized by the act of July 14, 1870, has neither increased the bonded debt nor incurred an expenditure contrary to law."

Mr. DAWES. I now enter a motion to recommit this resolution to the committee.

Mr. COX. I desire to offer a substitute for the resolution reported.

Mr. DAWES. I will hear it read.

The Clerk read the proposed substitute, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to report the bill before them prohibiting all commissions, deductions, or compensation of any kind to any person for the sale, negotiation, and exchange of United States securities, and prohibiting the employment of any agent except a proper officer of the Treasury Department for such sale, negotiation, and exchange."

Mr. DAWES. I can not admit that now. On the 4th of December last the gentleman from New York who has just taken his seat [Mr. Cox] offered a preamble and resolution, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Whereas it is alleged that the Secretary of the Treasury, in placing the newly authorized 5 per cent bonds upon the market, has, in defiance of the law creating them, increased the public bonded debt, and has exceeded the one-half of 1 per cent allowed by the funding act for all expenses in placing said loan: Therefore

"Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be directed to investigate the said transaction and have power to send for persons and papers, and to report the amount of such increase of the bonded debt, if any, the agents employed and paid by him for the services rendered, all contracts pertaining to the same, and the sums paid to said agents."

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was not adopted by the House, but was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means for consideration. The committee invited the Secretary of the Treasury and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] before them, and heard both so far as they desired to be heard.

There was complaint made that too much money was paid in commissions for financial negotiations which were had. The resolution was not adopted by the House, as Mr. Dawes says in his speech, but was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means for consideration. That is what I think should have been done with the pending resolution, but I am not now going to discuss that question, because yesterday the Senate refused to refer the resolution in the first instance to the committee.

The committee invited the Secretary of the Treasury and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] before them, and heard both so far as they desired to be heard.

Here was a resolution complaining of the fees and commissions paid to various parties on the sale of these bonds upon which there was a lengthy and elaborate and caustic debate. It was not passed but simply referred to the committee, and the committee invited the Secretary of the Treasury before them, and then he explained.

Now, I want to put in, with the kind permission of the Senate, a few extracts from these speeches, which I do not intend now to detain the Senate with reading. Here will be found denunciations of the syndicate, denunciations of Secretary Boutwell, complaints of all kinds and character, in which the fiscal affairs were denominated fiscal failures and scandals, in which members of the House congratulated themselves that, although they had not obtained any particular advantage by this discussion, as one of them says, "It has developed enough; it has killed the syndicate. The cry is, 'No more syndicates.'" They flattered themselves that their very vigorous and eloquent speeches had killed the syndicates. They imagined that no more in the history of the country would capitalists be appealed to to supply money to purchase Government bonds:

Mr. Speaker, as I was unable to agree with the majority of the Committee of Ways and Means in the report submitted by the chairman last week relative to the legality of the arrangement entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury with Jay Cooke & Co. and their associates, known as the syndicate, in the refunding of a portion of the first $300,000,000 of the bonded debt of the United States, under the act of July 14, 1870, I have thought it best to state the reasons for my dissent to the House, as the action taken on the report and resolution submitted will doubtless govern the action of the Secretary in the disposition of the remaining $1,300,000,000 which by that act he is authorized to put upon the market, so that our determination of the question has a far greater significance than the mere vindication of the past action of the Secretary, however desirable that may be regarded. I do not desire in this matter to seek any party advantage; I certainly would not knowingly do the Secretary injustice; indeed, I regret that it became my duty to investigate the matter, as it was a subject entirely new to me, and one to which I had not given as much consideration heretofore as perhaps I ought.

The resolution submitted by the House to the committee is as follows: "Whereas it is alleged that the Secretary of the Treasury, in placing the newly authorized 5 per cent bonds upon the market, has, in defiance of the law creating them, increased the public bonded debt and has exceeded the one-half of 1 per cent allowed by the funding act for all expenses in placing said loan: Therefore

"Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be directed to investigate the said transactions, and have power to send for persons and papers, and to report the amount of such increase of the bonded debt, if any, the agents employed and paid by him for the services rendered, all contracts pertaining to the same, and the sums paid to said agents."

The only evidence taken by the committee was that of the Secretary and Jay Cooke, whose statements are attached to the report of the majority, and the only sections of existing laws which it is necessary to consider specially are the following.

But I do not agree that the increase of $135,000,000 in the bonded debt of the country, which did take place in the transaction which we are considering—a considerable portion of which increase still continues—was either necessary or proper; and I am further of opinion that the contract entered into by the Secretary with Jay Cooke & Co. (for the syndicate) was not authorized by law, and gave these gentlemen an unnecessary and improper control of the funds of the Government for the purpose of private gain, which Congress ought not to sanction or establish as a precedent, which will authorize the present or any future Secretary to adopt it in the disposition of the remaining $1,300,000,000 of the bonds directed to be sold. I propose as briefly as I can to state the facts which, under the laws I have stated, have led me to these conclusions.

I understand the meaning of that and the other sections of the act of July 14, 1870, to be to make all the surplus gold in the Treasury equally applicable to the payment and cancellation of the 5-20 bonds which have become redeemable as the proceeds of the sale of the new 5 per cent bonds are; and I suppose there never was a day since the 14th of July, 1870, when there was not from fifty to seventy-five million dollars of gold in the Treasury, or in the several depositories, subject to the order of the Secretary. I am, therefore, utterly unable to see, when there were many hundred millions of the 5-20 bonds redeemable at the option of the Secretary, why, with $135,000,000 of new 5 per cent bonds sold, as he states in his report, before September 1, and with over $50,000,000 of other gold lying idle in the Treasury, he only called in and stopped interest upon $100,000,000 by his notice of September 17, 1871, unless it was, as I said before, to allow the syndicate to hold and use the money for their personal benefit, while the people were paying interest on both sets of bonds.

Thus Jay Cooke & Co. received as commission on a subscription for, say, $85,000,000, over $773,000, less expenses, etc., while the banks received $226,938 on their subscription for $115,775,500. But the great profit to Messrs. Jay Cooke & Co. in this contract with the Secretary, in the way it has been managed, consisted in the loan to or retention by them of the Government money, while they were drawing interest on the bonds which they had purchased with it. Nobody doubts that it was worth to them at least 6 per cent, which on $135,000,000 for the three months is $2,025,000, from September 1 to December 1, while held under contract. But that is not all. They had it, on an average, say, from the 20th of August, or one-third of a month before the notice of September 1 was given. The interest for that time ($225,000) must be added. The Secretary says in his report of December 4 that more than $80,000,000 had then been received under the notice and call of September 1. If it had then reached $81,000,000 he would have said so.

The amount the syndicate has received or will necessarily make by the transaction may be stated thus:

Commissions (less expenses, amount unknown).....	$773,000
Interest before September 1.....	225,000
Interest under contract from September 1 to December 1.....	2,025,000
Interest after December 1 on $85,000,000, called for under notice of December 7 and December 20.....	506,250
Interest after December 1, on $13,000,000 of first $100,000,000, till now.....	130,000
Total.....	3,659,250

This is but the beginning of the refunding system under the law of July, 1870. Thirteen hundred million dollars are yet behind, if these contracts and arrangements entered into so far are now indorsed and declared valid by Congress, when the $300,000,000 to be refunded at 4 1/2 per cent interest and the $1,000,000,000 at 4 per cent are put upon the market, loans to syndicates for six, nine, and twelve months may be made after the new bonds bearing interest are issued, notices of redemption of the outstanding bonds may be withheld as long as it is necessary, and when complaint is made that the law has been violated, the action of this Congress on the report of the majority of the Committee of Ways and Means, if it is adopted, will be relied on as a precedent, giving authority for whatever any Secretary may see fit to do. Your present Secretary may be removed or resign to-morrow; a less trustworthy man may take his place. Men entertaining other views may be in power long before the $1,300,000,000 of bonds are refunded. In short, whenever violations of law are sanctioned on any pretext whatever, the Government is at sea without a compass and without a rudder.

Then there was a flurry and a fight! The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Maynard], of the Ways and Means, fiercely called my colleague to order.

He was in such high dudgeon at this truthful and prophetic remark that my colleague barely missed being honored by a second censure. Still he reiterated that there were tricks to be guarded against from a class of selfish and adventurous bankers. This was before the "syndicate" had been baptized, though it was doubtless born and active at that time. On the 1st of July, 1870, that bill passed the House. I was one of those who did not vote for it nor against it; I feared the Greeks. As my colleague's amendment against employing agents had been voted down, I was apprehensive that such corrupt agencies would be used, as it were, constructively; for the very voting down of the amendment would have been made, as we can now see, a pretext for the employment of suspicious agencies outside of the Treasury. The bill, however, was not a bad one. It was rightly called a bill for "refunding and consolidating" the debt. If squarely executed, it would have avoided the late questionable transactions as to the syndicate; and it would have enabled the taxpayer to save the 2 per cent which it was claimed would have been saved by the issuance of an untaxed long bond of 4 per cent.

In a time like this, when scientific and mechanical agencies are cumulating means; when the gold and silver of the mountains are being delved after with such skill, persistency, and reward; when only since 1880 the English home debt has diminished one hundred millions, and when, as we have boasted, we pay the same on our debt per year; when money is so plentiful that in seven years, up to 1887, the world's national debt has increased $5,000,000,000, not counting the enormous railway debts of the world—$1,500,000,000 more—at such an epoch of the world; when credit, once a pigmy, has become a gigantic wonder, our nation, under its boasted rule of men "entirely great," goes around the world dickering with parvenu bankers and sordid syndicates at the rate of seven and a half millions as commissions on fifteen hundred millions only, and that, too, at an interest or premium 1 per cent greater than the average rate of all other nations!

I speak in no party sense when I say that we are humiliated by such fiscal failures and scandals.

Although my resolution is ignored by the Ways and Means Committee it has been productive of good. It has developed enough. It has killed the syndicate. The cry is, "No more syndicates."

I have proposed a bill similar to that of the Secretary, which will crystallize my ideas into a repealing law. If my resolution has done no other good, it has at least proclaimed the glaring defects of the law, so loosely construed, even if for good purposes. The country should be thankful that the attention of Congress is called, not only to the exceptional and juggling legislation of the last Congress, with a view to its remedy, but called also to the fact that one of the best members of the Cabinet has fallen into the practice of the head of the Government, and has assumed authority never conferred.

Besides, it became indispensable, under the light of free journalism and Congressional criticism, that our credit should not be further tampered with and dishonored by such a system of private greed and favoritism. We do not want to grant an exclusive monopoly to dicker in the public securities. Truly, we have had enough of these manipulations and mutations of our investments. Their effect reaches every element of our wealth, every industry of our land, and every dollar of our capital. I have an extract here which illustrates what I say in a remarkable way:

"Extent of the ring operations.—Though the Treasury ring rarely uses a dollar of its own money, its financial operations count up among the thousands of millions. The contents of our National Treasury is ever at its command, and at times it controls and manipulates for its own benefit the entire bonded debt of the nation. Able at any time to secretly lock up or unlock one or more hundred million dollars of the people's money, it controls the value of the merchants' wares and the products of our manufacturers, farmers, mechanics, and day laborers throughout the length and breadth of the land. Having the power to manipulate our national debt by withdrawing bonds from the market and secretly or openly putting them aloft again, always at Government expense, the ring has our money market almost, if not wholly, in its control. Counting Mr. Boutwell's syndicate operation, a large portion of our national debt has been manipulated into and out of the market not less than thirteen times during the last ten years. Anyone at all familiar with the ring's operations can trace these astounding financial jobs for himself. Take a portion of the $200,000,000 of the new 5 percents recently put upon the market, for example. This is the way it was manipulated:

"1. It was put in the market ten years ago by the Treasury Department in the form of Treasury warrants, certificates of indebtedness, quartermaster's vouchers, etc.

"2. Next withdrawn or purchased in by ring brokers at a heavy discount.

"3. It then appeared in the market in the form of greenbacks.

"4. Greenbacks drawn out by secret sale of Treasury ring commission brokers.

"5. The 7.30 Treasury note makes its appearance.

"6. The 7.30 note is withdrawn by ring brokers.

"7. Finds the honest greenback again in its place.

"8. The greenback is again withdrawn by the ring.

"9. Shows the 5.20 bonds to have taken up a position.

"10. The five-twenties, or a small portion of them, disappear syndicateward.

"11. The long-lost gold coin appears again.

"12. Gold coin disappears—what little there is of it.

"13. After a sojourn of ninety days in the syndicate, the new 5 percents make their appearance in the market.

"A portion of the 5 percents were exchanged directly for five-twenties, thus reducing slightly the number of manipulations of the portion directly converted; the balance was managed as above stated, making thirteen manipulations in all."

This may or may not be exactly the manner in which this remarkable syndicate performs; but it is by no means distant from the truth. Talk about Biddle and the United States bank! Talk about the pet bank system of thirty years ago. They were as molehills to this mountain of fiscal favoritism.

And all these remarkable transmutations, which have no parallel in the sleights of the oriental juggler, are done by what? A syndicate! And what, in the name of the common people, is a syndicate?

Mr. President, one has only to read this extensive debate to see how senseless were some of these accusations, how unfounded they were, how it was simply an effort to assail men who had in an emergency of the country loaned money to the Government upon bonds; and I put in a little statement from a speech showing how much the syndicate received or necessarily made by the transaction, and some figures of about $4,000,000—some $4,000,000 charged as commissions. There were the same charges made against Jay Cooke & Co. during the war.

Mr. President, this present proceeding is nothing new. It is an attempt simply to dignify the proceeding because we are approaching a Presidential campaign, and that is all there is of it. There is nothing whatever to investigate. I said the other day, and I do not care now about repeating it, I am opposed to the principle that every time a charge is made against an official of the Government it must be investigated and dignified by a formal investigating committee. I suppose I will be charged now with being the champion of Jay Cooke & Co., and the champion of all the syndicates, because I am simply referring to what history shows us.

So much in regard to Secretary Boutwell. Another attack was instituted on Mr. Sherman in an elaborate article published in the New York newspapers. I have it here, but will not ask permission to insert it. I do not take any stock in the article, but newspapers influence public opinion; newspapers create scandal at times; newspapers sometimes stir up such demonstrations as are witnessed here when men, as I think, from moral cowardice, are afraid to oppose an investigation because somebody thinks that something is wrong.

Mr. President, I am not going to be led at this late hour into a discussion of the silver question proper. I had intended a week or two ago to take this opportunity to express some views upon the subject. I have not now time. I simply call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the so-called Bland dollar was never a full legal tender; it was only a legal tender for debts wherein some other form of currency was not expressly provided for in payment. Not being a full legal tender, a question of propriety arises as to whether the Government should compel a person at this late day to accept silver dollars in payment of his obligations against the Government. Should a holder of securities be compelled to accept in payment a silver dollar which itself is not a full legal tender, not a legal tender when he proposes to pay off his railroad mortgages payable in gold, not a legal tender when he proposes to liquidate any contract the terms of which are payable in gold? Need I say to you, sir, that nearly all the railroad bonds of this country are payable in gold? Need I tell the Senate that nearly all the contracts that are now made are made in gold? You may say it is not right, it ought not to have been; but it has been done. The history of the last thirty years shows it. And now we are asked that the holders of these securities shall be compelled to accept a Bland dollar authorized in 1878, which itself is not a legal tender, and which itself will not pay any of the securities payable in gold.

Mr. President, it is true that it was a mistake on the part of the true friends of silver coinage to consent to any such provision being placed in the coinage act authorizing the Bland dollar. I am one of those who believe that the currency, or rather money, created by the country, coined by the country, should be itself a legal tender for every debt, so that it could be paid upon every railroad security, paid to every debtor. Instead of that we have the Bland dollar, which of itself necessarily becomes a depreciated currency.

Mr. President, a word more about popular subscriptions. The February syndicate of 1895 represented banks all over the country, and those banks in turn represented individual interests. There may be a few persons so credulous as to believe that the syndicate in the purchase of the bonds represented no one but themselves. That is not true. The syndicate embraced banks in different parts of the country, and those banks embraced individuals. A syndicate is simply the representative or the agent of all those who desire to invest in common. Individual bidders usually obtain gold from the Treasury. That has been demonstrated over and over again. The value of dealing with the syndicate arises from the fact that the syndicate usually procures its gold from abroad, and that is for the benefit of the country and relieves the Treasury. Individual subscribers usually do not. If we are to have free coinage of silver every dollar should be made a full legal tender. No one will question that. Parties should not be obliged to accept a depreciated dollar. Parties should not be obliged to accept a Bland dollar, which of itself does not purport to be a full legal tender.

I do not propose at this time to discuss the provisions of the Chicago platform of 1892. It has been commented upon in the Senate over and over again. It is sufficiently elastic for almost every Democrat to stand upon. It favors an international agreement on the subject of gold and silver, and if that can not be had it expresses the sentiment that silver should not be coined except under such safeguards of legislation as will absolutely produce a parity of the two metals. That is all that any silver man in the country can possibly want.

I heard the most interesting discussion this morning, fair and candid, between the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. Both of them claim that they want to maintain the parity of the two metals. One of them insisted that the bare fact of opening our mints to silver would create the parity. Both desire to secure the same result. What the effect would be of such opening is, of course, largely a matter of speculation. It does not seem as though it could safely be done under existing conditions. I have not time to enter into a discussion of that question.

The question of a special committee was disposed of by a vote of the Senate yesterday. I voted against a special committee, because I always vote that way. Upon principle I have uniformly opposed the creation of special committees for purposes of investigation. I believe they are unnecessary. They unnecessarily dignify the proceeding. They are not warranted by the traditions of the Senate. Yet I am disposed to state that my esteemed friend the Senator from Kansas in proposing a special committee possibly had in mind this fact, and I attribute his suggestion to his own sense of fairness. He probably thought that it was not fair or wise to have a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury investigated by a Finance Committee consisting of Republicans, one Republican-Populist, and the rest silver Democrats. Probably he thought in his kindness of heart that it was better that there should be a special committee.

The distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], in his few vigorous and eloquent remarks last evening, pictured the Finance Committee as a most perfectly fair committee. Senators recollect his idea of fairness. It was that the Secretary of the Treasury should be investigated by a committee upon which there is not a single party friend who agrees with him on the financial question, and the rest of whom are Republicans, and a Populist. Mr. Carlisle, if the resolution is to be passed, will be turned over to the kind mercies of those who, as Democrats, disagree with him within party lines on the silver question. I wish to read the names of the members of the Committee on Finance. Messrs. MORRILL, SHERMAN, ALLISON, ALDRICH, PLATT, WOLCOTT, Republicans; JONES of Nevada, Populist-Republican; VOORHEES, HARRIS, VEST, JONES of Arkansas, WHITE, WALTHALL, silver Democrats.

The Secretary of the Treasury is believed to be what is called a gold-money Democrat. It is the sense of fairness of the Senate that he should be investigated by Republicans, who are opposed to him politically, by a Populist, who is opposed to him politically, and by a committee on which all the Democrats are free-silver Democrats. I simply point out this fact to account for the first suggestion upon the part of my friend the Senator from Kansas for the appointment of a special committee, and it was undoubtedly the high sense of fairness which he usually exhibits in the Senate that prompted him to make the suggestion for a special committee instead of the Finance Committee as at present constituted.

I think the Finance Committee is a fair committee. I believe it to be. I voted to refer the matter to the Finance Committee because I have always heretofore opposed the appointment of special committees. The committee, if the investigation is authorized, will take up this subject and investigate it most fairly and thoroughly. In the end, if Secretary Carlisle shall be vindicated from these newspaper attacks and these loose charges which have been uttered in the Senate Chamber, how much will it be to his gratification and to his credit if it shall come from the Finance Committee, composed of his political adversaries and those who differ with him on the financial question.

I have already commented on the proper course which I think should have been pursued by the Senate, but the Senate has decreed otherwise, and I respectfully bow to its wisdom. That course was that the resolution should have been referred to the Committee on Finance. The Committee on Finance should have respectfully invited the Secretary of the Treasury to come before it. In January, 1894, a question arose in regard to the action of the Treasury Department, and what was done? A resolution was offered in the House of Representatives in regard to the issue of bonds and the use of the gold reserve. It did not provide for a committee of investigation. It was a resolution making inquiry. It was a resolution expressing the sense of the House of Representatives. The resolution was referred to the Judiciary Committee. What did the committee do? It sent a respectful letter to the Secretary of the Treasury in January, 1894, and asked the Secretary to appear before it. He did so on January 25. There he made his statement; there the members of the committee questioned him fully for several hours. He answered. He gave them all the information desired pertaining to the finances of the country. His answers were frank; they were able. He showed great familiarity with the subject involved, and at the conclusion the chairman asked him if he would be kind enough to look over the notes of his remarks. Mr. Carlisle, in conclusion, said:

Yes, sir; I would be glad to do so, and if any gentleman desires or if the committee desires any other question answered I will be glad to do it at any time by appearing here or sending it in writing. I will be glad to furnish any information the committee desires in regard to this matter.

The chairman said:

The committee feels very much obliged to you.

And Mr. Carlisle departed. That is the way to conduct public business courteously. That is what the Democratic House did. There was no difficulty about appearing; there was no reluctance in appearing. He stated the situation frankly, and it is a part of the records of the House.

The present Committee on Ways and Means of the other House have already had the bond question under consideration under a resolution of investigation not passed, but referred to them for preliminary inquiry. The present Republican Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives not long ago sent a courteous letter to Mr. Carlisle, and he replied. That letter has not been published, so far as I am aware. I desire, with the kind permission of the Senate, to incorporate it in my remarks. It is dated March 7, 1896, and is addressed to Hon. NELSON DINGLEY, Jr., chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in which the Secretary acknowledges the receipt of his favor, speaking of the reference of the resolution to the committee, and asking him to make such response as to the allegations contained in the resolution as he saw fit. Then the Secretary of the Treasury proceeds to elucidate the bond question and all the complaints that had then been made. At the conclusion of the letter is the following language, to which I invite attention:

If, notwithstanding this brief statement of the facts, the committee and the House of Representatives consider the allegations contained in the newspaper clippings which were included in your letter, and which appear to have been adopted as the basis of the resolution, of sufficient importance to demand or justify an investigation, the Treasury Department will cheerfully do all in its power to facilitate the inquiry and promptly furnish all papers, records, and other evidence in its possession or under its control relating in any manner to the transaction in question.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

The Committee on Ways and Means were evidently satisfied with the statement. They have asked for no further information. They have not gone further with the resolution. They have not ordered an investigation, but this body, which can not so appropriately investigate alleged wrongdoing as can the House of Representatives, substantially usurps the functions of the House, which is solely given the power of impeachment. The letter explains the whole transaction. There is no real necessity for any further steps being taken.

Here is the letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 7, 1896.

Hon. NELSON DINGLEY, Jr.,

Chairman Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of February 26, inclosing a copy of a preamble and resolution providing for the appointment of a committee by the House of Representatives to investigate the alleged conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury in refusing to deliver to one William Graves $4,500,000 in the bonds of the United States and awarding said bonds to J. P. Morgan & Co., notwithstanding the said Graves is alleged to have "tendered the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of said bid for said bonds in gold at the subtreasury in the city of New York," and inviting from me such response to the allegations as I may be pleased to make.

I have the honor to say that on the 6th day of January, 1896, a circular was issued inviting sealed proposals until 12 o'clock m. on Wednesday, February 5, 1896, for the purchase of $100,000,000 of United States 4 per cent coupon or registered bonds in denominations of $50 or multiples of that sum, as might be desired by bidders, and it was stated that "purchasers will be required to pay in United States gold coin or gold certificates for the bonds awarded to them, and the interest accrued thereon after the 1st day of February, 1896, up to the time of payment for the bonds." Payments for the bonds were required to be made at the various subtreasuries of the United States by installments, as follows: Twenty per cent and accrued interest upon receipt of notice of acceptance of bids, and 20 per cent and accrued interest at the end of each ten days thereafter; that all accepted bidders were given the privilege of paying the whole amount at the date of the first installment, and those who had paid all installments previously maturing were allowed to pay the whole amount of their bids at any time not later than the maturity of the last installment.

On the 15th day of January, 1896, an additional circular was issued, notifying bidders that after the payment of the first installment of 20 per cent with accrued interest, the remainder of the amounts bid might be paid in installments of 10 per cent each and accrued interest at the end of each fifteen days thereafter; but all accepted bidders were allowed to pay the whole amount of their bid at the time of the first installment, and all accepted bidders who had paid all installments previously maturing were allowed to pay the whole of their bids at any time not later than the maturity of the last installment.

Among the proposals received under these circulars was one from "William Graves and associates," in the words and figures following:

"NEW YORK CITY, N. Y., February 4, 1896.

"We hereby propose, under the terms of your circular of January 6, 1896, to purchase United States 4 per cent thirty-year bonds, described in said circular, of the face value of $4,500,000, and we agree to pay therefor at the rate of 115.3391 and accrued interest per $100. We further agree, upon due notice of the acceptance of this subscription, to deposit the amount thereof in gold coin or in gold certificates with the United States assistant treasurer at New York City in accordance with the terms of said circular.

"We desire (registered or coupon) bonds in denominations as stated below, and we wish them to be delivered to us at office of I. B. Newcombe, Mills Building, New York City, or Bank of California, San Francisco.

"WILLIAM GRAVES AND ASSOCIATES.

"To the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY."

Mr. Graves was wholly unknown to the Department, and the facts that he failed to give his street or office address, that the names of his associates were not disclosed, and that the price he proposed to pay for the bonds was considerably higher than responsible and bona fide bidders were offering were sufficient, in my opinion, to justify an inquiry concerning his financial character and standing before disposing of his proposal. I accordingly caused inquiries to be made at once in the city of New York, but no definite or satisfactory information concerning his business or financial standing was obtained, and on the 7th day of February, 1896, I caused the following confidential telegram to be sent to the assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, to wit:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 7, 1896.

"ASSISTANT TREASURER UNITED STATES, San Francisco, Cal.:

"Can you ascertain from the Bank of California or others as to the financial standing and responsibility of William Graves, a large bidder for bonds. It is important. Do not neglect to answer promptly by wire. Confidential."

"J. F. MELINE, Assistant Treasurer."

On the same day the following response was received:

"FEBRUARY 7, 1896.

"TREASURER UNITED STATES, Washington, D. C.:

"Party referred to in yours of to-day, from what is learned from Bank of California and from others, was known very slightly as promoter or financial agent, but not capitalist. Can not give his whereabouts."

"C. P. BERRY, Assistant Treasurer."

Although the information thus secured was not considered sufficient to show to my entire satisfaction the ability of the bidder to pay for such a large amount of bonds, yet as he appeared to have been "very slightly" known as a financial agent, and as he professed to have others associated with him in making his bid, it was deemed better not to reject his offer without first giving him an opportunity to comply with the terms of the circular and his bid. Out of abundant caution, therefore, and in order to avoid a possible mistake in a matter of such importance to the bidder and to the Government, a notice of acceptance was mailed to "William Graves and associates, New York, N. Y.," on the evening of February 9, 1896, being the same day on which other notices to accepted bidders were mailed. The notice was as follows:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1896.

"SIRS: You are hereby notified that your subscription under the terms of the Department circulars of January 6, January 9, and January 15, 1896, for $4,500,000 of the 4 per cent bonds of the United States for which you have agreed to pay in United States gold coin or gold certificates, at the office of the assistant treasurer in the city of New York, at the rate of $115.3391 and accrued interest per $100 face value of said bonds, has been accepted."

"You are therefore requested to deposit with the United States assistant treasurer at New York on or before the 15th day of February, 1896, the sum of $1,038,051.90, which is 20 per cent of the amount of your subscription at the price above named. The accrued interest from February 1, 1896, to date of the payment hereby requested should also be paid at the rate of 4 per cent on the amount of the bonds paid for by said deposit. At the expiration of fifteen days from the date of this first payment an additional payment of 10 per cent must be made, and such payments must be continued at intervals of fifteen days until the whole amount is paid. The accrued interest accompanying each payment must be computed from February 1, 1896, to date of such payment. If you desire to pay the entire amount of your subscription at once you may do so, or you may anticipate the total payment of your subscription at any time prior to the maturing of the last installment. In the former case the amount to be deposited is $5,190,259.50, with accrued interest at 4 per cent on $4,500,000 from February 1, 1896, to date of deposit."

"The Secretary of the Treasury should be promptly advised of the character of the bonds desired (whether registered or coupon), and the denominations thereof. If this information has already been furnished, please confirm it."

"The bonds will be issued only upon receipt by the Secretary of the original certificate of deposit of the assistant treasurer receiving the payments. The Department is prepared to begin the delivery of the bonds at once, and deliveries will be continued as rapidly as the facilities of the Department will permit."

"Respectfully, yours,

"J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary."

"WILLIAM GRAVES AND ASSOCIATES,
New York, N. Y."

A list of the accepted bidders was published in the principal newspapers of the country, including the New York City papers, on the morning of February 9, which Mr. Graves doubtless saw. But, however that may be, it is certain that he knew of the acceptance of his bid as early as noon, February 10, as is shown by the following telegrams:

"[Telegram.]

"NEW YORK, February 10, 1896—12.23 p. m.

"Hon. J. G. CARLISLE,

"Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.:

"Bank of California received their bond allotment. Have ours been forwarded? Wire."

"WILLIAM GRAVES AND ASSOCIATES."

"[Telegram.]

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1896.

"WILLIAM GRAVES AND ASSOCIATES,
New York, N. Y.:

"Your notification was duly forwarded."

"W. E. CURTIS,
Assistant Secretary."

"Collect."

Immediately upon the receipt of the above telegram from Mr. Graves, a duplicate notification of acceptance was mailed to him, addressed to the Mills Building, New York, and nothing further was heard from him until February 13, at 12 o'clock m., when Mr. Allison Nailor, of the city of Washington, delivered to the Secretary in person a letter without date, from Graves to him (Nailor) requesting the latter to call on the Secretary and ask for an extension of time until the Wednesday following, February 19, to pay the first installment of 20 per cent on his bid. This letter was left at the Department, and a copy is appended hereto.

In a letter to the Secretary dated February 13, 1896, a copy of which is appended, Mr. Graves stated that he had that day received the "original notice of acceptance" of his bid and claimed that it had been erroneously addressed, although his own quotation of the address in his letter shows that it was in exact accord with the information given on the face of his bid. He fails to mention the fact that he had previously received a duplicate notice and had also been notified by wire that the original had been sent. In this letter he asked to be informed by wire or mail whether the bonds could be delivered to the subtreasury to be given to him "upon anticipated payments," and he was at once advised by a telegram, a copy of which is attached, that the bonds could be issued only upon receipt at the Secretary's office of the original certificate showing that they had been paid for. This was the course pursued in all cases, and Mr. Graves had been advised in his notice of acceptance that the original certificate of deposit would be required.

On the day the first installment of 20 per cent was due, February 15, 1896, Mr. Graves made another application by telephonic message for an extension of the time, and in response he was informed by wire that no extension could be given, as will be seen from the copy of the telegraphic dispatch to him which is attached hereto.

The statement in the preamble to the resolution inclosed in your letter that Mr. Graves had tendered the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of his bid for bonds in gold at the subtreasury in the city of New York is wholly incorrect. Neither he nor anyone for him tendered any gold whatever in payment for the bonds, or any part of them, at the subtreasury at New York, or elsewhere. On the contrary, on the morning of the 15th day of February, 1896, the day on which payments were required to be made, Mr. Graves sent to the Secretary of the Treasury a telegram, in which he abandoned his original bid of $115.3391, and proposed to take the bonds at $113.50, and stated that he would give satisfactory financial indorsements by Wednesday, February 19th, showing his ability to fulfill such an agreement. A copy of this telegram is appended. And on the same day, and other days up to and including the 19th day of February, he wrote and sent various letters and telegrams to the Secretary, copies of all which are appended hereto. No notice was taken of these telegrams and letters for the reason that, according to the terms of the circular under which the bonds were offered to the public, the time for receiving bids had expired on the 5th day of February, 1896, at 12 o'clock m., and no bids made or received after that time had been or could properly be considered. Bids had been made in good faith by responsible parties within the designated time and in accordance with the terms of the circular for the whole of the proposed loan, and the Department has in every case declined to consider any bid which was not so made.

So far as this Department has been able to ascertain, Mr. Graves had no associates in his bid, and was wholly unable to comply with its terms. It was not a bona fide bid, but was purely speculative, and subsequent developments showed that it ought to have been rejected at the beginning along with two other bids of the same character, amounting to $129,000,000, which were in fact rejected, and about which no complaint has been made by the pretended bidders, or anybody else. His complaint that he had been embarrassed or obstructed by errors or delays on the part of the Treasury Department is not sustained by the facts. There were no errors or delays on the part of the Department. According to the terms of the circular under which his bid was made, the first installment, 20 per cent and accrued interest, was required to be paid "upon receipt of notice of acceptance of bids," and if his bid was in fact made in good faith he of course expected to comply with that requirement. By the terms of the notice of acceptance sent to him, however, the time of payment was extended until and including the 15th of February, 1896, notwithstanding which he failed to make any deposit whatever on account of his offer.

If this bid had been rejected at the beginning, the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to award the $4,500,000 in bonds to the next highest responsible bidder would have been perfectly clear, and it is difficult to see how the fact that its fictitious character was not fully discovered until a later date can in any way affect either the duty of the Secretary or the rights of other bona fide bidders. Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co. had, within the time prescribed by the circular, and in accordance with the terms of the proposal, put in a bid for the whole $100,000,000 at a price of $110.6877, and all bona fide bids above that price having been accepted, they were entitled to have awarded to them the remainder of the loan. On and before February 15, 1896, that firm deposited the sum of $36,520,018 in gold coin and certificates, and on that day they notified the Treasury Department by wire that they had deposited gold with the subtreasurer and Government depositories largely in excess of 20 per cent on any possible amount that could be awarded to them.

After a careful consideration of the subject they were notified on February 19, 1896, that they would be required to receive and pay for all the bonds which Graves and a few other smaller bidders had failed to take, and the firm has already paid in gold and gold certificates the sum of $37,493,100, leaving unpaid only about $430,000 on the entire amount awarded to it. Ordinary good faith on the part of the Government demanded that bona fide bidders who had strictly complied with all the requirements of the proposal under which their offers were made should not be excluded from consideration by the wrongful interposition of fictitious or purely speculative bids, and in my opinion the only legal and honorable course that could be pursued in this matter was to award the bonds upon which defaults were made to the parties who had in good faith, and within the time prescribed, submitted the next highest offer.

If, notwithstanding this brief statement of the facts, the committee and the House of Representatives consider the allegations contained in the newspaper clippings which were inclosed in your letter and which appear to have been adopted as the basis of the resolution of sufficient importance to demand or justify an investigation, the Treasury Department will cheerfully do all in its power to facilitate the inquiry and promptly furnish all papers, records, and other evidence in its possession or under its control relating in any manner to the transaction in question.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary."

Mr. President, I oppose the investigation now even though the terms of the resolution have been modified and its offensive features eliminated and the regular committee substituted for a special committee. I confess I do not approve of the precedent which will be created. The Senate has already been satiated with resolutions for the investigation of Florida matters, and it referred them notwithstanding every consideration of courtesy which was urged. Yet when we refuse to one of our own Democratic associates upon this side of the Chamber the opportunity he wanted to investigate affairs in Florida, we must hasten to give the other side—to our Populist friend, the Senator from Kansas—this resolution of investigation as a matter of courtesy.

Next will come the Alabama resolution for an investigation, and the Senators from that State as well as from the South generally will expect the New York Senators to stand by them in opposition to the investigation. I warn them of the precedent which they are establishing by adopting this resolution. There is no necessity for this resolution. There is no necessity for the Alabama resolution. There is no necessity for the Florida resolution. The Florida resolution was referred to the committee two or three times, but this resolution, it seems, is to be pressed to passage. Louisiana will come next in the list of States whose proceedings are proposed to be inquired into. It is the age of investigation.

There is a mania for investigation. I have read here letters and petitions from all parts of the country asking that everything be investigated.

I agree with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] when, at the conclusion of his remarks yesterday, he said that he had seen no good reason for this investigation. No one else has seen a good reason for the investigation. Democrats, be not deceived. It is a useless, an unnecessary, a causeless proceeding. It is an attack upon your Democratic Secretary of the Treasury. It is putting him to annoyance and trouble unreasonably and improperly. You are playing into the hands of your opponents, the Republicans and Populists. You do not object to the investigation simply for fear somebody will say there is something wrong. The Secretary of the Treasury himself has not objected. No one is authorized to object to it in his behalf. I disclaim all responsibility of speaking for him. He has tendered the Ways and Means Committee any information in his power, and yet, sir, for some reason which it seems to me can only be attributed to jealousy, to malice, or to differences over the great gold and silver question, or to something else, the resolution is to be offensively pressed.

I have no personal interest in this matter. I care nothing for these New York syndicates, of which I am said to be the champion. I do not deceive myself. The votes already given indicate the temper of the Senate. I expect to be overruled. I am used to it. I can wait my vindication. I will patiently abide events. I disclaim all personal feeling. I am actuated simply by a desire to discharge my duty which I think I owe to the country, my duty to these high officials, the President and Secretary of the Treasury, for whose appointment or nomination I was not responsible. I have asked no Senator around this circle to vote with me in opposition to the resolution. I have made no personal appeal to any Senator. I have only presented my arguments, and each Senator may vote as seems to him best. I do not think this is a wise proceeding. I do not think it a politic proceeding. I know not what course the committee will adopt. Undoubtedly, sir—appreciating its fairness, its impartiality, which I cheerfully concede—it will endeavor to do its duty; but the silver question warps men's judgments; it affects their opinions; it stirs up their prejudices. It makes members of the same party distrust each other. We have had an exhibition of this feeling on the floor this morning, and although the committee may strive to be fair, you know, Senators, what the result of such investigations has been in the past. There will be difficulties; there will be bickerings; there will be contentions; there will be unpleasant misunderstandings; there is likely to be clamor and unpleasantness. These things should have been avoided.

The resolution is now in the hands of the Senate. I shall vote against the resolution if I am the only man here who does so. I have stood alone in the past in matters to which I need not now allude, and I can afford to stand alone again. I do not care even whether the yeas and nays are called upon the passage of the resolution. That is a matter for the Senate to determine. I have discharged my duty, Mr. President, as I understand it, and with that I am content.

Mr. LINDSAY. I desire to offer an amendment, to strike out all of the third clause of the resolution after the words "in relation thereto," in line 15, page 2.

The Senator who offered the resolution said that the first clause of the resolution covers all of the legitimate subjects of investigation, but that he desires the other clauses to be retained because they particularize. I submit that that portion of the third paragraph which I move to strike out does not particularize, does not enlarge, is not germane to the investigation directed by the first paragraph. It is framed so as insidiously to intimate that the Secretary of the Treasury may have had some share in the profits supposed to have been realized from the bond sales. If it is intended that such a charge shall be investigated it would be fair and manly to say so in terms that can not be mistaken. If it is not intended to intimate that such a charge may be looked into, then I say it would be generous to strike out those misleading words to be found in the lines I have moved to strike out.

I submit to the Senator who offered the resolution that justice on his part ought to induce him to consent to the amendment I propose.

Mr. PEPPER and Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "thereto," in line 15, paragraph 3, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the resolution, in the following words:

What agreements or contracts, and whether oral or in writing, and whether publicly or privately, were entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury and any syndicate or person or persons with respect to the sale and purchase of the bonds, and the profits made or to be made by such syndicate or any person or persons connected with such syndicate, directly or indirectly; whether such contract or agreement had any and what effect on the prices offered for the bonds, what the effect was, and who, if any person, profited by it, and to what extent.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the vote is to be taken upon the resolution. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY].

Mr. LINDSAY. As the Senator from Kansas does not seem to be inclined to withdraw those words, and as the motion upon my part to that effect might be mistaken, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. PEPPER. I will say that that is the very meat of the whole resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. No debate is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] as amended.

Mr. PETTIGREW and Mr. WOLCOTT called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I announce the pair of the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], with whom I am usually paired, with the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON]. If the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON] were present, he would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. ELKINS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay" on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], but he authorized me to vote as I choose on this question. I vote "yea."

Mr. KYLE (when his name was called). I was requested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to arrange a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If that is the understanding, I will pair myself with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I understand that if the Senator from Connecticut were present, he would vote "nay." I should vote "yea" upon this proposition.

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Not being aware how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. VOORHEES's name was called). The senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is paired on this question with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. JONES] is necessarily absent and is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. My colleague [Mr. CALL] is absent from the city. He would vote "yea," if he were present. He is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCBRIDE].

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. He is not present, and I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] that we transfer our pairs so that the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] will stand paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], and we will both vote.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER. I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CLARK], who is absent from the city, with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. My colleague would vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted, but I have since ascertained that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], with whom I am generally paired, is absent. I suggest to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who I understand is paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], that we transfer our pairs.

Mr. HARRIS. I am perfectly willing to exchange pairs, although I have the permission of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to vote. But I will exchange pairs with the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Thank you.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY]. My colleague is absent from the city.

Mr. HAWLEY. Both my colleague [Mr. PLATT] and I were in Connecticut yesterday. We both started for Washington. I do not see him present, however. I should like to know from the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] if he is sure that my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. KYLE. I was so informed by the clerk of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. HAWLEY. I have serious doubt—

Mr. KYLE. If there is doubt in regard to the matter—

Mr. LODGE. I will state that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], who was called away from Washington, left with me a letter from the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], in which he says:

I would vote against the bond resolution. I suppose Mr. MURPHY would. Therefore on that I ought to be paired with some one else. I believe that I agreed with Mr. ALLEN when it was last up to pair with Mr. KYLE. So perhaps Mr. KYLE would pair with me now that I am away.

Mr. HILL. I desire to inquire whether the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He is recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. FRYE. My vote is recorded.

Mr. HILL. I simply make the inquiry, because I understood the Senator from Maine had a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. FRYE. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HILL. I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that in a speech made the other day the senior Senator from Maryland said he was opposed to the resolution. That is all.

Mr. FRYE. I did not notice the absence of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HILL. I make the suggestion, as the vote is so close. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE (after having voted in the affirmative). I did not notice the absence of the senior Senator from Maryland. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—51.

So the resolution as amended was agreed to.

WIDOW OF THOMAS L. YOUNG.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to call up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for disposition at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he will allow me to call up for passage a little bill which will take but a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield for that purpose, upon the Senator's assurance that it will take no time and that there will be no discussion about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1743) for the relief of the widow of Thomas L. Young.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to pay the claim of the widow of the late Thomas L. Young, who served as an enlisted man and officer of the Regular Army of the United States, and afterwards as captain of Benton Cadets, Missouri Volunteers, and as major, lieutenant-colonel, and colonel of the One hundred and eighteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in the war of the rebellion, and appropriates not exceeding $478 as a balance or balances of wages earned by him and not heretofore paid to him or to his legal representatives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CHILTON. I hope the Senator from Illinois will allow me to have a bill put on its passage which is of considerable importance.

Mr. CULLOM. I am inclined to think the conference report, which will take but a few minutes, should be adopted. It has been lying on the tables of Senators all day, and, so far as I know, it is in the main satisfactory. I hope that I may be allowed to have it disposed of now. The Senator from Texas will have time afterwards for the consideration of his bill. I hope that we shall have immediate action on the conference report. I move that the Senate concur in the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 6248) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to concur in the report of the committee of conference, which has been heretofore read.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. CULLOM. I now move that the Senate insist upon its amendments not yet agreed to by the House of Representatives and ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference; and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

DENISON AND NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2488) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes." This bill has received the favorable report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I am sure there is no opposition to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the bill be amended by striking out, in line 8 of section 1, the words "three years" and inserting "two years from the approval of this act."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, line 8, before the word "years," it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "two"; and after the word "years" to insert "from the approval of this act"; so as to make the section read:

That the provisions of section 9 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved July 30, 1892, be, and the same hereby are, extended for a further period of two years from the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that we may now proceed with the Calendar for the remainder of this evening, considering unobjected House bills which have been favorably reported, and dispose of them, so that they may become laws.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. STEWART. Let us go to the Calendar regularly.

Mr. FRYE. The river and harbor bill ought to be proceeded with, for it is very important to get it passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Missouri restate his request?

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may now proceed, commencing where we last left off, with the consideration of unobjected House bills for the remainder of this evening.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. DUBOIS. Will the Senator from Missouri not consent to going to the Calendar in regular order, and not simply proceeding with the consideration of House bills?

Mr. FRYE. I shall object to either request. I regard it as my duty to this great river and harbor appropriation bill to go on with it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. FRYE. There will be time enough for the consideration of bills on the Calendar after the appropriation bills are disposed of. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 17, on page 46. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 46, after the word "improvement," at the end of line 20, to strike out "five hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifty"; so as to read:

Improving Delaware River, from Trenton to its mouth, Pennsylvania and New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $250,000.

Mr. FRYE. That matter was particularly referred yesterday to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I would inquire whether or not anything was agreed to in relation to it?

Mr. VEST. Yes, Mr. President. The amendment of the committee which has just been read will not be agreed to, so as to allow the amount to remain at $500,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 23, on page 46, after the word "Perriwig Bar," to insert:

And $3,000 shall be expended in rebuilding and enlarging the dike on Government reservation at the junction of the Schuylkill and Delaware rivers, at Fort Mifflin: Provided, That no part of said appropriation or of any appropriations heretofore made shall be expended upon the building of a dike between Reedy Island and Listons Point until a board of three engineer officers, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, shall consider the project of said dike with reference to preserving and improving the navigation of the Appoquinimink River and Black Bird Creek, and the riparian rights and facilities of the Delaware shore.

Mr. VEST. In line 1 of the amendment, on page 47, after the words "Fort Mifflin," I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "Fort Mifflin," in line 1, on page 47, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That so much of said sum of $500,000 as shall be necessary may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in dredging the channel through Dam Baker Shoal to the depth of 25 feet at low water.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President—

Mr. VEST. The Senator will permit me to get through with the amendments which I wish to propose.

Mr. QUAY. Very well.

Mr. VEST. After the amendment to the amendment which has just been adopted, before the word "Provided," I move to insert the word "And"; and after the word "Provided" to insert "further."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 47, line 1, before the word "Provided," it is proposed to insert the word "And"; and after the word "Provided" to insert "further"; so as to read:

And provided further, That no part of said appropriation, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I now move the amendment which I send to the desk in the subsequent part of the clause.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, on page 47, after the word "point," it is proposed to strike out "until" and insert "but"; after the word "consider," in line 6, to insert "and report through the Secretary of War to next session of Congress as to"; and in line 9, after the word "shore," to insert "as well as to deepening the main channel of said river."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, the understanding is that if that amendment is adopted the original provision as it came from the House shall be restored.

Mr. FRYE. That has been done.

Mr. QUAY. Was that done by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; that was done.

Mr. QUAY. It is all right then.

Mr. FRYE. Now, let the Secretary read the amendment as amended.

Mr. QUAY. I should like to hear the clause read as it stands.

Mr. FRYE. That is what I ask; that the whole clause about the Delaware River be read as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

Improving Delaware River, from Trenton to its mouth, Pennsylvania and New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $500,000, of which $5,000 shall be expended in the improvement of the channel over Perriwig Bar, and $3,000 shall be expended in rebuilding and enlarging the dike, on Government reservation, at the junction of the Schuylkill and Delaware rivers, at Fort Mifflin: Provided, That so much of said sum of $500,000 as shall be necessary may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in dredging the channel through Dam Baker shoal to the depth of 25 feet at low water; And provided further, That no part of said appropriation or of any appropriations heretofore made shall be expended upon the building of a dike between Reedy Island and Listons Point, but a board of three engineer officers, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, shall consider and report through the Secretary of War to next session of Congress as to the project of said dike with reference to preserving and improving the navigation of the Appoquinimink River and Black Bird Creek, and the riparian rights and facilities of the Delaware shore, as well as to deepening the main channel of said river.

Mr. FRYE. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 48, line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the additional sum of $25,000 may be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of War for such dredging as may be necessary for the maintenance of channels from the mouths of the Appoquinimink River and Blackbird Creek to the channel of the Delaware River through the dike now being constructed from Reedy Island to Liston Point for the improvement of the Delaware.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Appoquinimink River, Delaware: Continuing improvement, $5,000: Provided, That the additional sum of $25,000 may be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of War for such dredging as may be necessary for the maintenance of channels from the mouths of the Appoquinimink River and Blackbird Creek to the channel of the Delaware River through the dike now being constructed from Reedy Island to Liston Point for the improvement of the Delaware.

Mr. VEST. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that, in view of the amendments which have been made on pages 46 and 47, the amendment printed in italics on page 48, beginning in line 18 and ending with line 25, which has just been read, is unnecessary and should be disagreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Yes, that amendment should be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 49, line 10, after the words "United States," to insert:

But the right of way over any railroad or through any railroad or county bridge shall not be subject to this proviso, and may be secured by condemnation proceedings.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving the inland waterway from Chincoteague Bay, Virginia, to Delaware Bay, at or near Lewes, Del., to be used from Delaware Bay to Indian River: Continuing improvement, $25,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended until the right of way is secured without cost to the United States, but the right of way over any railroad or through any railroad or county bridge shall not be subject to this proviso, and may be secured by condemnation proceedings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 3, after the words "Pocomoke River," to strike out "Continuing improvement" and insert "Maryland, below Snow Hill, in accordance with report submitted February 25, 1895, five thousand"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Pocomoke River, Maryland, below Snow Hill, in accordance with report submitted February 25, 1895, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 10, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "from main ship channel to Curtis Bay"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Patapsco River and channel to Baltimore: For maintenance, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 14, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Maj. William F. Smith, in House Executive Document No. 323, Fifty-third Congress, third session," and insert "February 14, 1895"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Nanticoke River, Delaware and Maryland: Continuing improvement, in accordance with report and plan submitted February 14, 1895, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 20, before the word "thousand," to insert "and twenty-five"; and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That for carrying on said improvement the rental of an office in the city of Washington, D. C., at a rate not to exceed $85 per month, is hereby authorized when no public building is available, to be paid for pro rata from the appropriations made for works of improvement in the local charge of the engineer officer having charge of the improvement of the Potomac River.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Potomac River, Washington, D. C.: Continuing improvement, $125,000: Provided, That for carrying on said improvement the rental of an office in the city of Washington, D. C., at a rate not to exceed $85 per month, is hereby authorized when no public building is available, to be paid for pro rata from the appropriations made for works of improvement in the local charge of the engineer officer having charge of the improvement of the Potomac River.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine what necessity there is for this proviso?

Mr. FRYE. A room is absolutely necessary for the use of the engineer who is in charge of the work, and by the act of March, 1877, the renting of any building in the District of Columbia for Government purposes was forbidden unless expressly authorized by Congress. The renting of an office by the officer in charge of the Potomac River improvement and other river and harbor work is absolutely necessary, as there is no room for that purpose in any Government building.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to see a bill pass Congress that did not in some manner carry some benefit to the Washington real estate syndicate. This engineer, or the engineers, as the case may be, must have some habitation at the present time, some place to transact the public business. What is there in the discharge of the duties under this law that they can not discharge those duties as well in the offices they now occupy, or the rooms they now occupy, as to rent additional quarters in this city at the expense of the Government at $85 a month?

Mr. FRYE. I will simply say that the Engineer Department reported to the committee that there was no room for this purpose at all, and that it was absolutely necessary to have one, and the best they could do was probably to rent quarters at $85 a month. The committee accepted their judgment in relation to it and inserted the item in the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know that I ought to antagonize this any further or consume any time in antagonizing it further. I should antagonize it and vote against it if my vote were of any avail; but we have an engineer corps here, and the expenditure of this money and this work is to be done under the supervision of the Secretary of War. The officers who will have charge of this work have quarters in the city now, where they have their plans, their papers, their instruments, and whatever may be necessary in the discharge of their duties. Why does it become necessary under these circumstances, when this bill does not impose upon them extraordinary duties, that the hands of the owners of private property in this city should be shoved into the Treasury, and $85 a month of the people's money taken to rent a room, or a few rooms, for the accommodation of these engineers? Certainly it is the part of wisdom, if we have not public buildings enough here to build them, and to build them without delay, so that we shall not be compelled to go from time to time throughout this entire city and rent buildings and pay out the public money in that way whenever there is an appropriation bill which may pass Congress, and by that means give the syndicate which controls prices here a percentage of the appropriations made.

I appeal to the honorable Senator from Maine, who I know to be a just and honorable man, not to insist upon this provision. Let the duties that may be imposed upon these engineers be discharged from the rooms they now occupy or from other rooms that may be furnished them without charge to the Government in some one of the numerous public buildings in this city.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator himself must understand that in this matter of improving the Potomac River it is absolutely necessary for the engineer in charge to have rooms. All of the various small machinery that he is obliged to use, the tools the men are obliged to use, and everything of that kind, must be housed somewhere. That can not be done up in the War Department; they can not give way up there. General Craigill said this was an absolute necessity for the service and to take care of the property which would be used, and I have no doubt it is so. I think it is entirely fair that the provision should be in the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. The trouble with the position of the Senator from Maine is simply this: The engineer or engineers, as the case may be, who are to take charge of this work have rooms somewhere to-day, have they not?

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly they are not out in tents or in pasture.

Mr. FRYE. The engineer has a house.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; and he has an office where he discharges the duties which are imposed upon him by virtue of his relations to the Government.

Mr. FRYE. No; I do not think he has any place now.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator from Maine mean to say that there are public officers in the service of this Government who are running around upon the streets, without offices where they can discharge the duties imposed upon them, or like Arabs, living in tents, or who are turned out to grass? Certainly there must be some place, and is some place of this kind, some rooms that these officers occupy. There must be some place or some rooms where their instruments and papers are stored. Why can not those rooms be used to-day? Why can not they be used when this engineer and his men go to work under the requirements of this bill just as well as they can be used to-day?

Of course, it is popular to squander the public money. This is simply a little item of $80 a month, but it is one of the items which, when added to the other hundreds of thousands of dollars that are expended in this way, increase the burdens materially upon the people in the form of taxation.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, the statement made to our committee was that this officer carries his papers up to his dwelling house or boarding house (I do not know whether he has any family or not), and the necessary machinery, etc., has been kept down at the wharf under a shed. He is on a small salary, and it is not worthy of the Government to leave its officers in such a position. I am very sorry my friend has seized upon this particular point to make an attack.

Mr. ALLEN. I can find numerous points of attack. The truth is they are so numerous that no man can attack them. That is the trouble. If any half dozen men in the Senate Chamber would devote their entire time to looking up leakages, great and small, that occur here from session to session, they could not keep track of all of them. I speak of this item because it is apparent upon the face of the bill, and because it is apparent to me, at least, that it is one of the items that should not pass here.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. I suggest to the Senator that there is an office, a house, that has been rented for years for the use of this officer, and it is put in the appropriation bill every year in order to distinguish the rent of the office from the dredging on the river, and he is given authority in this way to charge up his account under different appropriations.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not hear the Senator from New Jersey, but I infer that he said there was an office provided for this officer.

Mr. FRYE. Which has to be hired every year.

Mr. ALLEN. Which has to be hired every year?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I infer that every time an appropriation is made by Congress to improve the Potomac River that moment we begin renting quarters for the engineer and his instruments and his men at $80 per month or more, and the moment the money has been expended that moment he is either turned out-of-doors and required to find quarters for himself for the transaction of business or to carry his office around in his hat, as has been suggested by the Senator from Missouri. I do not believe in this appropriation. It is true it is a small amount, only $900, it is said; but if you will take the numerous sums of $900 and $1,000 of the people's money that are appropriated in this form and absolutely wasted you will find that they amount to hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars in the course of a Congress, and where there is an opportunity to lop off these little unnecessary expenses, why not do it?

Mr. President, no business man in this country could conduct his business successfully two years upon the principles upon which this Government is being run. Any business man upon the face of the earth, starting with a capital of $1,000,000, would become absolutely bankrupt and a subject of public charity within two years if he conducted his business upon the principles on which we conduct the public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 24, on page 51.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to propose an amendment to come in after line 24, on page 51.

Mr. FRYE. The committee amendments are to be first acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the committee amendments are to be first acted on.

Mr. DANIEL. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 52, line 8, after the word "with," to strike out "approved project for the improvement thereof" and insert "report submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1895"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Nandua (historically known as Andura) Creek, Virginia, in accordance with report submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1895, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 13, to increase the appropriation for protecting Jamestown Island from the encroachments of James River from $6,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 21, to strike out: Improving Cheat River, West Virginia: Continuing improvement in accordance with recommendations of Maj. R. L. Hoxie, submitted July 10, 1895, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty"; in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "$10,000 of which may be used for the location and purchase of sites for the dams within said improvement"; in line 7, after the words "Secretary of War," to strike out:

At such time as the United States shall become the owner, by condemnation or otherwise, of the dams on the Monongahela River belonging to the Monongahela River Navigation Company, in Pennsylvania.

And in line 15, before the word "dollars," to insert "two hundred thousand"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving the upper Monongahela River, West Virginia: Continuing improvements, $30,000, $10,000 of which may be used for the location and purchase of sites for the dams within said improvement; and the Secretary of War may place the construction of the six dams heretofore recommended and reported by the United States engineers on the Monongahela River, in the State of West Virginia, under contract at a sum not exceeding $1,200,000, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 21, to increase the appropriation for improving Cape Fear River, North Carolina, above Wilmington, from $4,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 21, to increase the appropriation for improving Cape Fear River, North Carolina, at and below Wilmington, from $100,000 to $195,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 2, to increase the appropriation for improving Neuse River, North Carolina, from $5,000 to $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 4, to increase the appropriation for improving Pamlico and Tar rivers, North Carolina, from $2,500 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 9, to insert:

Improving Roanoke River, North Carolina: Continuing improvement, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 19, after the word "River," to strike out "For completion" and insert "Continuing improvement"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Apalachicola River, Florida, including the cut-off and Lower Chipola River: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 11, before the words "Terraceia Bay," to strike out "in" and insert "into."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 18, before the word "bay," to strike out "Sarasoto" and insert "Sarasota"; and in line 19, before the word "Florida," to insert "from Tampa Bay to Caseys Pass"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Sarasota Bay, from Tampa Bay to Caseys Pass, Florida: Continuing improvement, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 1, after the word "with," to strike out "latest approved project for its improvement, twenty-five" and insert "project submitted February 27, 1895, two hundred"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving St. Johns River, Florida, from Jacksonville to the ocean, in accordance with project submitted February 27, 1895, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 18, on page 58.

Mr. PUGH. I desire to offer several amendments to the bill on page 58, relative to the improvements on the Warrior and Tombigbee rivers. Is it proper for me now to offer the amendments?

Mr. FRYE. Is it in relation to a diversion of a part of the appropriation?

Mr. PUGH. Yes; merely the distribution. Here are the amendments. They do not increase the appropriation.

Mr. VEST. It is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the chairman of the Committee on Commerce agree that the amendments shall be offered now?

Mr. FRYE. I think they might as well come in now. It is merely a change in the language making the distribution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be accepted by unanimous consent.

Mr. PUGH. They will be accepted by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, page 58, before the word "thousand," strike out "forty" and insert "ten"; so as to read:

Improving Black Warrior River, Alabama, from Tuscaloosa to Daniels Creek: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, after the words "one hundred and," strike out "fifteen" and insert "forty-five," so as to read:

Improving Warrior and Tombigbee rivers, Alabama, from mouth of Tombigbee River to Tuscaloosa: Continuing improvement, $145,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 14, before the word "thousand," strike out "forty" and insert "seventy"; so as to make the clause read:

Of which $75,000 are to be expended on the Tombigbee River and $70,000 on the Warrior River, and so much of said sums as may be necessary is authorized to be expended in acquiring, by purchase or condemnation, under the laws of Alabama, the lands needed in making such improvements.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. That leaves the amount as originally appropriated.

Mr. PUGH. It is the same.

Mr. FRYE. It is only a change in its application.

Mr. PUGH. It distributes it below Tuscaloosa, on the same river.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 3, on page 60.

Mr. WALTHALL. I ask the chairman of the committee whether it would be agreeable to him to have an amendment inserted at this point, or shall I wait? I want to change the name of Shubuta.

Mr. FRYE. Let it be made now. It is only a change of title.

Mr. WALTHALL. On page 60, line 2, I move to strike out "Shubuta" and insert "Bucatana"; so as to read:

Improving Chickasahay River, Mississippi, from the mouth up to railroad bridge near Bucatana: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 60, line 8, after the word "of," to strike out "completing" and insert "continuing"; and in line 10, after the word "upon," to strike out:

In addition to expending the balance on hand, contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the same, or said materials may be purchased and work may be done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $800,000, exclusive of the amount heretofore appropriated.

And insert "the balance on hand may be expended"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving mouth of Yazoo River and harbor of Vicksburg, Miss.: For the purpose of continuing the project of improvement as heretofore adopted and entered upon, the balance on hand may be expended.

Mr. WALTHALL. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will disagree to the amendment reported by the committee. Day before yesterday the chairman of the committee informed us that there were about thirty continuing contract clauses in the bill as it came to us from the other House. The report of the committee shows that of these three were stricken out by the Senate committee. One is Savannah Harbor, Georgia, $1,093,950; another Sabine Pass, Texas, $1,403,856, and another Yazoo River and harbor at Vicksburg, $860,000. The last named carries the smallest appropriation of the three. Day before yesterday the other two were restored by a vote of the Senate, and I trust that this one will now be restored. It is substantially upon the same footing, and is, I believe, a project about as meritorious as there is in the bill.

I will submit a brief statement of the objects of the project and the reason why I do not think the Senate should sustain the committee in striking out the provision. The objects are twofold, both extremely important, one affecting the city of Vicksburg, which is the principal city in my State, the other affecting the great Yazoo delta, which is, I believe, about the richest spot of earth to be found upon the globe.

The city of Vicksburg, upon the east bank of the Mississippi River, stands on the first highlands below the Chickasaw Bluffs at Memphis, a distance of about 400 miles as the river runs. Up to 1876 the river in front of the city of Vicksburg turned abruptly northward and then southward, making a loop of about 8 miles around, with a narrow strip of land at the neck of the loop not more than half a mile in width. In 1876 the Mississippi River, which is always capricious, and very often unmanageable, forced its way through that narrow neck of land, destroyed the great interior harbor at Vicksburg, and left the city standing on a body of sluggish water, to which the name of Lake Centennial has since been given.

The object of this provision is to restore that harbor in connection with another purpose, which I will undertake briefly to explain. The Yazoo delta comprises about 6,000 square miles.

Mr. GEORGE. Six thousand eight hundred.

Mr. WALTHALL. Six thousand eight hundred, my colleague says, including about 2,000,000 acres of the very finest land in the world. It includes all the territory between Vicksburg and Memphis, between the Mississippi River on the west and the range of highlands that makes a great curve out eastward in the vicinity of Memphis and then, returning toward the river, reaches the river at Vicksburg. That very fertile section is drained by the Yazoo River and a number of tributaries, I think about 800 miles of navigable waters, if I mistake not.

Mr. GEORGE. Eight hundred miles now absolutely navigable.

Mr. WALTHALL. This river and its tributaries afford the only protection that the people have in that part of the country against the exorbitant demands for freight, which are exacted by the railroad companies. The freights for that section amount to millions in money and hundreds of thousands in tons. It happens that at low water, at the point where the Yazoo River runs into the Mississippi River, just above Vicksburg, the stream is so shallow that boats can not enter, whereas if they could enter they would find abundant water navigable for hundreds of miles up toward the source of that stream.

The object of the provision in addition to what I have already stated with reference to Vicksburg Harbor is to divert the Yazoo River near its mouth southward and conduct it into Lake Centennial by natural means supplemented by artificial means and thus at once to restore that great harbor and afford navigation on the Yazoo at all stages of water.

The engineer officers of the Government have pronounced the scheme entirely feasible. The Government is committed to it. The work is now progressing. The engineer officers say that the work can be completed at a cost of $1,200,000 provided the work be continuous, but if the appropriations are small and fragmentary it will very largely increase the cost. The work is now progressing and a very considerable sum of money has already been expended upon it. Eight hundred and sixty thousand dollars is necessary to complete the work entirely. The House provided for that, and the Senate committee propose to strike out the provision. I trust it may not be done. I think it ought not to be done upon every consideration of economy and justice.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I am compelled to admit that there is no more reason for repealing the continuing contract clause in this case than there was in the case of Sabine Pass and Savannah Harbor. The Senate restored the House provisions in those two cases, and I certainly am not in condition to contest the case which has just been presented.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not wish to supplement the remarks made by my colleague [Mr. WALTHALL] except to say that the chairman of the committee was generous enough to about admit that the committee is out of court. Therefore I hope that the bill will be allowed to stand as it came from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRYE. The Senate now having restored these continuing contract clauses, we shall be in the happy condition of conferring in relation to Senate amendments alone.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 60, after line 18, to insert:

Improving Bayou Lafourche, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 4, to insert:

Improving Bayou Courtableau, by removing raft in same, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 10, after the word "improvement," to strike out "according to the plan of Capt. J. H. Willard, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, seventy-five" and insert "one hundred"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Red River, Louisiana and Arkansas, from Fulton, Ark., to the Atchafalaya River: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and ten" and insert "seventy-five"; and in line 17, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Of which amount $10,000 may be applied to the improvement of Pigeon Bayous and Grand River: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,173,250, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Bayou Plaquemine, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $75,000, of which amount $10,000 may be applied to the improvement of Pigeon Bayous and Grand River, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 8, to increase the appropriation for improving Bayou Teche, Louisiana, from $6,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 16, to insert:

Improving Brazos River, Texas, from Richmond southerly, by removal of snags and overhanging trees, as recommended by report of February 14, 1895, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 22, to strike out:

Improving Cumberland River, Kentucky and Tennessee: Continuing improvement, between the State of Tennessee and the town of Burnside, $20,000, to be expended in purchasing sites for locks and dams 21 and 22, and in laying masonry for dams 21 and 22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 7, after the word "for," to strike out "the completion of" and insert "continuing work on"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cumberland River below Nashville, Tenn.: Continuing improvement, $80,000, of which sum shall be expended as much as may be necessary for continuing work on the lock and dam near the mouth of Harpeth River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 12, after the word "Nashville," to insert "or the necessary material may be purchased and the work done otherwise than by contract"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cumberland River above Nashville, Tenn.: Continuing improvement: The Secretary of War may enter into contracts for the completion of the whole or any part of locks Nos. 5, 6, and 7, above Nashville, or the necessary material may be purchased and the work done otherwise than by contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 21, to increase the appropriation for improving Tennessee River below Chattanooga, Tenn., from $50,000 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATE. On page 66, after line 6, I move to insert—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Tennessee aware of the order that individual amendments are not to be considered on this reading of the bill except by unanimous consent? Committee amendments are first to be disposed of.

Mr. BATE. I do not ask unanimous consent, but I presented the amendment to the committee, and it took no action upon it.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Tennessee will have an opportunity later.

Mr. FRYE. There will be ample time, after we have gone through with the reading of the bill, for the Senator from Tennessee to offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee will have an opportunity to offer the amendment after the committee amendments are disposed of.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 66, line 16, after the word "appropriated," to insert:

Provided, That of the amount authorized to be expended $83,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended, in addition to the $50,000 herein appropriated, in continuing construction and completion of Lock and Dam No. 7, by contract or otherwise.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Kentucky River, Kentucky: Continuing improvement, $50,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $1,349,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided, That of the amount authorized to be expended, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 13, after the word "improvement," to strike out:

For Lock No. 5, according to report and recommendation of Maj. D. W. Lockwood, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, submitted August 11, 1891.

And insert "of Lock No. 5"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Green River, Kentucky, about the mouth of Big Barren River: Continuing improvement of Lock No. 5, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 7, after the word "the," to strike out "approved project for the completion thereof, $10,000," and insert:

Project submitted February 3, 1896, $30,000, $20,000 of which, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used for the purchase of the sites for Dams Nos. 3, 4, and 5; and if said sum shall not be sufficient, then the Secretary of War may use so much of the moneys heretofore appropriated for Dam No. 6 as shall be requisite.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Ohio River, by the construction of Dams Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5, between Davis Island Dam and Dam No. 6, in accordance with the project submitted February 3, 1896, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, under the heading for improving the Ohio River, Ohio and West Virginia, to increase the appropriation for the improvement and continuance of the work on the harbor at Brooklyn, Ill., from $5,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 4, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Col. G. J. Lydecker, November 30," and insert "December 7"; and in line 5, after the word "ninety-five," to strike out "in House Document No. 72, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Belle River, Michigan, in accordance with plans submitted December 7, 1895, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 9, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Col. G. J. Lydecker, November 30," and insert "December 7"; and in line 10, after the word "ninety-five," to strike out "in House Document No. 71, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Sebawaing River, Michigan, in accordance with plans submitted December 7, 1895, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 14, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Col. G. J. Lydecker"; and in line 15, after the word "ninety-five," to strike out "in House Document No. 73, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Pine River, Michigan, in accordance with report submitted December 7, 1895, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 23, after the word "with," to strike out:

Plans submitted by Col. G. J. Lydecker in House Document No. 192, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.

And insert "the alternative project submitted January 28, 1896"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Kalamazoo River, Michigan, from Lake Michigan to Saugatuck, in accordance with the alternative project submitted January 28, 1896, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 18, after the word "sufficient," to strike out "is hereby appropriated and"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Menominee River, Wisconsin and Michigan: Continuing improvement, $15,000, of which said sum an amount sufficient shall be used.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen"; and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Of which sum $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used in improving the harbor and water front of Stillwater, Minn., so as to render it accessible to steamboats and other craft navigating said river.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving St. Croix River, Wisconsin and Minnesota: Continuing improvement, $15,000, of which sum $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used in improving the harbor and water front of Stillwater, Minn., so as to render it accessible to steamboats and other craft navigating said river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 11, to strike out:

Improving Red River of the North, Minnesota: Continuing improvement, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 13, to insert:

Improving Red River of the North, Minnesota, and its tributaries: Continuing improvement, $20,000, of which sum $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used in improving the navigation of the Red Lake River, between Thief River Falls and Red Lake, according to the plan of Maj. W. A. Jones in his report of February 26, 1895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 6, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That the expenditure of said money shall be made upon said river, from the mouth thereof to the forks in said river.

And insert:

And so much thereof as may be necessary may be used for dredging to a depth of 20 feet between the mouth of the river and a point 2 miles southward.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Calumet River, Illinois: Continuing improvement, $50,000, and so much thereof as may be necessary may be used for dredging to a depth of 20 feet between the mouth of the river and a point 2 miles southward.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 16, after the word "dollars," to insert "and for acquiring right of way, including necessary surveys, $20,000"; in line 18, after the word "for," to insert "the whole or any part of"; in line 21, after the word "Canal," to insert "or the said materials may be purchased and the work done otherwise than by contract"; and in line 23, after the word "necessary," to strike out "therefor" and insert "for the said canal"; so as to make the clause read:

For the construction of the Illinois and Mississippi Canal: Continuing construction, $25,000, and for acquiring right of way, including necessary surveys, $20,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into contracts for the whole or any part of such material and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of said Illinois and Mississippi Canal, or the said materials may be purchased and the work done otherwise than by contract; and to acquire such further right of way as may be necessary for the said canal, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $3,710,960, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 24, on page 77.

Mr. NELSON. I move to strike out the word "to," in line 23, and insert the word "and." It is to correct a mistake.

The SECRETARY. In line 23, page 77, it is proposed to strike out the word "to" and insert "and"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving the Mississippi River between the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railroad bridge at St. Paul, and the Washington avenue bridge at Minneapolis: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 78, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "four"; in line 5, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two"; in line 16, after the word "dollars," to insert "exclusive of the amount herein appropriated"; in line 25, before the word "cents," to strike out "sixty-six" and insert "sixty-seven"; on page 79, line 11, after the word "That," to insert "any balance of former appropriations now available and"; in line 13, after the word "expended," to strike out "in pursuance of said contracts"; in line 19, after the word "of," to insert "ultimately"; in the same line, after the word "obtaining," to insert "and maintaining"; and in line 22, after the word "depth," to insert "at all periods of the year except when navigation of the river is closed by ice"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio River to St. Paul, Minn.: Continuing improvement, $475,000, of which amount $200,000 shall be expended on that portion of said river from St. Paul to the mouth of the Missouri River, and $275,000 from the mouth of the Missouri River to the mouth of the Ohio River: Provided, That on and after the passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the systematic improvement of the Mississippi River between the points mentioned, or said materials may be purchased and work may be done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $5,025,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, said contracts and materials purchased and work done otherwise than by contract for the section of said river between St. Paul and the mouth of the Missouri River shall not exceed $200,000, and thereafter shall not exceed for the three years beginning July 1, 1897, the sum of $826,666.67 annually: Provided further, That such contracts and materials purchased and work done otherwise than by contract for that section of the said river between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio River for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, shall not exceed the sum of $325,000, and thereafter for the three years commencing July 1, 1897, shall not exceed the sum of $673,333.33 annually: And provided further, That any balance of former appropriations now available and the money hereby appropriated and authorized to be expended for the said section of said river between the mouth of the Missouri River and the mouth of the Ohio River, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in the construction of suitable dredge boats, portable jetties, and other suitable appliances, and in the maintenance and operation of the same, with the view of ultimately obtaining and maintaining a navigable channel from St. Louis to Cairo not less than 250 feet in width and 9 feet in depth at all periods of the year except when navigation of the river is closed by ice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, after line 23, to strike out:

That $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the money herein appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River between Cairo and the mouth of the Missouri River shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to protect the east bank of the Mississippi River from caving in and being washed away at or near a point opposite the mouth of the Missouri River and extending south along said east bank as far as may be necessary to effect the purpose above mentioned.

That of the money herein appropriated for use on the Mississippi River from Cairo to the mouth of the Missouri River the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is directed to be expended in removing the bar in front of Chester, Ill., and protecting the west bank of the Mississippi River opposite Chester, Ill.

And insert:

That of the money herein appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River between Cairo and the mouth of the Missouri River there may be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in order to improve the channel of the river, such amounts as may be necessary to protect the east bank of the Mississippi River from caving in and being washed away at or near a point opposite the mouth of the Missouri River and extending south along said east bank, and in removing the bar in front of Chester, Ill., and protecting the west bank of the Mississippi River opposite Chester.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 1, after the word

"appropriated," to insert "and authorized to be expended"; so as to make the clause read:

That of the money herein appropriated and authorized to be expended for the improvement of the Mississippi River from St. Paul to the mouth of the Missouri River there shall be expended the following respective amounts, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. The item between lines 8 and 14 on page 81, may be passed over for the present at the request of the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The item within the lines indicated will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 81, after line 14, to strike out:

For the removal of the bar in the Mississippi River, on the east side thereof, opposite the city of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, $5,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that this amendment—

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the lines just read will be retained.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I want.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that this amendment and the amendment in lines 23, 24, and 25, on the same page, may be disagreed to. I have a letter in reference to the latter amendment, pertaining to Quincy, Ill., and the Senator himself has quite a number of letters with reference to the first, which seem to make it absolutely necessary that the two provisions shall be left in the bill as the House had it.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to make the same suggestion. I know personally as respects the first amendment that it ought to be disagreed to.

Mr. VEST. I want to say frankly to the Senate that I suppose the people of Missouri have as much interest as the people of Illinois and Iowa in these improvements, but the trouble comes—and both Senators will recognize it—from the fact that there is no recommendation or estimate from the engineers in regard to these improvements. In other words, in order to put these appropriations back as they came from the other House, we are asked to take the verbal statements of members of Congress or letters and telegrams from citizens; and I have received a number of them. It must be evident to these Senators and to everybody that if you make up the river and harbor bill in that way the amount appropriated will be indefinite, and there is no telling what sort of improvements will be made. There is no estimate, there is no recommendation, there is no survey for these improvements.

Mr. CULLOM. As to the Dubuque item, we have improved the river on one side and not on the other. I do not know whether or not the item is in the estimates, but I do know that the merchants on the opposite side of the river, at East Dubuque, are absolutely cut off by a sand bar there, so that they can not get boats up to the shore at all. That is entirely unfair. There are a number of merchants there; and the chairman of the committee has received quite a number of letters from the Representative of that district [Mr. HITT], showing the urgent necessity for an appropriation. I have been there myself, and have seen exactly the situation in reference to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to say a word?

Mr. CULLOM. I shall be very glad to have the Senator from Iowa give us his views.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly familiar with the situation and location there at Dubuque. It does not need an engineer to know what ought to be done there. This item does not increase the appropriation a single dollar. It merely takes from the general appropriation the sum named to preserve the channel at this particular point. It is the city in which I live, the commerce of my city crosses at that point, and I am perfectly familiar with it. The reason the local engineer does not make the improvement is that under the terms of a general appropriation he can not apply the money locally without authority from Congress. I think that where we have this absolute knowledge it does not require an engineer to know that if a sand bar accumulates at a point where commerce is constant it is an obstruction. There are two or three elevators at this point, and because of the sand bar they can not be reached. But for the technical situation as to this appropriation this sand bar would be removed.

I hope the amendment will be disagreed to, and I suggest to my friend from Missouri that this is not an unusual thing in these appropriation bills where the necessities seem to require it.

Mr. VEST. There are a large number of these appropriations here, put in at the request of members of both Houses simply upon their own statement, without any estimate, without a survey, or any recommendation.

Mr. CULLOM. I want to say, furthermore, that when I discovered that those two items and another one in the bill had been stricken out I at once undertook to find out the reason for that action. As to the two, I find that it is exceedingly important to the business of those localities that they should be reinstated. As to the third, I am not satisfied, and therefore am not asking that anything be done in relation to it.

Mr. VEST. What does the Senator mean by the third?

Mr. CULLOM. There is still another item, that at Rock Island, in regard to which I have no information which justifies me in insisting upon its being put back, and therefore I do not intend to do so.

Mr. VEST. In regard to Sny Island?

Mr. CULLOM. That is not in dispute.

Mr. FRYE. That was passed over. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] who is absent desired it passed over.

Mr. VEST. I did not understand that.

Mr. CULLOM. The two items to which I refer are the Dubuque item, stricken out, and the bar in front of the steamboat landing at Quincy. Quincy is a city of 40,000 people. Since there has been a railroad bridge built across the river there, a little above the city, a sand bar has begun to form, and steamboats—of which there a dozen a day coming up and going down that river—if they are going down, have to go down the main channel by the city and then back up on the inside of that bar in order to get in at all. That is the literal fact of the case; and for the Senate to hesitate to restore those items on such a state of facts would be, I think, very singular. I do not care what the War Department has done about it. I think it is unfair to the people of those localities that those items should be stricken out, and I hope that there will be no hesitation about restoring them.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, all these statements come to us for the first time. No such statements were made in committee, and we must look to the Book of Estimates and to the reports of the Engineer Corps.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that is so as a general proposition.

Mr. VEST. And when we looked, we could not find any estimates nor any survey nor any recommendation, yet these rivers and harbors are under the control and supervision of officers sent from the Corps of Engineers to each river and harbor in the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. There are sand bars in both places, patent and open to the world, and boats plying up and down the river can not land where they ought to land so as to accommodate the people.

Mr. VEST. That may be and doubtless is true, but it is a singular fact that the engineer in charge of the river, with those bars right before him and knowing their injurious effect upon navigation, did not refer to them in his general estimate for the river, and though he has given very fully the details of the improvements to be made, he has said nothing about these improvements.

Mr. CULLOM. I know the facts as to both cases, because I have been at both places within the year. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] lives directly opposite one of them, and there is no question whatever about the facts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce, striking out the words from line 15 to line 17, inclusive, on page 81.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 81, after line 23, to strike out:

For removing the sand bar in front of the steamboat landing at Quincy, in the State of Illinois, $10,000.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the other place I referred to, and I hope that appropriation will be retained in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out the clause which has been read.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, at the top of page 82, to strike out:

For maintaining the harbor at Rock Island, Ill., $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 2, to strike out:

For maintaining the harbor at La Crosse, Wis., $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 13, to increase the appropriation for "continuing the work of constructing artificial banks between the mouth of Flint River, in Des Moines County, Iowa, and running along the west bank of the Mississippi River to the mouth of the Iowa River," from $50,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 15, after the word "appropriated," to insert "and authorized to be expended"; and in line 17, after the word "made," to insert "and cost of improvements to be estimated"; so as to make the clause read:

And the Secretary of War, out of the money herein appropriated and authorized to be expended for the improvement of the Mississippi River from St. Paul to the mouth of the Missouri River, shall cause surveys to be made and cost of improvements to be estimated as follows, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 20, before the word "County," to strike out "Mercer" and insert "Rock Island"; and on page 83, line 3, after the word "channel," to strike out "with an estimate of the cost thereof"; so as to make the clause read:

On the east side of the Mississippi River, commencing at Drury's Landing, in Rock Island County, State of Illinois, and running along the east bank of said river to New Boston, with a view to the improvement of navigation by preventing the overflow of the natural and artificial banks, and by deepening the channel; also along the east bank of said river, from at or near the city of Oquawka, Ill., to at or near Dallas City, in the said State, with a view to the improvement of navigation by preventing the overflow of the natural and artificial banks and by deepening the channel; also on the west side of said river from the bluff above the city of Madison, Lee County, in the State of Iowa, along the west bank of said river to the mouth of Skunk River, in said Lee County, and along the west bank of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Iowa River, in Louisa County, to the city of Muscatine, in Muscatine County, Iowa, with a view of improving the navigation by preventing the overflow of the natural and artificial banks and by deepening the channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 4, to strike out:

Also commencing at Drury's Landing in Rock Island County, Ill., and running along the east bank of said river to New Boston, Ill., with a view to improving the navigation by preventing the water from overflowing the natural and artificial banks along those parts of the river and deepening the channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 20, after the word "building," to insert "and repairing"; in line 22, after the word "river," to insert "such improvement, surveys, building and repairs of levees to be made and carried on"; on page 85, line 24, after the word "obtaining," to insert "and maintaining"; and on page 86, line 1, after the word "depth," to insert "at all periods of the year except when navigation is closed by ice"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Mississippi River from Head of Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including salaries, clerical, office, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Mississippi River Commission: Continuing improvement, $625,000, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the general improvement of the river, for the building and repairing of levees, and for surveys, including the continuation of the survey between Head of Passes and the head waters of the river, such improvement, surveys, building and repairs of levees to be made and carried on in such manner as in their opinion shall best improve navigation and promote the interests of commerce at all stages of the river: Provided, That on and after the passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the plans of the Mississippi River Commission as aforesaid, or said materials may be purchased and work done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $8,375,000: Provided further, That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, said contracts and materials purchased and work done otherwise than by contract shall not exceed the sum of $625,000, and thereafter shall not exceed the sum of $2,583,333 annually for the three years beginning July 1, 1897: Provided further, That the money hereby appropriated and authorized to be expended in pursuance of said contracts, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in the construction of suitable dredge boats and other devices and appliances, and in the maintenance and operation of the same, with the view of obtaining and maintaining a navigable channel from Cairo down not less than 250 feet in width and 9 feet in depth at all periods of the year except when navigation is closed by ice: Provided further, That of the sum hereby appropriated and authorized to be expended the sum of $64,000 shall be expended in the rectification of the banks at Greenville, Miss., and $64,000 in the rectification of the banks at Helena, Ark., according to late plans submitted by Capt. Graham D. Fitch, Corps of Engineers, and $16,000 in the rectification of the banks at New Madrid, Mo.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "three hundred"; and in line 10, after the word "Provided," to strike out "that in the discretion of said Commission a portion of such sum may be expended in protection of harbors and localities on said river: And provided also"; and in line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "three hundred"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Missouri River, including salaries, clerical, office, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Missouri River Commission, survey, permanent bench marks, and gauges: Continuing improvement, $300,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the systematic improvement of the river according to the plans and specifications of the Missouri River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers: Provided, That on and after the passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such material and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the plans of the Missouri River Commission for the improvement of said river, or said material may be purchased and work may be done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $300,000 per annum for three years, commencing July 1, 1897.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 25, to strike out:

Contracted for, $80,000 may be expended at Omaha and Council Bluffs; at Rocheport $20,000, at Glasgow $20,000, at Miami $75,000, and at St. Charles, Mo., $50,000.

And insert:

Expended, there may be expended, in the discretion of said Commission, such amounts at Omaha, Council Bluffs, Leavenworth, Atchison, Rocheport, Glasgow, Miami, St. Charles, and at the mouth of the Little Blue, in Jackson County, Mo.; also for protecting the shore line of the Missouri River above Glasgow, from the foot of Bowling Green Bend to the head of Harrisons Island, and at other harbors and localities on said river as may be necessary to improve the channel by preventing erosion of the banks.

So as to make the clause read:

Of the money hereby appropriated and hereby authorized to be expended, there may be expended, in the discretion of said Commission, such amounts at Omaha, Council Bluffs, Leavenworth, Atchison, Rocheport, Glasgow, Miami, St. Charles, and at the mouth of the Little Blue, in Jackson County, Mo.; also for protecting the shore line of the Missouri River above Glasgow, from the foot of Bowling Green Bend to the head of Harrisons Island, and at other harbors and localities on said river as may be necessary to improve the channel by preventing erosion of the banks.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska rise to move to amend the amendment?

Mr. THURSTON. I rise to suggest, Mr. President, that my people are very solicitous to have the clause stand in the bill as it came from the other House. I think myself that they have been laboring under some misapprehension as to the real character of the House provision. I believe that they have thought that the bill as it came from the House carried an absolute appropriation of $80,000 for the first year's improvement at Omaha and Council Bluffs, whereas, as a matter of fact, if I read the bill correctly as it came from the House, it only provides that out of the annual appropriation and out of the three additional years provided for by continuing contracts there may be expended at Omaha and Council Bluffs $80,000. Therefore the House provision is really an appropriation of $20,000 per annum specifically for the work at Omaha and Council Bluffs. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if that is his understanding of that appropriation?

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I am responsible, I suppose, more than any one else on the committee for this amendment. My construction of that appropriation is that the $80,000 is to come out of the aggregate amount appropriated for the first year, the next fiscal year; and then, under the continuing contract, it will depend upon the Missouri River Commission, in their discretion, to take all the $80,000 in any one year or to take it out at fifteen or twenty thousand dollars a year, or in any other amount annually. That would be my construction, and was at the time the amendment was inserted. I do not think they will get $80,000 a year. That is very evident. They get $80,000, but whether they would get all of that in one year or two years or three years is a matter within the discretion of the Missouri River Commission.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, may I ask the Senator from Missouri, if he so construes it because of the words in line 25 "of the money hereby appropriated and hereby authorized to be contracted for"?

Mr. VEST. Yes; that is the amount of the continuing contract.

Mr. ALLISON. If those words "contracted for" were out of the bill I think the $80,000 could be taken out of the appropriation immediately preceding.

Mr. VEST. Yes; but the words are "to be contracted for." That is the amount of the continuing contract.

Mr. THURSTON. There is another reason, which will be seen by an examination of the several specific appropriations, why that construction must be the true one. It will be seen that the bill as it came from the House appropriated only $250,000 for the first year, and that these specific appropriations, all under this same clause, amount in the aggregate to $325,000.

Mr. VEST. That is true.

Mr. THURSTON. It is therefore perfectly evident that these specific allotments of money to localities are to cover the entire period of the present appropriation and the additional three years' contracts. Such being the construction of the bill as it came from the House, I am myself inclined to believe that the amendment as reported by the committee would give to my locality, in all human probability, as great, or greater, an expenditure of money in the matter of their local improvements than would the bill as it came from the House; and yet I see no particular reason why the bill as it came from the House may not as well be left as it came here as to amend it as proposed. There is in the bill as it came from the House no absolute command upon the Missouri River Commission to expend this money at these particular points, and as the general appropriation is amended by the Senate already, it would only specifically provide for the local expenditure at the specified points of $325,000 out of four years' appropriation; and four years at $300,000 per year is $1,200,000. Therefore nearly three-fourths of the entire sum would be left at the disposition of the Missouri River Commission for expenditure at such other points on the river as might be deemed expedient.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Nebraska will permit me to call his attention to what seems to me, at least, to be unreasonable in the mentioning of Omaha and Council Bluffs and Rocheport and Glasgow and St. Charles, without mentioning a number of other places which are situate along the river, such as Leavenworth and Atchison. The people of our State are very much interested in taking care of the river at those places. My colleague is better able to describe the situation at both those places than I am. I do, however, know personally that there is need of a great deal of work to be done at Leavenworth and Atchison, more particularly at Atchison. The river has changed its channel so as to interfere materially with the movement of the city and the management of the railways and the bridge companies, and it is a matter of very serious concern to our people. It is a question in my mind whether it would not be better to leave the paragraphs just as they are now, as the Senate committee have made them, and trust to the friction that may yet be aroused in conference for final adjustment.

Mr. THURSTON. As I have stated, if I were left to my own individual judgment in this matter I should certainly be quite as content with the provisions of the bill as amended by the committee as I should with the provisions of the bill as it comes from the other House. I have therefore brought this matter to the attention of the Senate, and asked nonconcurrence in the amendment reported by the committee more particularly for the purpose of having the true character of the House provision understood and placed upon the record here, in order that my people may no longer understand that the House of Representatives appropriated $80,000 per annum for expenditure at Omaha and Council Bluffs, when, in fact, the appropriation is $80,000, covering a period of four years' work, and which, if expended equally during that time, would simply be an appropriation of $20,000 annually for our local improvement of the river.

With this statement of the case, I leave it to the Senate to say whether it will stand by the amendment as proposed by the committee or leave the bill as it came from the other House.

Mr. BAKER. I desire an amendment also to this clause. I notice that there are a number of places grouped together on page 88.

Mr. THURSTON. Let me suggest to the Senator—I presume I know what amendment or about what amendment he would propose—that I also have an amendment to propose if the Senate committee provision is left. I should like to first take the sense of the Senate as to whether or not it will adopt the amendment as reported by the committee. If it does, then I should like to join the Senator from Kansas in having inserted one other name from Nebraska, as I presume he desires to insert one or more from Kansas.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to hear the suggested amendment before I vote for the amendment proposed by the committee, so as to know what is the whole scheme.

Mr. BAKER. The amendment I desire is in reference to Leavenworth and Atchison. The amendment I propose would be at the end of line 13, on page 88, to insert:

Provided, That on the Missouri River, opposite Leavenworth, Kans., there shall be expended the sum of $15,000, and on the Missouri River, opposite Atchison, Kans., there shall be expended the sum of $15,000.

These are very important places, and it is necessary to protect the Missouri River at these particular points. I believe, as nothing has been given to our locality, particularly our State, it would be but right and proper that these specific appropriations should be made for these two points. It is absolutely necessary to complete the improvements heretofore made at these two points that these sums of money should be expended and that there should be specific appropriations. We fear if we are left here with these large cities in a lump, without any distribution, that we shall not be able to obtain any part of this appropriation whatever. I notice that at other points and in other places it is usual and customary to designate the particular amount which they desire, and which is desired to be there expended. Therefore I ask that the amendment I propose be inserted so that we may have a specific appropriation amounting to $15,000 for each of these places.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I have not heretofore had an opportunity of examining the amendment. It seems to me that the amendment proposed by the Senate committee, with a friendly commission, or perhaps without, will better accomplish the purposes in view than the provision as it came from the House. Under the House provision I think the Missouri River Commission would feel itself constrained to expend only $80,000 for a period of four years, no matter what might be the condition of the river at Council Bluffs and Omaha. The erosion of that river between those two points often requires a very large expenditure in a single year.

Under the Senate provision the Commission is authorized in its discretion to expend such amounts at Omaha and Council Bluffs, Leavenworth, Atchison, and at other points, naming a number of points, and then at the end of the provision "and at other harbors and localities on said river as may be necessary to improve the channel by preventing the erosion of the banks." So it seems to me even without the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, if there is a condition of the channel opposite either Atchison or any of these other points, the Missouri Commission would be directed under the last clause to make such expenditures as may be necessary to prevent the erosion of the banks at that point. I understand that is the object of these improvements at the points named.

So while I have no special objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, it strikes me that, looking at these two provisions, the Senate committee's provision will accomplish more easily and more directly and more effectively what is necessary at these several places.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Kansas inform the Chair whether he desires to offer his amendment?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, sir; I want to state further, in reply to the Senator from Iowa, one main objection to the provision in its present shape. It provides that a commission shall expend this money.

Now, we all know, without reflecting upon the commission, that it requires a great deal of logrolling to get the commission to improve at particular places and points. I notice that in the East and in the West in particular localities specific appropriations are made. I wish to say to the Senator from Iowa that Kansas is not good at logrolling. Kansas does not want to humiliate herself by going before a commission and demanding this or demanding that. Here is the proper place to fix it, and that is the reason why I desire to have it fixed here, so that we shall know what we are to have, and that afterwards champagne suppers, dances, and seances shall not be necessary in order to obtain appropriations or parts of appropriations at any particular place or locality.

I notice, Mr. President, that New England is not put in such a humiliating position. I do not think the West ought to be put in such a humiliating position. I simply ask justice. Improvements have been made at these points, and they were important improvements; it was important to the people of Missouri and Kansas that they should be made. Those improvements are not yet complete. I understand from the mayor of the city and others who are competent to judge that these specific sums are necessary and proper to complete the improvements. Now, as we have been generous in this bill, I ask simply as a matter of justice to the State of Missouri at these points and to the State of Kansas at these points that we may have specific appropriations, so that we shall know what we are to depend upon, and that we shall not be subject to the whims or caprices of any board or any body or any tribunal.

My desire would be first to offer the following amendment, to come in after the word "banks," at the end of line 13:

Improving the Missouri River opposite Leavenworth, Kans., the sum of $15,000; on the Missouri River opposite Atchison, Kans., the sum of $15,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, in those two cases there is this difference, and there was this trouble before the committee. In some cases there had been estimates made of the amount of money required to take care of a certain improvement at a certain locality, and in other cases the only estimates we had were from members of Congress. In this case there were estimates both at Leavenworth and at Atchison, and I think that I may say the committee justify me in agreeing to accept these two amendments of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the question of improving the Mississippi and the Missouri rivers is full of difficulties, and it is almost impossible to meet all the demands that are made either upon the Board of Engineers or upon the commission in charge of those rivers. I have very decided views in regard to these improvements on the Missouri River, on the banks of which I have lived for fifty years. It is the most erratic stream in the United States and the most difficult to improve. It is now in such a condition that no insurance can be had upon a boat or cargo that goes up that river, and yet it drains one of the most fertile regions in the West and ought to be covered with steamboats carrying freight and passengers.

The Missouri River Commission (and I drew the bill which organized that Commission) is made up of three engineer officers from the Corps of Engineers and two civilians, one of whom is from the State of Missouri and one from the State of Nebraska. It is safe to assume, then, that Missouri and Nebraska represented upon that board would have the proper improvements made.

It must be stated frankly that one objection which is made to all these plans for specific improvements does not apply to Leavenworth and Atchison. The Missouri River Commission, in their estimates and recommendations, state that the improvements at Leavenworth and at Atchison upon the oppositeside of the river should be continued. But there are no estimates and no recommendations as to these other specific improvements or appropriations in the bill as passed by the House. For instance, at Omaha the Commission do not recommend any improvement, but they state substantially that the necessary amount has been expended there, and that all that is necessary is to maintain the works as they have been done, and they ask for no money.

Three hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars was put in the State of Missouri, and, as a matter of course, if I were actuated by selfish purposes or personal ends I would stand here and demand these specific appropriations, for I am assailed almost hourly by my constituents from these different localities, these little towns on the river, to save our specific appropriations. The money is to be spent there, the material is to be bought there, and, as a matter of course, they are not to be condemned or criticised for it. They are like the rest of the world; they are looking to their immediate purposes and to the expenditures to be made right about them.

Now, I have not the slightest doubt but what the Missouri River can be improved and navigation brought back to it, and it can be made a portion of the great waterway to the Gulf, for it is really the Mississippi River. It gives color to it, and it ought to have given name to the whole river. But this improvement can be done in only one way, and I speak from the closest observation and experience. It can be done only by improving the river by reaches, going down the river 25 and 30 and 40 miles and systematically improving it.

We have appropriated hundreds of thousands of dollars (and I have been as much responsible for it as any Senator, possibly more so, under the demands of my constituents) at different localities to prevent erosion of the banks, to save walls, to save farms, and the money has been expended and the work washed away in the freshet that came down from the Rocky Mountains, from Montana and the Dakotas, in the next year. What we suffer from there is what has endangered the Lower Mississippi—immense fires upon the head waters of the Missouri, that destroy the undergrowth and the mosses and the herbage that would absorb the water, and it runs as it would over the top of this desk when the snows break up in the spring and pours a flood down the Missouri and Mississippi, resulting in immense erosion and destruction of lands and even of towns.

The river can only be improved like the Mississippi River, by reaches systematically. We have had this practically demonstrated. The Missouri River Commission commenced at Jefferson City and improved for 45 miles down the river systematically, one improvement supporting the other, one curve in the banks being destroyed by putting the proper improvements on the opposite side, always throwing the river against the bluff, the rocky side, and protecting the alluvial lands. What is the result? There is not a finer piece of riparian engineering in the world than on the 45 miles below Jefferson City. It stood three freshets, and you can not see where the river has made any impression upon it. Nothing else was ever known like it before. That was done by following the recommendations of the Missouri River Commission.

I have stood here year after year battling for the support of the Commission, as long as we have one. We have five officers there, three of them from the Corps of Engineers; we are paying them salaries; they are conducting the improvement according to their own way, and they could do it in no other. As long as we have a Commission we ought to support them in that work.

The pressure brought upon other members of the Senate is nothing compared to that upon me. Here is $325,000 that is washing away in specific appropriations in my own State. To support the plan of the Commission is, I believe, the best thing for the people there, and I think they will see it in the end. There will be some temporary and local irritation and great criticism of me in the county newspapers, but the end will justify it, as it did in the reach below Jefferson City. That Commission can be trusted. My friend from Kansas is mistaken in thinking that you must go there and logroll with them. They are not able to meet the demands of all localities and therefore there are always people dissatisfied. I have myself thought at times that they ought to interfere with the course of the river when these ravages were being made upon magnificent land worth fifty and seventy-five dollars an acre and that would produce anything in the world. But I have been satisfied, after I watched their work and inspected it in person, as my colleague has done with me, that they were right and that they understood how to bridle that river and to keep it in its channel, if human ingenuity and talent could do it.

Captain Eads, the greatest riparian engineer who ever lived in this country, and I think in any other—not the greatest fortifications engineer, but riparian engineer—told me once that the Mississippi River could be improved with $100,000,000 and with nothing less. But he said, "You must put a bridle upon it like you do upon an unbroken horse; and it will take years to do it, and a hundred million dollars to do it." And yet every year we appropriate two or three million dollars and the freshets come and the works are washed away.

I appeal to the Senate to sustain the committee in doing what they have thought to be right. It is all that they could do. All these towns in Missouri, my own constituents, my personal and political friends, are to-day writing and telegraphing me to keep the House bill as it was, because these fifty or sixty thousand dollars of appropriations for localities are contained in it. My personal and political friends, if I consulted them, would have the bill as passed by the House; but I am satisfied that it is simply throwing away that much money. There are no recommendations for such appropriations. There are no estimates. When I saw these appropriations in the bill I communicated with my colleagues in the other House and invited them to show me where the commission had recommended any such appropriations or stated any estimates as to the amount. I was informed that one of the board had verbally told a member of the House that he thought there ought to be money expended at these points.

I submit to the Senate, can we appropriate $325,000 on oral statements of that kind when a board is composed of five members, three of them belonging to the Engineer Corps? I make, I was about to say, from a political standpoint, a greater sacrifice than any other Senator, than all others put together, and yet I am absolutely certain that I am right in regard to it and that the committee were right in sustaining the provision as it is found reported in the bill.

Omaha will receive all the money that is necessary if there is an erosion of the banks there. If the Senator from Kansas wants $15,000 at Leavenworth and at Atchison, he is supported by an estimate and a recommendation, but that is not the case as to these other places. Unquestionably that is so, and I shall make no resistance if he insists upon it, though I believe that he will fare better to let the improvements opposite those two cities remain in the bill as we have it proposed by the committee. Those improvements are on the Missouri side of the river, in one of the wealthiest counties in the State, not in Kansas, but in Platte County, Mo.

Mr. BAKER. I appreciate what the Senator from Missouri says, but still I think I ought to insist upon $15,000 at Atchison and $15,000 at Leavenworth.

Mr. VEST. Very good; I am perfectly willing to go back to the people of Platte County, where I have as good friends as any in the world, who have always supported me in every ambition of my life, and defend the amendment as we have put it in the bill. I think I can satisfy them that it is the best for them. But if the Senator from Kansas, who has, as I say, recommendations and estimates for these places, and the other places have not, insists upon the $30,000, it is all that the State of Kansas has asked from the committee, and I am perfectly willing to concede it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BAKER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HILL. I wish to move an adjournment.

Mr. VEST. Let us get through with this item.

Mr. FRYE. Yes, let us get through with it.

Mr. BAKER. Let us vote on my amendment.

Mr. HILL. Very well.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to offer another amendment to the amendment of the committee. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "expended" where it occurs in line 4, and inserting "contracted for," so that the latter provision may share the same fate as the general provision.

Mr. VEST. How would it read then?

Mr. ALLISON. It would then read:

Of the money hereby appropriated and hereby authorized to be contracted for there may be expended, in the discretion of said Commission, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. VEST. No; not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. In line 6, after the words "Council Bluffs," I move to insert "Nebraska City."

Mr. VEST. That is right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. Before the Senator from New York moves to adjourn I hope the Senate will conclude to consider the next amendment.

Mr. VEST. We have not yet disposed of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. FRYE. Let me inquire, where do Leavenworth and Atchison now come in—at the end?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the end of line 13.

Mr. FRYE. Then those words must be stricken out in line 6.

Mr. VEST. I was about to make the suggestion that they be stricken out of the body of the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, after the words "Nebraska City," just inserted, strike out "Leavenworth, Atchison."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be agreed to unless objection is made. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Now, I think I have kept the Senate here as late as I am justified in doing.

BOOK AGENTS OF METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

Mr. BATE. The Senator from New York is kind enough to suspend the motion to adjourn until I can ask for the consideration of Senate bill 2962. It asks for no money. It simply sends a case to the Court of Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is putting all the Senators to a great deal of annoyance in having to ask unanimous consent when there are not half a dozen present, and at a time when we ought to adjourn. It is not the way to transact business. I am not going to object to the bill called up by the Senator from Tennessee, but I am going to object to any other request of the kind until we have some agreement by which we shall transact the business of the Senate in a proper and decent way, giving every Senator a chance and not having a regular scramble, as we have every day after 6 o'clock, when there is not a quorum here and when business ought not to be transacted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill indicated by the Senator from Tennessee will be read for information.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply want to give notice now, so that there will be no personal feeling in regard to the matter.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Missouri does not intend his notice to apply to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not to apply to this case, as I said.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 2962) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims in the case "The Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church" against The United States, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed. The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 8, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 6, 1896.

POSTMASTERS.

Charles F. Terhune, to be postmaster at Binghamton, in the county of Broome and State of New York.

James Tiernan, to be postmaster at Fort Howard, in the county of Brown and State of Wisconsin.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 7, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will cause the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday to be read.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER (having counted the House). Ninety-five gentlemen are present; not a quorum.

After an interval of eighteen minutes,

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, is a quorum not now present?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is a quorum present, and the Clerk will read the Journal.

Mr. PICKLER. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal.

When the Clerk had reached that part of the Journal reciting the names of the absentees on the call of the committee and the names of those voting on the several roll calls,

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the reading of the Journal in full. Let us have the names.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the list of names in full.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be approved.

Mr. PICKLER. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the approval of the Journal, and on that demand the previous question.

The question was taken on the approval of the Journal; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PICKLER) there were—ayes 174, noes 0.

Mr. PICKLER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. There is evidently a quorum present. If those gentlemen who did not rise in response to the vote will announce their presence the Chair will count those present and not voting.

Nine gentlemen having risen,

The SPEAKER. One hundred and seventy-four in the affirmative and nine gentlemen present and not voting. A quorum is present, and the Journal is approved.

PRINTING AND BINDING PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Printing, I desire to report a bill (H. R. 8237) to improve the printing and binding methods of the public documents, and ask its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the annual reports of the heads of the Executive Departments and of the chiefs of bureaus, commissions, and offices shall not hereafter be numbered and printed as Congressional documents. Periodicals issued weekly, monthly, yearly, or at other regular intervals shall not be numbered and printed as Congressional documents. Special publications extending over a series of months or years and issued at irregular intervals shall not be numbered and printed as Congressional documents. The general rule and procedure shall be that the Congressional number shall be given only to those documents which emanate directly from Congress or are furnished in response to the call of Congress, or either House thereof, upon an Executive Department for information.

SEC. 2. That whenever any document not bearing a Congressional number is furnished for the use of Congress 500 additional copies thereof shall at the same time be furnished to the Superintendent of Documents for the supply of the designated depository libraries, and there shall also be furnished 15 copies for the Senate library and 15 copies for the House library, and to the Congressional Library 2 copies for its own use and 50 copies for its foreign exchanges. Of all such documents not bearing a Congressional number and ordered to be printed for the use of Congress the "usual number," which shall also be printed, shall be 1,100 copies, of which there shall be sent, in the unbound form, 170 copies to the Senate document room, 400 copies to the House document room, 10 copies to the office of the Secretary of the Senate, and 20 copies to the office of the Clerk of the House, and 500 copies shall be reserved by the Public Printer in unstitched form, to be specially bound to the order of members and officers of Congress, as provided by law.

SEC. 3. That documents not bearing a Congressional number shall be bound as follows: If emanating from the Department of State, in scarlet cloth; if from the Department of the Treasury, in dark-blue cloth; if from the Department of War, in black cloth; if from the Department of the Navy, in dark-green cloth; if from the Department of Justice, in dark-brown cloth; if from the Post-Office Department, in drab cloth; if from the Department of the Interior, in maroon cloth; if from the Department of Agriculture, in light-brown cloth; if from the Department of Labor, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Fish Commission, the Smithsonian Institution, or other publishing office not connected with one of the Executive Departments, then in such colored cloth not used on the books of another bureau as such office and the Public Printer may agree upon; but when once adopted such color shall be continued from year to year in the binding of the same reports or other volumes from the same bureau, office, or commission. In providing cloth for binding the public documents the Public Printer shall not provide a second-rate and low grade, but shall provide either cotton or linen cloth of those first-class grades and qualities which promise to give the volumes the most attractive appearance and the greatest durability. In lettering or embossing books the Public Printer shall use gold leaf of the best and most suitable quality that is furnished for binders' use, and he shall not use "Dutch metal" or any other imitation of gold leaf. The Senate documents shall be bound in dark-brown cloth and the Senate reports in light-brown cloth. The House documents shall be bound in dark-drab cloth and the House reports in light-drab cloth: Provided, That the Revised Statutes, Statutes at Large, decisions of the Interior Department in land cases and in pension cases, opinions of the Attorney-General, or other publications of like character, properly designated as law books, may, within the discretion of the heads of Departments issuing the same, be bound in sheep.

SEC. 4. That in placing the titles on the backs or sides of books (not pamphlets) the following general rules shall govern: The fewest suitable number of words shall be used, and attempts to carry the whole title-page, or any considerable part of it, on the covers shall not be made. The largest and clearest type permitted by the space and by the rules of good taste shall be used, the purpose of making the titles readable at a distance being kept in view. The title placed near the top on the backs of books shall be the one indicating the subject-matter of the volume. The title placed in the middle panel shall be the one indicating the year or other date, the whole number of volumes in the series, and the special number of the particular volume on which the title is placed. The title near the bottom of the back of each book shall show the Department, Bureau, Office, or Commission from which it issues. Every cloth-bound book shall have on the back of its cover a title and a date, which on very thin books may be printed lengthwise of the volume. In expressing dates and other numbers on the backs of books Arabic numerals shall be used.

SEC. 5. That in making up the binder's titles for the House and Senate documents and reports when binding the "reserve," any document or report which fills more than one-third part of the volume in which it is contained shall be mentioned in the title on the back of the cover of such volume. The title near the top of the back of the cover on each of the reserve volumes shall be "House Documents," "House Reports," "Senate Documents," or "Senate Reports," according to the contents of the volumes. On the middle panel shall appear the number or numbers of the documents or reports contained in the volume, and also the name (or an abbreviation of the name) of any document or report contained therein which may separately fill one-third or more of the volume. When there is not in the volume any document or report making one-third the bulk of said volume, then the word "Miscellaneous" shall be placed on the middle back panel in addition to the numbers of the documents or reports therein contained. On the back of each volume of documents or reports, near the bottom, shall be placed the number and the years of the Congress in which such documents or reports originated.

SEC. 6. That the color, lettering, etc., of the binding and the phraseology, typography, etc., of the title-page of every public document shall be the same on and in all copies of such document, and there shall be but one edition of any public document, except reprints, and in case of a reprint the fact of its being a reprint, with the date of such reprint, shall be clearly stated on the title-page of such reprint edition. This provision shall not, however, be held to preclude or curtail any privileges now enjoyed by members of Congress or heads of Departments of having copies of documents specially bound for their personal use.

SEC. 7. That it shall not be any part of the duty of the Public Printer to furnish title-pages for any of the public documents. This shall be done by the authors or compilers of the documents.

SEC. 8. That the special edition of the President's message and a part of the annual reports, heretofore issued in black cloth and entitled "Messages and Documents," shall not be issued, and the words, "Being part of the message and documents," shall not appear on the title-pages of any of the annual reports; but an equal number of the reports which have been heretofore printed in the "Message and Documents" edition shall be printed in another edition.

SEC. 9. That the "Abridgment" shall not be dated "eighteen hundred and ninety-four and ninety-five" nor any other combination of dates. It shall bear one date, which shall be that of the fiscal year to which its contents relate. The same rule shall be followed in stamping dates on the covers of the annual reports.

SEC. 10. That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the separate publication of complete papers which are parts of annual reports, nor to prevent the publication of varying editions, with amended title-pages, when a material amount of matter has been added, subtracted, or changed. Such additions, subtractions, or changes are held to make a new book.

SEC. 11. That the public documents shall be printed in the octavo size, unless urgent reason, amounting to absolute necessity, shall be shown to the Public Printer for making exceptions to this rule.

SEC. 12. That Senate documents and House documents shall be numbered consecutively through a Congress, in the manner now followed with bills, resolutions, and reports.

SEC. 13. That of all documents or reports which make one or more complete volumes the whole of the "usual number" shall be printed at one time, but of all documents or reports which will make only part of a bound volume the "reserve" number shall not be printed till all the documents which are to be bound in the same volume are ready for printing. The bound volumes of documents and reports bearing Congressional numbers shall be pagged continuously throughout the volumes on the bottom margins, and the original paging of the documents and reports shall be retained on the top margins of the pages of said bound volumes.

SEC. 14. That single Congressional documents containing 500 or more pages shall be separately bound.

SEC. 15. That it is the intent and purpose of this law to assimilate the Government publications to the general literature of the country, and to that end it is directed that the word "volume" shall be used in preference to the word "part," "appendix," or "supplement" when the intention is to describe a separate book, and that the word "series" or the word "set" shall be used in preference to the word "volume" when the intention is to describe a collection of books.

SEC. 16. That the provisions of this act, so far as they can be made applicable without doing over again work already done, shall apply to all unissued volumes of the Congressional reserve and to all other incomplete work now in process of completion in the Government Printing Office.

SEC. 17. That it is hereby made the duty of the Public Printer to see to it that this law shall be executed in letter and in spirit.

SEC. 18. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House for a few minutes I will explain the purpose of this bill.

The bill has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Printing, and is unanimously reported from the committee. The bill comes here thoroughly fortified. The first draft of this bill was submitted to every Department of the Government here from which documents are issued; it has been submitted to every great public library in the country, and no objection has appeared to it from any quarter.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Public Printer approving the bill; also a letter from the Librarian of Congress, Mr. Spofford, approving the bill. I have here also a letter from the Massachusetts Library Club, representing 135 different libraries, strongly approving the passage of the bill. I have a letter from the trustees of the Public Library of the City of Boston, said to be the greatest library in the country, highly approving the bill, and I have here the approval of libraries and librarians and important public institutions from nearly every State in the Union. I could, if the House would have patience, read at length in support of this bill from these various documents to which I have referred.

Now, then, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the purposes of the bill are very simple. The bill does not reduce in any particular whatever any publication now authorized by law. It does not curtail the privileges that anyone enjoys under existing law. The effect of the bill will be to enlarge these privileges.

Let me say, in brief, that a prime purpose of the bill is to reduce the varying editions of the same documents now issued from the Departments of the Government to one edition, and make it clear to anyone, by the title of the document, exactly the contents of the document itself. I have before me four volumes, to which I call your attention [indicating four bound volumes]: The first is the report of the Commissioner of Education, the second the report of the Secretary of the Interior, the third is Messages and Documents of the Interior Department, and this, the fourth one, is House Executive Documents. Now, then, when I tell you that the contents of each of these volumes are identical you will at once see the necessity of the reform which the bill seeks to accomplish. Instead of issuing this document and others like it in four or five editions, we propose to issue it in one edition. Seeing on a library shelf the volume House Executive Documents, no one would think to find in that volume the report of the Commissioner of Education. So duplicates go everywhere. One library in this country has culled out and returned to the Superintendent of Documents 5,000 volumes of duplicates. We propose to prevent duplication.

The other important feature of the bill is—

Mr. DOCKERY. You not only secure uniformity, but this reform must necessarily operate to largely reduce expenditures?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly, because these documents are issued now in duplicate. The other feature of the bill is to take out of what is called the reserve the copies that are furnished to the depository libraries and print them at the same time that the first edition is printed. As it is now, these volumes that go into the reserve are not bound up until after the conclusion of a session of Congress, so that the libraries do not receive their copies until two or three years after a volume has been issued. When it comes to current matters of interest, like the report of the Director of the Mint, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the value in those reports is when they are first issued. So we take them out of the reserve and bind them at the time the report is first issued.

Under the present system, librarians will petition a member of Congress to send a copy of a report or other publication from his quota, and then the Secretary of the Interior, or of any other Department, will in time send a copy from his quota. Then the reserve is finally bound up, a year or two after, and the regular copy for the library is furnished. We propose to remedy that.

Mr. Speaker, there can be no possible objection to this bill. I should be very glad to answer any question that any member may have in his mind. I have examined the bill very carefully. It is certainly important that this reform should take place. It works injury to nobody and benefit to everyone.

The Government Printing Office is the largest publishing house in the world. We issue from there something like 1,000,000 copies of books every year. We are doing this at an expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Many experts are engaged in preparing the contents of these volumes; and when we are expending this large amount of money we certainly should see that the reports reach the public during the life of each report.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand the gentleman to say that this bill has the approval of the Public Printer?

Mr. PERKINS. This bill has the approval of the Public Printer, of the Librarian of Congress, of everyone to whom it has been submitted.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I understood that some time ago there was some friction between the Printing Committee and the Bookbinders' Association of the country. Has that been adjusted?

Mr. PERKINS. That has been adjusted, and I am authorized to say for the Bookbinders' Union that they recommend the passage of the bill in its present form.

Mr. OWENS. I just want to call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], who generally takes a very active and intelligent interest in these matters, is absent. Does the gentleman object to postponing it until his return?

Mr. PERKINS. My colleague on the committee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has been with me every day when we have considered this bill, and it meets with his entire approval and indorsement. He has had as much to do in the preparation of it as I have. The gentleman can not fail to accept my word for that.

Mr. OWENS. I do not object to that, but it is a matter of very general importance, and we should like to understand a little more about it. Over here we have not been able to hear the statement of the gentleman from Iowa. We are absolutely in the dark about the provisions of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I have sought to make myself understood. The gentleman must recognize that this is a very important matter. It does not infringe upon the rights of anyone. It has the approval, as I say, of the Public Printer, of the Librarian of Congress, of the entire committee, of every librarian to whom it has been submitted, and there is not an objection from any quarter.

Mr. TALBERT. I have asked for the report of the committee, and I find that the committee have made no report. Why is that? If I am in error, I should like to know it.

Mr. PERKINS. My friend will bear in mind that the committee reported a joint resolution (No. 126) on this question and that report was made some time ago. The bill having been carefully gone over by the committee, we have made some changes from the joint resolution, and present it in this form by the unanimous action of the committee.

Mr. TALBERT. I just wanted to know how this bill came up, if the committee have not reported it regularly.

Mr. PERKINS. The committee have reported it this morning.

Mr. TALBERT. Has the report been printed, or is it a report on another bill?

Mr. PERKINS. It is the same subject—the same report.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask how it comes up for consideration? Have the committee made a formal report?

Mr. PERKINS. They have made a formal report.

Mr. TALBERT. Where is the report?

Mr. PERKINS. There is a printed report on joint resolution No. 126.

Mr. TALBERT. Why is it that it is not obtainable?

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman can obtain it by sending for it.

Mr. TALBERT. I asked for it, and they said I could not get it.
Mr. DOCKERY. I understand that this bill is a substitute for the joint resolution, and the report is on the joint resolution.

Mr. TALBERT. There seems to have been some irregularity about the reporting of it.

Mr. MILES. There is no division in the committee on this subject?

Mr. PERKINS. None whatever.

Mr. MILES. And the Public Printer approves it?

Mr. PERKINS. The Public Printer approves it. There is no objection from any quarter. The gentleman will be unable to find an objection from any quarter.

Mr. TALBERT. I am not trying to find an objection to the bill. I was only asking in regard to the manner in which it comes up, as I failed to obtain a report. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendments recommended by the committee are as follows: In section 2, line 3, after the word "thereof," insert the words "bound in half morocco, of colors to correspond with the colors of cloth-bound books as hereinafter provided."

Also, in line 6, of same section, after the word "furnished," insert the words "in like binding."

Also, in section 3, line 2, after the word "bound," insert the words "in paper or cloth, and if in cloth."

Also, in same section, lines 19 and 20, strike out the words "shall not provide a second rate and low grade, but."

Also, in same section, lines 26 and 27, strike out the words "and he shall not use 'Dutch metal,' or any other imitation of gold leaf."

Also, in section 4, line 16, strike out the word "cloth."

Also, in section 5, strike out all after the word "reserve," in line 3, down to and including the word "volume," in line 6.

Also in section 6, line 1, insert after the word "color" the word "and"; and in same line strike out the words "and so forth"; and in line 2 of same section, after the word "phraseology," insert the word "and"; and also in same line strike out the words "and so forth."

Also in section 9, line 1, after the word "abridgment," strike out all the words down to and including the word "dates," in line 3.

Also in section 15, line 3, after the word "end," strike out the words "it is directed that."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BOUTELLE, Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania, and Mr. CUMMINGS as conferees on the part of the House on the naval appropriation bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 606) for the relief of Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean;

A bill (S. 989) granting a pension to Fannie Kautz, widow of August V. Kautz, late brigadier-general, United States Army.

Joint resolution (S. R. 127) proposing amendments to section 73, paragraph 32, of the act of January 12, 1895, providing for the public printing and binding and distribution of documents; and Joint resolution (S. R. 128) proposing an amendment to section 89, paragraph 2, of the act of January 12, 1895, providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 802) for the relief of the receivers of the Towboat Association of New Orleans, La.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1602) for the relief of A. P. Brown, late postmaster at Le Mars, Iowa; and

A bill (H. R. 953) for the relief of William Gray.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIX, the following Senate bills and joint resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 606) for the relief of Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 989) granting a pension to Fannie Kautz, widow of August V. Kautz, late brigadier-general, United States Army—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2822) to increase the pension of Theodore V. Purdy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Joint resolution (S. R. 128) proposing an amendment to section 89, paragraph 2, of the act of January 12, 1895, providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents—to the Committee on Printing.

Joint resolution (S. R. 127) proposing amendments to section 73, paragraph 32, of the act of January 12, 1895, providing for the public printing and binding and distribution of documents—to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 572) for the relief of James Duke;

A bill (H. R. 153) granting a pension to Mary Ann Tracy;

A bill (H. R. 491) granting an increase of pension to Francis Walsh, of Stockham, Nebr.;

A bill (H. R. 1139) granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt;

A bill (H. R. 577) granting a pension to Lydia A. Taft;

A bill (H. R. 4968) granting a pension to Helen A. Jackman, dependent daughter of Lieut. William Jackman, late of Company I, Fourteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 4887) granting a pension to Sarah G. Ives;

A bill (H. R. 1889) granting an honorable discharge to F. L. Taylor from December 2, 1864;

A bill (H. R. 5254) granting an increase of pension to Ebenezer G. Howell, late a private in Company F, One hundred and sixtieth New York Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 6505) to revive and reenact an act to authorize the construction of a free bridge across Arkansas River, connecting Little Rock and Argenta;

A bill (H. R. 2735) for the relief of Enoch Davis;

A bill (H. R. 4456) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the cemetery association in the city of St. Paul, Minn., to be used at or near the foot of the soldiers' monument in said cemetery;

A bill (H. R. 3018) to amend the act approved March 3, 1891, granting the right of way upon the public lands for reservoir and canal purposes;

A bill (S. 1872) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange in behalf of the United States the tract of land at Choctaw Point, Mobile County, Ala., now belonging to the United States and held for light-house purposes, with the Mobile, Jackson and Kansas City Railroad Company for any other tract or parcel of land in said county equally well or better adapted to use for light-house purposes;

A bill (S. 1846) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate condemned cannon to Custer Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Leavenworth, Kans., and Mathies Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Burlington, Iowa;

A bill (S. 661) to amend section 2880 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fixing time for vessels to unlade;

A bill (S. 129) for the relief of Capt. George H. Perkins;

A bill (S. 1904) to regulate marriages in the District of Columbia.

CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up from the House Calendar the bill H. R. 7370.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7370) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 15 of the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 15. That the Supreme Court and the circuit court of appeals shall have the same appellate jurisdiction, by writ of error or appeal, to review the judgments, orders, and decrees of the supreme courts of the several Territories as by this act they may have to review the judgments, orders, and decrees of the district and circuit courts; and also appellate jurisdiction by writ of error or appeal to review any final judgment or decree of the supreme court of any Territory in all cases where the matter in controversy shall exceed $1,000, besides costs, and in all criminal cases where the crime charged may be murder or a felony or infamous crime where the defendant shall have been sentenced to capital punishment or imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period not less than five years; which said appeals or writs of error shall be taken in the same manner and subject to the same regulations as provided for cases of writs of error or appeals from judgments from the district courts."

SEC. 2. That all appeals which may be taken or writs of error sued out under the provisions of the foregoing section 15, as herein amended, to review any judgment, order, or decree of the supreme court of any Territory, shall be taken or sued out within one year after the entry of the judgment, order, or decree sought to be reviewed: Provided, That in any such case mentioned in said section wherein a judgment, order, or decree has been entered since March 3, 1894, and not been entirely executed at the time of the passage of this act, the party aggrieved shall be entitled to take an appeal or sue out a writ of error at any time within six months after the passage of this act, provided that no vested right acquired under any proceeding to execute such judgment, order, or decree shall be in any way affected or impaired by such appeal or writ of error, and the party appealing or suing out a writ of error to review any judgment, order, or decree of any supreme court of any Territory shall be entitled to a stay of execution in the same manner and subject to the same regulations as is provided by the laws of the United States in cases of appeals and writs of error from judgments, orders, or decrees of the district or circuit courts of the United States; and in all cases when the writ of error is sued out from a judgment in which the sentence shall be capital punishment, the same shall operate as a stay of execution during the pendency of such case or writ of error.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

MR. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill, but it is fair to say to the House that I have some question as to the power of the House to pass it, and I will want four or five minutes to state my reasons for that.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MR. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, there are one or two committee amendments to the bill, and the Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] has a further amendment which he desires to submit and which is acceptable, as I understand it, to the committee.

MR. PICKLER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. How does this matter come up?

THE SPEAKER. It comes up by presentation of the gentleman from Vermont.

MR. PICKLER. By unanimous consent?

THE SPEAKER. Yes, sir; the Chair asked if there was objection, and there was no objection.

MR. PICKLER. Has it passed that stage?

MR. POWERS. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico to offer an amendment.

MR. CATRON. I offer an amendment.

MR. PICKLER. I ask if there is time to object?

THE SPEAKER. The Chair put the question twice to the House, and no objection was made.

MR. PICKLER. Then it is my fault, so far as that is concerned.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman was providentially absent. [Laughter and applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 9, page 1, after the word "that," the words "the supreme court and."

The question was taken; and

THE SPEAKER announced: The ayes seem to have it; the ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

MR. PICKLER. Division.

MR. POWERS. There are two amendments reported by the committee.

MR. PICKLER. I call for a division on that vote.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman calls for a division on the amendment which has already been submitted to the House.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 150, noes none.

MR. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum. THE SPEAKER proceeded to count the House.

MR. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

THE SPEAKER (after counting). Two hundred gentlemen are present, a quorum. On this question the ayes are 154, the noes none. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

MR. POWERS. I now call attention to the committee amendments.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend in line 5 of section 2 by striking out the words "one year" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "six months"; and with the further amendment, in lines 12 and 13 of section 1, by striking out the words "by this act" and inserting, after the word "have" in said line and section, the words "by the act to which this is an amendment."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

MR. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] reported this bill, and I yield to him for a statement.

MR. CONNOLLY. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend a section of the act creating the circuit courts of appeals. It was evidently supposed at the time when that act was passed that appeals from the supreme courts of the Territories to the circuit courts of appeals would be allowed; but a decision rendered by the Supreme Court this winter, in the case of Folsom against the United States, on the 2d day of December, 1895, decides that appeals from the supreme court of a Territory can not go to the circuit courts of appeals; in other words, that there is no appeal at all from a supreme court of a Territory.

It is for the purpose of correcting that, so that an appeal or writ of error will lie from the supreme court of a Territory to the circuit courts of appeals, the same as from a United States circuit or district court, that this act has been asked for by the residents of the Territory, and it is for the purpose of giving them that relief that this amendment to section 15 of the act creating the circuit courts of appeals is proposed, and there would seem to be no objection to it. One member of the Judiciary Committee has filed a minority report; otherwise the report in favor of the bill is the report of the entire committee. That member questions the power of Congress to confer appellate jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court and circuit courts of appeals. I do not know whether his report goes to that extent or not, but I remember that it does question the power to authorize an appeal to the supreme court from the courts of the Territories. That position has some plausibility, and it might be considered that there was something in it but for the fact that the Supreme Court itself, in October, 1894, decided that the power does rest in Congress to authorize appeals from any court created by Congress for the Territories to the Supreme Court of the United States. That, I understand, is the only question which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] reserved in reporting this bill. Inasmuch as the gentleman desires to be heard upon the question, I call his attention to the case of United States vs. Coe, in volume 155—

MR. BAILEY (interposing). Will the gentleman permit me to say that I have no doubt about the power of Congress to confer appellate jurisdiction in a case where the United States itself is a party, because a controversy to which the United States is a party is one of the class of cases enumerated in the Constitution to which the judicial power of the United States extends?

MR. CONNOLLY. But the Supreme Court itself says that this power is not referable to the provision of the Constitution authorizing the establishment of that court.

MR. BAILEY. The case to which the gentleman calls my attention is a case involving an appeal from the Court of Private Land Claims, is it not?

MR. CONNOLLY. That was the particular question that was before the court, but the language of the court is general as to all classes of cases.

MR. BAILEY. Let me say to the gentleman, in order that there may be no misunderstanding between us, that I do not question the power of Congress to authorize an appeal from any court created by Congress, or even from the courts of the States, in any case to which the Constitution extends the judicial power of the United States.

MR. CONNOLLY. I understand that the gentleman makes that limit, but the Supreme Court does not stop for that limit. If the gentleman will examine that case and the concluding paragraphs in the case in volume 155, decided last October, he will find that the language is general, that it is not limited to cases in which the United States is a party, but is general.

And as, wherever the United States exercise the power of government, whether under specific grant or through the dominion and sovereignty of plenary authority, as over the Territories (Shively vs. Bowlby, 152 U. S., 1, 48), that power includes the ultimate executive, legislative, and judicial power, it follows that the judicial action of all inferior courts established by Congress may, in accordance with the Constitution, be subjected to the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme judicial tribunal of the Government.

They go on further and say:

There has never been any question in regard to this as applied to Territorial courts, and no reason can be perceived for applying a different rule to the adjudications of the Court of Private Land Claims over property in the Territory.

There never has been any question, Mr. Speaker, about the power of Congress to do this with reference to the Territorial courts, and the Supreme Court says there is no reason why the same rule should not apply to these private land claims. But so far as that is concerned, now that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] has been adopted, this amendment of section 15 of the act applies only to appeals to the circuit courts of appeals, so that that question is entirely eliminated. I can see no reason why the privilege should not be extended to the people of the Territories of having their cases reviewed in the circuit courts of appeals.

MR. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, the objectionable part of the bill is that which confers—

Appellate jurisdiction, by writ of error or appeal, to review any final judgment or decree of the supreme court of any Territory in all cases where the matter in controversy shall exceed $1,000 besides costs.

And my friend from Illinois himself admits that my contention would be a strong one if the question were new. I do not think that it is within the power of Congress to confer upon any court created in pursuance of the judicial article of the Constitution the power to hear and determine any case, either originally or upon appeal, except those cases which are particularly and specifically enumerated in the Constitution as cases to which the judicial power of the United States extends. To my mind, the proposition is so clear as to make it difficult of argument, and yet the Judiciary Committee has reported this bill, assuming, as a matter of course, that it is within the power of Congress to do this.

There are several cases in which expressions as loose as that which the gentleman from Illinois has just read have been made by the court, but when you look away from the language of the court to the language of the Constitution itself, the matter seems to me too clear for controversy. The third article of the Constitution begins with these words:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time establish.

The judges have declared, with practical unanimity, that the Constitution itself establishes the Supreme Court of the United States, though the constitutional provision, it is true, is not operative or effective until Congress has fixed the number of judges and they have been appointed. The Constitution authorizes Congress to establish such inferior courts as in its wisdom it may deem proper, and the Supreme Court, established by the Constitution, and the inferior courts, established in pursuance of the constitutional power granted to Congress, must exercise the judicial power of the United States. Proceeding one step further, then, the second section of that same third article says:

The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States, between a State and citizens of another State, between citizens of different States, between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens, or subjects.

The eleventh amendment of the Constitution eliminates from that section the judicial power of the United States to call a sovereign State into the courts and pronounce judgment against it; but, with the exception of the change made by that eleventh amendment, the judicial power of the United States to-day is precisely identical with what it was as originally defined in the Constitution.

Now, my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] will agree with me that no court created under that provision of the Constitution can take original cognizance of any case except one of the cases enumerated in that first paragraph of the second section of the third article. There would be no controversy about this if you were proposing to give the circuit courts or the district courts of the United States original jurisdiction. Suppose any member of this House should propose that the district courts of the United States should have original jurisdiction in all cases where the amount exceeded $1,000. There is not a gentleman on this floor, lawyer or layman, who would not straightway understand that it was beyond the power of Congress to confer any such jurisdiction upon the circuit or the district courts of the United States. And, Mr. Speaker, it is beyond the power of Congress to confer appellate jurisdiction in any case over which original jurisdiction can not be given. The Constitution recognizes no difference between the original and the appellate jurisdiction of the inferior courts of the United States. It permits Congress to grant to the inferior courts the power to hear and determine all the specified cases except the three classes of cases over which original jurisdiction is granted to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Supreme Court has held, beginning with the famous case of Marbury vs. Madison, that it is not within the power of Congress to increase the original jurisdiction of that court. In the first judiciary act Congress attempted to grant to the Supreme Court power to issue mandamus against the officers of the Government; and it was in pursuance of that section of the judiciary act that Marbury brought his suit to compel Mr. Madison, who was then Secretary of State, to deliver to him his commission as a justice of the peace in and for this District. The Supreme Court, speaking through Judge Marshall—and this was the first of those remarkable decisions that have won for him a first place among the judicial reasoners of his own or any other age, or of this or any other country—held that provision of the judiciary act unconstitutional on the ground that Congress had no power to add to the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

The next question which arose was whether Congress could commit to the inferior courts the decision of those cases over which original jurisdiction had been granted to the Supreme Court. For eighty years that question was left unsettled. In the Ortega case the court plainly intimated that Congress had no such power. Judge Curtis, in his admirable book embracing a series of lectures delivered to a law class, expressed it as his opinion that Congress could not grant original jurisdiction to the inferior courts in those cases where the Constitution had granted original jurisdiction to the Supreme Court. But at last, and after leaving the question open many years, the Supreme Court of the United States did decide in the case of Bors vs. Preston that Congress could vest original jurisdiction in those cases in the inferior courts. But if we admit that the doctrine of Bors vs. Preston is reconcilable with the doctrine of Marbury vs. Madison, it does not follow in that Congress can grant to any court of the United States created under the judicial article of the Constitution the power to hear and determine any case except those enumerated in the Constitution itself.

I repeat that if this were a question affecting the district and circuit courts of the United States there would be no difference of opinion. The difference of opinion arises out of the fact that it is an effort to grant appeals from the courts of the Territories. I concur with my friend from Illinois that the power of Congress over the Territories is not limited by the judicial clause of the Constitution. I grant him that the Territorial courts are not created under the powers granted by the judicial clause of the Constitution, but are created in pursuance of a separate and different power to make all needful rules and regulations over the territory of the United States, or it may be, as intimated by Judge Marshall in the case of The Insurance Company vs. Canter, that it results from the power of the Government to acquire territory. But, however it results and from whatever power it arises, I cordially agree that it is not exercised under the judicial clause of the Constitution, and that the Territorial courts, not being created under the judicial clauses of the Constitution, are not subject to its limitations.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that Congress, when it creates the courts of a Territory, can authorize them to exercise any jurisdiction that it may deem proper not inconsistent with the letter or the spirit of the Federal Constitution. But, sir, when Congress has created courts in the Territories, and has conferred upon them their powers to hear and determine such cases as Congress sees fit, it has then exhausted its power over these cases, and the determination must be final unless they fall within the class of cases to which the judicial power of the United States is extended by the Constitution. In other words, when you go into the Territorial court, where do you look to ascertain its jurisdiction? You look to the act of Congress creating the court. If under that act of Congress the court has power to try and determine the case, then you look to the Constitution to see if Congress has the power to give the court the power conferred upon it by the law. Unless you find that the act of Congress vesting the court with jurisdiction is antagonistic to some provision of the Constitution the court can proceed with the trial. But when you have had your day in the Territorial court, and having lost your case there you undertake by an appeal or a writ of error to carry it into the circuit court of the United States, you will then stand in a court created in pursuance of the judicial clause of the Constitution, and therefore the right and power of that court to hear and determine that case depends first upon the act of Congress, and next upon the constitutional power of Congress to pass that act.

If this bill becomes a law any case involving a thousand dollars and costs is appealable to the circuit court of appeals. But when you look to the Constitution, as you must do, what do you find? You find that under the Constitution the courts created under the judiciary clause of that instrument can only exercise jurisdiction in certain cases; and no case that does not fall within the limits—the list of cases specified in the Constitution—can be heard and determined in the circuit court of appeals or in any other court of the United States created by and under the judicial article of the Constitution.

The power of Congress over the tribunal from which the appeal was taken is not the question in the appellate court. The power to entertain an appeal is determined, not by the jurisdiction of the trial court from which the appeal is taken, but by the jurisdiction of the appellate court to which the appeal is taken. There are many cases, both in Federal and in State courts, which are triable in the courts below, but not appealable to the courts above. When you undertake to appeal from the circuit or district court of any State to the supreme court of the State, you must show your right to a hearing in that higher court, and it is immaterial about your right or standing in the lower court; not immaterial in the technical sense of the word, because as a matter of course you must have had a standing below in order to have a standing above; but the mere fact that you had that standing in the lower court does not necessarily give you a standing in the appellate court. Instead of looking to the jurisdiction of the trial court, which heard your case originally, you look to the jurisdiction of the higher court to see if it has power to try the appeal.

I submit to the House and to the gentleman from Illinois that when you go into the circuit court of appeals you must answer a jurisdictional test. What is it? This bill makes the amount in controversy a jurisdictional test. It provides that if a thousand dollars and costs are involved the case is appealable. The Constitution of the United States says that the courts created under its judicial clause can exercise jurisdiction over no case except those specifically enumerated. What condition will my friend from Illinois find himself in if he appeals a case to the circuit court of appeals purely upon the amount in controversy? His case must be dismissed.

I do not doubt that an appeal will lie from the supreme court of a Territory to the Supreme Court of the United States, provided the case falls within the constitutional enumeration. In other words, if the United States were a party to a case in the Territorial court, or if a Federal question is involved, an appeal will lie. Why? Not on account of the tribunal from which the appeal was taken, because, as Judge Storey said in Martyn vs. Hunter's Lessee, the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States does not depend upon the tribunal from which the appeal is taken, but upon the character of the case, and the Supreme Court of the United States sustained an appeal from the highest court of Virginia. Of course Congress can authorize an appeal from the supreme court of a Territory precisely in the same cases as from the supreme court of a State; that is, whenever the case is one to which the judicial power of the United States extends.

In that class of cases Congress can authorize an appeal from any court—from the Court of Claims, from the Court of Private Land Claims, from the supreme courts of Territories, or from the supreme courts of the various States. But it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the constitutional courts of the United States should exercise no jurisdiction except over those cases to which their jurisdiction was expressly extended. The hardship may or may not be great, but the effect of the Constitution of the United States is, that when a Territory is organized it is assimilated to the condition of a State. A Territory is given a judiciary, a legislature, and an executive. It is presumed that the judiciary will be a competent and honest one; but the Territory is left to such a judiciary as it has, except in those cases to which the judicial power of the United States is extended. If the judges are corrupt or incompetent, the people of the Territory suffer precisely as a State might suffer which was afflicted with corrupt or incompetent judges.

The friends of this bill have removed one objection to it by striking out the Supreme Court of the United States and thereby limiting this appellate power to the circuit court of appeals; but it does not appear to me that they have escaped the difficulty, because the circuit court of appeals can be given jurisdiction over no case that the Supreme Court of the United States may not exercise jurisdiction over. The circuit court of appeals is what the judges denominate a "constitutional court," and it can exercise appellate jurisdiction in no case over which Congress might not, if it saw fit, confer original jurisdiction. No man will contend that Congress can confer original jurisdiction on the constitutional courts of the United States over "all cases involving $1,000"; and I contend that if we can not confer original we can not confer appellate jurisdiction.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Mr. Speaker, I apprehend that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is the only lawyer in this House who has examined this question who finds the difficulty with it that he does in this bill, or in the jurisdiction proposed. The gentleman's argument goes to hold that the present law is unconstitutional. That is the only legitimate effect of the gentleman's argument. His argument is that a law proposing to grant appellate jurisdiction to the circuit courts of appeals from the supreme courts of the Territories is unconstitutional.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no. I fully concede the power of Congress over those cases enumerated in the Constitution.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Now, the gentleman will find that under the present circuit courts of appeals act—

Mr. BAILEY. I may save the gentleman trouble by stating that I object to no part of the bill except that part which predicates the jurisdiction on the amount in controversy.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The original objection to the bill was that it granted an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman has misunderstood me. I was unfortunate in expressing myself.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The gentleman was not unfortunate in expressing himself in the minority report which he filed, because that was one of the objections that he made.

Mr. BAILEY. No; the gentleman will not find that in the minority report.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I have not the report before me this moment, but I have read it, however, and I found that objection in it.

Mr. BAILEY. I assure the gentleman he will not find that objection in it.

Mr. CONNOLLY. It was the practice before the circuit courts of appeals was established. Appeals went direct, in certain prescribed cases, from the supreme courts of the Territories to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that was the rule and practice and law until the passage of this circuit courts of appeals act in 1889. Then it provided that certain classes of those cases from the Territories, instead of going to the Supreme Court of the United States, must stop in the circuit courts of appeals. Not only so with reference to supreme courts of Territories, but also with reference to cases from district and circuit courts of the United States. They cut off the appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in a large class of cases, and limited the appeal—

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman allow me a question there?

Mr. CONNOLLY. Yes.

Mr. MILES. Has there been any attempt heretofore by Congress to carry any class of cases to the Supreme Court of the United States except those enumerated in the provisions of the Constitution?

Mr. CATRON. Let me answer that. I will say yes; for the last one hundred years it has been done, from all the Territories, to the Supreme Court of the United States, in cases exactly similar to this.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Now, this ridiculous condition of things exists to-day—

Mr. BAILEY. I dislike to interrupt my friend, but the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] could not make his statement good. If he will examine the reports in every case that has been appealed, and in which the question of jurisdiction was raised, there was either a Federal question or the United States was a party.

Mr. CATRON. The gentleman is decidedly mistaken. Nineteen-tenths of all the cases that have come up were cases where no Federal question was raised and cases in which the United States was not a party. The first case brought from the Territory of New Mexico was back in the fifties, the case of Webb vs. Leitzendorfer, a case of attachment by one creditor against another, and no question of Federal jurisdiction whatever. Since that there have been a dozen cases from the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico brought up, and many from all the other Territorial supreme courts. The cases of Hornbuckle vs. Tombs and Clinton vs. Engelberg, found in 13 and 18 Wallace, one from Utah and the other from the Territory of Montana, neither one of them involved Federal questions.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman will permit me to say that all the cases were where the jurisdictional question was considered, as in the Cole and Canter cases, were all cases where there was a Federal question, or, as in the case cited, where the United States was a party.

Mr. CATRON. But in the case which I speak of, and in all the other cases, it has been a recognized doctrine that these cases were appealable and maintainable in the United States court, and no question has been raised; it has been acquiesced in for a hundred years.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Now, the case that has provoked the decision of the Supreme Court and makes this bill necessary is the case of Folsom against the United States, and that case got to the Supreme Court in this way: It was appealed to the circuit court of appeals of the eighth circuit. Folsom was indicted for making certain false entries and a violation of the provision of section 5209 of the Revised Statutes. He was tried and convicted in a Territorial court. He appealed to the supreme court of the Territory and the judgment of conviction was sustained. He then appealed to the circuit court of appeals of the eighth circuit. The eighth circuit made a certificate of division of opinion upon the question as to whether they had jurisdiction to entertain this appeal. If this man had been convicted of some minor criminal offense the appeal would have lain; but being convicted of an infamous crime, the appeal did not lie. So the Supreme Court holds. And in language they say:

It may be that there was an oversight in that particular; but if there were we certainly can not supply it by construing the fifth section as carrying appellate jurisdiction over such cases to the circuit court of appeals, and so enlarge that jurisdiction into something other and different from the same appellate jurisdiction as is exercised in reviewing judgments of the district and circuit courts under section 6 of this act.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman understands that I make no question of our power to grant an appeal to any court where the United States is a party either in a criminal or civil suit.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Oh, I understand your objection is to this bill. Now, under the circuit courts of appeals act there is no case transferred from the circuit court of appeals in a Territory except those cases in which the judgment of the circuit court of appeals is made final. In cases of capital or otherwise infamous crimes their judgments are not made final. The act provides:

SEC. 5. That appeals or writs of error may be taken from the district courts or from the existing circuit courts direct to the Supreme Court in the following cases:

In any case in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue. In such cases the question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified to the Supreme Court from the court below for decision.

From the final sentences and decrees in prize causes.

In cases of conviction of a capital or otherwise infamous crime.

In any case that involves the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States.

In any case in which the constitutionality of any law of the United States or the validity or construction of any treaty made under its authority is drawn in question.

In any case in which the constitution or law of a State is claimed to be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States.

Nothing in this act shall affect the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in cases appealed from the highest court of a State nor the construction of the statute providing for review of such cases.

Now, in all these cases an appeal lies direct from the district and circuit courts to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, there is another class of cases in which a judgment of the circuit courts of appeals is made final.

And the judgments or decrees of the circuit courts of appeals shall be final in all cases in which the jurisdiction is dependent entirely upon the opposite parties to the suit or controversy, being aliens and citizens of the United States or citizens of different States; also in all cases arising under the patent laws, under the revenue laws, and under the criminal laws, and in admiralty cases.

Excepting that in every such subject within its appellate jurisdiction the circuit court of appeals at any time may certify to the Supreme Court of the United States any questions or propositions of law concerning which it desires the instruction of that court for its proper decision.

Now, in these cases in which jurisdiction of the circuit court is final, appeals are made by this law to lie in the circuit court of appeals. In all cases where judgment of the circuit court of appeals is final, then an appeal goes from the supreme court of the Territory to the circuit court of appeals; but in a revenue case, where a man is indicted for selling a little whisky, he may appeal direct to the Supreme Court of the United States; in a case where it is capital, for a homicide, he can not do it. Now, the purpose of this bill is to provide that in all cases where the decision of the circuit court of appeals is final they may go from the supreme court of the Territory to the circuit court of appeals, as was unquestionably intended when this law was passed; but under this decision of the Supreme Court it becomes manifest that the appeals in that class of cases are cut off, and they must rest with the decision of the supreme court of the Territory.

Now, this bill and the questions involved in it were considered carefully by the Judiciary Committee, and all the members of that committee have agreed that it ought to be passed, and have directed it to be reported to the House, except the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], who raises this constitutional question. The question that he makes would, I submit, go to hold the entire act unconstitutional as it exists on the statute book with reference to appeals from the supreme courts of the Territories.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, unless some other gentleman desires to be heard, I will move the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman first let me make a brief statement to illustrate my position? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CONNOLLY] is generally very acute; but either he is dull to-day or I have been unfortunate in expressing myself. He says that my objection goes not only to the constitutionality of this bill, but to the constitutionality of the present law. I think I said—I know I tried to say—that the bill was objectionable only in so far as it attempted to make the jurisdiction depend upon the amount in controversy. Let me illustrate my position. Take the Territory of New Mexico. The Congress of the United States authorizes the legislature of New Mexico to pass any law not inconsistent with the laws of Congress. Suppose the Territory passes a statute of frauds and perjuries. A sues B in the Territorial court; B pleads a defense arising out of the Territorial statute of frauds; A rejoins that that defense is insufficient, because the Territorial act is in conflict with a law of Congress and therefore void. In a case of that kind I have no question that Congress could grant the right of appeal, because the case would involve a question arising under the laws of the United States. But suppose A sues B on a plain promissory note and B pleads infancy and they go to the jury on that issue. The jury decide that B was not an infant and therefore give a verdict against him, and the court enters a judgment. In that kind of a case I think it is too clear for dispute that Congress has no power to authorize an appeal to the courts created under the judicial clause of the Constitution.

Mr. MILLER of Kansas. You are assuming in your statement that A and B are both citizens of the same Territory?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; as we must assume, because this bill says "in all cases." Now, I ask the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], before he moves the previous question, to permit me to take the sense of the House by moving to strike out the obnoxious words. Of course I recognize that the gentlemen yielded the floor to me to make this illustration of my position, and I would not attempt to take advantage of it to make the motion to strike out; but I ask the gentleman to give me an opportunity to do that before he calls for the previous question. I think the defect in the bill could be cured by striking out the words "in all cases where the matter in controversy shall exceed $1,000 besides costs." Will the gentleman let me test the sense of the House on that amendment?

Mr. POWERS. We can not quite consent to that yet. We will look it over and see.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have concurred in the report upon this bill made by the Judiciary Committee. I do not desire now to discuss it, but I would like to have read to the House a portion of an opinion of the Supreme Court to show the basis of my judgment in this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

And as, wherever the United States exercise the power of government, whether under specific grant or through the dominion and sovereignty of plenary authority, as over the Territories (Shively vs. Bowlby, 132 U. S., 1, 48), that power includes the ultimate executive, legislative, and judicial power, it follows that the judicial action of all inferior courts established by Congress may, in accordance with the Constitution, be subjected to the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme judicial tribunal of the Government. There has never been any question in regard to this as applied to Territorial courts, and no reason can be perceived for applying a different rule to the adjudications of the Court of Private Land Claims over property in the Territories.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe that is the Coe case.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is.

Mr. BAILEY. I make no question, Mr. Speaker, that where the United States is a party the case is appealable.

Mr. POWERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the gentleman decline to yield for my amendment?

Mr. POWERS. We shall have to decline, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BAILEY. I think you had better let me offer the amendment.

Mr. POWERS. This bill has gone through the Judiciary Committee in its present form and has been approved by the entire committee, with the exception of the gentleman from Texas, and the case just read from the desk confirms the judgment of the committee; so that I think we had better stand upon the bill as it has been reported to the House.

Mr. MILES. The gentleman certainly does not wish the House to understand that the case just read is any other than such a case as the gentleman from Texas admits is appealable—that is, a case where the United States is a party?

Mr. POWERS. Certainly not; but I do wish the House to understand that as good a lawyer as Judge CULBERSON of Texas adopts the opinion of the court as the reason why he supports this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. Speaker, even so good a lawyer as my colleague, Judge CULBERSON, can well afford to indorse the Supreme Court of the United States. If my approval were worth anything I would give it, too. [Laughter.] But that case was appealable on two distinct grounds: First, that the United States was a party, which of itself would suffice to give the court jurisdiction; and second, that it was a case arising under the laws of Congress, which also would give the court jurisdiction. I have never controverted the power of Congress to give appellate jurisdiction in such cases and I do not now controvert it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] ask for the previous question?

Mr. POWERS. Yes, sir; on the committee amendments and on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the committee have been adopted. The question is on ordering the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill and to its passage.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER. The yeas seem to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. We shall have to have a division.

The question being again taken on ordering the previous question, there were—yeas 45, noes 15.

Mr. BAILEY. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER proceeded to count the House; but before the count was concluded,

Mr. POWERS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 180, nays 34, not voting 141; as follows:

YEAS—180.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE with Mr. ELLETT of Virginia.

On this question:

Mr. CLARK of Iowa with Mr. TYLER.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, some two days since my colleague, Mr. DE ARMOND, was called away by the dangerous illness of a kinsman. I ask indefinite leave of absence for him.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, leave of absence will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for a recapitulation of this vote.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope the gentleman from South Dakota will let us get through with this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks for a recapitulation of the vote. The Clerk will recapitulate.

The vote having been recapitulated, the result was announced as above stated.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. POWERS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would recognize a number of gentlemen on matters of importance in their respective districts, unless the gentleman from South Dakota insists upon the demand for the regular order. Does the gentleman demand the regular order in view of that circumstance?

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the regular order. [Laughter.]

ENGINEER SERVICE, MERCHANT MARINE, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House the following bill with Senate amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3013) to amend section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to improve the Merchant Marine Engineer Service, and thereby also to increase the efficiency of the Naval Reserve.

The bill and the Senate amendments were read at length.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked on the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that I wish the gentleman would explain the changes made by the Senate in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know that I am able to explain all of the changes made in the bill. They are quite numerous. The House bill provided that all engineers and assistant engineers that were engaged on American vessels in the transatlantic service as well as the coastwise trade should be deemed officers of the vessels, and should be required to be citizens of the United States. The Senate has limited the effect of the bill to such engineers and assistant engineers as are in charge of a watch, and, as I understand it, has limited it to much less than one-half the number of engineers embraced in the House bill who are employed on such vessels. That is the principal change from the House bill.

The House also provided, I may say, that all such engineers, in case of war, should become subject to draft for military service in the United States Navy. The Senate bill has left this matter rather indefinite by putting it in a negative form and providing that these engineers shall not be subject to draft except for the performance of duties similar to those performed by them as engineers on these vessels. This provision as inserted in the bill originally provided that in case of war, when the vessels which are subject to being taken by the Government, by making compensation to the corporations who own them—that is to say, in the case of those vessels flying the American flag, such as the vessels of the American Line, the City of New York, the City of Rome, the St. Louis, and the St. Paul—that these officers on such vessels should be subject to be drafted into the service of the United States. As I say, the Senate leaves this matter in the negative form.

The House bill provides also that the engineers shall be licensed for a period of five years. The Senate, for some reason, in their inscrutable wisdom, requires that the license renewal shall be taken out at the end of every three years. They also make some changes in the details by which the licenses shall be renewed, and especially with regard to those cases where the vessel happens to be in a foreign port at the time the license expires.

But, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, the principal amendment relates to the subject of assistant engineers not in charge of a watch.

Now, if there is no other gentleman who desires to discuss the bill or ask questions in regard to it, to whom I will yield time willingly for that purpose, I shall move the previous question.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there any change in the bill as it passed the House with reference to the engineers and assistant engineers, as to whether the naturalization should have been completed or only the first papers taken out?

Mr. PAYNE. The House bill required that they should be citizens of the United States. The Senate, on the other hand, have expressly stated in their report that they should be citizens of the United States, and citizens who have taken out the second papers. Now, I had always supposed—

Mr. DINGLEY. And the House bill excluded those persons who had only taken out the first papers?

Mr. PAYNE. I was going on to say that I had always supposed that a naturalized person was not a citizen of the United States until he had received his second papers, and while the bill, when it came before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, provided, in terms similar to those used by the Senate, that citizens should have taken out the second papers, members of the committee thought that it showed more intelligence and better knowledge of the law if the House expressed itself by the term "citizens of the United States." So that change got into the bill after it was originally introduced, and the term made use of was "citizens of the United States." Since that time the bill has gone to the Senate, and I suppose those of us who think we understand the law, and that a citizen of the United States—a naturalized citizen—was one who had taken out his second papers, shall either have to revise that opinion on further instruction from the grave and reverend gentlemen who shall constitute the conference committee on the part of the other House and accept their construction of the term as embodied in their amendment, unless, possibly, we may be able to convince them by a long constitutional argument that the term "citizen," as applied to a naturalized citizen, includes only a citizen who had received his second papers.

Mr. DALZELL. As I understand it, while there is a change of language, there is no change in the intention of the House in passing the bill, or of the committee as they reported the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. No; but the question is whether the intention of the House was realized in the expression it used when it acted on the bill, and as it came from the committee.

Mr. LACEY. You are aware of the fact that in a number of States a man may vote after filing his first papers?

Mr. PAYNE. But that does not make him a citizen of the United States.

Mr. LACEY. It makes him a citizen enough to vote, does it not?

Mr. SPERRY. Can you enforce the right of a naturalized citizen—

Mr. PAYNE. I am still of the opinion—not having been enlightened by reading the Senate amendment—that a naturalized citizen is a person who has citizen's papers.

Mr. SPERRY. Can you enforce the right of a citizen who has been naturalized except in countries where we have treaties?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, that leads to a long and interesting question, which might properly be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I do not see how it is germane to the passage of this bill or to the question now before the House.

Mr. SPERRY. You were discussing what a citizen was, so I asked that question.

Mr. PAYNE. I should be very glad to discuss that question privately with my friend from Connecticut, but I really do not feel, Mr. Speaker, that I ought to take the time of this House to discuss it now.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for two minutes?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope there will be no great delay in passing this bill. I have demanded the regular order to-day in the hope that the House might find time to do something on the Private Pension Calendar, time that I think we were entitled to in the last legislative day. That is my reason for making the demand. I want to get time to take up some of these 400 bills. I should be glad to make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker, whether a motion would be in order, for instance, after this bill is passed, to go into the Committee of the Whole to report back the bills that were passed upon yesterday, but which could not be reported to the House on the failure of a quorum?

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman any precedent to cite for such a motion as that?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not think I have, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, then, that perhaps the answer to the gentleman's inquiry is obvious.

Mr. PICKLER. My question was whether a motion would be in order or not.

Mr. PAYNE. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman from South Dakota an opportunity to explain why he was demanding the regular order. I have not understood it before, and I am not clear that I understand it now.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, you will find out.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know that I understand it now. The gentleman seems to have some idea that, by demanding the regular order, he will reach a point where the ninety-odd bills which have been favorably considered in the Committee of the Whole may be reported in the House at this time and receive their consideration in the House.

Mr. PICKLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon—

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to the gentleman, if that is what he means.

Mr. PICKLER. I am attempting to take up the Private Calendar that has not been passed upon. I think the able Chairman of the Committee of the Whole who presided yesterday [Mr. PAYNE] will devise some means to get those bills that were passed upon before the House. That is with the management. That is not with me.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the regular order is not the giving of instructions to the gentleman from South Dakota as to what he may or may not do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] makes the point that, the regular order having been demanded, these remarks are not the regular order. The point is well taken.

Mr. PAYNE. I was debating the question before the House. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not seek to interfere with that. I want to suggest further to the gentleman from South Dakota that if his object is what he has stated, he is doing the precise thing to cut it off, because that could only be reached by unanimous consent, and his persistent demand for the regular order would of course cut off any unanimous consent of that kind.

Mr. PICKLER. I accept service of the notice.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course, the gentleman understands that, because he has made a study of this question, and knows that under the rules of the House, with his persistent demand for the regular order, he never could reach the pension bills in the manner in which he proposes. Now, Mr. Speaker, if no other gentleman desires to debate this bill—

Mr. PICKLER. I want to say that I differ altogether with the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield again to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. PICKLER. I think, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I insist—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point that these remarks are not the regular order. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. PICKLER) there were—yeas 113, noes none.

Mr. PICKLER. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PICKLER. Pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. Division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota demands a division. Those in favor of the motion that the House do now adjourn will rise in their places and be counted. There being none in the affirmative, the motion is disagreed to. [Laughter.]

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 203, nays 0, not voting 152; as follows:

So the motion to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked was agreed to.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. STRAIT, on this vote.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman listening when his name was called?

Mr. SPENCER. I was here in my seat and I did not hear my name.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman listening?

Mr. SPENCER. I was here, but I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, under the rules, can not entertain the request.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House nonconcurred in the Senate amendments and agreed to the conference asked was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees the gentleman from New York, Mr. PAYNE, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HOPKINS, and the gentleman from Florida, Mr. COOPER.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution from the Senate; which was considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the Senate bill 862, for the relief of receivers of the Towboat Association of New Orleans, La.

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

LANDS IN VALVERDE COUNTY, TEX.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7395) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to reconvey to the former owners a certain tract of land in Valverde County, Tex., with Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 139, noes none.

Mr. PICKLER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-nine gentlemen are present. The ayes have it, and the amendment of the Senate is concurred in.

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

DUPLICATE COPY OF SENATE ENGROSSED BILL.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. KYLE, the following resolution was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to furnish the House of Representatives a duplicate copy of the engrossed bill of the Senate (S. 2501) for the relief of James Sims, of Marshall County, Miss., the same having been lost or misplaced.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move that the House adjourn.

The question was put.

The SPEAKER. Pending the announcement of the result, the Chair lays before the House the following requests of members.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. MEIKLEJOHN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. SORG, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BAKER of Maryland, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. PEARSON, for seven days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LAWSON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. ARNOLD of Rhode Island, for one week, on account of important business.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. SPERRY, on behalf of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, a reprint was ordered of the bill (H. R. 3273) for the classification of clerks in first and second class post-offices, and report.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, together with the draft of a bill, a recommendation relating to the sale of certain unused sites of public buildings, as follows: Custom-house, Astoria, Ore.; custom-house lot, Key West, Fla.; custom-house, Erie, Pa.; custom-house, Monterey, Cal.; Jump Boarding Station, parish of Plaquemines, La.; Rigolets custom station (below New Orleans, La.); quarantine warehouse, parish of Plaquemines, La.; custom-house lot, St. Augustine, Fla.; custom-house lot, Sag Harbor, N. SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 8, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. HILL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an agreement made and concluded April 21, 1896, by and between James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, on the part of the United States and the Shoshone and Arapahoe tribes of Indians in the State of Wyoming, ceding to the United States a portion of their reservation embracing the Owl Creek or Big Horn Hot Springs, and also the report of Inspector McLaughlin, the proceedings of council had with the Indians, and a draft of a bill to ratify the agreement and provide for the survey of the southern and western boundaries of the ceded tract, together with the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated the 5th instant, in relation thereto; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 7th instant, certain information as to the reasons for the delay in supplying seeds for distribution; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Attorney-General of the 6th instant, reporting for an appropriation a judgment rendered by the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin under the act of March 3, 1875, entitled "An act to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, in the State of Wisconsin," in favor of James Lucy for $400; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

STEAMER MENEMSHA.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent to call up and have passed a bill for my colleague [Mr. MURPHY], who is absent. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2978) to provide an American register for the steamer Menemsha.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PIPES FOR PETROLEUM.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2870) to permit Rene C. Baughman to lay pipes in a certain street in the city of Washington. It is a very short bill.

Mr. QUAY. I think I will object to the consideration of any bills until the morning business is gone through with.

Mr. BAKER. This will take but a moment. It is a very short bill.

Mr. QUAY. Very well; I will withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 10, after the word "River," to strike out "that" and insert "the"; in line 11 to strike out the words "the direction of" and insert "such regulations and rentals as"; and in line 12, after the word "Columbia," to insert "may make in relation thereto"; so as to make the section read:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to grant to Rene C. Baughman permission to lay pipes for the transmission of petroleum and its products in the following-named streets in said city of Washington, to wit: From north block No. 6½ along the unpaved portion of Half street southeast, a distance of 3,000 feet in a southerly direction to the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River; the said pipe line shall be laid under such regulations and rentals as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may make in relation thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2 of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That said Rene C. Baughman shall furnish said Commissioners with bond or bonds, or such other security as they may require, to guarantee the strict compliance with the permit that may be granted said Rene C. Baughman, and to insure the complete restoration of said unpaved portion of Half street disturbed in laying said pipe line as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, in the following words:

SEC. 3. That said Rene C. Baughman shall also lower or relay any pipes whenever directed to do so by said Commissioners, by reason of a change in the grade of the street above named or the construction of any public work therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF HENRY VAN VLECK.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2415) for the relief of D. J. Van Vleck, administrator of Henry Van Vleck, deceased. It is a short bill, favorably reported from the Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to B. J. Van Vleck, administrator of Henry Van Vleck, deceased, or to his duly authorized attorneys in fact, $4,520.20, being the amount due Henry Van Vleck at the time of his death as a balance on account of extra work done on the locks of the St. Marys Falls Canal, Michigan, with interest thereon from October 2, 1882, the date of approval of the claim by the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIoux CITY AND OMAHA RAILWAY.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1035) authorizing the Sioux City and Omaha Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation, in Thurston County, Nebr., and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information. The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Has the morning business been completed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been completed. The Senator from Nebraska has asked unanimous consent to call up the bill which has just been read.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Nebraska looks so good-natured I think I shall not object to this bill, but I shall object to the next one.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 4, after the word "turn-outs," to insert the word "and"; and in the same line, after the word "sidings," to strike out "and extensions"; so as to make the section read:

That the Sioux City and Omaha Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Nebraska, be, and the same is hereby, authorized and invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping and operating, using and maintaining a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation in Nebraska, beginning at a point to be selected by said railway company at or near the town of Decatur, Burt County, Nebr., and running thence in a northerly and westerly direction over the most practicable and feasible route, through the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation to a point on the north line of the Omaha and Winnebago Reserve in Thurston County, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, and sidings as said company may deem to its interests to construct and maintain along and upon the right of way and depot grounds herein provided for.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 9, after the word "railway," to insert "telegraph, and telephone"; in line 13, before "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "one"; in the same line, before "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "two"; and in line 19, before the word "feet," to strike out "100" and insert "50"; so as to read:

That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, telegraph, and telephone, for its main line and branch line, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Omaha and Winnebago Reservation, and to take and use a strip of land 100 feet in width, with a length of 2,000 feet, in addition to the right of way for stations for every 10 miles of road, with the right to use such additional ground where there are heavy cuts or fills as may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of the roadbed, not exceeding 50 feet in width on each side of said right of way or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 5, after the word "railway," to insert "telegraph, and telephone lines"; in line 13, after the word "railway," to insert "telegraph and telephone lines"; and in line 17 to strike out "Indian agent of the Government stationed at the agency of Omaha and Winnebago Reservation" and insert "President of the United States"; so as to read:

That before said railway, telegraph, and telephone lines shall be constructed through any lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of said Omaha and Winnebago tribes of Indians through which it may be constructed, or by allotments under any law of the United States or agreement with the Indians, full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of such railway, telegraph, and telephone lines. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the appraisal of three disinterested referees, to be appointed, one (who shall act as chairman) by the President of the United States, one by the chief of the tribe to which said occupant belongs, or, in case of an allottee, by said allottee or by his duly authorized guardian or representative, and one by said railway company, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 6, line 17, to strike out "maps" and insert "a map, upon a scale of not less than 1 inch to the mile"; after the words "showing the," in line 18, to insert "entire"; in line 20, to strike out "in the office of" and insert "with and approved by"; in line 23, after the word "located," to insert "before any part of the line of said road herein provided for shall be constructed"; in line 25, to strike out "maps" and insert "map"; on page 7, line 2, to strike out "maps" and insert "map"; and in line 4, after the word "filed," to insert "and approved"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That said company shall cause a map, upon a scale of not less than 1 inch to the mile, showing the entire route of its located lines through said Omaha and Winnebago Reservation to be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and also to be filed in the office of the Indian agent of said reservation and tribes of Indians through whose lands said railway may be located before any part of the line of said road herein provided for shall be constructed. After the filing of said map no claim for a subsequent settlement and improvement upon the right of way shown by said map shall be valid as against said company: Provided, That when a map showing any portion of said railway company's located line is filed and approved as herein provided for, said company shall commence grading said located line within six months thereafter, or such location shall be void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 7, line 13, after the word "built," to insert "and that without any declaration of forfeiture on the part of any officer or employee of the Government"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That said railway company shall build at least 10 miles of its railway in said Omaha and Winnebago Reservation within three years after the passage of this act, and complete the remainder thereof within five years thereafter, or the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to that portion not built, and that without any declaration of forfeiture on the part of any officer or employee of the Government; that said railway company shall construct and maintain continually all fences, road and highway crossings, and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now or may hereafter cross said railway's right of way, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section, after section 6, the following:

SEC. 7. That the right of way herein and hereby granted shall not be assigned or transferred in any form whatever prior to the construction and completion of the road, except as to mortgage or other liens that may be given or secured thereon to aid in the construction thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I demand the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Petitions and memorials are in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TELLER presented sundry petitions of District Council, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of New Orleans, La.; of Local Union, No. 1, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Chicago, Ill.; of the Trades' Assembly of Pueblo, Colo.; of Local Union, No. 2, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Cincinnati, Ohio; of Anaronda Union, No. 88, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Anaronda, Mont.; of Local Union, No. 5, Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, of Manchester, N. H.; and of Union, No. 172, Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators of America, of San Antonio, Tex., praying for the free coinage of silver; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Denver, Colo., remonstrating against the introduction of military training in the public schools of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Southern California Fruit Exchange, of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the establishment of a department of commerce and manufactures; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRICE presented sundry petitions of citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called filled-cheese bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of National Association of Steam Engineers, No. 5, of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 735, to reorganize the Engineer Corps of the United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Local Union, No. 2, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Stonecutters' Association of Cincinnati, Ohio; a petition of the Stonecutters' Association of Columbus, Ohio, and a petition of the Stonecutters' Association of Akron, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the use of contract labor in the construction of public buildings, and remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, providing for the regulation of second-class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens, business men, and representatives of various industries of Canton, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation regulating the charges for carrying all kinds of mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SEWELL presented resolutions adopted at a public meeting held in Jersey City, N. J., April 26, 1896, presided over by P. F. Wanser, mayor, favoring the release of American citizens now incarcerated for offenses arising out of the political struggle in Ireland; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GEAR presented a petition of the Committee of the Tea Trade of the United States, praying Congress to impose a specific duty on tea; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Spring Rancho, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation raising the age of consent from 16 to 18 years in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. VILAS presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Superior, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to incorporate the maritime canal of North America; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1408) to incorporate the National Capital Gaslight, Heat, and Power Company of the District of Columbia, to report it adversely and move its indefinite postponement.

Mr. KYLE. I ask that the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4528) granting a pension to Katherine S. McCartney, widow of William H. McCartney, to report it without amendment, and submit a report thereon.

Mr. QUAY. I should be glad to place that bill on its passage if the Senate will give its unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. FRYE. Such requests will undoubtedly be very frequently made, and I demand the regular order of business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3082) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Johnson Gilbert, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 152) granting a pension to Abel S. Chase, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3088) to authorize the extension of the lines of the Potomac Light and Power Company; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 142) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to dispose of the Force School property on Massachusetts avenue and to obtain another site for that school, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I reported back on the 2d instant, from the Committee on Commerce, favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 2226) to amend the laws relating to American seamen, and the bill is now on the Calendar. That bill renders unnecessary those that I hold in my hand, all of which were introduced by me. I report them back from the committee adversely, and move that they be indefinitely postponed.

The bills were indefinitely postponed, as follows:

A bill (S. 182) to abolish imprisonment of seamen in the common jails of the United States for desertion;

A bill (S. 185) to prohibit advances and regulate allotments of wages to seamen;

A bill (S. 2113) to repeal sections 4532, 4533, and 4534, and to amend sections 4516 and 4529 of the Revised Statutes, all relating to the employment, treatment, and payment of seamen on merchant vessels;

A bill (S. 2023) to amend sections 4590 and 4597 of the Revised Statutes, relating to offenses committed by seamen employed on merchant vessels, and providing punishments for such offenses;

A bill (S. 2024) to amend sections 4556, 4557, 4558, and 4559 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the inspection, equipment, and repair of merchant vessels;

A bill (S. 2025) to amend sections 4582, 4583, and 4600 of the United States Revised Statutes; and

A bill (S. 2026) to amend sections 4520, 4522, 4526, 4530, 4564, 4566, 4568, 4572, and 4612 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the employment, care, discharge, and payment of seamen employed on merchant vessels.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1680) to place John Dolan on the retired list of the United States Army, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1253) granting a pension to Joseph Koehler; and

A bill (S. 107) granting a pension to Jacob Niebels.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. WHITE on the 6th instant, providing for the payment of outstanding unpaid California Indian war claims, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2926) to amend the acts relating to the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1833) to amend the act of March 1, 1895, and other acts relating to the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5210) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and submit a report thereon.

I give notice that as soon as the order which it was unanimously agreed the other day should follow the river and harbor bill is disposed of I shall call up this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GRAY. I submit the views of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the matter of the resolution reported by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] providing for an inquiry into recent elections in Alabama. I ask that the views of the minority be printed with the majority report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order, if there be no objection.

REPORT UPON THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. COCKRELL on the 5th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 10,000 copies of the report made by Messrs. Ludlow, Endicott, and Noble, of date October 31, 1895, upon the Nicaragua Canal, together with all the appendixes, maps, and plans and profiles accompanying the same, as submitted by them; 6,000 of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 4,000 for the use of the Senate.

HISTORY AND INDEX OF CLAIMS.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. TELLER March 3, 1896, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Claims be, and it hereby is, authorized to have compiled a history and index of the claims now in Congress and before that committee, together with a collection of the principal laws bearing upon claims against the Government.

MARY J. HICKMAN.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. GORMAN April 21, 1896, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mary J. Hickman, widow of Anthony Hickman, late a laborer in charge of the private passage in the employ of the Senate, an amount equal to six months' salary as such laborer, said sum to be considered as in lieu of all funeral expenses and allowances.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. PROCTOR on the 4th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearing before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry February 19, 1896, upon the memorial of the National Live Stock Exchange in relation to restrictions by foreign governments upon American live stock and meat food products, and the hearing before the same committee March 4, 1896, on the proposed creation of the office of director in chief of the scientific bureaus of the Department of Agriculture, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

BOOKS FOR THE SENATE LIBRARY.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. CAFFERY April 1, 1896, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary be directed to purchase for the Senate Library the following books on international law, viz:

Bar's International Law.
Bluntschli's International Law, translated by M. C. Lardy, 1894.
Hall's International Law, 2 copies.
Hall's International Law.
Lorimer's International Law, 2 volumes.
Wheaton's International Law, Dana's edition.
Wheaton's International Law, Lawrence's edition.
Woolsey's International Law, edition 1890.
And that the same be charged to the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3089) to provide an American register for the steamer Southery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PUGH introduced a bill (S. 3090) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Thomas W. McDonald as administrator of the estates of James M. and Timothy Meaher, and to remove the bar of the statute of limitations therefrom; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3091) granting an increase of pension to Roswell Dunton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 3092) for the relief of William C. Dodge; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3093) granting a pension to Honora Redmond; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHOUP introduced a bill (S. 3094) granting an increase of pension to George W. Palmer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 3095) for the relief of Charles C. Kleckner; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 3096) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Avery, of Petersburg, in the county of Boone, Nebr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3097) granting a pension to John Grady, of O'Neill, in the county of Holt, Nebr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3098) to remove the charge of desertion from the name of James Plymate; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ROACH introduced a bill (S. 3099) granting a pension to Richard C. Enright; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HILL (for Mr. MURPHY) introduced a bill (S. 3100) granting a pension to Abbie C. McNett, widow of the late Andrew J. McNett; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 3101) to prohibit the issuance of bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the Government by the Secretary of the Treasury, or other officer of the Government without the authority of Congress; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the bill may lie on the table, and at some future time I shall call it up for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie upon the table for the present.

Mr. BRICE introduced a bill (S. 3102) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. Tupper; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3103) granting a pension to Jesse O. Davy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3104) granting a pension to J. Q. A. Laymon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 143) appropriating $50,000 to supply deficiencies and to enable the Public Printer to continue the printing and binding for the Interior Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VILAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COUNTERPOISE BATTERIES.

Mr. GEAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate—

First. Whether any counterpoise batteries have been constructed by the Government within the last eighteen years, using or embodying substantially the principle or plan embraced in and covered by the patent issued by the United States to Maj. Beverly Kennon, dated June 11, 1873, and numbered 204831.

Second. Whether any counterpoise batteries have been constructed during the period above mentioned; and if so, when and where?

ORDER OF PROCEDURE.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Several Senators have asked me to yield the floor to them specifically. I can not do that, but by unanimous consent I will yield the floor until 1 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that that time may be devoted to the consideration of unobjected House bills upon the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that there are some Senate bills which ought to pass, and which are as important as any House bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then let us take up the Calendar of unobjected cases to begin with. Let us all have an equal chance.

Mr. TELLER. We have tried to do that two or three times, but we have been unable to do it.

Mr. QUAY. What is the request?

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to say in all frankness and candor there is only one method of proceeding, and that is in an orderly and methodical way, giving every Senator an equal chance. Here is the Calendar; let us take it up and proceed with it. If you do not want to consider unobjected House cases, then let us take up the Calendar in order and consider all unobjected cases.

Mr. GALLINGER and others. That is right.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us adopt some method that will have something like a system about it. Otherwise every report will have to be read from the desk and no business will be transacted.

Mr. TELLER. To save time I will not object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri will please indicate his specific request.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will then make the request that we take up the Calendar in regular order and proceed with the consideration of unobjected cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. QUAY. Before I assent I should be very glad to have the Senate pass upon my request for unanimous consent to consider the bill to which the Senator from Maine objected.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a pension bill. The Senator knows we will pass every one of those pension bills, and that in a very short time. We shall take them up and pass them all. There are five or six pension bills already favorably reported, just like the Senator's, for citizens of Missouri, and I think we ought to have an equal chance. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not insist upon his demand.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I am going to ask consent, which is always courteously given, in a day or two to call up all the pension cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. QUAY. I have not yet assented to it. I would be very glad if the Senator from New Hampshire would make his request now and have a session fixed for the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no; let us get through with the river and harbor bill before the request is made. It is very important to get that bill into conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think to-morrow I can get a time fixed.

Mr. QUAY. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none. The first case on the Calendar will be called.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I desire to give notice that immediately on the conclusion of the passage through the Senate of the last appropriation bill I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 6) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of Senators by the votes of the qualified electors of the States. I shall make that motion not with a view merely of making a speech, because I have submitted about all I desire to say so far as I am concerned individually, but for the purpose of prosecuting the measure to a conclusion.

PORT OF SYRACUSE, N. Y.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first case on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

The bill (H. R. 6) constituting Syracuse, N. Y., a port of delivery was announced as first in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 5731) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery, to license physicians and surgeons, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over. Where is it on the Calendar?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. PASCO. I understand that Order of Business 333 is the point at which we are to commence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next case will be announced.

The bill (S. 2147) establishing additional regulations concerning immigration to the United States was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLEN. Let that go over.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice.

The bill (S. 34) for the relief of Clara A. Graves, Lewis Smith Lee, Florence P. Lee, Mary S. Sheldon, and Elizabeth Smith, heirs of Lewis Smith, deceased, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over for the present. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

L. A. DAVIS.

The bill (S. 534) for the relief of L. A. Davis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to refer to the Court of Claims the petition and papers of L. A. Davis, of Chehalis, Wash., in which he claims $14,844 for services in carrying the English mails both ways between Olympia and Monticello, in Washington, from about August 1, 1868, to June 30, 1870.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill, but I ask that the latter part of it, with reference to legal defense, be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And no statute of limitations or other legal defense shall be available in such case.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the words "or other legal defense" should be stricken out.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out the words "or other legal defense," in lines 16 and 17.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Government has a defense it ought to have the right to make it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out those words, leaving the provision as to a statute of limitations to stand.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. All right; let the words be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 16, strike out the words "or other legal defense."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHESTER B. SWEET.

The bill (S. 927) for the relief of Chester B. Sweet, of California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Chester B. Sweet, of California, $198.66, being the amount of the double minimum excess erroneously paid by him to the receiver of the United States land office as double minimum excess on preemption cash certificate made at Shasta, Cal., March 17, 1886.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF THOMAS SHERWIN.

The bill (S. 482) for the relief of the estate of Thomas Sherwin, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the legal representative of Thomas Sherwin, deceased, late of Washington County, Md., $820 for stores and supplies furnished the Army of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, that sum having been fixed by the Quartermaster-General as fair compensation in the case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANCY E. DAY.

The bill (S. 652) for the relief of Nancy E. Day, administratrix of the estate of James L. Day, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay Nancy E. Day, administratrix of the estate of James L. Day, deceased, late of Norwich, Conn., $3,041.66, in payment and satisfaction of the amount found due from the United States to Nancy E. Day by the Court of Claims upon a reference of her claim to that court by the Postmaster-General, under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1883.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHILIP PFLUEGER.

The bill (S. 663) to remove the charge of desertion against Philip Pflueger, late of Company G, Twenty-fourth Wisconsin Infantry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "discharge," to strike out the words "the same as if such charge of desertion had not been made" and to insert "as of date April 21, 1863: Provided, That he shall not be allowed any pay, compensation, or allowance by reason of this act"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove from the records of the War Department the charge of desertion against Philip Pflueger, late of Company G, Twenty-fourth Wisconsin Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of date April 21, 1863: Provided, That he shall not be allowed any pay, compensation, or allowance by reason of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PLACED UNDER RULE IX.

The bill (S. 1266) for the relief of Daniel W. Boutwell and the bill (S. 1770) providing for the appointment of pharmacists in the United States Marine-Hospital Service and fixing their pay and allowances were the next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Those two cases have been reported adversely. Let them be placed under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

HENRY LANE.

The bill (S. 762) for the relief of Henry Lane was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to revoke and set aside the special orders of the War Department, dated March 30, 1863, dismissing from the service, for absence without leave, Henry Lane, late first lieutenant Company F, Thirtieth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, to date March 1, 1863, because he was then, and for weeks before had been, on duty in the field, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of date April 7, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PLACED UNDER RULE IX.

The bill (S. 930) to require the auditing and payment of the volunteer soldiers who served in the Seminole Indian wars in Florida, and for horses and equipments lost in the service, was announced as the next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is an adverse report. Let it go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

The bill (S. 1019) to change the boundaries of the collection district of Key West, Fla., and make Punta Gorda a port of entry, and create a new collection district, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is an adverse report. Let it be passed over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

CLASSIFICATION OF LETTERS PATENT.

The bill (S. 1897) to establish a classification division in the United States Patent Office was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF NAVIGATION LAWS.

The bill (S. 187) to amend the laws relating to navigation was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. That bill may be passed over for the present without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MONUMENT TO SAMUEL HAHNEMANN.

The joint resolution (S. R. 27) granting permission for the erection of a monument in Washington, D. C., for the ornamentation of the national capital and in honor of Samuel Hahnemann was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Missouri desire an explanation of the joint resolution?

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that this is a joint resolution proposing the erection of a monument to Samuel Hahnemann in the District of Columbia. The American Institute of Homeopathy, representing some 14,000 physicians in the United States, have raised a fund of about $75,000 and have had a monument made, which is said to be a most beautiful work of art. I have not seen it myself, but I think there is a model of it in the Capitol. They desire to have it erected in the city of Washington at such place as may be named by the committee designated in the joint resolution. They ask for a small appropriation, which, I think, has usually been given in such cases, to build a foundation for the monument. That is all the expense it will be to the Government. I propose to have the preamble stricken out when the proper time arrives, and to have one or two amendments made to the joint resolution.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that as the joint resolution now stands, the monument may be erected in any place in the city of Washington, without specially designating any particular place. In the case of the bills for the erection of the statues of General Grant, General Sherman, and others, we have inserted a provision prohibiting the erection of such monuments in the Capitol Grounds, and I think that reservation ought to be made in this joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be happy to have that amendment made.

Mr. GORMAN. I am informed, as a matter of fact, that in some cases similar commissions to that provided for by this joint resolution have selected the Capitol Grounds for the erection of monuments.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know about that.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest that the joint resolution should be amended so as to prevent anything of that kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. Any amendment the Senator suggests in that respect will be gladly incorporated.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it read, "any place in the District of Columbia outside of the Capitol Grounds."

Mr. GALLINGER. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that the amendment should come in in line 9, after the word "committee."

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator wait until I suggest two or three amendments to the joint resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The preamble will come out at the proper time. I will move, in line 5, that the word "said," before the word "monument," be stricken out, and the word "a" inserted; after the word "monument," in the same line, insert "in honor of Samuel Hahnemann," and in line 15, after the word "citizens," strike out "and to be erected in the city of Washington, D. C.," that having already been stated in the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, before the word "monument," it is proposed to strike out "said" and insert "a"; in the same line, after the word "monument," to insert "in honor of Samuel Hahnemann"; and after the word "citizens," in line 15, to strike out "and to be erected in the city of Washington, D. C.," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That permission be, and the same is hereby, granted the Hahnemann monument committee of the American Institute of Homeopathy to erect a monument in honor of Samuel Hahnemann in such place in the city of Washington, D. C., as shall be designated by the officer in charge of the new Library building, the Joint Committee on the Library, and the chairman of the monument committee; and the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the building of a foundation upon which to place said monument; said monument to be presented to the people of the United States by the American Institute of Homeopathy, kindred associations, and citizens.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 9, after the word "committee," I move to insert "not including the Capitol Grounds."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to have the preamble stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The preamble will be stricken out, in the absence of objection.

REGISTER OF COPYRIGHTS.

The bill (S. 425) to provide for the register of copyrights was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over without losing its place. It will lead to discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be passed over without prejudice.

SALES AND PROCEEDS OF SALES OF BONDS.

The resolution submitted by Mr. LODGE February 19, 1896, directing the Committee on Finance to investigate and report all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, 1896, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. That subject has already been disposed of, and I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

RACING COMMISSION.

The bill (S. 1866) for the incorporation of associations for the improvement of the breed of horses, and to regulate the same, and to establish a racing commission, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DISTRICT METROPOLITAN POLICE FORCE.

The bill (S. 1927) to increase the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. At the request of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I ask that that bill be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

DISTRICT WATER SUPPLY.

The joint resolution (S. R. 84) to provide for the increase of the water supply of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the same request as to that joint resolution at the request of the chairman of the District Committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

DISTRICT HOME FOR GIRLS, ETC.

The bill (S. 1449) to provide a home and employment for reputable girls and young women of the District of Columbia who are without means of support and are unable to obtain work was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is adversely reported.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

LICENSES TO OFFICERS ON SEAGOING STEAM VESSELS.

The bill (S. 1836) to provide for licenses to certain officers of seagoing passenger steam vessels was announced as next in order.

Mr. FRYE. That is practically provided for in another bill, and I ask that this bill may be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

Mr. FRYE subsequently said: I asked a moment ago that Senate bill 1836 should be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce. I find there is no necessity for recommitting it to the committee, because I know what amendment I desire to make, and the Senate can then act upon it. I will simply ask that the bill be restored to its place on the Calendar, to go over this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

FORTIFICATIONS AND OTHER SEACOAST DEFENSES.

The bill (S. 1159) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses was announced as next in order.

Mr. GORMAN. Let that go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under Rule IX.

PEARSON C. MONTGOMERY.

The bill (S. 14) for the relief of Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, State of Tennessee, $3,200, in full compensation for all claims connected with the steamer New National, and its use, while in the service of the United States, upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries, prior to the 21st day of March, in the year 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW MARTIN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 615) for the relief of Andrew Martin, which had been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, after the word "discharge," at the end of the bill, to insert, "Provided, That no pay, compensation, or allowance will be allowed by reason of this act"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to amend the record of Andrew Martin, late a private in Company A, Forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and grant him an honorable discharge: Provided, That no pay, compensation, or allowance will be allowed by reason of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF LATE PROPRIETORS OF KNOXVILLE WHIG.

The bill (S. 21) to authorize the investigation by the Attorney-General of certain claims alleged to be due the late proprietors of the Knoxville Whig for advertising, and authorizing the payment therefor by the Secretary of the Treasury of any amounts found by the Attorney-General to be legally or equitably due, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Attorney-General to investigate the claims of the legal representatives of W. G. Brownlow, Brownlow & Hawes, and Brownlow, Hawes & Co., late owners and proprietors, respectively, of the Knoxville Whig, a newspaper published at Knoxville, in the State of Tennessee, for advertising certain legal notices alleged to have been advertised in that paper in the years 1864, 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868, and to ascertain whether such services were rendered as claimed, or any part thereof, and if so, the value thereof; and also whether the same, and if so, to what extent, is either a legal or equitable claim against the United States; and if any sum is so found to be due and owing the claimants, or any of them, and the same is a legal or equitable claim against the United States, to certify such facts, together with the amount, to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is authorized and directed to pay to such claimants or their legal representatives the full amount so ascertained, and provides that such sum or sums of money which may be found to be legally or equitably due shall, when paid, be in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims for compensation by the claimants, or any of them, for any such service against the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. HARRIET D. NEWSON.

The bill (S. 1974) for the relief of Mrs. Harriet D. Newson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Mrs. Harriet D. Newson, widow of Thomas M. Newson, late United States consul at Malaga, a sum of money equal to one year's salary as consul, together with the sum of $197, which was collected from the estate of Thomas Newson by the Government of the United States after his death; and the money so appropriated shall be paid in the same manner as in other cases where the surviving widows of foreign representatives of the United States who have died while so representing the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS DETROIT RIVER AT DETROIT.

The bill (S. 924) for the erection of a bridge across the Detroit River at Detroit, in the State of Michigan, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to have that bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that the bill for the building of a bridge across the Detroit River at Detroit will be postponed by common consent until the next session of Congress, on the first Monday of December next.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. ALLEN. What is the request?

Mr. COCKRELL. We did not hear the request. I ask the Senator to repeat it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say that there will be a very long and vigorous contest between rival interests as to the bridge across the Detroit River. There is a very heated controversy as to such a bridge at Detroit, and I hope the bill will be postponed until the beginning of the next session of Congress.

Mr. CULLOM. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] living in that city is absent at this time. He probably would like to have something to say about the matter. I agree with the Senator that it ought to go over.

Mr. BURROWS. My colleague is not in the Senate this morning, and I do not know what his desire may be in relation to the matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over.

Mr. BURROWS. Possibly it had better be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BURROWS subsequently said: In relation to the bill to provide for the construction of a bridge across the Detroit River, since it was passed over I have conferred with my colleague [Mr. McMILLAN], and he desires me to state that it will be agreeable to him for the matter to be postponed until the next session of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to that effect will be complied with. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. What was the request? Was it that the Detroit bridge bill should go over until the next session?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order has been made.

DUPLICATE MEDALS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 7) authorizing the issue of duplicate medals where the originals have been lost or destroyed, which had been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "beneficiary," to insert "and that diligent search has been made therefor"; so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That in any case where the President of the United States has heretofore, under any act or resolution of Congress, caused any medal to be made and presented to any officer or person in the United States on account of distinguished or meritorious services, on a proper showing made by such person to the satisfaction of the President that such medal has been lost or destroyed through no fault of the beneficiary, and that diligent search has been made therefor, the President is hereby authorized to cause to be prepared and delivered to such person a duplicate of such medal, the cost of which shall be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BUTTE, MONT.

The bill (S. 260) to provide for the construction of a public building at Butte City, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KYLE. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go over. The next case on the Calendar will be called.

Mr. MANTLE. I ask that that bill may be considered at this time. I think there can be no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection was interposed, the Chair will state, and the bill goes over under the rule.

Mr. KYLE. I did not mean that the bill should lose its place on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed over, without losing its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

PAY OF NONCOMMISSIONED ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. FRYE. I now ask that the regular order, being the river and harbor bill, be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the bill referred to by the Senator from Maine, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to appeal to the Senator from Maine, in charge of the river and harbor bill, to allow me to have a bill passed to which, I think, there will be no objection. It is one of public importance in connection with the Army.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill.

Mr. FRYE. Having yielded thirty minutes, I can not yield any further. I would yield to the Senator from New Jersey if I would to anybody on earth.

Mr. SEWELL. I will state to the Senator from Maine that if this were a private bill I should not press it, but it is a bill of great importance to the organization of the Army. I do not think it will create any objection. It was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously, and it is recommended by the Secretary of War and the General of the Army. Everybody is in favor of it. It will not take five minutes.

Mr. FRYE. I am informed that it would take some considerable time, and that there are objections to it.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to know who objects to it.

Mr. GEAR. What is the bill which the Senator desires to have considered?

Mr. SEWELL. It is a bill to regulate the pay of noncommissioned officers in the Army, not the one objected to formerly by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear what the bill is, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for information.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the title be read.

Mr. SEWELL. It is the bill (S. 2420) to regulate the pay of noncommissioned officers of the Army.

Mr. FRYE. I am informed by a Senator sitting near me that the bill would result in serious discussion, and he informs me that it will take all day. I certainly can not yield under those circumstances.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like the Senator who objects to speak for himself.

Mr. FRYE. He will not. I am speaking for him.

Mr. SEWELL. If objection is made, I shall not insist.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being interposed, the regular order will be proceeded with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4804) to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 and to repeal subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills: in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 7370) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891; and

A bill (H. R. 8237) to improve the printing and binding methods of the public documents.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

A bill (H. R. 953) for the relief of William Gray;

A bill (H. R. 1602) for the relief of A. P. Brown, late postmaster at Le Mars, Iowa; and

A bill (H. R. 7395) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to reconvey to the former owners a certain tract of land in Valverde County, Tex.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7977) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Secretary to turn to page 81. We passed over the item contained in the clause from line 8 to line 14, in the absence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

I ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to be kind enough to occupy my seat, as I am obliged to be out of the Chamber for fifteen or twenty minutes, and desire him to take charge of the bill in my absence.

Mr. VEST. Very well.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the matter to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate will be found on page 81, beginning on line 8 of that page and concluding with line 14. The bill as it came from the House contains this provision:

For the protection from erosion of the east bank of the Mississippi River along and in front of the Sny Island Levee, in the counties of Adams, Pike, and Calhoun, in the State of Illinois, by revetment work, $50,000.

The Committee on Commerce of the Senate propose to strike out $50,000 and add these words:

Such amounts as may be necessary, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, for the improvement and maintenance of the channel of the river.

There would be no objection to this amendment if it merely fixed the locality of the expenditure. It is a fact known in Illinois; it is what I think may be termed a fact which is so well known that it would be taken notice of by the courts without being specially pleaded, that some years ago a levee was constructed very near Fall Creek, in Adams County, in the State of Illinois, through the county of Pike and into the county of Calhoun, for a distance of about 52 miles. A levee was constructed and has afforded substantial protection to the owners of the land in what is called the Sny Bottom in Illinois, a tract of land which contains probably 110,000 acres, and is as fertile as any on earth, I think. Now that the levee is constructed it is altogether suitable for cultivation. Before, it was subject to the overflow of the Mississippi River. The people interested in that levee have never asked of the Government any aid in the construction of the levee. It was built there without cost to the Government, but the people insist while the Government is prosecuting the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River, which belongs to the Government and over which the people have no control, that nothing shall be done which will affect this protective levee.

The fact is it is not necessary for me to produce before the Senate the maps showing the nature of the work, but I suppose that gentlemen everywhere, living upon Western rivers, or upon rivers which are not tide-water rivers, know, especially in these Western rivers, where the banks are composed of sand very largely, covered by a growth of timber of more or less size and of more or less value, that the currents of the river greatly affect the banks, and that alterations in the currents of the river do affect all structures on the banks of the river.

As a general statement of the facts in this case, the Government has been engaged in improving the navigation of the Mississippi River substantially between the mouth of the Des Moines, and, for all my purposes, it may be said between the mouth of the Des Moines River, entering the Mississippi from the west, and the mouth of the Illinois, which enters the Mississippi from the east. I am only interested now in discussing that particular portion of the river. The Government has constructed dikes. The river contains a number of islands. The current, under ordinary circumstances, diffuses itself, so that it affords no sufficient channel for navigation on either side of those islands. The Government has, therefore, attempted by dikes and other means to give the current direction, as it may happen, either to the Missouri shore or the Illinois shore, as circumstances may demand. They have given new directions to these currents. The consequence is that at one point, if not at more points, the current has been so changed by the improvements in the navigation of the river—necessary improvements, to which there is no objection; on the contrary, we are exceedingly anxious that the navigation of the Mississippi shall be made as complete and as useful as possible—but in one instance I have in my mind now the current has been so changed that it strikes (if I may use that term in speaking of the movements of water) the Illinois shore, and is already cutting into this embankment, this levee. I do not mean that it has actually reached it, but it threatens to do so. It has already made considerable progress in the direction of reaching the levee, and the bank is composed largely of sand, not capable of resisting the current of the water or the force with which it reaches the bank, and it is now—as the result of the improvements made by the Government in the navigation of the river, in an attempt to confine the water into particular channels, so as to secure greater depth and accomplish other ends promotive of the navigation—in that particular point the current has been so changed, so altered in its direction, that it is really threatening the works, the levees, built by the people themselves.

The proposition as it passed the House was that the United States should appropriate $50,000 in order to protect that levee from the effects of the current produced by the action of the Government itself. The term employed by those who are familiar with the subject is "erosion." The plain vernacular of Illinois would be to protect the banks from the cutting of the sand by the influence of the water upon this levee, which threatens to destroy it. It is not claimed upon the ground that the Government is under any obligation to protect the lands of owners from overflow. It is only claimed that the Government shall be responsible to the owners of land to the extent of repairing any damage already done to this levee or that the Government shall adopt such methods for the protection of the levee, the result of its own improvements, as these people have a right to demand. That is all that is involved.

The original House proposition was a direct appropriation of $50,000 for the protection of this levee by what are termed revetments, a direct, specific appropriation. The amendment is:

Such amounts as may be necessary, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, for the improvement and maintenance of the channel of the river.

I have no doubt that this levee has been an important aid to the Government improvements of the river, and I have no doubt at the same time that one of the things that would occur to the Secretary of War, or to the engineers in the employment of the Government, would be that it was of vital importance to protect this levee from what is termed erosion. But at the same time the evil is a specific, a precise one which admits of accurate definition and to which a specific appropriation may be applied, may be directed, and may be expended in a specific work. Why should the people there be turned over to the engineers, who may not perceive that an appropriation of this amount is necessary, who may conclude that they may otherwise employ the money to the advantage of the Government in improving the river at some other point or in some other way? What I seek and what those I represent on this particular point seek is that there shall be a precise and specific appropriation made for this object.

It is said there is no official estimate for this work. I grant it. I think if the committee had observed that rule with the same stringency that they employ in this case they would find that there are other appropriations which they have made which are also without the sanction of a recommendation. I am told—I am not altogether familiar with the river and harbor bill—that there are on the same page one or more appropriations made for specific purposes for which no estimate has been made. So that argument, so far as it applies to this particular case, has no foundation if it turns out, which I believe to be true, that the committee have already reported specific appropriations for work for which no estimate has been made.

Estimates have been made by an intelligent engineer as to what this work will cost. I think the estimate is about $67,000, and it is supposed by this intelligent officer whom I have just mentioned that that sum will be required before the revetment is completed; but it has been hoped that the sum of $50,000 might be retained and applied to this specific purpose. I hope, therefore, that the committee will consent that the provision of the bill from lines 8 to 11 may be retained. If the committee mean to serve this particular purpose by this appropriation, then the retention of the amendment is entirely unnecessary. If they mean that the appropriation shall be contingent or that it may be possibly directed to some other object, perhaps the amendment ought to be retained. But what I think is the right thing to do is to appropriate the sum of $50,000 for the protection of the east bank of the Mississippi River along and in front of the Sny Island Levee by revetment works at points where the necessity for such works will appear at once to be necessary not only for the safety of the levee, which I have already stated is an important aid to the improvement of the navigation of the river, but that the people who are interested in it may receive protection from what I suppose and what I am told are dangers produced by works already attempted by the Government.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] is mistaken in the statement that the Committee on Commerce have made any discrimination between this appropriation and others at special localities upon the Upper Mississippi River. He will find that in every instance where there were no estimates and no recommendation by the engineers in charge of the river we have stricken out the special appropriations. That is the case in lines 15, 16, and 17 of the same page of the bill, lines 23, 24, and 25 on the same page, and lines 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 on page 84. The Senate yesterday, against the opposition of the committee, restored two of these small improvements as to Quincy Harbor and another locality. But the committee carefully examined the estimates and the reports of the engineers, and where we found no recommendation and no estimate we were remitted, as a matter of course, if we made the appropriation at all, to the opinions of members of the House and of Senators; and as I stated yesterday, in discussing a similar question on the Missouri River, it is simply impossible to make up a river and harbor bill upon any such estimates or opinions. There are engineers in charge of these rivers, and we are bound to take their opinions as experts and as officers who have examined the different localities and know the necessities for improvement upon the river generally and locally.

The Senator from Illinois is mistaken, I repeat, in his assumption that there has been any discrimination against the Sny Island Levee. He is mistaken in another statement, and that is that the Government of the United States has never made any appropriation for the maintenance of this levee or its repair.

Mr. PALMER. I ask pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. VEST. I do.

Mr. PALMER. I did not make the statement in that form.

Mr. VEST. I remember distinctly that I myself put an amendment in the river and harbor bill, I think in 1892, for the repair of this levee, to prevent an overflow that had come upon these bottom lands by reason of a break in the levee. This levee was put there originally, as stated by the Senator from Illinois, under an act of the legislature of Illinois, and a company was organized to do the work. As a matter of course, the Government of the United States can not build a levee for the purpose of protecting private property. The Senator from Illinois would not contend for any such action upon our part. All that we can do is to use levees as an instrumentality for improving the channels of navigable streams, not to protect private property, not to subserve private interests, but in order to improve the navigability of a river, and a levee which confines the waters and produces erosion of the channel, of course, is a most valuable instrumentality in that regard.

The people of Missouri are more interested in this improvement possibly than those of Illinois. I have in my hand a dispatch from the mayor of the city of Hannibal, immediately opposite this levee, and from the principal citizens of Hannibal, urging upon me the propriety of retaining this specific appropriation. They state in the telegram that the materials to be purchased and the stone for the revetment are to be taken from the soil of Missouri, that the labor will be employed in Missouri, that the lands on the bottoms are owned by the people of Missouri, and that it is my public duty, therefore, as a Senator from Missouri to vote and urge the appropriation of the $50,000 specifically for this improvement. I am not able to see my duty in that light. I have the greatest respect for these gentlemen; they are my personal and political friends of many years' standing, but I think when they understand the matter and consider it properly they will come to the conclusion that the amendment of the committee is much more favorable to what they desire than the appropriation as it came from the other House.

As the appropriation comes from the House there is $50,000 and no more appropriated for this revetment work. As the amendment of the Senate if adopted would stand, the engineer in charge of the river, Colonel Mackenzie, can take as much as he thinks necessary from the general appropriation for the whole river to do this work of revetment, which of course is accessory to the improvement of the navigable channel of the Mississippi River.

Mr. CULLOM. I was about to inquire of the Senator from Missouri whether, in his judgment, being familiar with the improvement of the river and the action of the Commission and the local engineers, the amendment as proposed by the Senate committee is better than the House provision?

Mr. VEST. Unquestionably it is, and I favor it therefore.

Mr. CULLOM. It occurred to me in that way. Hence I did not make any question upon it as we passed through the bill yesterday in its consideration, but I should like to be sure.

Mr. VEST. To be entirely frank about this matter, and I am generally frank on all questions, there have been statements in the public press—I care nothing about them—that I have some personal objection to some member of the House who urged this appropriation. I have no feeling of that kind. That sort of suggestion is simply contemptible. As a public man, as a Senator from the State of Missouri, I am as much interested as any member of the House can possibly be in subserving the interests of my constituents, and I want to say now that I favor the Senate amendment because I believe, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] has stated, that it is better for the interests of the parties who have telegraphed and written me in regard to the matter that the Senate amendment should be adopted.

But more than that, I did not agree to the amendment until Colonel Mackenzie, the officer in charge of the river, had appeared before the committee and had himself suggested the form of the amendment, with the assurance to me that all the work necessary to preserve the levee and to prevent erosion underneath the levee would be done. I offered an amendment in the committee, which has been adopted by the Senate, increasing the amount appropriated for the general improvement of the river, with a view to meeting, among other things, the amount that might be necessary for this specific work.

I feel as much interest in the matter as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] can possibly feel in regard to it. I am willing to trust the engineer officers. I have no distrust in regard to what they will do. So far from limiting the amount to $50,000, I desire that they shall have unrestricted discretion in regard to the amount to be taken out of the general sum appropriated for the whole river to prevent the erosion of the banks beneath the levee. There is no estimate, there is no recommendation, and I ask the Senate not only in the name of the river itself, the great Mississippi River, but also in order to subserve the interests of that immediate vicinity, to sustain the amendment which we have recommended.

Mr. PALMER. I desire to make only a single statement before the matter is disposed of by the Senate. The United States did not, as I am informed and as I thought I knew without information, assist in the construction of this levee.

Mr. VEST. I did not say that.

Mr. PALMER. The United States in one instance furnished a sum of money to do the very thing that I ask shall be done by the retention of this provision in the House bill; that is, there was an appropriation made and expended in protecting the banks from erosion.

Mr. VEST. That is true.

Mr. PALMER. That much, I think, would be regarded as legitimate by those who are in favor of the strictest construction of the powers of Congress—and I confess I am one of them—in respect to rivers and harbors. I must be allowed to differ with my colleague and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I desire that there shall be a specific improvement—a specific sum appropriated for a specific purpose. I do not desire to leave anything to the discretion of anybody, because the levee is essential to the improvement of the river. As I have said before, this menace to the safety of the levee has been produced, I am told by authorities I regard as most reliable and excellent, by changes in the currents caused by Government works. I think, therefore, that the attention of the Senate ought to be directed to that particular point of danger and that the Senate should appropriate a precise sum to meet the specific danger which has resulted from the cause I have stated.

Mr. VEST. A single word. It is absolutely impossible to secure what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] seems to think is necessary as to the action of the engineer in charge of the river. You can not put in a river and harbor bill such provisions as will limit and define absolutely the discretion of an engineer in charge of riparian improvements. Under the provision as it comes from the other House there is simply an appropriation of $50,000 to prevent erosion by revetment. When it is to be expended, how it is to be expended, at what part of the work it is to be expended is absolutely, unrestrainedly, within the discretion of the officer in charge of the river, and if he does not come to the conclusion that it is necessary to prevent erosion at that particular point Congress can not make him do it unless Congress should have omniscient power and can go there in advance and say at what particular point he should cause the money to be expended.

In view of this fact I prefer infinitely to leave to the discretion of an honest and intelligent engineer officer how so much of the general appropriation shall be applied for a particular purpose. I have not the slightest objection to changing the form of the amendment so as to read as follows:

For the protection from erosion of the east bank of the Mississippi River along and in front of the Sny Island Levee, in the counties of Adams, Pike, and Calhoun, in the State of Illinois, and for the improvement and maintenance of the channel of the river by revetment work or otherwise, etc.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to have the attention of my colleague to the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] as to a change in the amendment. I call my colleague's attention to it.

Mr. PALMER. I happen to be otherwise engaged for a moment.

Mr. VEST. I stated and I will state again—I have the same object in view that the Senator from Illinois has—that I have not the slightest objection to making the amendment read in this way:

For the protection from erosion of the east bank of the Mississippi River along and in front of the Sny Island Levee, in the counties of Adams, Pike, and Calhoun, in the State of Illinois, and for the improvement and maintenance of the channel of the river by revetment work or otherwise, such amounts, etc.

That will cover repairs to the levee if necessary, and will simply leave out the specific appropriation of $50,000 and give the engineer officer the power to use any amount he may deem proper. It does seem to me that this is entirely fair to all parties in interest and the great consideration above all, the general improvement of the channel of the river.

Mr. PALMER. I should be glad to ascertain the exact terms of the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri. I should like to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment so as to read:

For the protection from erosion of the east bank of the Mississippi River along and in front of the Sny Island Levee in the counties of Adams, Pike, and Calhoun, in the State of Illinois, and for the improvement and maintenance of the channel of the river by revetment work or otherwise, such amounts as may be necessary in the opinion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. CULLOM. That leaves the amendment exactly as I think my colleague would like it, unless he objects to the omission of the specific sum proposed to be appropriated by the other House.

Mr. PALMER. That is it.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that would be the view of my colleague in reference to it. Am I right about that?

Mr. PALMER. I should prefer the specific appropriation, as I am obliged to believe that it is substantially what ought to be done.

Mr. CULLOM. If I may be allowed to say a word, it was my opinion as we passed over the matter yesterday that the language used would perhaps result in securing more money for the improvement and protection of the work than the appropriation of a specific sum of $50,000, and being somewhat familiarly acquainted with the local engineer in charge, I have every confidence that we would get whatever is necessary out of the general sum appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River. But I do not desire to be understood as raising any question with my colleague, as he has given this item some attention, and whatever he desires to do with it I shall follow.

Mr. PALMER. Striking out the $50,000 and permitting the use of such amount as may be necessary will probably meet the whole matter in respect to the amount, as well as the circumstances requiring the approval of the Secretary of War. I concur in that view myself.

Mr. VEST. I think that is best, especially in view of the fact that Colonel Mackenzie personally appeared before us and said that he would protect those works, and I know him well enough to know that he will do what he promises.

Mr. CULLOM. My colleague agrees to the amendment as proposed.

Mr. PALMER. I accept the suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 14 on page 88. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 88, line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and ninety" and insert "two hundred and twenty"; in line 17, after the word "which," to insert "in the discretion of the Secretary of War"; in line 19, after the words "Sioux City," to insert:

Ten thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the protection of the caving bank between the revetments already constructed on the South Sioux City front, as recommended in House Executive Document No. 48, Fifty-third Congress, third session.

On page 89, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty"; in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty," and in line 7, after the words "Elk Point," to insert "which shall be immediately available"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving the upper Missouri River between Stubbs Ferry, in Montana, and the lower limits of Sioux City, Iowa, $20,000, of which, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, $50,000 may be expended in the protection and completion of the works at Sioux City; $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the protection of the caving bank between the revetments already constructed on the South Sioux City front, as recommended in House Executive Document No. 48, Fifty-third Congress, third session; $50,000 in the rectification of the river at Pierre and Fort Pierre; $40,000 for the protection of Bismarck Harbor and the rectification of the river to prevent erosion of the banks, and cutting a new channel at or near that point; $20,000 between the Great Falls, in Montana, and Stubbs Ferry, in Montana; $40,000 at Yankton, and $20,000 for improvement of river at Elk Point, which shall be immediately available.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator from Maine having the bill in charge to strike out the word "ten," in line 19, after the words "Sioux City," and insert "fifty" as the permanent estimate, as the survey of this work requires an expenditure of $50,000 and the expenditure of $10,000 alone will be of no value. I move to strike out the word "ten" and insert "fifty." It is not in the Book of Estimates at all.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me a moment to turn to the estimate? I want to know what it was.

Mr. ALLEN. It was $45,000—$10 a foot—and $5,000 incidental expenses, making a total of $50,000. I will say to the Senator from Maine that this estimate was made after the committee amendment was in print.

Mr. FRYE. Yes. It was not required by what we had before us.

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir.

Mr. FRYE. I remember that very well.

Mr. ALLEN. At the time the amendment was made by the committee and printed the permanent survey and estimate of the engineer had not been made.

Mr. FRYE. The State of Nebraska has not much interest, except indirectly, in the river and harbor bill. I am inclined to do what the Senator from Nebraska asks. I will allow the amendment to go in for the present, and later on I will examine the report, and if the report justifies it entirely it may remain.

Mr. ALLEN. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. FRYE. Otherwise I will have to ask that it may be considered again.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes. I hope that if the committee should conclude to take any different action from that taken here I may be informed of the fact.

Mr. FRYE. Undoubtedly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to strike out after the word "bank," in line 21, page 88, the words "between the revetments" and insert "from a point 300 feet above the upper to the lower revetment"; so as to read:

For the protection of the caving bank from a point 300 feet above the upper to the lower revetment already constructed on the South Sioux City front.

Mr. FRYE. Where does the Senator get that suggestion?

Mr. ALLEN. I get that suggestion really from private sources. I will say in all candor that just above the upper revetment I understand the channel is now changing somewhat and doing damage and seriously affecting the approach and foundation of an important bridge that has been constructed. It is with a view of preserving it and saving the channel from encroaching any farther that I have moved the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. I am not prepared to object to it, because I know nothing about it.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope that the amendment will be made, and if it should prove that it is not advisable it can be modified.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, after line 7, to insert:

Improving upper Missouri River by snagging, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 13, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Capt. Thomas W. Symons, Corps of Engineers, August 5," and insert "in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Flathead River, Montana, $10,000, which sum shall be expended in snagging from Demersville to the Flathead Lake, in accordance with the plan submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 19, before the word "river," to insert "Missouri"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Missouri River at and near Great Falls, Mont., $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 3, after the word "thereon," to insert "and to have charge of the work by them recommended as appropriations are made therefor"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Sacramento and Feather rivers and their tributaries, California: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board, consisting of three engineers of the United States Army, for the purpose of making surveys and examinations of said rivers, and submit the most feasible plan for the improvement of said rivers and the maintenance of navigation thereon, and to have charge of the work by them recommended as appropriations are made therefor; said board may, under the direction of said Secretary of War, expend any balance now remaining to the credit of said rivers in the improvement of the same, after deducting the expense of said surveys and examinations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 14, after the word "Commission," to strike out:

For the purposes set forth in sections 23, 24, and 25 of the act entitled "An act to create the California Débris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California," approved March 1, 1893: Provided, That said sum shall be available only on condition that the legislature of the State of California shall have appropriated at least an equal sum for the purposes herein set forth, to be expended in accordance with the recommendations of engineers of the United States Government.

And insert:

Pursuant to the provisions of, and for the purposes set forth in, section 25 of the act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An act to create the California Débris Commission and regulate hydraulic mining in the State of California," approved March 1, 1893: Provided, That the Treasurer of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to receive from the State of California, through the debris commission of said State, or other officer thereunto duly authorized, any and all sums of money that have been or may hereafter be appropriated by said State for the purposes herein set forth. And said sums when so received are hereby appropriated for the purposes above named, to be expended in the manner above provided.

So as to make the clause read:

For the construction of restraining barriers for the protection of the Sacramento and Feather rivers in California, $250,000; such restraining barriers to be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the recommendations of the California Débris Commission, pursuant to the provisions of, and for the purposes set forth in, section 25 of the act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An act to create the California Débris Commission," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, line 13, after the word "California," to strike out "Continuing improvement, $20,000" and insert:

Completing cuts at Twenty-one Mile Slough, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and completing cut at Head Reach, $37,750, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the balance of $24,000 heretofore appropriated may be used in dredging Stockton and Mormon channels to the head of navigation in the city of Stockton.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving San Joaquin River, California: Completing cuts at Twenty-one Mile Slough, $20,000, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, line 1, before the word "as," to insert "from the mouth"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving upper Columbia River, including Snake River from the mouth as far up as Asotin, Oregon and Washington: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 2, to insert:

Improving Columbia River, Oregon and Washington, at Three Mile Rapids, and the construction and equipment of a boat railway from the foot of The Dalles Rapids to the head of Celilo Falls, in the State of Oregon, the same to be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans and specifications of the Engineer Department of the United States, $100,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of improvement of the Columbia River at said Three Mile Rapids, and for the construction of a boat railway, as aforesaid, from the foot of The Dalles Rapids to the head of Celilo Falls, in the State of Oregon, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $2,061,467, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, line 24, to increase the appropriation for improving lower Willamette River in front of and below Portland, Oreg., and Columbia River below the Willamette River, in Oregon and Washington, from $50,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 24, to insert:

Improving Columbia River at the Cascades, Oregon, $50,000; for maintaining and protecting existing works and for modifications required to increase the navigable capacity of the canal, $20,000, of which, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available for expenditure, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, in constructing on the land and river sides of the canal, between the upper lock gate masonry and the upper guard gate masonry, such portions of the walls proposed in the modified project presented by the Board of Engineers in its report of October 18, 1894 (which report was printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1895, part 5, pages 3576 and following), as may be necessary to construct in advance of the opening of the canal to commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 94, line 4, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Capt. T. W. Symons in House Executive Document No. 237, Fifty-third Congress, third session," and insert "January 19, 1895"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Coos River, Oregon: Completing improvement in accordance with plans submitted January 19, 1895, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 94, line 10, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Capt. T. W. Symons in House Executive Document No. 235, Fifty-third Congress, third session," and insert "January 19, 1895"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Alsea River, Oregon: Completing improvement in accordance with plans submitted January 19, 1895, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 94, line 16, after the word "submitted," to strike out "by Captain T. W. Symons in House Executive Document No. 234, Fifty-third Congress, third session," and insert "January 18, 1895"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Nestucca River, Oregon, from town of Woods to the ocean, in accordance with plans submitted January 18, 1895: Completing improvement, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 94, line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty"; in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "as recommended by Capt. W. L. Fisk, Corps of Engineers," and insert "to be expended in accordance with reports submitted February 21, 1896," on page 95, line 1, after the word "Eugene," to strike out "(House Document No. 260, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session), and as recommended by Maj. J. C. Post, Corps of Engineers, in report to Chief of Engineers," and insert "and in accordance with report of survey"; in line 9, after the word "improvements," to insert "or said materials may be purchased and work may be done otherwise than by contract"; and in line 13, after the word "appropriated," to insert:

And provided further, That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be available for the purchase or construction of a snag boat with suitable appliances.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Willamette and Yamhill rivers, Oregon, $10,000, to be expended in accordance with report submitted February 21, 1896, for Willamette River from Portland to Eugene, and in accordance with report of survey, dated March 6, 1895, for lock and dam on Yamhill River: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said improvements, or said materials may be purchased and work may be done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law not exceeding in the aggregate $200,000, including the amount herein appropriated: And provided further, That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be available for the purchase or construction of a snag boat with suitable appliances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 19, after the word "Oregon," to strike out "as recommended by Maj. J. C. Post, Corps of Engineers, May 25," and insert "in accordance with project submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for "; in line 23, after the word "ninety-five," to strike out "Provided, That fifty" and insert "Fifty"; in line 24, after the word "dollars," to strike out "is hereby authorized to be transferred from" and insert "of"; and on page 96, line 1, after the word "improvement," to insert "is hereby authorized to be expended on this work"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Columbia River below Tongue Point, by way of the South Channel in front of Astoria, Oreg., in accordance with project submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1895: $50,000 of the balance on hand to the credit of the mouth of the Columbia River improvement is hereby authorized to be expended on this work in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 6, after the word "line," to insert "completing improvement"; so as to make the clause read:

For improving Kootenai River, in Idaho, between Bonners Ferry and the international boundary line, completing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, line 11, after the word "improvement," to strike out:

Twenty-seven thousand dollars; of which sum $12,000 shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for straightening and deepening the channel of the Puyallup River, emptying into Commencement Bay, in Puget Sound, with a view to making said river navigable at all times for vessels drawing 13 feet of water, from the mouth of said river upward a distance of about one-half mile.

And insert:

Including the rivers Skagit, Nooksak, Duwamish, and Puyallup, $75,000, of which sum so much thereof as may be necessary may be used for the rebuilding of a snag boat:

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Puget Sound and its tributary waters, Washington: Continuing improvement, including the rivers Skagit, Nooksak, Duwamish, and Puyallup, $75,000, of which sum so much thereof as may be necessary may be used for the rebuilding of a snag boat.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 96, after line 21, to insert:

For dredging Salmon Bay and improvement of the waterway connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lakes Union and Washington by enlarging the said waterway into a ship canal, with the necessary locks and appliances in connection therewith, $100,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said project of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,400,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated, for a single track canal with composite locks, said canal to be constructed either by the Smiths Cove route or by the Shilshole Bay route, in the discretion of the Secretary of War: Provided further, That no part of said amount shall be expended on the improvement of the waterway connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lakes Union and Washington until the entire right of way and a release from all liability to adjacent property owners have been secured to the United States, free of cost and to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, after line 21, to strike out:

Improving Skagit River, Washington: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 98, line 2, before the word "improvement," to strike out "Continuing" and insert "Completing"; and in the same line, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "sixty-seven"; so as to make the clause read:

Improving Columbia River between the mouth of the Willamette River and the city of Vancouver, Wash.: Completing improvement, $67,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, on page 98, line 25, before the word "hundred" to strike out "one" and insert "two"; and on page 99, line 7, before the word "resolution," to insert "concurrent"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That for preliminary examinations, surveys, except where otherwise herein especially provided for, contingencies, expenses connected with inspection of bridges, the service of notice required in such cases, the examination of bridge sites and reports thereon, and for incidental repairs for which there is no special appropriation for rivers and harbors, $200,000: Provided, That no preliminary examinations, survey, project, or estimate for new works other than those designated in this act shall be made: And provided further, That after the regular or formal report on any examination, survey, project, or work under way or proposed is submitted, no supplemental or additional report or estimate for the same fiscal year shall be made unless ordered by a concurrent resolution of Congress. The Government shall not be deemed to have entered upon any project for the improvement of any waterway or harbor mentioned in this act until funds for the commencement of the proposed work shall have been actually appropriated by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, on page 99, line 18, after the word "than," to strike out "25 per cent of the whole amount authorized to be let by any one of said contracts" and insert "$400,000 upon the said contracts for any one of the works herein placed under the contract system"; in line 23, after the word "allotment," to strike out "of 25 per cent"; and on page 100, line 2, after the word "year," to strike out:

Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to any project placed under contract wherein the total amount authorized to be expended shall not exceed $500,000.

And insert:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the Secretary of War from making contracts for the whole or any part of the works placed under the contract system in such manner as may be deemed best, payments, however, to be made as stated in this section.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That under the authority to make contracts for materials and work, under the provisions of this act, in addition to the sums appropriated herein, the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay, in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1896, more than $400,000 upon the said contracts for any one of the works herein placed under the contract system, except as herein otherwise specifically authorized to do: Provided, Any part of the annual allotment herein provided for, not earned and paid for material furnished or work done in one fiscal year, may be paid for material furnished and work done under the contracts in any subsequent fiscal year: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the Secretary of War from making contracts for the whole or any part of the works placed under the contract system in such manner as may be deemed best, payments, however, to be made as stated in this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, after line 10, to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of War shall have authority to so modify any of the specific projects provided for in this act as the interests of commerce and navigation may require: Provided, That the total cost of the work may not be increased thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, after line 15, to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 7. That all persons employed on the public works of engineering entrusted to the Engineer Department shall be selected and hired by the officers of the Corps of Engineers in local charge of those works, subject to the approval of the Chief of Engineers, in order that the officers may be held to a strict responsibility for the proper execution of the work in their charge.

Mr. VEST. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee and of the Senate to the fact that since the bill was drawn and the amendment inserted the President of the United States, by a general order, has placed all these subordinate employees under the civil service. I have not seen an official copy of that order, but I saw a synopsis published in the papers, and in that the employees of the Engineer Corps, which would include the employees upon the different river and harbor improvements in the United States, were specifically mentioned as coming within the order.

I have no doubt the chairman and the other members of the committee and the Senate, when attention is called to it, will agree with me that the object of this provision was to prevent the appointment of subordinates upon the works of improvement from being made for political purposes, or to prevent a system of personal favoritism which has obtained in some degree in certain localities. The amendment, I understand, was originally recommended by General Casey, who lately, unfortunately for the public service, died. It was his opinion that the engineer officers in charge of the different works of improvement should have the appointment of the subordinates and then be held to a strict accountability for the conduct of their employees, and that view is right and just. But it is obvious that if these employees are put under the civil-service rules, and are to be first found qualified and then can not be removed except for cause, there is no necessity for the amendment. I call the attention of my friend from Maine, the chairman of the committee, to the suggestion I make.

Mr. FRYE. My attention had been called to that point, and I conferred with the Engineer Department in relation to it. I have some papers touching it, which I think could be considered elsewhere a great deal better and more intelligently than on the floor of the Senate. The Senator from Missouri will undoubtedly be one of the conferees, and I would a little rather have the amendment remain as it is and let whatever is done be done in conference, whether it be stricken out or not. I have myself very serious doubts whether the section would have any effect upon the order of the President.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] desired that this matter should be held open until he could come into the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Is it not safe for the Senator from Maryland to leave it to the conferees?

Mr. VEST. I would rather have him pass upon that question. He simply made that statement to me this morning.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Is it the intention of the amendment to limit the employment to the engineers where the works are in charge of a contractor?

Mr. FRYE. My intention was that the appointment of a laborer, or a civil engineer employee, or of a watchman should not be political and should not be made at the request of a member of Congress; that is all.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I agree with the Senator from Maine on that point. I think that is the proper thing to do. The question which occurred to my mind was whether, in a case where contractors had taken a contract to do a certain quantity of work for a certain amount of pay, the persons whom they employ on the work must be selected by the engineers.

Mr. FRYE. I do not understand that section 7 applies to any portion of the work let out by contract.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should think that that would be the construction.

Mr. FRYE. It never was my construction of it.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question, as possibly he has had an opportunity to examine an official copy of the recent general order of the President extending the civil service. Does he think that the engineer employees for these different works come within that order?

Mr. FRYE. I have not, of course, had the order before me, but I made inquiries of parties who ought to be informed in relation to such a matter, and I was informed that it did not apply to those employees. I do not myself think it does apply at all to them. I do not see how it is possible to have it apply. Those men have to be selected, as a matter of course, for a particular business, and the ordinary examination which is given by the Civil Service Commission could not, possibly be of any sort of benefit. Take a watchman to be employed; the only question is as to his fidelity, and so on. The question is not as to whether he understands geography, or anything else; it is his fitness for the particular place which is wanted.

Then, again, these men—any number of them—are employed for only a month; some of them are employed for only a week; some of them are employed, as the Engineer Department told me, for only a day or two. It seems to me that if all those employees are to be placed under the civil service, and they have to send to Washington in order to get liberty to employ some one who has passed an examination to do a day's work, we are going to be immensely troubled about river and harbor improvements. It is not conceivable that the President has made any order which means that. I have quite a long communication in relation to it in my room. This is not a question of appropriating money or anything of that kind. It is only for the good of the service. I would rather that the conferees should sit down and look it over and get what information they can and determine it.

Mr. VEST. As I said before, I have not seen a copy of the official order, but I saw a synopsis published in one of the city papers here, and if that was at all correct the order would include these employees, because it specifically mentions subordinates in the engineer service.

Mr. FRYE. What does the Senator understand by subordinates?

Mr. VEST. Those below the engineer officer, the clerical force; it would include any employee under the terms as reported in that paper. As to the absurdity of the enactment, there are so many absurd enactments in the civil-service law and the orders made under it that in my opinion it hardly constitutes an argument with me. We know that the civil service has been extended to mere mechanical employees where no expert knowledge is required at all. We have an era in this country of civil-service reform run mad. It has been applied to the Printing Office employees.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. FRYE. The local engineers who have this work to do are all over the United States, from the Gulf to the Canadian line, from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast.

Mr. VEST. That is true.

Mr. FRYE. They are on the great rivers of the country, and they are compelled at call to require laborers of various kinds, watchmen, and civil engineers. Now, is it conceivable that the President of the United States has made an order which will require those local engineers to pursue the usual course of departmental officers in order to get workmen? That can not be possible. It would simply stop all the work on the river and harbor improvements. It could not go on. They can not send here to the Civil Service Commission and take their employees from a list of laborers who have passed examinations. It is certainly impossible that that can be so.

Mr. VEST. The synopsis which I saw stated that the order specifically exempted laborers and the private secretaries of the heads of Departments. Those were the only exceptions. So that objection would not apply. I confess that it is always unsafe to base any argument upon a document which we have not seen in the most authentic form. It is like a lawyer giving an opinion upon a will which has been verbally reported to him. If we had the order before us we could determine the matter in a very short time. I had some distrust of the synopsis from the reading, for it went on to state that the whole number embraced within the order was some 29,780.

Mr. FRYE. That would not cover half the employees of this board.

Mr. VEST. Under the terms of the order, as stated in the paper, it would cover fourth-class postmasters, and we know there are a great many more than that number of fourth-class postmasters in the United States. But until we can see that official copy it is impossible to say whether it covers all the employees or how many of them. I know that it was stated that it extended to laborers. That is all I care to say.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I do not myself believe that the question of the civil-service order is at all involved in this amendment. Under the appropriations made in this bill, as has always been the case with the War and Navy Departments in the appropriations for the construction of vessels and public improvements, the employees, not being considered officers of the Government, are paid out of a lump sum appropriated for the work. Therefore I do not believe the civil service covers them, and I do not believe there will be any trouble.

I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to this provision—and that is the principal objection I have to it—that it is necessarily left to the discretion of the officer in charge of the improvements as to how many persons shall be employed. It is a very wise discretion, and a very necessary one in cases of this sort. The rule has always been that the Engineer Department determines from the class of work as to the number of assistant civil engineers outside the Army which they desire, and the other employees, and reports to the Secretary of War. They recommend that A, B, and C be employed, and, as a matter of course, the recommendation is approved by the Secretary of War. So in fact in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the engineers have the discretion. If this seventh section, however, be adopted it will take away the supervising power of the Secretary of War; and that is unwise. We all have great confidence in the Chief of Engineers and the army engineers whom he assigns to these various positions, dividing them into six or seven divisions. But still the power to supervise and determine and limit as to the class of appointments should be reserved to the Secretary of War.

I think this amendment should not be adopted. It changes existing law so radically that I feel compelled to make the point of order against it, that it is a change of existing law. I shall not care to do that, of course, if the Senator will allow it to go out of the bill and let the law remain as it is. That law has worked so well in the past that I have no doubt it will do so in the future. I do not believe there are a half dozen cases where there is any serious complaint of the engineers in charge of these public improvements as to the selection of their outside assistants. Quite a number of such assistants are necessary. It is an unsafe rule, in my judgment, to put into the hands of a subordinate officer the power to determine not only as to the number and compensation of the men, but as to their selection.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, I propose to amend the amendment of the committee before it is acted upon by inserting after the word "charge," in line 22, the following proviso:

Provided, That preference shall in all cases be given to American citizens.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. You might as well insert a provision as to their religious persuasion. I do not think the amendment is necessary.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not believe in interfering in religious matters in legislation, but I do believe in standing up for Americans and giving Americans preference every time and all the time over foreigners. That is why I offer the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I raise a point of order on this section that it is a change of existing law.

Mr. FRYE. I do not care to say much about this proposition.

Mr. SQUIRE. I wish to say that I agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has the floor.

Mr. FRYE. I have seen the Steamboat Inspection Service very seriously harmed, and as was charged by the New York Herald a year ago in an exaggerated way, which newspapers sometimes indulge in, ruined from the fact that offices were made political, and that with every change in Administration the old steamboat inspectors went out and new ones came in. There is no excuse for that. Human life depends upon the fidelity and knowledge and skill of steamboat inspectors; and to make those places political offices is an offense against decency and right.

The improvement of rivers and harbors went on for a great many years, and no sign of politics was seen. It was as clear from it as the Life-Saving Service has been all the time, which has been kept exactly and completely out of politics, and is one of the most successful services we have. Within the last ten years there has been gradually creeping in the making the employment even of laborers in the improvement of rivers and harbors political. I know that a watchman, whose fidelity was unquestioned, at Sault Ste. Marie, where it not only should be unquestioned, but it should be unquestionable on account of the enormous amount of business done, who, at the request of a member of Congress, was removed, and another one, unfit for the place, as it was charged, put in. I know that in quite a number of districts, especially in the South—I do not know of any at all in the North, but especially in the South—the local engineers have been worried and tormented with the requests of the member of Congress from the district to turn out their employees and put in some who were friends of the member. I know it has made trouble. I do not wish to be any more exact in my statements, or to particularize any more than that. I was afraid of an entering wedge. This statement does not apply to one party any more than it does to another. My judgment is that if it was an entering wedge and the door was driven wide open, your river and harbor improvements hereafter would not be conducted with the fidelity and integrity that they have been heretofore. I did not like it to be injured in any way. It is of vast importance to the country, and the country has the confidence that the money is now honestly and economically expended, and I think it ought to remain with that confidence, and not have it disturbed.

I had rather this amendment should remain in the bill, and I think I had rather compel the Senator from Maryland to get it out by a point of order, if he insists upon it. I had rather that it should remain in the bill, so that in conference we may have an opportunity to examine the President's order and an opportunity to examine a paper which has been left with me by the Engineer Department, which I wish to look over, and then determine whether the provision shall remain in the bill or not.

Mr. GORMAN. I agree with all the Senator has said about the necessity of keeping this service in the condition that he desires. As to the steamboat service, I think the Senator will agree with my statement that, notwithstanding the allegation of its being purely a political matter, that never has occurred as a matter of fact. There have been removals with changes of Administration, but nothing seriously to interfere with that service. We have had, as the Senator knows, quite a number of charges made against the head of that service, who has been there for a very long time, certainly ever since I have been in Congress. I do not know his politics. I assume, however, that he was appointed long before Mr. Cleveland's first Administration, and is probably a Republican. He has been retained by all the Secretaries of War; and the local appointments in that service, as the Senator knows as well as I do, are made upon the recommendation of the collectors of the ports and the circuit judges. So it has been kept comparatively free from politics, as it ought to be kept. Efficiency and knowledge are the only things which are there required.

So I believe it has been with the river and harbor service. I do not believe that under any Administration there has been any attempt to use it for political purposes. The appointments are made on the recommendations of army officers, and I think there has been full confidence that they have acted with a view to the good of the service. They are human, however, and in some cases they may have selected their assistants from people who were their intimates; but as a rule I think the selections have been made because of efficiency. I therefore think it unwise to change the system at this time. There may be a few cases, a half dozen or so, in which a different course has been pursued, but there is no one of which I have knowledge so far as the great works going on in Maryland waters under the control of General Craighill, Chief of Engineers, are concerned. I do not know of any appointment he has made for political purposes of people to work on those improvements. I do not know the appointees, but I doubt very much whether any of them represent the political interests on either side in Maryland. I believe that this service is absolutely free from it in my section. I believe that to be generally the case, and I should not like to see the matter changed at this time. I think it had better come up when we can have a full opportunity to discuss it, and therefore I will make the point of order on the amendment that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that section 7 is obnoxious to the third clause of Rule XVI as to general legislation, and that the point is well taken.

Mr. FRYE. I have no doubt the Chair is correct, as the Chair is apt to be.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section [6] 8, on page 101, line 19, under the head of "Delaware," to strike out the word "Johns," and insert "Jones"; so as to read:

DELAWARE.

St. Jones River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 101, under the head of "Florida," after line 22, to strike out:

Anclote River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, line 1, after the word "Bay," to insert "from its confluence with Tampa Bay, through Hillsboro Bay and River to the city of Tampa"; so as to read:

Hillsboro Bay, from its confluence with Tampa Bay, through Hillsboro Bay and River to the city of Tampa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 4, to insert:

Clearwater Harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 5, to insert:

Inside passage from Punta Rassa to Charlotte Harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 6, to insert:

Orange River or Creek, to its confluence with the Caloosahatchee and thence to the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. PASCO. I move that in the committee amendment, on page 102, line 8, after the word "Caloosahatchee," the word "River" be inserted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 102, after line 8, to insert:

Chipola River, from Marianna to its connection with the Apalachicola River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Maine," on page 103, line 5, after the word "River," to insert "with a view to its improvement by dredging from its mouth to the wharves at Jonesboro"; so as to make the clause read:

Chandlers River, with a view to its improvement by dredging from its mouth to the wharves at Jonesboro.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 103, after line 6, to insert:

St. Croix River below Calais, between Maine and New Brunswick, to form an estimate of the cost of said improvement, and recommend the proportion which the United States ought equitably to bear.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 103, after line 12, under the head of "Massachusetts," to insert:

The approaches to the Cape Cod ship canal between Dennisport and Bass River Light-House on the south side and Nobscesset Point and Bass Hole on the north side of Cape Cod.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, after line 8, under the head of "Minnesota," to insert:

Otter Tail Lake and Otter Tail River, with a view to the construction of a dam at the outlet of said lake, for the purpose of improving the navigation on the Red River of the North.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, after line 16, to strike out:

Stillwater, for preservation of harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, line 24, under the head of "Mississippi," after the words "Ship Island Harbor," to insert:

With a view of dredging a channel 500 feet wide and 25 feet deep to connect Ship Island Harbor with a railroad pier at Gulf Port.

So as to make the clause read:

Ship Island Pass, with view to obtaining a channel of 26 feet depth at low tide in said pass between the Gulf of Mexico and Ship Island Harbor, with a view of dredging a channel 500 feet wide and 25 feet deep to connect Ship Island Harbor with a railroad pier at Gulf Port.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL. I move to strike out lines 16 and 17, on page 105.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out lines 16 and 17, on page 105, as follows:

Oswego River, Oneida Lake, and Mohawk River, so as to connect them.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 105, line 23, I move to strike out all after the words "Oyster Bay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 23, on page 105, after the words "Oyster Bay," it is proposed to strike out "with a view to its connection with Lloyd Harbor."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Now I move to insert on page 105, after line 24, the following:

Lloyd Harbor, with a view to its connection with Cold Spring Bay.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 106, after line 8, before the name "North Carolina," I move to insert:

Babylon Creek.

Babylon Harbor.

These are separate items.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 106, after line 11, under the head of "North Carolina," to insert:

Potocasi Creek.

Cashie River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, after line 19, under the head of "Oregon," to insert:

Harbor at Cape Lookout, Oregon, with a view to the construction of a harbor of refuge, and the estimated cost thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 107, to insert:

Scappoose Bay, from its mouth to and including the lower portion of Scappoose Creek.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. If the Chair will recognize me, in regard to the item under the head of "Pennsylvania," in line 5, I desire to amend by inserting before the word "dam" the words "all the," changing the word "dam" to "dams," and striking out the words "at Russell" and inserting "on the Conewango Creek."

Mr. QUAY. Let the clause be read as proposed to be amended. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clause will be read as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the clause so as to read:

Removing dam in upper Allegheny near Corydon, and all the dams on the Conewango Creek, and the rapids at or near Waterboro, in the Conewango Creek, a tributary of the Allegheny River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, under the head of "Washington," on page 107, after line 17, to strike out:

Puyallup River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 107, line 19, after the word "Neah," to strike out "River" and insert "Bay"; so as to make the clause read:

Neah Bay, with a view to its improvement as a harbor of refuge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 107, after line 20, to strike out:

Duawamish River and its tributaries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 107, after line 21, to strike out:

Mouth of Willapa River.

Mr. SQUIRE. In line 24, on page 107, I move to strike out the words "tide water" and insert the words "navigation, or Etna"; so that the line will read:

North Fork of Lewis River to head of navigation, or Etna.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. In line 24, on page 107, after the words "head of," it is proposed to strike out "tide water" and insert "navigation, or Etna."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. In the next line "Section 7" was changed by the committee to "Section 9," "7" being stricken out and "9" inserted. One section having gone out, the "9" should be now "8."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made, in the absence of objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 108, after line 13, under the head of "California," to insert:

Wilmington Harbor, California, with a view of increasing the depth of said harbor to 25 feet at mean low water over the area proposed to be improved in the project set forth in the report of Lieut. Col. W. H. H. Benyaud of June 8, 1894, and contained in Senate Executive Document No. 61, Fifty-third Congress, third session, and over an additional area extending to Smith Island, and of adequate width to allow the turning of vessels.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Florida," on page 109, line 5, after the words "Apalachicola Bay," to insert:

And the approaches to Apalachicola, with a view to obtaining a channel 100 feet wide and 18 feet deep at low water.

So as to make the clause read:

Apalachicola Bay and the approaches to Apalachicola, with a view to obtaining a channel 100 feet wide and 18 feet deep at low water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 8, after the words "Tampa Bay," to insert "from Port Tampa to the mouth of the bay"; so as to make the clause read:

Tampa Bay, from Port Tampa to the mouth of the bay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, line 9, after the words "Withlacoochee River," to insert "from its mouth to the head of navigation"; so as to make the clause read:

Withlacoochee River, from its mouth to the head of navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, after line 11, to insert:

Anclote River.

Biscayne Bay.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO. I move to insert after "Biscayne Bay," in line 13, on page 109, as a separate item, the following:

Palm Beach.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 109, after line 15, to insert:

INDIANA AND ILLINOIS.

Wolfe Lake and River, with reference to their navigation in connection with the waters of Lake Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 109, after line 24, under the head of "Louisiana," to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain the nature and character of the channel excavated through the Atchafalaya Bay, and to determine whether said channel is of value or of necessity to commerce; and if in his opinion it is, he shall ascertain the cost of acquiring the same for and in behalf of the United States, and report thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 110, after line 7, under the head of "Maine," to insert:

St. Croix River below Calais, between Maine and New Brunswick, submitting estimate of the cost of said improvement and the amount the United States ought equitably to bear.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 103, the clause from line 7 to line 10, may go out of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be stricken out will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the clause from line 7 to line 10, inclusive, on page 103, as follows:

St. Croix River below Calais, between Maine and New Brunswick, to form an estimate of the cost of said improvement, and recommend the proportion which the United States ought equitably to bear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the vote by which the amendment was heretofore adopted will be regarded as reconsidered, and the amendment of the committee inserting the clause will be disagreed to. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 110, after line 12, to insert:

Union River, for a deeper and broader channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 110, after line 15, to insert:

Harraseeket River.

Machias River from Machias to Machiasport.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Maryland," on page 110, after line 19, to insert:

Annapolis Harbor, with a view to straightening, widening, and deepening the channel of the entrance to said harbor so as to obtain a ship's channel of 150 feet wide and 28 feet deep at mean low water from Chesapeake Bay to the wharves of the United States Naval Academy in said harbor.

Mr. FRYE. I move to strike out line 19, on page 110.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out line 19, on page 110, as follows:

Inner Harbor Rock Hall.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 111, after line 1, to insert:

Chapel Point Harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 111, after line 2, to insert:

Baltimore Harbor, with a view to securing a channel 30 feet in depth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 111, after line 4, to insert: Queenstown Harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Massachusetts," on page 111, line 11, after the word "Marblehead," to insert the word "Neck"; so as to make the clause read:

Marblehead Harbor, with a view to improving the harbor by building a sea wall to protect the isthmus connecting Marblehead Neck with the town of Marblehead.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 111, after line 14, to insert:

Channel in New Bedford Harbor leading to the bridge between that city and Fairhaven, with a view to determining what amount of dredging would be necessary to make the change in the draw in said bridge from the west to the east side of Fish Island practicable and advantageous.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 112, line 5, after the word "the," at the end of the line, I move to insert "Enfield."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 5, on page 112, it is proposed to insert "Enfield"; so as to read:

Connecticut River, between Holyoke and the foot of the Enfield Rapids.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 112, after line 7, to insert:

Weymouth Back River from Hingham Bridge to Mann's Wharf.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Mississippi," on page 112, after line 19, to insert:

Ship Island Harbor, in the Mississippi Sound, to determine the most practicable route from said harbor for a deep-water channel leading to the mainland on the coast of Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 113, line 2, after the words "channel of," to strike out "20" and insert "23"; so as to make the clause read:

Horn Island Pass, and the passage leading from said pass to the anchorage inside Horn Island, with a view to obtaining in said pass and passage leading therefrom a channel of 23 feet at low tide.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Minnesota," on page 113, line 6, after the words "Big Stone Lake," to insert "and Lake Traverse"; so as to make the clause read:

Big Stone Lake and Lake Traverse, with a view to the construction of reservoirs in accordance with the report of Maj. W. A. Jones, of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, dated January 16, 1895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 113, after line 10, to strike out:

Red Lake River, with a view of improving Red Lake River from Thief River Falls to the Red Lake, in accordance with the report of Maj. W. A. Jones, of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, dated February 26, 1895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Michigan," on page 113, after line 17, to strike out:

Harbor of Frankfort, with a view of obtaining an 18-foot depth of water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 114, after line 11, to insert:

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Exeter River, from its mouth to the upper bridge in Exeter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New York," on page 114, after line 22, to strike out:

Bay Ridge, Gowanus Creek, Red Hook, and Buttermilk channels, with a view to making one continuous channel 30 feet in depth and of equal width.

And insert:

Bay Ridge Channel, the triangular area between Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels, and Red Hook and Buttermilk channels, with a view to making one continuous channel with a least depth of 30 feet at mean low water for a width of 1,000 feet, and also for a continuous channel with a least depth of 35 feet at mean low water for a width of 1,200 feet.

The channel between the Battery and Governors Island, with a view to making a channel continuous with Buttermilk Channel 30 feet in depth and 1,200 feet in width.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "North Carolina," on page 115, after line 13, to insert:

Ocracoke Inlet, to obtain a channel 14 feet in depth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 115, line 16, after the word "refuge," to insert "with a view to making it capable of sheltering the largest vessels"; so as to make the clause read:

Cape Lookout harbor of refuge, with a view to making it capable of sheltering the largest vessels.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 115, after line 18, to insert:

Neuse River, at and below Newbern, for an 8-foot depth at dead low water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 115, after line 20, to insert: Pamlico River, to obtain a depth of 10 feet up to Washington, N. C.

Mr. BUTLER. With the permission of the chairman I should like to move an amendment. I move to insert after the word "Washington," in line 22:

And to make necessary improvements of the harbor at Washington.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, under the head of "Oregon," at the top of page 116, to insert:

Port Orford Harbor, Oregon, with estimate of cost of improvement and to shipping and commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 116, after line 3, to insert:

The Tualiton River, from the town of Tualiton, at the crossing of the narrow-gauge railroad, up to the crossing of the Oregon and California Railroad at Gaston, and up the Dairy Fork of said river from its junction therewith near Hillsboro to Lousignant Lake.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Texas," on page 117, line 2, after the words "Sabine Lake," to insert:

With a view of obtaining through said lake a ship channel of sufficient width and depth for the purpose of navigation from Sabine Pass to the mouth of the Neches and Sabine rivers.

So as to make the clause read:

Sabine Lake, with a view of obtaining through said lake a ship channel of sufficient width and depth for the purpose of navigation from Sabine Pass to the mouth of the Neches and Sabine rivers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 117, after line 5, to insert:

For further determining the causes of the erosion of the easterly end of Galveston Island, and estimating the cost of works to prevent the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Washington," on page 116, line 8, to insert:

Skagit River, from its mouth to the town of Sedro, Wash.

Duwamish River and its tributaries.

Mouth of the Puyallup River.

Mouth of Willapa River and Mail Boat Slough.

Snake River, from its mouth to Riparia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. FRYE. On page 106, line 1, I move to strike out the word "between" and insert the word "to"; so as to read:

Channels to Far Rockaway and Inwood.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. There is one item which has been passed over, that in relation to harbors on the Pacific coast. I should like to ask the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] whether he prefers that that should remain until the various amendments which may be proposed to the bill are acted upon.

Mr. WHITE. I think it might be better, perhaps, to follow that course.

Mr. FRYE. I will take the Senator's direction about it.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir; I think that would be better. It will take some time to complete the discussion as to the Pacific coast harbors matter. I believe we had better dispose of the other amendments before entering upon that.

Mr. GRAY. At the end of section 6, on page 100, I ask that the amendment which I send to the desk may be considered.

The SECRETARY. On page 100, at the end of section 6, line 15, it is proposed to insert:

That section 2 of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, approved July 31, 1894, shall not be so construed as to prevent the employment of any retired officer of the Army or Navy to do work under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army in connection with the improvement of rivers and harbors of the United States, or the payment by the proper officer of the Treasury of any amounts agreed upon as compensation for such employment.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Delaware explain the amendment?

Mr. GRAY. In the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses for 1894 there is the following provision:

No person who holds an office the salary or annual compensation attached to which amounts to the sum of $2,500 shall be appointed to or hold any other office to which compensation is attached unless specially heretofore or hereafter specially authorized thereto by law.

I do not know that there is more than one case at present which would be affected by the amendment I propose, but it would enable the Engineer Department to avail itself of the services of army officers who are on the retired list and without occupation. It prevents a construction being put upon the law (I do not think the law really rules them out) which would exclude them from such employment as the Engineer Department chooses to give them for the benefit of the service.

Mr. SQUIRE. I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware, and I think it ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I offer an amendment to come in after line 10, on page 116.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

The Willamette River, immediately opposite the city of Salem, with a view of ascertaining the necessity for and character and cost of constructing a revetment or dike to maintain the river in its present channel at that point, and prevent said river from cutting a new channel through the lowlands on the left bank thereof.

Mr. CARTER. I offer an amendment to come in on page 89.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Montana," in line 5, page 89, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That, subject to such conditions as the Secretary of War may prescribe, any person, company, or corporation may construct a dam or dams across said river above Stubbs Ferry with necessary canal and improvements to develop water power and for other purposes.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to know whether the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has been called to the amendment?

Mr. VEST. It has not been.

Mr. FRYE. I do not claim to know anything about the Missouri River or the Mississippi River, and the Senator from Missouri has all knowledge about them. Will the Senator hear the amendment first proposed by the Senator from Montana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will again be read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. VEST. I do not see any objection to the amendment. There is no navigation there, and we have already authorized works to be placed there which would have the effect of a dam.

Mr. FRYE. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. On page 18, line 12, with the permission of the committee, I move to strike out the word "four" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five," making the appropriation $5,000 for Beaufort Harbor, North Carolina.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, page 18, it is proposed to strike out "four" and insert "five"; so as to read:

Improving harbor at Beaufort, N. C.: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. On page 54, after line 14, with the permission of the committee, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 14, on page 54, it is proposed to insert:

For making improvements in Fishing Creek, North Carolina, from mouth to the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad bridge: Continuing and maintaining improvement, $15,000, being the amount heretofore appropriated and still unexpended, to be available when conditions are complied with as per acts of Congress September 19, 1890, and July 13, 1892.

Mr. BUTLER. It merely makes available what has already been appropriated.

Mr. FRYE. Let me see about the amendment. The Senator from North Carolina does not talk loud enough for me to hear him, and I do not think I am at all deaf from old age.

Mr. BUTLER. It is an amendment, if the chairman will remember, which I explained to the committee and which the committee intimated it would adopt, but through an oversight failed to put in when reporting the bill. It is simply to make available an appropriation of $15,000 for Fishing Creek which has been heretofore made.

Mr. FRYE. There is no objection to the amendment. The money is available now, therefore it will do no harm.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. On page 115, after line 22, I move to insert:

Town Creek, Brunswick County, N. C., with a view to straightening the river in at least two places, and to obtain a depth of at least 8 feet to "Upper Bridge," and to improve the river 6 miles farther to the head of tide water, to the place known as "Rocks," by removing obstructions, etc.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina whether or not any improvement has ever been made on that river? Has a survey been made heretofore?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. It has?

Mr. BUTLER. The matter was before the Committee on Commerce; I explained it. A survey was made, and I call the attention of the committee to the fact that an appropriation of $9,000—

Mr. FRYE. The Senator's statement that there has been a survey is sufficient. There is no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAY. I offer an amendment to come in after the word "dollars," in line 18, on page 16.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 18, page 16, it is proposed to insert:

Five thousand dollars may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended during the year 1896 in improving the channel between Churchmans Bridge and Smalleys Bridge on said river, of which sum one-half shall be expended below and the other half above the drawbridge at Christiana Village.

Mr. FRYE. I think it should read—

Mr. VEST. "Of which amount."

Mr. FRYE. "Of which amount $5,000," etc.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment so as to read:

Of which amount $5,000 may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, etc.

Mr. FRYE. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to make a change in the amendment which was put into the bill by the committee at my request. On page 103, for surveys in Massachusetts as it now stands the clause reads:

The approaches to the Cape Cod Ship Canal between Dennisport and Bass River Light-House on the south side and Nobscusset Point and Bass Hole on the north side of Cape Cod.

I should like to have all of the amendment after the word "Canal" stricken out, leaving it simply "the approaches to the Cape Cod Ship Canal." I desire merely a survey.

Mr. FRYE. There is no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the amendment will be considered as reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I now desire to offer an amendment which I reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and which was referred to the Committee on Commerce. On page 39, after line 2, I move to insert:

For survey of Portland channel, Alaska, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAFFERY. I offer an amendment, of which my colleague [Mr. BLANCHARD] gave due notice. On page 62, after line 8, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 8, on page 62, it is proposed to insert:

Improving Mermentau River and tributaries, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to have the Senator from Louisiana explain the amendment.

Mr. CAFFERY. I will state that the improvement of this river was left out by inadvertence in the other House. I refer the chairman of the Commerce Committee to the report of the Secretary of War, part 3, page 1768, where it appears that in 1891 a survey was made of this river, and in 1892 Congress appropriated $7,500 for the work. In 1894 it appropriated $5,000. The estimate of the Chief of Engineers for the completion of the work is $11,115 in addition. The appropriation now proposed is $5,000 only.

Mr. FRYE. Is there an estimate made for this year?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir. It says:

Amount (estimated) required for completion of existing project, $11,115.25. Amount that can be profitably expended in fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, $11,115.25.

In other words, the Chief of Engineers recommends that the whole amount of money necessary to complete the work shall be appropriated now.

Mr. FRYE. I am not disposed to make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CAFFERY. I know personally that the river requires improvement. It flows through a section of country thickly settled by a very thrifty people, and the improvement in the tonnage, as shown in the "money statement," indicates that the improvements have worked great benefit to that part of the country. The tonnage, for instance, in 1894 was 5,000, and in 1895 it was 15,000, leaving off the odd numbers, an increase of about 300 per cent in tonnage from work already done. I know that the river stands in need of the improvement. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATE. I move to amend, on page 117, after the word "Harman," in line 10, by inserting what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 117, at the end of line 10, it is proposed to insert:

The north fork of Forked Deer River below Dyersburg, with a view of removing the snags, cypress knees, and other obstructions, and for dredging out and removing the bars and shoals at Caney Point Shoals, 8 miles below Dyersburg; at Basin No. 1, 12½ miles below Dyersburg; at Basin No. 2, 13½ miles below Dyersburg; at McCoys Shoal, 14½ miles below Dyersburg; at Shoal Cut-Off No. 2, 14½ miles below Dyersburg and below the mouth of Forked Deer River; and for straightening the river one-half mile below Dyersburg; and for removing snags, blasting embedded trees and snags in the river from Key Corner to junction with Obion River, so as to deepen the channel and improve the navigation of said river from Dyersburg to the Mississippi River.

Mr. BATE. It is merely for a preliminary survey.

Mr. VEST. There is no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATE. I have an amendment to offer on page 66.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out lines 6 and 7, on page 66, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Improving the north or middle fork of Forked Deer River, Tenn., from Dyersburg to the Obion River, and from thence to the Mississippi River, and for removing bars at the intersection of the Forked Deer and Obion rivers, and for removing other bars and shoals in said river, and for deepening the channel and improving the navigation of said river, $6,000.

Mr. VEST. My recollection is that the recommendation does not sustain any increase above the amount in the bill. On page 332 of the Engineer's Report—

Mr. BATE. I will explain it to the Senator. There is an appropriation of $1,000 in the bill for maintaining the Forked Deer River. The Forked Deer River runs into the Obion, and there is in this bill an appropriation of $6,000 for the Obion River for similar purposes just above this item. I propose to amend, since I have ascertained that, by making it $3,000 instead of $6,000 there, because there is a confluence of the rivers, and the amount appropriated to the Obion River will be utilized in a part of the river below the mouth of the Forked Deer. Therefore, while I ask for $6,000 I only ask for $3,000 to affect that part of the river. I think it is proper.

It is a navigable stream. There were five steamboats running up it, as the report shows, when the survey was made. It is to be found in part 3, volume 2, of the report of the Secretary of War to the House of Representatives at this session. It shows it to be a navigable stream. While there is no estimate for the improvement, there is an acknowledgment of the necessity of it by placing a thousand dollars in the bill for this purpose. I think it is patent and ought to be done. The river is full of cypress leaves, and there is a bar forming at the mouth of the river. There are three or four or five steamboats running up as far as Dyersburg, which is the point indicated in the amendment. I think there ought to be no objection to it.

Mr. VEST. I suggest that the Senator make it $5,000.

Mr. BATE. Very well; I will make it $5,000.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator reduces it to $5,000 the committee will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out "six" and inserting "five"; so as to read "$5,000." The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. Now, if there are no other amendments except the Santa Monica matter, the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] is ready to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is only one amendment which has been passed over. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, after line 12, the committee propose to insert the following amendment:

For a deep-water harbor at Port Los Angeles, in Santa Monica Bay, California, said harbor to be formed by the construction of a breakwater to be situated southwesterly from the mouth of Santa Monica Canyon, substantially as shown on first chart in House Executive Document No. 41, Fifty-second Congress, second session, $100,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may make contracts for the completion of said work, to be paid for as appropriations may be made from time to time according to law, not exceeding in the aggregate $2,998,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided, however, That prior to the expenditure of any part of the money hereby appropriated, the Southern Pacific Company, or the owner or owners thereof, shall execute an agreement and file the same with the Secretary of War, that any railroad company may share in the use of the pier now constructed on the site of said harbor, and the approaches thereto, situated westerly of the easterly entrance to the Santa Monica tunnel, upon paying its proportionate part of the cost of the same and its proportionate part of the expenses of maintenance of the same, to be determined by the Secretary of War, in case of disagreement between the parties.

Mr. WHITE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all the committee amendment, commencing on line 13, page 35, down to and including line 10, on page 36, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For the purpose of selecting a proper location for a deep-sea harbor either in the Bay of San Pedro or at Port Los Angeles, in the Bay of Santa Monica, on the coast of Los Angeles County, Cal., a board of engineers, one of whom shall be an officer of the United States Navy, with a rank of not less than commander, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, one a member of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, to be selected by the Secretary of War, and one a member of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, to be selected by the Superintendent of the Survey, shall personally examine the more northerly location in said Santa Monica Bay at Port Los Angeles, shown upon the first chart of House Executive Document No. 41, Fifty-second Congress, second session, as a proper place for a breakwater and deep-sea harbor, and shall also examine the location recommended for a breakwater and deep-sea harbor by the Board of Engineers of the United States Army, as appearing in said House Executive Document No. 41, Fifty-second Congress, second session, and shall determine the relative merits of said locations, and shall designate which of said locations is the more eligible for such breakwater and deep-sea harbor, and shall report to the Secretary of War their finding in the premises, and the decision of a majority of said Board as to said location shall be conclusive. And the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for a deep-sea harbor, to be constructed at the point so selected by said Board; and if said Board shall select the said location at Port Los Angeles, then the breakwater for which this appropriation is made shall be constructed substantially as shown on the said first chart in House Executive Document No. 41, Fifty-second Congress, second session; and if said Board shall select the location at San Pedro, then the breakwater for which this appropriation is made shall be constructed substantially as recommended by said Board of Engineers in said House Executive Document No. 41, Fifty-second Congress, second session: Provided, That the Secretary of War may make contracts for the completion of said work, to be paid for as appropriations may be made, from time to time, according to law, not exceeding in the aggregate $2,988,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided, however, That if the said board shall report in favor of the construction of a breakwater at Port Los Angeles no expenditure of any part of the money hereby appropriated shall be made until the Southern Pacific Company, or the owner or owners thereof, shall execute an agreement and file the same with the Secretary of War that any railroad company may equally share with the said owner or owners in the use of the pier now constructed on the site of said harbor and the approaches thereto situated westerly of the easterly entrance to the Santa Monica tunnel upon paying its proportionate part of the cost of that portion of the same used by such railroad company and its proportionate part of the expense of maintenance of the particular part of said approaches and pier so used, to be determined by the Secretary of War in case of disagreement between the parties.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE].

MR. WHITE. Mr. President, the question presented by the amendment which I have offered, and necessarily involved in the report of the committee, is of great local importance to those whom I in part represent, and it is of national importance on more than one account. In the first place, the United States are necessarily interested in everything pertaining to harbor improvements. This follows as a matter of course. Then the Government is also interested in seeing that appropriations made by the Congress of the United States by means of a river and harbor bill are made for public purposes, and that the diversion of the funds of the Government is not accomplished through private channels or for personal ends.

The situation must be briefly outlined. It will save some time in the future and doubtless be of advantage to me as well as to those who are to follow me in the discussion.

I place before the Senate a map which can not at once be seen, perhaps, by everyone in the Chamber, but it is as favorably located as circumstances will permit. It is a map of the State of California, and I particularly direct attention to the southerly coast. It will be noticed that the trend of the coast is southeasterly, so that at Santa Monica, located on the map at the point indicated by me [indicating], is some 250 miles, more or less, eastward of the parallel upon which the city of San Francisco is built. The coast from Point Conception, situated nearly north of the Island of Santa Rosa, tends strongly eastward, in fact the shore line for a considerable distance is almost east and west. Thence it proceeds southerly and easterly. We have here at this point [indicating] Point Dume, where Santa Monica Bay, so called, which is really an open roadstead, commences. Following along the coast southerly we reach Point Vincente, where the Santa Monica Bay, so called, ends. Thence we pass along the coast until we reach a point called Point Firmin. [Indicating.] There the Bay of San Pedro commences.

It is from a point close to Point Firmin that the breakwater recommended by the Government engineers is designed to be constructed. It is in Santa Monica Bay, at a point some 15 miles from Point Dume and northerly and westerly from the town of Santa Monica, that the breakwater provided for in the bill is sought to be erected. To more definitely fix these points according to the charts of the Coast and Geodetic Survey which are before us, I will refer to a chart obtained from that office in this city, which chart is marked "Pacific coast from Santa Monica to Point Conception, including Santa Barbara Channel, California." Point Dume upon this chart is located at this spot [indicating]. It will be observed by a close inspection of this diagram that the water from Point Dume southerly and southwesterly is exceedingly deep, the figures reading 14, 150, 182, 233, 273, 323 fathoms, and so on, increasing. The soundings seem to cease beyond the point where 498 fathoms, or 2,988 feet, appear.

This diagram discloses the town of Santa Monica. The proposed pier, spoken of in the tracings as the pier of the Southern Pacific Company, extends into Santa Monica Bay, at a point more westerly than northerly from Santa Monica, a distance from that town of something like 2 miles, or a little less, perhaps. This point [indicating a point southerly from the Southern Pacific wharf] is located, according to the Coast Survey chart before us, not far from the 8-fathom line, and reading the figures directly in front of and southerly or southwesterly from the wharf, we have the following: 8, 14, 26, 30, 60, 89, 180, 110, 40, 41, 61, and 113. Reading not directly, but over a bearing between the direct reading which I have made and Point Dume, we find that the water is somewhat deeper, culminating in 224, 238, and 255 fathoms.

I refer to this proposition because it is stated in the argument before the Committee on Commerce by an engineer who I see claims, in a document which he has issued here by unnamed authority, to be a semiofficial individual, that the water near Santa Monica is not extremely deep and that one of its great advantages is that there is a gradual slope and an easy grade and that the waves come over such grade gently and without disposition to do serious injury when the Southern Pacific pier is reached. It will be noted that in the Coast and Geodetic Survey chart, to which I have attracted the attention of the Senate, there are no soundings in the portion of the diagram immediately south and southwesterly of the last sounding to which I called attention [indicating]. I presume that the depth is such that it was not deemed worth while to proceed further.

MR. MITCHELL of Oregon. When was that diagram made?

MR. WHITE. I received it very recently from the Coast and Geodetic Survey office. I do not know when the surveys were made. I presume it is the latest on hand, because I requested the best information in the possession of the office and I was furnished with this chart. It is the result of a series of compilations running down to 1881.

MR. PERKINS. I will say to my colleague that it is customary with the Coast Survey to correct these charts annually and that this is undoubtedly the last issue of the Coast Survey.

MR. WHITE. Yes, sir.

MR. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Senator says it comes down to 1881. That would be a good while ago.

MR. PERKINS. That is the original plate, but where the surveys have not been completed these corrections are made from time to time. That they are correct I am satisfied, because our navigators upon the Pacific coast are using this series of charts. They are issued by and under the authority of the United States Coast Survey.

MR. WHITE. The second plate, to which I am about to refer, is called "Pacific coast from San Diego to Santa Monica, including the Gulf of Santa Catalina." The island which is observable upon the map [indicating] is called Santa Catalina. It is located about 18 miles from San Pedro. The Senate will notice that the words San Pedro and Wilmington occur frequently in the discussion of this matter and are often noted in official publications. As far as this question is concerned we may consider San Pedro and Wilmington one place, though, as a matter of fact, the towns are some little distance apart. However, the improvement which has been going on for many years in this neighborhood is known as the improvement of Wilmington Harbor. We are more in the habit of designating the inner harbor as San Pedro, but appropriations refer to the place as Wilmington. I will use the terms indiscriminately. The town of Wilmington is a small village situated upon the inner harbor, and San Pedro is upon the same waters.

MR. COCKRELL. How far apart?

MR. WHITE. Oh, a couple of miles apart.

The Island of Catalina, to which I have attracted attention, is some 20 miles or thereabouts in length and some 18 miles from shore. It will be observed that this large body of land furnishes protection from southerly and southeasterly winds. Its northern shore is thoroughly protected. So true is this that the little Bay of Avalon located at this point [indicating] on the northerly shore of Catalina Island is the most tranquil sea water which I have ever observed. It is so calm that there is no difficulty in ordinary weather in using any common rowboat handled by a lady or robust boy along a considerable portion of the landward coast of Catalina Island. The water on the ocean or southerly coast is comparatively rough. I mention that to show the effect of the island in stilling the water toward the mainland. Its length extends the calming influence and affects the sea to San Pedro.

Point Firmin is located at this point. [Indicating.] It is from a spot just easterly of Point Firmin that the Government engineers have designed the construction of the breakwater which they recommend. That breakwater, according to the last report, is to commence near Point Firmin, on the shore, and extend outwardly in a curved line, thus [indicating]. The town of San Pedro is located at the point marked San Pedro on this diagram, indicated by the pointer which I hold in my hand [indicating], and the town of Wilmington, also referred to, is located here. [Indicating.]

The Senate will notice in the report and in the bill an item with reference to the inner harbor at Wilmington. We have already in the bill made an appropriation to which it is necessary for me to advert before proceeding further, so that we may avoid some little confusion. We have upon page 36 of the bill made the following appropriation:

Improving Wilmington Harbor, California, in accordance with the project submitted February 7, 1895, $50,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $342,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

The harbor of Wilmington is located northeasterly about two miles from the town of San Pedro, and on the estuary. The inner harbor designed to be further improved by the $392,000 appropriation is separated from the ocean by a narrow neck of land, a sandy island known as Rattlesnake Island. [Indicating.] That island is nominally separated from the mainland by a small body of water of slight importance, and the Terminal Railroad now runs upon the island and along Wilmington Harbor, where that corporation possesses wharves; and there, too, private parties, lumber dealers, and so forth, have built wharves under franchises granted them by the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles.

The inner harbor is, at its commercial point, about 500 feet in width. Upon one side of it, which we might for convenience call the shore side, there are located wharves of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and there that company is constantly running its trains and transacting transportation business. On the other side of the harbor the Terminal Railroad Company conducts its business. There are, as I have said, many business men other than the railroad companies who are the proprietors of wharves or docks upon that inner harbor.

The Senate will notice that Point Firmin is located at a point where the bluff rises to a height of about 60 feet [indicating], and this bluff continues down to the town of San Pedro. Thence the grade reduces, so the land between San Pedro and Wilmington is flat. There are there lagoons and sloughs, as we call them, and marshy land over which at times the tide rises. That property is susceptible of commercial development. Some of this property has passed into the possession of individuals. A great part of it belongs to the State of California, and under the terms of our present constitution it is inalienable. Under our laws the board of supervisors have the regulation of the granting of franchises for wharves. These wharves are public, but in view of the outlay in their construction the proprietors are allowed to make certain charges by way of toll.

This inner harbor has been a marked success. When the Government engineers took charge of this work some years ago there were only 2 feet of water upon the bar, possibly a little over 2 feet. By dint of skillful management and in consequence of the appropriations made by Congress the depth has been so increased that at the present time there are 14 feet of water at low tide. The tidal rise in that neighborhood is about 5 feet. Hence there are upward of 18 feet of water at high tide at that place, where formerly at low tide there were but 2 and at high tide perhaps 7 feet.

Some years ago this estuary or inner harbor to which I have referred was employed solely for very light draft craft. I recollect very well twenty-two years ago when I first went to the city of Los Angeles from the northern part of the State in a steamer owned by my colleague and his associates. We anchored outside of San Pedro in the water which it is now designed to utilize for an outer harbor, and then we went upon lighter craft. Lighters were used for freight and very light craft for transporting passengers into this estuary to the town of Wilmington. Now vessels drawing 13 and 14 feet and more pass into the inner harbor and tie up at the wharves and discharge lumber and freight.

The main occupation there at this time is the lumbering business. Most of the lumber coming down the coast, save that which is consigned directly to the railroad company, and much that is consigned to that company, seeks this inner harbor.

The provision to which I have referred and which we have passed upon already involves carrying out what is known as the project of Colonel Benyaard, by which he proposes to obtain a depth of 18 feet at low tide within the inner harbor; this will equal 23 feet at high tide, which will accommodate nearly all the vessels which come there.

Before passing from this point I wish to call your attention specifically to a map of the site of the proposed harbor at San Pedro, which contains soundings which will be of value in the discussion. It is said that there is much deep water at the point where it is intended to construct the harbor. It will be noted from the map now before the Senate, and which is called "Wilmington and San Pedro harbors, California; published December 18, 1895; W. W. Duffield, superintendent; O. H. Tittman, assistant in charge of office," and so forth, date of publication 1888, that is not true, as stated in Mr. Corthell's paper before the Senate, and as heretofore erroneously claimed by many, that there is such abrupt bottom in the neighborhood of Point Firmin. It is true that as we go more southerly, westerly, and northerly there is a gradual and a rapid recession, as we also have observed in the case of Point Dume; but if Senators interested will notice the depths south and southeasterly from Point Firmin the depths extend, as shown upon this diagram, these figures in fathoms will be found to appear, viz, 7, 9, 13, 17, 16, 17, 16, 14½, 13, 13½, and to 19. The exact distance can be computed from the scale, but it certainly is several miles, so that there is no trouble to be apprehended from this cause. The water is not remarkably deep. The evidence is without conflict that the ocean swells proceed from the west, and that, although the wind may blow from the southeast and points not varying far from the southeast, still the swells, the dangerous seas, come uniformly, or nearly so, from the west, and it is designed to construct this breakwater at San Pedro so that it will cut off the westerly swells. I have referred, therefore, to this diagram to prove that the assertion regarding the soundings which has been made by Mr. Corthell and others is not well founded.

You will observe, therefore, that when we speak of the inner harbor at San Pedro we are referring to something which has received the attention of the Government in the past, and for which we have already here made provision.

The outer harbor, with reference to which I have been speaking, is in the immediate neighborhood, though not directly connected with the inner harbor. The outer harbor would be peculiarly valuable if situated adjacent to the inner harbor.

The questions before the Senate may be summarized thus: First, is it necessary that we should have an outer harbor at all? Second, if so, should that outer harbor be located at San Pedro or should it be placed at Santa Monica?

Mr. President, if it be conceded that the selection at San Pedro, as contended by my distinguished nautical friend the chairman of the committee [Mr. FRYE], is not well located, and that the Government is not warranted in making the expenditure at that point, the question still remains, will the Government be justified in making the expenditure at the point designated in the bill?

Mr. GRAY. Is Santa Monica on that map?

Mr. WHITE. I have here a map upon which it appears. I place before the Senate a diagram which was utilized in Los Angeles by the Architects and Engineers' Association and which Mr. Corthell referred to in the hearing as being an accurate picture of Santa Monica Bay as it is, and it shows the wharf and the bay. I shall be obliged if Senators will examine it. I likewise present a photograph of the inner harbor of San Pedro as it now exists, which I also ask Senators to kindly examine.

Such is a general statement of the location proposed for this governmental investment. Let us now inquire as to the official status of the matter before the Senate. It has long been the desire of the people in that part of the United States to have a good harbor. Senators are all well aware that most of the Pacific (so-called) harbors are not of the best, that we have been compelled to rely largely upon governmental bounty in the construction of harbors. We have a splendid harbor at San Francisco, an elegant natural harbor at San Diego, one which I think has enlisted the admiration of every competent judge who has seen it. But San Diego is far—some 130 miles—from the seat of that extensive population of which Los Angeles is the center. It is not practicable, from a commercial point of view, to rely entirely upon transportation facilities there. In pioneer days San Pedro, or Wilmington, was sought by those navigators who saw fit to come to that part of California for trading purposes. The locality was called El Embarcadero, and there, through the estuary to which I have already alluded, the modest commerce of that time was transacted; but as population grew, Los Angeles, having according to the census of 1880 some 11,000 inhabitants, and at present having perhaps 100,000 inhabitants, with a populous country immediately adjacent to it, the necessity for another harbor increased and the requests for better facilities augmented.

The town of Santa Monica was founded years ago because of the enterprise and good judgment of the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. He built a railroad from Los Angeles to Santa Monica, called the Los Angeles and Independence Railroad. His design at that time, most laudable and worthily ambitious, was to extend his railroad from Santa Monica to Inyo County, and possibly to Salt Lake. At any rate, everyone there was anxious that Senator JONES should succeed; but, for various reasons, unnecessary to enumerate here and beyond his control, the road fell into the hands of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and he failed to realize his plan and to bring about a result which would have advanced the wealth, prosperity, and happiness of the people.

Senator JONES at that period caused a wharf to be constructed at the town of Santa Monica. That location, I wish to impress upon the Senate, is not that where it is now designed to build the breakwater mentioned in the bill; that is, it is not the point where the present wharf of Mr. Huntington is situated. I submit at this point photographs of Mr. Huntington's wharf, which I hope will be examined. Senator JONES's wharf, after passing into the hands of the Southern Pacific Company, was allowed to go into decay, and finally it was partially eaten by teredos, and was then torn down and became a matter of memory.

At that time the Southern Pacific Company owned, as it does now, a large amount of property at San Pedro or Wilmington. There nearly all of its business was transacted. Redondo, a shipping place situated between Santa Monica and San Pedro, commenced to assume some commercial importance, and a wharf was constructed. The water there is very deep, too deep, as the Government engineers found, to warrant any attempt at the erection of a breakwater. Redondo transacted much commerce, and finally Mr. Huntington, or the Southern Pacific Company, more accurately speaking, made an arrangement to get through the town of Santa Monica along the seacoast and up to the point where the wharf we are asked to protect now stands.

By the river and harbor act approved September 19, 1890, a board of engineer officers was constituted to examine the Pacific coast between Point Dume and Capistrano, with a view to determining the best location for a deep-water harbor, with a project and estimates for the work. This board consisted of G. H. Mendell, colonel, Corps of Engineers; C. L. Gillespie, lieutenant-colonel, Corps of Engineers; and W. H. H. Benyaud, lieutenant-colonel, Corps of Engineers. This board preferred San Pedro. In submitting the matter to Congress General Casey, then Chief of Engineers, said:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1891.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith a copy of report dated December 8, 1891, of the board of engineer officers constituted under the terms of the river and harbor act, approved September 19, 1890, to examine the Pacific coast between Points Dume and Capistrano with a view to determining the best location for a deep-water harbor, together with project and estimates for the work.

The board, after full examination, concludes that the selection of a site for a deep-water harbor within the limits designated by the act is restricted to the harbors in Santa Monica Bay and San Pedro Bay, and is of the opinion that San Pedro is the better of these, and submits alternative estimates of the cost of the necessary breakwaters, as follows:

If constructed of rubble and concrete.....	$4,594,494
If constructed entirely of rubble.....	4,126,106

After a careful consideration of the facts in the case as presented by the board, its views as to the location and general estimates of construction are concurred in by me. The difference in cost of the two breakwaters, for the same arcs of protection, is over $700,000 in favor of San Pedro, and when the other advantages of San Pedro, as detailed by the board, are taken into consideration, it would seem that its selection has been properly made.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

HON. L. A. GRANT,
Acting Secretary of War.

This report, made by these three officers, headed by Colonel Mendell, is alluded to here generally as the Mendell report. It is proper for me to state that, so far as the men who constituted this board are concerned, that they were not only experienced officers, but Colonel Mendell had lived upon the Pacific Coast, where he now resides, during more than a generation, and was absolutely familiar with all the work, all the governmental projects, and all local points upon which money was designed to be expended; and, as you will observe, General Casey, in sending this report to Congress, did not merely transmit it without comment, but he transmitted it with specific approval as to site selection and otherwise.

This board recommended a semidetached breakwater; or a breakwater, I might say, more properly, in two parts, commencing near Point Firmin, the common point of commencement of the two boards, running thence into the ocean southeasterly to a point. There an opening of 1,500 feet was provided. Thence, at a point 1,500 feet southerly from the end of this part of the proposed breakwater, an extension thereof commenced and was designed to extend easterly 5,600 feet, to protect from the southerly seas.

The last board which was appointed by the Government recommended a breakwater commencing at the same shore point and running on a curve seaward and terminating at the easternmost extremity of the detached section of the Mendell breakwater.

After Colonel Mendell's report had been filed here, objection was made to an appropriation for the harbor recommended. The maps and illustrations referred to will be found in House Executive Document 41, Fifty-second Congress, second session, and also in the Mendell report of September 19, 1890.

When the latter report reached Congress the Senator from Maine, who I hope is giving me his attention, suggested that, in his opinion, the harbor was not properly located, and I believe through his instrumentality, owing to his prominent position upon the Commerce Committee, of which he was then, as now, the able and distinguished chairman, procured another board to be appointed; and Congress, in compliance with his desire and through his committee, which acted in unison with him in that regard, procured the passage of a provision which will be found in the river and harbor act of July 13, 1892, as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of five engineer officers of the United States Army, whose duty it shall be to make a careful and critical examination for a proposed deep-water harbor at San Pedro or Santa Monica bays, and to report as to which is the more eligible location for such harbor in depth, width, and capacity to accommodate the largest ocean-going vessels and the commercial and naval necessities of the country, together with an estimate of the cost. Said board of engineers shall report the result of its investigations to the Secretary of War on or before the 1st of November, 1892; and $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, are hereby appropriated for said purpose.

The very distinguished board was appointed in that case by the then Secretary of War, the honorable junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. The board so appointed consisted of the following: William P. Craighill, colonel (now general), Corps of Engineers; Henry M. Robert, lieutenant-colonel, Corps of Engineers; Peter C. Hains, lieutenant-colonel, Corps of Engineers; C. W. Raymond, major, Corps of Engineers, and Thomas H. Handbury, major, Corps of Engineers.

That board went to California, and convened in San Francisco and in Los Angeles. After their field work they went to the city of New York, where the various computations necessary to be made were completed, and finally prepared a most elaborate report, which is known upon the official files as House of Representatives Executive Document No. 41, Fifty-second Congress, second session.

I will state that the document is very difficult to obtain, but in the minority report, prepared by me, I have inserted the whole of the report, except the maps, and Senators can thus easily obtain the body of the report. If there were available copies of the report itself the same would be valuable because of the maps; but I think there are but few in existence.

In proceeding to consider this subject the board had before it not only the knowledge that its report would necessarily be the subject of that criticism which is always given to a public document of that importance, but, in addition to that, the board had the advantage of the comments which had been made upon the Mendell report. They were well aware that it was only by a careful, painstaking, skillful, reliable examination and the announcement of well-founded conclusions that they could hope to produce any results beneficial to the Government. They set about performing the duties intrusted to them in the following way: As I have said, they visited the city of San Francisco and the city of Los Angeles. I was present for a while during their deliberations. They had before them every means of reaching the truth usually afforded to men of impartiality. They did not meet in star-chamber session; they sent for no favorites or particular friends of anybody; but they gave public notice that they would be in the city of Los Angeles on a certain day, and that they would expect all interested to be present and to offer such facts as might be deemed pertinent to the matter in hand.

There were three places competing for the location of a deep-sea harbor at that time. One was Redondo, one was Santa Monica, and one was San Pedro. These interests were represented, not only by individual citizens who had their special opinions, but likewise by lawyers eminent at the bar and engineers of standing. The Southern Pacific Company was cared for by one of the best lawyers in California, a man apt and valuable in discussion and examination. The Santa Fe Railroad, which was interested at Redondo, was on hand, and the same was true of the advocates of San Pedro. They produced there not merely the views of the business men of that community, but they likewise tendered the expert notions of such persons as were deemed competent to express the same. Mr. Hood, the engineer of the Southern Pacific Company, who, with Mr. Corthell, has succeeded in impressing his conclusions favorably upon a majority of the committee, was there. He gave his conclusions, he had his plans, and he, as he always does, delivered himself with much skill and ability, and gave the advantage of his experience and his wishes to the board there assembled.

I speak of this, Mr. President, because it seems to be assumed that there was some information, or that there were perhaps facts somewhere not brought to the attention of this board. I declare that I have never known a more fair, open, thorough hearing and examination than was given to these subjects at the hands of the Craighill board. The members of that board are not unknown. They were, as were their predecessors, able and honorable men. It is unnecessary for me to pass any eulogy upon the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army. It is sufficient to say that intrusted, as they have been, with the discharge of delicate and important duties, and having in their keeping, as they do, those interests which involve the expenditure of millions of dollars of money, often in the midst of contention—because money can never be disbursed without some dispute—there has never been a case, so far as I know, in the history of the Government where any ulterior influence has ever had the slightest effect upon a member of this remarkable corps. This fact justifies our pride and our confidence.

These engineers were not children in the work; they were not mere tyros; they were experienced men. It is true, it is said, they are fortification engineers. It is true they are fortification engineers; but, at the same time, there is not one of them who has not been in charge of riparian work; and to-day we are in this bill giving the outlay of the millions to the members of that corps. These men, pursuant to law and under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, decide as to how this money shall be expended. It is upon their skill, upon their integrity, upon their good judgment, not alone as fortification engineers, but as skilled riparian engineers, as men conversant with all the subjects involved in this bill requiring engineering skill that we rely, that Congress depends, and upon which the country, too, rests in security.

Mr. President, after these examinations, thus conducted by eight of the engineers of the United States Government, a second report was filed favoring the location at San Pedro, with the changes I have stated in the form of a curved breakwater, commencing and ending where the Mendell breakwater commenced and ended.

I pause here to go back a step. When Colonel Mendell, who headed the first board, and who, I might say, next to General Casey, was the ranking member of the entire Engineer Corps, made his report, he considered Santa Monica, but the only place suggested to him at that time for the location of a harbor was not at the point which has been since selected, but was opposite, or nearly opposite, the town of Santa Monica. The present scheme, as I have said, suggests a harbor, not in front of the town, but above it, at Port Los Angeles, the official name of the Southern Pacific wharf.

That location was rejected by Colonel Mendell because of the abrupt and rocky shore. This statement can be verified by referring to page 8 of Executive Document No. 41. At the time Colonel Mendell reported there had been no particular attention called to the Southern Pacific wharf, for it had not then been built, but he rejected the location where that wharf is now found because of the abrupt shore. At the spot where the pier of Mr. Huntington stands, as shown by the photographs which I have passed around in the Senate, the bluff rises almost absolutely straight to the height of 200 feet. At the base of that bluff there is a comparatively narrow strip of land. The title to that strip, so far as private property can go toward the ocean, is vested in those who own the property above. Of course, private ownership can not prevent the taking of property for public use, and the right of way can be condemned over the land of private parties whenever a proper statutory and constitutional showing is made.

But I am specially referring to the physical condition. There is a bluff rising 200 feet and a narrow strip below it. Now, let us assume, for the sake of argument, that there may be placed at the foot of that bluff a number of railroad tracks. It is said by the advocates of Santa Monica that eight or ten may be placed there. I do not set myself up for an expert, but I do not believe this. It is, however, a mere matter of opinion. But there is no foundation or space there for buildings for warehouses, or any commercial structures whatever. There is what we call a small canyon, or, more accurately, a diminutive gorge, coming in close to this wharf, furnishing enough level sand for the erection by the Southern Pacific of a small building for engine-house purposes. Nothing else can very easily be constructed there. At all events, Colonel Mendell thought the spot selected by Mr. Huntington was one which was not well suited to commercial purposes in the general sense, and he rejected it, and while preferring San Pedro, gave as the only possible harbor site in Santa Monica Bay a situation near the town of that name.

I am endeavoring to explain this matter in detail. It is, as I consider, of a great deal of importance that all these circumstances shall be understood. The bill proposes the expenditure of more than $3,000,000, and I am endeavoring to present the arguments pro and con as well as I can, that the merits of the case may be carefully considered.

When Colonel (now General) Craighill's board met, the railroad company had not completed their wharf at Port Los Angeles. The work has proceeded considerably, and was attracted to the attention of the board. It was to that particular proposition that Mr. Hood and others who were interested for the Southern Pacific addressed their remarks. So far as the Craighill board was concerned they had the advantage of all the facts and arguments which the then situation afforded.

When that report came before Congress no action was taken. The fight was still on. Its report was no more satisfactory to the advocates of the Santa Monica Bay proposition than had been the judgment of the first board. Here permit me to call attention to the report of the majority of the committee as to the Santa Monica item. I will ask the Secretary to read Appendix H, page 401, of the report of the committee. It is not very lengthy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as indicated, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

The river and harbor act of 1890 authorized the appointment of a board of three engineer officers "to examine the Pacific coast between Points Dume and Capistrano, with a view to determining the best location for a deep-water harbor." Their report was submitted December 8, 1891. In it the board stated that the only eligible sites were at San Pedro and Santa Monica bays, set forth the advantages and disadvantages of each as viewed by its members, and submitted estimates for breakwaters at each place.

For the breakwater at Santa Monica the estimate was $4,549,494 and for that at San Pedro $4,137,591. The board expressed a preference for the latter. This report may be found in the Engineer's Report for 1892, pages 2631-2639.

The Committee on Commerce, when it was considering the river and harbor bill of 1892, after considering this report and other evidence, concluded that further light on the subject was desirable, and in that bill provided for a second board, consisting of five engineer officers, to make examination of these bays.

The report of this board was submitted October 27, 1892, and may be found in the Engineer's Report for 1893, pages 3238-3263. This report discusses relative advantages of the two bays at length, and concludes with the opinion that the location selected by the board of engineers of 1890 was the more eligible. An estimate of $2,885,324 was submitted for a breakwater at San Pedro.

It was stoutly contended by persons having large interests in the commerce of the Pacific Coast and familiar with the local conditions that the opinion expressed by the Board was erroneous; that to act in accordance with it would be a waste of money; and in the river and harbor act of 1894 no appropriation for a harbor at either place was made.

While considering the bill herewith submitted, exhaustive hearings were given by your committee to parties representing both sides of this vexed question, including eminent engineers, both civil and military, and a conclusion was reached, in accordance with which a provision has been inserted for constructing a breakwater at Santa Monica Bay, at a cost not to exceed $3,000,000.

Mr. WHITE. When this report was ordered to be made in the committee, I earnestly dissented from it, and reluctantly reached the conclusion that it would be my duty to file a minority report; and after consultation with such of my associates who thought as I did and to whom I was able at that time to submit the matter involved, I, together with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], did file such report. I was not able to present the document at that time to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who, generally speaking, agrees with our views, as he was unavoidably absent from the city, and I thought that the river and harbor bill would come up the following day and believed it advisable to place the matter found in the views of the minority upon the desks of Senators at the earliest practicable moment.

In the minority report we outlined the points upon which it seemed the views of the minority should rest. I will read an extract from the report:

The undersigned object to the amendment to H. R. 7977, making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, reported by the majority of the Committee on Commerce to the Senate April 27, 1896, which appropriates $3,000,000 for the construction of a breakwater near Santa Monica, Cal. This item was not placed in the bill at the suggestion of either of the Senators from California, nor at the instigation of the Representative from the Sixth Congressional district of that State, wherein the site involved is located. On the contrary, both of the Senators and the Representative objected to the construction of the breakwater at the point named in the bill, and the overwhelming sentiment of the community prefers another location.

I ask the Secretary to read to the end of subdivision 7, as showing the considerations which justify the minority view.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from California will allow me to say right here that a rule of the Senate adopted some time since requires a brief report as to each item which is contained in the bill. The clerk of the Committee on Commerce always drafts those reports from the reports of the engineers, in order that they may be conveniently at hand for any Senator to see. So far as the report with respect to Santa Monica is concerned, it was made precisely in that way. I did not even look at it; I did not even see it; I did not even read it. I never heard of it until the Senator had it read just now.

Mr. WHITE. I have not said anything that can involve a criticism of the report.

Mr. FRYE. I make the statement simply to account for the brevity of the report.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. It is simply intended to refer Senators to the documents where, if they please, they can find the information in full.

Mr. WHITE. I was endeavoring to present the matter in rather complete form, and referred to the report of the committee, which of course is very general in its terms and contains none of the argumentations and none of the reasons upon which the Senator from Maine and other members composing the majority of the committee acted in voting for the placing in the bill of the item which I am criticising. I only criticise the report so far as it reaches a conclusion from which I dissent. I have referred to it, as I have said, not because it estops Senators from giving additional reasons, or because it presents their view of the case, but merely because it is a part of the record.

Now, let the Secretary read the extract from the minority report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from California.

The Secretary read as follows:

The following considerations are submitted as justifying this minority report:

(1) The appropriation as proposed is inadvisable. The bill is otherwise sufficiently burdened. The condition of the Treasury does not warrant the use of the public money for this particular work.

(2) There is no official recommendation or other authority justifying the making of this appropriation.

(3) Those officers of the Government to whom has been committed the charge and management of harbor improvements, and upon whose recommendations Congress has been accustomed to act, have uniformly and unanimously reported against an appropriation for a breakwater at Santa Monica. There has been no conflict in the Engineer Corps upon this topic, notwithstanding strenuous exertions by private and powerful interests, and although two boards specially commissioned to examine and report have faithfully discharged their duties.

(4) The action of the committee establishes a dangerous precedent. The entire disregard of the carefully formed and unbiased opinions of two boards of able engineers and the arbitrary location of this extensive work at a point demanded by private interests is a dangerous exercise of power and threatens the removal of needed protection to a frequently imperiled Treasury.

(5) The ultimate success of the work authorized is problematical.

(6) The proper site for a deep-sea harbor is not at Santa Monica but at San Pedro.

(7) If there is doubt as to the availability of San Pedro for a deep-sea harbor, then the expenditure of the appropriation should be made to depend upon the judgment of a commission provided for in this act. Such commission, after taking into consideration all the information theretofore collected and that still is obtainable, should decide as between San Pedro and Santa Monica and should report to the Secretary of War, and a contract should thereupon be entered into for the construction of a breakwater pursuant to such report.

Mr. WHITE. In order to give the Senate as full information from a scientific source as I was able to produce, I and my associates in the report submit a synopsis of the Mendell report and we submit the report of the Craighill board in full. These are contained in the minority report and constitute as to extent the main part of the same.

Right here I wish to allude to another matter. It is said in the minority report that the insertion of this item is not owing to the importunity or the effort of either of the Senators from California or the local Representative. It is pretty evident from my attitude that it was not put in at my suggestion. It is equally certain that it was not placed there at the instigation of my colleague. At the hearing before the committee the very able gentleman who represents the Sixth Congressional district of California came before our committee and stated his views upon the subject. I consider them of sufficient importance (they are not very lengthy) to justify reading at least a part of the same, and I therefore request the Secretary to read from Congressman McLACHLAN's statement to the end of the 5th line on page 5, Hearings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as indicated, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hon. JAMES McLACHLAN, member of Congress from the Los Angeles district, said:

"MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN: Perhaps it would be well for me to state briefly the history of harbor matters in the vicinity of Los Angeles. Something like twenty years ago an appropriation was made by Congress for the improvement of the inside harbor at San Pedro, and appropriations have been made from time to time for the improvement of that harbor until the total of the disbursements up to this time aggregate somewhere in the neighborhood of $800,000. That was for the improvement of the inside harbor at San Pedro. The commerce of that locality is increasing rapidly, and it has become evident to all the people there that larger facilities are necessary to meet this increasing commerce. The Government engineers made a survey of what is termed the outer harbor at San Pedro and reported the feasibility of constructing a deep-sea harbor in that vicinity. A short time afterwards another survey was made by Government engineers, and I think that at that time they also made an investigation of Santa Monica, which is about 30 miles north of San Pedro.

"The reports of the Government engineers with reference to the investigation of these two harbors are matters of record here, and can be seen for themselves. It is a fact that those reports show that the Government engineers, on a comparison of the two locations, made a preference in favor of San Pedro for the second time. There has been a good deal of agitation over the question in the vicinity of Los Angeles, and there has been a wonderful conflict going on since that time between these two localities. Before I was nominated for Congress (this will show the condition and temper of the people at that time) I went on the platform of the Republican convention and stated that if I were elected I would go to Congress and would do all in my power to secure an appropriation for a deep-sea harbor at San Pedro. I think that every candidate on every ticket nominated in that campaign two years ago did the same thing. The general sentiment of the people, based largely, I suppose, upon the reports of Government engineers, was largely in favor of San Pedro for the deep-sea harbor. Those are the conditions on which I came to Congress.

"When I arrived at Washington in the beginning of this session I found, however, that the friends of San Pedro were in doubt as to the advisability of our contending at this session for an appropriation for an outside harbor at San Pedro. After consultation with each other, the friends of San Pedro decided that, on account of the depleted condition of the Treasury, so reported, and of the economical ideas which seemed to pervade Congress, it would be wise at this session of Congress to confine their efforts to an appropriation to deepen the inside harbor at San Pedro to 18 feet at mean low water, according to the report of Colonel Benyaud, who stated that, in his judgment, it could be done for $392,000.

"I want to state to the committee that I was the last friend of San Pedro who finally assented to this course, and I think the friends of San Pedro will bear me out in stating that. I said to them that I was elected to come here to work for an outside harbor at San Pedro; that that was my pledge to the people, and that now I would not be justified in confining my efforts to the inside harbor. I was perhaps the last one who finally consented to this plan, because it was the best thing to do. I went before the House committee and asked the improvement of the inside harbor of San Pedro and an appropriation of $392,000 for that purpose, stating at the same time that we did not forego our claims to the outside harbor at San Pedro. At that hearing there was no objection to the request made by us, and we left the committee with the request that we should receive an appropriation that would enable us to complete the inside harbor at San Pedro.

"Afterwards, and before the river and harbor bill was reported to the House, it was learned that the committee had put in the bill an appropriation for the full amount that was asked for the inside harbor at San Pedro, and had also included an appropriation (as we were credibly informed) of about $2,800,000 for the construction of an outside harbor at Santa Monica. I am bound here to state, as the Representative from that district, that I never asked for an appropriation for Santa Monica. We simply confined our efforts to the inside harbor at San Pedro. And I am in duty bound to say, as a Representative from that district, coming fresh from the people, that I am not here to-day asking for an appropriation for Santa Monica, but that I am here asking for an appropriation to continue that inside harbor at San Pedro according to the plan of Colonel Benyaud. And if in the wisdom of this committee it can see its way clear to give us an appropriation for an outside harbor, I am bound, under my pledges, to ask you to give that appropriation for the construction of the outside wall or breakwater at San Pedro."

Mr. WHITE. In addition to the extract which has just been read, I make the following quotation from Mr. McLACHLAN:

Senator ELKINS. You say that you appear here to get an appropriation for the inside harbor at San Pedro, and that you would like an appropriation for the outside harbor as well.

Mr. McLACHLAN. All the friends of San Pedro consider that on account of the economical tendency of this Congress, and on account of the condition of the Treasury, it would be wise to confine our efforts to getting an appropriation of $392,000 for the inside harbor; but since we discovered a disposition on the part of the House to give more to the vicinity of Los Angeles, I say, as a representative of that people coming here with those pledges, and that if there is to be an appropriation for an outer sea wall, I ask it for the beginning of the outer harbor at San Pedro.

The CHAIRMAN. But you do not expect an appropriation of some $3,000,000 for Wilmington Harbor provided the Government continues to make a deep-sea harbor at San Pedro?

Mr. McLACHLAN. Yes; because we believe that one of the most practical advantages to the deep-sea harbor will be the completion of the inside harbor at San Pedro.

Now, the Senate will understand that the $392,000 referred to in this testimony by Congressman McLACHLAN is provided for in the pending bill; that is to say, there is an appropriation of $50,000 and a continuing contract for an amount making the whole $392,000 for the improvement of the inner harbor which I have described, and a photograph of which is here before the Senate, and his statement is therefore fully supported.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to what I consider an extraordinary feature of this case—a peculiar feature of the controversy. It is and would be in any instance rather singular that the Congress of the United States should find it necessary to make an appropriation of public money in the face of the desire of local representatives, and it is almost impossible that such a condition of things can ever exist unless there is some extraordinary influence not commonly applicable and not usually brought into exercise.

Let us examine this situation. In the report of the committee, from which I have read the general synopsis, we find the following:

It was stoutly contended by persons having large interests in the commerce of the Pacific Coast and familiar with the local conditions that the opinion expressed by the board was erroneous; that to act in accordance with it would be a waste of money.

Those opinions thus expressed were the opinions of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and that persistency which has been referred to has been and is the persistency, the potential persistency, of that company. I recognize the right of every man to proceed upon proper lines to obtain all grants from Congress which his eloquence and skill, his arguments and persuasion, may be able to obtain, but I do not recognize the right of such person to control me without some argument demonstrating that the appropriation of this large amount of money in defiance of official recommendation is for the public interest.

Let me go a step further in the history of this matter. Mr. McLACHLAN in his lucid statement has perhaps made the matter plain enough, but I wish to allude to the subject, for I desire the Senate and every member of it to understand the situation, and so understanding it if members of this body are willing to take the responsibility of voting away $3,098,000 it is their affair, not mine. But I shall give the facts as I know them, and I shall state nothing that I do not believe to be true, and I shall gladly correct any statements which I may discover to be unfounded.

When the present Congress convened the situation of this matter was briefly as I shall state it. Nothing had been done upon the report of the board of engineers and no appropriation had been made. In the meantime Colonel Benyaud had devised the project for the improvement of the inner harbor to which I have referred. I called for that project, which was filed away in the War Department by resolution which passed the Senate at the close of the last session. The report of Colonel Benyaud was thereafter incorporated in the official records of the Chief of Engineers, and when the river and harbor bill came before the committee of the House for consideration I appeared there and so also did my colleague, and the distinguished member of the House already referred to was likewise there. We presented our claims for the further improvement of the inner harbor at San Pedro or Wilmington—I use the words indiscriminately—the Benyaard project, against which there was, so far as we knew or now know, no disclosed objection.

I stated there, as others did, that in view of the depleted condition of the Treasury, and because we deemed it wholly unlikely that Congress would care to embark in so expensive a work as a three-million-dollar outer harbor at this time, we should be satisfied if we were given a continuing contract for the inner harbor at San Pedro, involving the $392,000. We left. Nothing more was heard by me of this affair until I learned indirectly that a provision had been printed in the draft of the river and harbor bill for two million eight hundred and odd thousand dollars for a harbor at Santa Monica or Port Los Angeles, and that $392,000 had also, it was rumored, been appropriated for San Pedro.

Thus I discovered that to some extent my State occupied a higher plane than that upon which other Commonwealths have been in the habit of treading; that while there were some who were forced to solicit appropriations and to make arguments to obtain the same, in my instance such favors came not only unsolicited but unwanted.

Mr. GRAY. Thrust on you.

Mr. WHITE. However, a great local disturbance arose in Los Angeles. As shown by the hearings printed by the Committee on Commerce, a telegram was sent to Los Angeles stating that if the people there would unite they could have the inner harbor at San Pedro, but they must take with it the outer harbor at Santa Monica.

Mr. GEORGE. Who sent that telegram?

Mr. WHITE. The Representative. I will refer to the page in a moment. The result of it all was that the River and Harbor Committee dropped the whole matter, leaving only an appropriation of $50,000 for the inner harbor at San Pedro on the Benyaard proposition and no continuing contract at all. Indeed, my State was not honored with any continuing contract in the bill as it came to this end of the Capitol. When the measure reached the Committee on Commerce the fight was renewed.

I neglected to say that the River and Harbor Committee had the benefit (not in my presence, however) of the testimony of Messrs. Corthell and Hood, whose views have been published by the House. The combat was thence transferred to the Committee on Commerce. Upon a day fixed by common consent representatives from the State of California were brought here, business men, persons of standing and integrity, who represented both sides of the question. Some of those gentlemen (and their evidence is in the hearings here) argued in favor of Santa Monica and some in favor of San Pedro.

Petitions were filed; telegrams without number were received. One of my constituents stated to me, "Let us have the appropriation, even if it is to go to Arroyo Seco," which, translated, means "dry creek." The impression prevailed in the community that there was an opportunity to get $3,000,000, and some thought that it was useless to longer make a fight for San Pedro, where the vast majority of the people wanted the harbor. Sooner than lose the appropriation for the inner harbor, and this large amount of money promised to be disbursed in the locality, they were willing to locate a harbor anywhere.

Of course that did not represent the universal sentiment. I may say the record here shows a telegram signed by some two or three hundred of the leading business men of Los Angeles insisting upon my advocacy of both appropriations for San Pedro. But if I had not received that telegram I should not have changed my position. It can not alter my attitude standing here in the discharge of a public duty that a vote of mine is to prevent the expenditure of money in my locality. If I know that that expenditure is not to be made in the public interest—that it is sought for a private purpose—I will not vote for it. Were I outside of official life, selfishness, which dominates many of us, and to some extent influences us all, might perhaps lead me to applaud an act which would involve local disbursement of such an elaborate sum. But I could not find myself authorized, and do not deem myself empowered, to appropriate one cent unless I find it to be for a public purpose and for the public interest.

Mr. Lankersham, a very prominent business man of my city and a person of excellent standing, was before our committee and was examined, and favored the selection of Santa Monica. The distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] asked him the question whether it was not a fact that the people in that section of the State had finally come to the conclusion that they had better take the appropriation, because influences surrounding the case were such as to render it impossible to authorize the outlay elsewhere. I refer to the exact language. It can be found in Hearings, page 64.

Senator BERRY. You say now you have changed your mind and that others have changed their minds.

Mr. BERRY. Read just before—the first question.

Mr. WHITE. Oh, yes.

Senator BERRY. You worked for years, did you not, trying to get this deep-water harbor at San Pedro?

Mr. LANKERSHAM. Yes.

Senator BERRY. You say now that you have changed your mind and that others have changed their minds. Is not that change of mind attributable in a large measure to the fact that these people have come to believe that the influences here at Washington were so strong against San Pedro that that harbor could not be built, and you came to the conclusion that it was better to take Santa Monica than none? Is not that a fact?

Mr. LANKERSHAM. Well, it is somewhat so. I was a good deal more in favor of San Pedro before I came here, but since I have heard the reports of these engineers I never will believe another day that a port can be built at San Pedro.

And so on.

Mr. GRAY. What engineers does he refer to?

Mr. FRYE. The civil engineers.

Mr. WHITE. He refers to Corthell.

Mr. FRYE. Corthell and Hood.

Mr. WHITE. Corthell and Hood. They were the engineers of the company.

Mr. GEORGE. Of what company?

Mr. WHITE. The Southern Pacific. Now, Mr. President, taking the situation as I find it, I have no hesitancy in the world in asserting that, as between the location at San Pedro and Santa Monica, were the people of my section permitted to make a choice there would be an overwhelming vote in favor of San Pedro. But there are those, and it can not be denied, who think that under prevailing conditions they can never obtain their preference, and they conclude that it is better to accept the situation such as it is without further contest and worry. That situation can not affect me; it should affect nobody. The question before the Senate is where ought this money to be put if it is expended at all. Mr. Hood and Mr. Corthell were practically before both committees; Mr. Corthell was personally before both, and Mr. Hood's statement was before both. These gentlemen, who were heard in behalf of the railroad company, explained their preferences, and Mr. Corthell not only made his argument before the committees, but as soon as the minority report already mentioned was filed I encountered in the hands of an employee of the Senate a printed document indorsed as follows:

DEEP-SEA HARBOR IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

Letter of Mr. E. L. Corthell, civil engineer, to United States Senators WHITE, BERRY, CAFFERY, and PASCO, of the Committee on Commerce, relating to their minority report on the amendment to H. R. 7977, making appropriation for the construction of a breakwater at Santa Monica, Cal., May 1, 1896.

Turning the title page, which appeared to indicate a report from the third house, I found the interior decoration as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 1, 1896.

HON. STEPHEN M. WHITE,
United States Senate, City.

DEAR SIR: On April 29 last you, representing yourself and Senators BERRY, CAFFERY, and PASCO, presented a minority report upon a location for a deep-sea harbor on the southern coast of California.

As the facts and opinions which I have laid before the Senate and House committees, and I may say the War Department, have been called in question in your report, it seems to me proper that I should at least remove some misunderstandings that evidently exist in the minds of yourself and your associates.

Then he proceeds in this charitable enterprise as follows:

From the time that I first appeared before the Senate Committee on Commerce, on June 19, 1894, I have frankly stated my professional connection with this question, both to the committees and to the War Department. Most of the statements which I have made are recorded in the printed reports of hearings. It is only necessary now to refer to the following, from an official communication addressed by me to the Chief of Engineers, December 13, 1895:

"Early in the spring of 1894 I was requested by Senator FRYE, of the Commerce Committee, and so stated by him before his committee, and by Mr. BLANCHARD, at that time chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and afterwards by Mr. CATCHINGS, subsequently appointed chairman of that committee, to make a careful investigation in reference to the question of location and plans for a protected harbor on the coast of southern California."

This extract, it will be observed, is what Mr. Corthell styles "an official communication."

Mr. GEORGE. Who is Mr. Corthell?

Mr. WHITE. He is an employee, in this matter, of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. GEORGE. Has he any connection with the Government?

Mr. WHITE. I am trying now to work out his connection. I am trying to proceed through the sinuosities of the situation to a conclusion or to some tangible result. In other words, I am trying to anchor him with reference to his opinions. This alleged official communication was sent in December 13, 1895. Now, he proceeds:

I was aware of the decided difference of opinion existing even then (1894) as between Santa Monica and San Pedro.

Mr. Huntington, president of the Southern Pacific Company, had also asked me, as I was about to start for California, to examine the question of harbor location—

It will be observed that this was a mere incidental request—

as I was about to start for California, to examine the question of harbor location, but I considered that I was making the examination for the committees of Congress—

We will see what there is in that pretentious and presumptuous claim in a moment—and I determined to investigate the matter exhaustively, to decide the important questions involved carefully and impartially, and to present my opinion to the committees. It therefore seems unnecessary for me to repeat now that had I found the location at San Pedro more advantageous than at Santa Monica, I should have reported so.

This is his letter to me which was never delivered, as I have stated, through any intentional instrumentality of its author. Now, let us look a little further. This gentleman was interrogated upon this subject when he appeared before the Committee on Commerce. I refer to the hearings. When he took the stand, so to speak, although perhaps that expression is technically inaccurate (no one was sworn, and the statements of the gentlemen who appeared there were all accepted without any other verification than their word) he stated, I refer to page 36 of the hearings before the committee—

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE: You recollect that about two years ago I made an examination of these conditions in California—as exhaustive an examination as if I had been employed professionally on the subject. I did it with the approval of three leading members of the Senate and House committees, and I came before you on the 19th of June, 1894, with a statement of what I had found and of my opinion in regard to where this deep-sea harbor should be located.

Later on the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] asked the witness the following question:

Senator BERRY. In the beginning of your remarks you said something about going out there at the instance of Senators. Did I understand you to say so?

Mr. CORTHELL. I meant with the approval of Senators.

Senator BERRY. They did not employ you to go out there, did they?

Mr. CORTHELL. No, sir.

Senator BERRY. Who employed you?

Mr. CORTHELL. Nobody at the time; but afterwards Mr. Huntington paid my expenses. Mr. Huntington asked me, in the first place, if I would make the examination. I said that I did not think I would like to do so in my position, because it would be officious if I should make an examination and ask to be heard before a committee. I said: "If Senator FRYE and Mr. BLANCHARD (then chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors) would like me to make an examination I will make it."

Senator BERRY. There was no order of Congress for you to make it?

Mr. CORTHELL. No; I received a telegram from Mr. CAZCHINGS while at San Diego, asking my opinion, but expressly stating that he did not intend to employ me, but that he wished me to give my opinion.

Senator WHITE of California. You had done some work for Mr. Huntington before that?

Mr. CORTHELL. I was, for four years, when obtaining a charter from Congress, the representative of six railroads at New Orleans, and the president of the Southern Bridge and Railroad Company while the charter was being obtained for a railroad bridge over the Mississippi; it was (by previous agreement among the directors of the companies) then transferred to the railroad interests. That was the object of getting the charter. I resigned my position as president and was reelected chief engineer, and Mr. Huntington was elected president. Those are my relations with him. Of course I was very glad, on account of these relations, to do anything which I could properly do that Mr. Huntington requested.

Mr. President, what justification is there for the assertion that this was an official investigation? I appeal not only to lawyers, but to those used to analyzing human statements and to determining the candor or want of candor of individual declaration, and I ask, Does any man believe that the person who thus addresses this communication to me and other Senators is any more than the employee of the interest in this case, which is making this determined contest for personal profit? Is there any question about it? Official position! Who conferred it? I repudiate, deny, and controvert the assertion that the Committee on Commerce ever authorized this man to make any investigation. They never did.

Does anyone suppose that in the year 1894 I, conscious of this man's relation to an interested party, ever would have consented to or permitted without emphatic demurrer his appointment in any such confidential place? Does anyone believe that I would have been willing to intrust my constituents' interests to one whom I knew was in the pay of a person toward whom my constituents occupied an antagonistic relation? Senators, indeed, might, if they chose, ask Cortell to make the investigation. That was their individual affair. He was first asked by Mr. Huntington. Mr. Huntington had a right to ask him. It was Mr. Huntington's affair properly to examine into the case and to employ the most skilled men he could obtain. Mr. Cortell is a very able and skillful engineer, and for years, as his testimony shows, he has been associated with Mr. Huntington. He went out to my State and he made this inspection, and his expenses were paid by Mr. Huntington. I should have had a great deal more regard for Mr. Cortell if he had come out, like expert witnesses who are candid ought always to come out, and said: "Yes, I was employed and well paid for the work I did; it is good work, and I will stand by it and demonstrate that I am right." There would have been something about that which would have commended the man's utterances to me. But he has evaded the whole story.

Mr. President, it would have been singular had this man been sent to California officially to inspect a public improvement by gentlemen who were authorized themselves to act in committee upon that subject, without any record in their committee that it was so done. There never was any such appointment. There never was any such authority. I have resided for half of my life, for all my manhood's days, in the county of Los Angeles, where this improvement is intended to be made. I know its people pretty well. I know the surroundings of the case pretty well. My associate has lived upon that coast since 1855. He possesses technical and nautical knowledge regarding it which no other man here enjoys. This he has learned in the course of his business. The Representative of that district, fresh from the people, lives in the city of Los Angeles. Ought not we know perhaps something about it? Were we not worthy of consultation? There is an alleged public officer, a man who professes to be an employee of the Government, who talks about his official communication, who visits our home and determines the merits of our arguments without even identifying himself. Mr. President, his investigation was uninvited by any committee, unsanctioned by any law. He was Mr. Huntington's agent then as he is now.

Mr. President, in so far as his statements disclose facts supported by reason so far as those statements valuable. In so far as he attempts to put himself in a situation of impartiality and fairness his efforts must prove unavailing. He is worthy of credit, as I say, as far as he is supported, but he is not entitled to that degree of confidence pertaining to an impartial man who, in the discharge of a public function, knows no master save his conscience, and does nothing merely to win individual monetary emolument. The one is ruled by a lofty sense of duty to his country, the other toils for the commendations of selfishness.

Therefore, Mr. President, we must proceed to examine such arguments as are adduced in support of these propositions upon their merits, without supposing that there is any official sanction for the report of the committee beyond that sanction which follows from our acts as Senators. It has been shown that the committee has had the regular reports of two boards of engineers; that their reports have been adverse to Santa Monica; that those politically authorized are similarly minded. Here I pause. I do not contend that any Senator or Representative has an absolute right to dictate to a committee where public funds shall be expended. As a member of the Commerce Committee I am only entitled to vote once—to vote my own notions—and I have no right to register the judgment of any other member. At the same time, perhaps, the custom which has grown up because of the teachings of experience is not a bad one—to pay some little respect to recommendations and representations of those who speak within this Chamber of the necessities of their homes.

But what is there before this body to offset the official disapproval from these two boards concurred in by General Casey—distinguished boards, as I have said—one presided over by the present General of the Engineer Corps? Is there anything official to cancel this disapprobation? I have disposed of the claim that Mr. Cortell represents anybody officially, unless it be the railroad company. Mr. Hood, an able engineer, gives his views. He is the chief engineer, and an exceedingly good one, of the Southern Pacific Company. We have his evidence.

Mr. President, we have cast aside the reports of our engineers, and of the Chief of Engineers, and the views of those locally interested, and we have adopted the conclusions of those who are personally, individually, and financially interested. We have refused to appropriate the public money and place it where it is said by impartial and competent Government officers its disbursement would be of use to the public, and we have taken it and placed it where these officers have said it should not be expended. Perhaps we are right, perhaps the committee is right; but let it be plainly shown before we act affirmatively; let it appear most clearly that the committee is obviously right. No dubious evidence will suffice to justify such a singular course.

Mr. GRAY. Let me ask the Senator if there is no recommendation of the board of engineers or other Government authority in favor of the appropriation for Santa Monica?

Mr. WHITE. None on earth. Not only that, but it is sought to appropriate $3,098,000 for this improvement, when there is no official estimate of the cost of that improvement or recommendation for it.

This is not a case, Mr. President, where a Senator rises from his seat and says, "Here is something of necessity, here is something about which I know everything," and there is no dispute, and he is asked, "Have you a recommendation?" "No; there is no recommendation, but I am cognizant of the facts; they are so and so." The Senate sometimes, in such cases where the amount is small, takes the risk and perhaps makes the appropriation. But the present is an instance where there is negation. This is a case where the authorities to whom we have committed this matter, in an advisory sense it is true, but to whom nevertheless we have committed this matter, have reported adversely. We are to make this enormous expenditure, not only without their recommendation, but in the face of their condemnation.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I only wish to ask a question; I know nothing about the matter and I have not heard all the debate. Is it a fact that two boards of United States engineers, acting under oath, have reported against the appropriation recommended by the committee?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it a fact that both the Senators from California and the Representative in the other House of Congress from that district are against the appropriation?

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it a fact that there is no other evidence upon which the Senate is asked to act except the statement of two men who are in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company?

Mr. WHITE. To be fair, I would say there is other evidence. There are gentlemen who testified before the committee; and, in addition to that, there is the personal knowledge, or whatever it may be, of those who have seen the locality, and who, upon that, have formed their views.

Mr. GEORGE. I mean any professional, any engineer reports?

Mr. WHITE. No, sir. I will say, however, that there are gentlemen upon the committee who have seen this location, notably the distinguished chairman, who has examined it personally, and who has reached a conclusion as the result of his examination. There are other members of the committee who are also familiar with it, very familiar with it. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is very familiar with it, knows the ground thoroughly, and has for many years known it.

Mr. BATE. I should like to ask the Senator one further question, which I believe the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] did not ask.

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. BATE. Is it or is it not a fact that all the boards and commercial organizations in the city of Los Angeles, which is tributary to this place, have decided in favor of San Pedro?

Mr. WHITE. The principal commercial board of the city of Los Angeles is the Chamber of Commerce. This board comprises within its membership most of the more prominent business men of that city. In 1894 the Chamber of Commerce of Los Angeles had a meeting and determined that its members should vote upon this subject, which they did, deciding by a large majority in favor of San Pedro. If the Senator from Tennessee will consult page 80 of the hearings he will find there an elaborate dispatch signed by men whom I consider to be representative business men of the city of Los Angeles, also in favor of San Pedro.

Mr. President, I dislike to go on further with this subject now. I will state the reason. I have been suffering from a severe cold for three or four days, and I feel the effects of it somewhat. I shall go on and finish in the morning. I should prefer to proceed now if I were physically able, but in my present condition I do not like to risk going on further to-night.

Mr. HARRIS. In view of the suggestion of the Senator from California, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, May 9, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 8, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A bill (S. 122) granting an increase of pension to Jerusha Sturgis, widow of Brig. Gen. Samuel D. Sturgis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 527) for the relief of Margaret C. McKay, widow of the late Dr. William C. McKay, of Oregon—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1883) to grant a pension to Charlotte O. Van Cleve, widow of Gen. Horatio P. Van Cleve—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2729) granting a pension to Emma Weir Casey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

GAS AND NAPHTHA LAUNCHES.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1646) providing for certain requirements for vessels propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, etc.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARDNER. I object.

TITLE TO CERTAIN LANDS.

Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1436) to quiet title to lands in persons who purchased the same in good faith without notice and for a valuable consideration, and to enable the Government to issue patents on such lands, and that commutations of homestead entries shall take effect from date of settlement and not from date of entry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever it shall appear to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that an error has been made by the officers of any local land office in receiving premature commutation proofs under the homestead laws, and that there was no fraud practiced by the entryman in making such proofs, and final payment has been made and a final certificate of entry has been issued to the entryman, and that there were no adverse claimants to the land described in the certificates of entry whose rights originated prior to making such final proofs, such certificates of entry shall be in all things confirmed to the entryman, his heirs, legal representatives, assigns, grantees, mortgagees, and a patent issue thereon.

SEC. 2. That all commutations of homestead entries shall be allowed after the expiration of fourteen months from date of settlement.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear the gentleman who presents this bill explain the effect of the second section.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill the object of which is to quiet the title to certain lands which title has been rendered obscure by mistakes made in some of the land offices. The bill has received the warm approval of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and as the report is brief and explains the matter very fully, I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. BARNEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1436) entitled "A bill to quiet the title to lands," etc., beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass with certain amendments hereinafter suggested.

Prior to March 3, 1891, commutation of a homestead entry could be made at any time after the expiration of six months from the date of settlement. At that time the law was changed, extending the time of settlement to fourteen months. Notwithstanding this change in the law many of the local land offices have permitted commutation to be made at the end of six months from the date of filing or settlement, if made before that time and the filing afterwards, and have given a duplicate certificate of entry, which in most States is an evidence of title; and upon these evidences of title much land has been conveyed to innocent purchasers, land has been mortgaged, and timber sold and taken away. These purchasers have relied upon the title as conveyed by the United States, as it would seem they ought to be protected in doing. A late decision of the Interior Department holds that many of these commutations at the end of six months are invalid and that such entries are subject to cancellation; and many cases are now pending before that Department where an enforcement of this rule would work great hardship to innocent parties who have relied upon the certificate of some of the officers of the Government.

In order that the act may not seem to excuse such mistakes hereafter, and at the suggestion of the Land Commissioner, the committee recommend that it only apply to previous errors, which is done by inserting the word "heretofore" before the word "been" in the fourth line of the first section. For the purpose also of making it absolutely certain that it will have no application to cases where a homestead entry has been abandoned and subsequently taken by innocent parties, the committee also recommend that the following provision be added to the first section of the bill:

Provided, That this act shall not apply to commutation and homestead entries on which final certificates have been issued, and which have heretofore been canceled, when the lands made vacant by such cancellation have been reentered under the homestead act."

The following are the reports of the Land Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior on the bill:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Washington, January 30, 1896.

"SIR: I have the honor to hand you herewith a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office on H. R. 1436, 'to quiet title to lands in persons who purchased the same in good faith without notice and for a valuable consideration, and to enable the Government to issue patents on such lands, and that commutations of homestead entries shall take effect from the date of settlement and not from the date of entry.'

"The report of the Commissioner sets forth in detail the various acts applying to the right of commutation of entries, and he reaches the conclusion that inasmuch as the bill would render the period of commutation and the right thereto uniform, he sees no objection to the passage of the bill if the first section be amended by inserting the word 'heretofore,' after the word 'been,' in line 4 of the bill.

"I concur with the Commissioner in the recommendation that the bill should pass, because of its remedial character and the fact that it would render the period of commutation uniform, but I do not see the necessity of the amendment suggested. I believe that the bill should apply to entries that may occur after its passage as well as those that have been made heretofore; hence the recommendation that the bill in its present form be passed, although I submit herewith for your consideration the Commissioner's report thereon.

"Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

"Hon. JOHN F. LACEY,

Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,

House of Representatives."

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1896.

"SIR: I am in receipt, by reference from the Department, January 20, 1896, for report in duplicate and return of papers, of H. R. 1436, 'to quiet title to lands in persons who purchased the same in good faith without notice and for a valuable consideration, and to enable the Government to issue patents on such lands, and that commutations of homestead entries shall take effect from date of settlement and not from date of entry,' which was referred to the Department by Hon. JOHN F. LACEY, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, United States House of Representatives, with request for suggestions from you to assist the Committee on the Public Lands in its consideration.

"The bill provides:

"That whenever it shall appear to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that an error has been made by the officers of any local land office in receiving premature commutation proofs under the homestead laws, and that there was no fraud practiced by the entryman in making such proofs, and final payment has been made and a final certificate of entry has been issued to the entryman, and that there were no adverse claimants to the land described in the certificates of entry whose rights originated prior to making such final proofs, such certificates of entry shall be in all things conformed to the entryman, his heirs, legal representatives, assigns, grantees, mortgagees, and a patent issue thereon.

"SEC. 2. That all commutations of homestead entries shall be allowed after the expiration of fourteen months from date of settlement.

"SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval."

"In reply I have the honor to report that on January 14, 1895, I made report on a bill similar to the first section of this, but restricted in its application to lands in Wisconsin restored under the act of June 20, 1890 (26 Stat. L., 169), commonly known as reservoir lands, and to cases in which the land had been sold or encumbered in good faith after issue of final certificate to a bona fide purchaser or incumbrancer for a valuable consideration, on presentation to the land office of satisfactory proof of such sale or incumbrance.

"This bill is broader in its terms and proposes to confirm all certificates issued by error of the local officers on premature commutation proof, whether in the hands of the original entryman or of the purchaser; however, as it is of a remedial nature, I think the word 'heretofore' should be inserted after 'been' in line 4. After the bill is so amended, I see no objection to the first section thereof.

"In regard to the second section, it is proper to state that by section 2301, United States Revised Statutes, homestead claimants were allowed to commute on making proof of settlement and cultivation as provided by law granting preemption rights.

"By section 21, act of May 2, 1890 (26 Stat. L., 81), settlers in (old) Oklahoma were allowed to pay for the land at $1.25 per acre and receive a patent after twelve months from the date of locating upon the homestead, on showing compliance with all the laws relating to homestead settlement.

"By section 6, act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 1095), section 2301, Revised Statutes, was amended so as to allow commutation on proof of settlement, residence, and cultivation for the period of fourteen months after the date of the entry.

"By section 2 of the act of October 20, 1893 (28 Stat. L., 3), settlers upon the Absentee Shawnee, Pottawatomie, and Cheyenne and Arapahoe lands were allowed to pay for the land at $1.50 per acre, and settlers on the public-land strip at $1.25 per acre, and obtain a patent therefor, by showing a compliance with all the laws relating to homestead settlement to date of proof, at the expiration of twelve months from the date of locating upon the homestead.

"By section 19, act of August 15, 1894 (28 Stat. L., 286), the right of commutation was extended to all bona fide settlers on lands in the Cherokee Outlet after fourteen months from date of settlement upon full payment for the lands at the prices provided in said act.

"As by said second section the period of commutation is rendered uniform, I see no objection to the passage of the bill after the first section is amended.

"On December 17, 1895, this office forwarded to the Department a draft of a bill to amend section 2301, United States Revised Statutes, so as to allow commutation in fourteen months from date of settlement.

"The third and fourth sections of the bill seem to require no comment. There is, therefore, no objection to the bill if amended as suggested, and the same is herewith returned.

"Very respectfully,

E. F. BEST, Acting Commissioner.

"The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR."

The amendments recommended in the report were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEWART of Wisconsin a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARREDONDO GRANT, FLORIDA.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4255) to provide for settlement of titles and disposition of public lands in the Arredondo grant, in Columbia County, Fla.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope the gentleman will explain the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this bill covers about 20,000 acres in one of the oldest settled agricultural portions of the State of Florida. This land was opened and offered as United States land on May 26, 1828, and again on July 25, 1835. The county seat of Columbia County, Lake City, a town of three or four thousand inhabitants, is on this land, and nearly all the land comprised in the tract is in settled and cultivated farms which have been held under the color of title from the United States, or through grants from the United States, for two or three generations. In 1882 there was a decree in the United States court which finally settled that there was a valid Spanish grant supposed to cover these lands. The grant had never been definitely surveyed. By decree of the United States court, under a statute, that grant was floated for scrip, and the claim of the Spanish grantees has been wholly removed. The titles affected by the bill are none of them the titles of squatters. They are the titles of actual purchasers under title or color of title derived from the United States or through the United States. The bill has been carefully drawn and is carefully guarded. It has been reported unanimously by the Public Lands Committee, and the Interior Department has stated that there is no objection to it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed 10,000 copies of the report made by Messrs. Ludlow, Endicott, and Noble, of date October 31, 1895, upon the Nicaragua Canal, together with all the appendixes, maps, plans, and profiles accompanying the same, as submitted by them, 6,000 of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 4,000 for the use of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved. That the Secretary be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2501) for the relief of James Sims, of Marshall County, Miss.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1743) for the relief of the widow of Thomas L. Young; and

A bill (H. R. 6) constituting Syracuse, N. Y., a port of delivery.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2962) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims in the case of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South against the United States; and

A bill (S. 2488) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Denison and Northern Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 6248) "making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes," and still further insists upon its amendments numbered 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 19, 22, 23, 36, 37, 38, 83, 108, 109, 142, 144, 233, 305, 306, 307, 309, 310, 313, and 314, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CULLOM, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT POINT BONITA, CAL.

* Mr. BARHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1982) to provide for a life-saving station at or near Point Bonita, at the Golden Gate, in the State of California.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be established a life-saving station at or near Point Bonita, at the Golden Gate, in the State of California; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby required to provide for such establishment and supply the same with the necessary life-saving crew and furnishings as provided by law in like cases.

Amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Line 3, strike out the words "there be established" and insert "the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to establish." Strike out all after the word "California," in line 6.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Without objecting, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say with reference to this bill that the amendments proposed, which are proper, make the bill simply authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to establish this life-saving station. This leaves the Secretary of the Treasury to establish life-saving stations at any authorized point that the Department may deem proper, and there is a general appropriation made in the sundry civil bill for that purpose. Therefore the passage of bills of this character does not by any means bind the Department. There is no objection to these bills, as they contain no appropriation.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMERICAN CATTLE IMPORTED INTO GREAT BRITAIN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STAHL] on a privileged matter.

Mr. STAHL. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture to report back favorably the resolution which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the House of Representatives what, if anything, has been done by the State Department to carry out the following provisions of the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the year 1896, approved March 2, 1895, to wit: "That the President of the United States be requested to cause correspondence and negotiation to be had, through the Department of State or otherwise, with the authorities of the Kingdom of Great Britain, for the purpose of securing the abrogation or modification of the regulations now enforced by said authorities which require cattle imported into Great Britain from the United States of America to be slaughtered at the port of entry, and prohibiting the same from being carried alive to other places in said Kingdom."

And he is also requested to communicate to the House of Representatives all information which has been received by the State Department in regard to said matter.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. What committee reports this resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Agriculture. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. I should like to hear some statement in regard to the resolution.

Mr. STAHL. The Committee on Agriculture had this resolution before them this morning and unanimously directed that it be reported in the shape just read. It simply proposes to inquire what action has been taken in reference to carrying into effect a provision of law adopted last winter. The inquiry has relation to a regulation of the British Government requiring that all cattle from the United States be slaughtered at the port of entry, and not taken alive into that Kingdom. We seek to obtain by this resolution whatever information may be accessible on this subject.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Has the resolution been recommended by the Committee on Agriculture unanimously?

Mr. STAHL. Yes, sir.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. STAHL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, PORT HURON, MICH.

Mr. SNOVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8200) to establish a life-saving station at Port Huron, on the coast of Lake Huron, Michigan.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to establish a life-saving station on the light-house reservation belonging to the United States at Port Huron, on the coast of Lake Huron, in the State of Michigan.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has this bill been favorably reported by a committee?

Mr. SNOVER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. It simply authorizes the establishment of this life-saving station; it is not peremptory, as I understand.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest that the title of the bill be amended by striking out the word "establish" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "authorize the establishment of."

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the title will be amended as indicated by the gentleman from Maine.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. SNOVER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 777) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to furnish condemned cannon to Fort Thomas, Ky.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish to Fort Thomas, Ky., 20 pieces of condemned cannon for ornamental purposes.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, That in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy such articles can be spared without detriment to the public interests: And provided further, That the United States shall not be subjected to any expense on account of such donation."

Mr. TALBERT. I do not wish to raise any objection to this bill, but I understand that the supply of condemned cannon has been exhausted.

Mr. BERRY. This bill will take effect only in the event that there are any of these cannon subject to such disposition. I desire to move an amendment to reduce the number of pieces of cannon from 20 to 10.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BERRY].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 of the bill, strike out "20" and insert "10"; so as to read "10 pieces of condemned cannon for ornamental purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. I also move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the words "And provided further, That the United States shall not be subjected to any expense on account of such donation."

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the effect of this amendment?

Mr. BERRY. The amendment of the committee proposes to add to the bill a provision that no expense shall be incurred by the United States Government for the transportation of these cannon from the navy-yard to Newport, Ky., where, or near which, Fort Thomas is located.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it proposed to put the Government to the expense of transportation?

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir; we believe that the transportation of these ten pieces of cannon ought to be paid for by the Government.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think that has not been usual in cases of this kind.

Mr. BERRY. Perhaps the gentleman does not understand the circumstances. Fort Thomas is a military post of the United States. The proposition is that these pieces of cannon be transferred from one of our navy-yards to a regular military post of the United States, and, I will add, one of the handsomest in the country.

Mr. DINGLEY. Are there any condemned cannon at the disposition of the Government for this purpose?

Mr. BERRY. There are.

Mr. DINGLEY. Are they to be used simply for decorative purposes?

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir; for decorative purposes at the military post. Fort Thomas, one of the handsomest posts in the United States and only about three miles and a half from Cincinnati, is now occupied by the Sixth Infantry, having eight companies and a splendid band of music.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Have we made any appropriation for the manufacture of any condemned cannon? [Laughter.]

Mr. BERRY. I do not think we have; and I do not think we are likely to do so. The object of this bill is simply to transport these condemned cannon from the Charlestown Navy-Yard to Fort Thomas. The expense of transporting them may be $35 or $40. I do not know who is to pay for it, unless the Government does so.

Mr. DINGLEY. Are there not some condemned cannon there now?

Mr. BERRY. No, sir; this is an entirely new post, and is one of the handsomest in the country.

Mr. BROSIUS. Let me ask the gentleman this question: If the War Department desires to decorate and ornament—

Mr. BERRY. They have no means of doing so without some such authorization as this.

Mr. BROSIUS. Let me complete my inquiry. I say if the Department desires to decorate any post in this way, can it not be done by the War Department without a special act of Congress?

Mr. BERRY. I do not know, sir; but as a matter of fact the Army has no condemned cannon of its own. All the condemned cannon we have are in the hands of the Navy Department, and we only want authority here to allow the Department of War to transport, from some convenient point where these cannon are stored, the pieces of cannon specified in the bill for this post.

Mr. DINGLEY. Where is this post?

Mr. BERRY. It is about three and a half miles from Cincinnati, across the river on the Kentucky side, and is known as Fort Thomas. It is now occupied by the Sixth Infantry, a full regiment, with a band, and is under command of Colonel Cochran.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it not practically a park which is used for pleasure purposes near some city?

Mr. BERRY. Oh, no; it belongs to the Government of the United States. It is a military post, and is occupied, as I have said, by the Sixth Infantry. While it is near the city of Cincinnati, and many visit it for pleasure, it belongs to the Government.

Mr. BROSIUS. A regimental post?

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir; and occupied by the regiment I have named. It is, let me state, perhaps the prettiest location for a military post in the United States, excepting possibly West Point.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the necessity for the passage of this bill?

Mr. BERRY. Simply because the War Department has no condemned cannon, while the Navy has. We ask authority on behalf of this post to be permitted to obtain, through the War Department from the Navy Department, the ten pieces of cannon to be used for ornamental purposes around the ground.

Mr. DINGLEY. But could not the War Department, out of their own appropriations, defray the expenses of the transportation of these guns?

Mr. BERRY. Well, they might, but the committee has put in a provision, as the gentleman will see, that the transportation of the pieces shall not cost the Government of the United States anything.

Mr. DINGLEY. And you propose that the Government shall pay the expense?

Mr. BERRY. Yes, sir; the Government of the United States owns the property, and I am informed by General Batchelder, the Quartermaster-General, that he can provide the transportation for the guns if this provision that I have referred to is stricken out of the bill and the amendment incorporated. If the bill was passed in the form in which it came before the House the Department would not have the power to transport these guns.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BERRY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COURTS IN ROCKINGHAM COUNTY, VA.

Mr. TURNER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 174, granting permission to the circuit and county courts in Rockingham County, Va., to occupy the Federal court room in Harrisonburg, Va.

The bill was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That full permission be, and the same is hereby, granted to the State of Virginia, and to the circuit and county courts of Rockingham County, in said State, to occupy the United States court room and the rooms connected therewith at Harrisonburg, in said county of Rockingham, in Virginia, for and during the period necessary for said county of Rockingham to erect a new court-house of its own in said town of Harrisonburg, for the purpose of holding the sessions of said circuit and county courts of Rockingham County in said United States court room for the period named therein; and that during said period concurrent jurisdiction, so far as is necessary, over said property be, and the same is hereby, ceded to the State of Virginia for said purposes, so that the sessions of said courts in said building and rooms may be, during said period, fully legalized: Provided, That said rooms shall be kept in good repair at the expense of the State of Virginia, and the board of supervisors of said county of Rockingham, in Virginia, shall further provide necessary light and heat for said rooms at their own expense when occupied by said courts; and at the end of the period herein provided for, the use of said rooms shall be relinquished to the United States by the said State of Virginia and said courts of Rockingham County in as good condition as before their occupancy by said court: Provided further, That the sessions of said courts shall in no way interfere with the sessions of the circuit and district courts of the United States.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill seems to grant—

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. I will reserve the right to object until we know more about it. I think it needs an amendment. This seems to be a bill authorizing a State court of Virginia, or a county court, to occupy the rooms of a Government building while the county is building a court-house, but there is no limit to the time.

Mr. TURNER of Virginia. There is an amendment agreed to by the committee limiting the time to three years.

Mr. DINGLEY. I should like to know if this is a case where the county court-house has been burned?

Mr. TURNER of Virginia. No; it is about to fall down. They have to tear it down. They are building a new court-house. This is a copy of a bill passed here for a Pennsylvania court.

Mr. DINGLEY. I know it is, and it is a bad practice. The idea of the Government of the United States—

Mr. TURNER of Virginia. I would state, sir, that the Federal Government for years used the State court-house in that same town.

Mr. DINGLEY. That was undoubtedly when they wanted to obtain a Federal court. If the limitation of three years is there, I shall have no objection to it, although I think the practice is a bad one.

Mr. TURNER of Virginia. That limit has been put on by the committee, and it is a unanimous report.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, is there an amendment limiting it to three years?

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 13, after the word "therein," insert the words "which period shall not exceed three years."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TURNER of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO CIVIL-SERVICE LAWS.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7259) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883.

The bill was read. It provides that any member of the Commission or the secretary of the Commission, in the course of any investigation herein authorized, shall have authority to administer oaths, take affidavits and depositions, orally examine witnesses, and when deemed necessary by the Commission employ a stenographer, etc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, pending an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to enable the Civil Service Commissioners to administer oaths in cases in which the law of 1883 authorized them to institute and conduct investigations. That permission was omitted from the law, and the Commission have been subjected to very great inconvenience by not having the power to administer oaths. They have had difficulty in producing witnesses before them, because in many instances witnesses have come with great reluctance, and there is no power to compel them to come. All the Commission could do was to secure the voluntary affidavits of persons who were willing to make them. In all the States, I believe, in which the—

Mr. HOPKINS. Will this bill clothe them with the power to compel you and me, and anybody else that they subpoena, to come up and be subjected to an examination?

Mr. BROSIUS. It gives them the power to subpoena witnesses in all cases where they are authorized to investigate.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BROSIUS. Let me say a word.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have heard enough, so that my mind is made up. I think this is a bill that ought not to pass by unanimous consent. It ought to be taken up and carefully considered. Therefore I object to its consideration at this time.

DEPORTATION OF CANADIAN CREE INDIANS.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to report and to obtain present consideration for the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8830) making provision for the deportation of refugee Canadian Cree Indians from the State of Montana, and their delivery to the Canadian authorities.

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available, to enable the President, by employment of the Army, or otherwise, to deport from the State of Montana and deliver at the international boundary line to the Canadian authorities all refugee Canadian Cree Indians in said State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a single word. This is a matter that is not reported from the Committee on Appropriations, nor has the bill been introduced. It seems to be important and immediate. Senate Document No. 821 shows the importance of it. It covers a report from Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, containing a communication from the Secretary of State, by which it appears that the Canadian authorities agree, if these Indians can be delivered at once, to accept them at the boundary line. There are said to be about 500 of them. They are Canadian Indians, and they have been vagabondizing over in our territory since the close of the Riel rebellion. I ask for the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SECTION 2238 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 4804, with Senate amendments, and to move to concur in the amendments. The bill is upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order, a House bill with Senate amendments.

Mr. LACEY. We have not reached the regular order; but I would like to dispose of that, in connection with another Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill and then the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4804) to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and to repeal subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read at length.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out all of section 2, and amend the title so as to read "An act to amend subdivision 10 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States."

Mr. LACEY. I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

H. C. HERNDON.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3787) for the relief of H. C. Herndon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $204.30 to H. C. Herndon, of Catlettsburg, Ky., for the loss of a registered package containing said sum which he placed in the post-office at Webbville, Ky., as deputy collector of internal revenue, on November 24, 1892, addressed to Thomas C. McDowell, collector for fifth internal-revenue district of Kentucky, and which sum was stolen from said post-office on the night of the 24th of November, 1892, and the said Herndon was compelled to pay the said collector the said sum.

Mr. PUGH. I will ask unanimous consent to have a change made in the eleventh line by striking out the word "fifth" and substituting the word "seventh" in lieu thereof; so as to read: "Collector for seventh internal-revenue district of Kentucky."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some explanation of the bill or the reading of the report or something of the kind.

Mr. PUGH. I will state that this is simply a bill to reimburse Mr. H. C. Herndon, formerly a deputy of Mr. H. C. McDowell, collector for Seventh internal-revenue district of Kentucky, the sum of $204.30, which was stolen from the United States mail after it had been deposited in a registered package by him, acting under the express authority and direction of his superior officer, in transmitting the money after it had been collected from fruit distillers in the northeastern part of the State, and which amount he was compelled to pay over and make good to the collector, although it was lost in the hands of the agents of the Government without his fault. The matter was investigated by a special examiner sent there by the Post-Office Department, and the Committee on Claims have reported the bill, and were unanimously in favor of it, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cox], a member of that committee, will explain.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I will have to have the report read. It is very strange that the postal authorities should not be liable for this amount if it came into their possession.

Mr. PUGH. The report is very short, and I will have it read.

Mr. LOUD. Reserving the right to object, I will have the report read.

The report (by Mr. COLSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3787) for the relief of H. C. Herndon, submit the following report:

The object of this measure is to refund to H. C. Herndon, of Catlettsburg, Ky., the sum of $204.30, which amount he, while in the Government employ as deputy collector of internal revenue, was required to and did pay and make good to his superior officer, the Hon. Thomas C. McDowell, at the time collector for the Seventh district of Kentucky, the same having been lost or stolen in a registered mail package under the following circumstances: Said money had been collected by said Herndon from fruit distillers in Lawrence County, Ky., and was for tax on brandy produced by them; said deputy was required to transmit promptly all funds collected by him to his said superior officer; there was no other means of transmission in that vicinity usually employed, saving by mail, and, acting under express authority and instructions of the said collector, Herndon deposited said sum of money in a registered letter at the post-office at Webbville, in that county, and received registry receipt No. 21 from B. C. Irwin, the postmaster, therefor.

Before the next outgoing mail and on the night of November 24, 1892, the said post-office at Webbville was broken into by unknown persons, the safe broken open, and all the contents of value, including the said registered letter containing $204.30, were stolen and carried away and never thereafter recovered. The proof is clear that the loss was occasioned without any fault or default on the part of Herndon, he having promptly acted under explicit directions in transmitting said money by registered letter, and to make him personally sustain the loss under such circumstances would be a hardship not to be sanctioned by equity or good conscience or that would be required in the dealings of individuals. The Government can afford to be at least just to its citizens.

Your committee have given the matter careful consideration, and have arrived at the conclusion that the claim is just and ought to be paid, and therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. LOUD. Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems very strange to me that the post-office authorities are not liable after giving a receipt for it. There seems to be no evidence in this case except a summary of his statement. If my friend from Tennessee knows anything about this case, I wish, as he has been pointed to, he would explain it.

Mr. COX. I understand the facts tolerably well, Mr. Speaker, as I try to understand all these claims that come from that committee. Here is an officer that collected money, and he was directed to transmit the money through the mails. That was the only way that he could send it. He went and put the money into the mail and registered the letter. He took the certificate of registration, and he had no connection whatever with the post-office. After he put the money into the mail it was stolen out of the office; and the only question in the matter is, Ought he to pay the money or the Government to lose it?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This was Government money that he had received?

Mr. PUGH. Yes; and after he collected it and placed it in the hands of the agents of the Government, the post-office authorities, the post-office was robbed and the package containing this money stolen, and the Government officer to whom he transmitted it required him to refund.

Mr. COX. That was the mode of transmitting it to the proper officer, as a credit to him. You will find that there is no fault attributed to this man.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. He transmitted it to the collector, did he?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. How did the collector require him to refund it?

Mr. COX. He just thought he ought to refund it, and, regardless of any kind of consequences, he paid the money back.

Mr. PUGH. He did it under the instructions of the collector. The collector required it at his hands, and he had to do it or be discharged. I submit that it would be a gross injustice to require him to lose it under such circumstances. He was a faithful officer.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Is there not a fund out of which moneys lost while in transit from a subagent can be paid?

Mr. PUGH. There is no fund whatever, and no provision for payment by the Post-Office Department. This is the only means of relief.

Mr. COX. That is what brings the bill here.

Mr. LOUD. Now, I am very much astonished that the gentleman from Tennessee, who is familiar with the law, should make a statement of that character or place much faith in it. If this money has been deposited in the post-office once and a certificate taken, surely the postmaster is responsible.

Mr. COX. No.

Mr. LOUD. I say yes. The gentleman says no, and I say yes, most emphatically, Mr. Speaker; and I should not be surprised if I remain in Congress long enough to find that this same $200 will come back here again in a bill to reimburse the postmaster of this place. Now, then, if the robbery was committed, the Post-Office Department is competent to require the postmaster to reimburse it. This is a very small sum and I do not know but what I could afford to pay it; but it is a most dangerous precedent.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's remark has run off on a switch. This is not a question with the postmaster; it is a question with this man who registered the money and put it in the post-office to send it to his superior officer. They made him pay the money although it was lost without any fault of his. Now, whatever may be the law in regard to the liability of the postmaster, that is a totally different thing. If the Government gets it back out of the postmaster, they have lost nothing.

Mr. LOUD. The Government will have no opportunity of getting it back, but they will make an allowance in the case. I would like to ask the gentleman what the Department say regarding this matter, and what the evidence in the case is.

Mr. COX. I shall be glad to have the statement of the Department read. It exonerates this man from blame entirely.

Mr. PUGH. The Department officers all say that it is only doing simple justice to refund this money and that the passage of this bill is this man's only remedy. The amount may seem small to some gentlemen, but if it be just—and it unquestionably is—in all good conscience it should be paid, regardless of the amount. This Government can certainly afford to pay its debts.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I shall not object, but I do not think this bill ought to pass.

An amendment offered by Mr. PUGH, striking out "Fifth," in line 11, and inserting "Seventh," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PUGH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7381) directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and cannon balls to Soldiers and Sailors' Monument Association of the city of Middletown, N. Y.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the city of Middletown, N. Y., for the soldiers and sailors' monument in Theall Park, one condemned cannon and balls sufficient for one pyramid: Provided, That the same can be done without injury to the public service and without any expense to the Government of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ODELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

KATE EBERLE.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 485) for the relief of Kate Eberle, an Indian woman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to pay to the said Kate Eberle, her heirs and representatives, the sum of $672.08 out of the trust fund held and credited by the Government to that tribe of Indians, the same being the approximately estimated cash value rightfully due the said Kate Eberle instead of her pro rata share of the provision in land or otherwise made by the Government according to said treaties, which would have accrued to her had she remained with the Sac tribe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois what is the amount involved?

Mr. HITT. Six hundred and seventy-two dollars and eight cents, to be paid out of the fund of these Indians.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has this bill been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. HITT. It is reported from that committee. The bill was passed at the last session in the House and in the Senate, but too late to reach the President for signature.

Mr. DINGLEY. And this tribe has funds which the Government holds as trustee?

Mr. HITT. Yes; the tribe has funds, and this woman is proven clearly to be one of the tribe.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this payment recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. HITT. The whole substance of the report is a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, giving the history of the case from the beginning, and fixing the amount.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

F. ALBERTS & CO.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5388) for the relief of F. Alberts & Co., of Muskegon, Mich.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $435.67 to F. Alberts & Co., of Muskegon, Mich., the same being to reimburse said firm for money wrongfully collected from them on a claim timber trespass, and paid under protest, for logs cut from lot 1, section 30, township 12 north, range 15 west, State of Michigan.

The report (by Mr. SNOVER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5388) for the relief of F. E. Alberts & Co., of Muskegon, Mich., have carefully considered the same and report as follows:

The facts in this case are fully and carefully set forth in a letter dated February 1, 1895, to the honorable Secretary of the Interior in response to a letter from Hon. T. C. McRAE, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives, transmitting for consideration a like bill, being House bill No. 8625, Fifty-third Congress, a copy of which letter is herewith given, and made a part of this report.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,

Washington, D. C., February 1, 1895.

"SIR: I am in receipt, by reference from the Department for report, of a letter, dated the 28th ultimo, from Hon. T. C. McRAE, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives, transmitting for consideration House bill No. 8625, 'For the relief of F. Alberts & Co.' and requesting 'an early report thereon with suggestions and recommendations in reference thereto as you may see proper to make.'

"The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $435.67 to F. Alberts & Co., of Muskegon, Mich., the same being to reimburse the said firm for money wrongfully collected from them for logs cut from lot 1, section 30, township 12 north, range 15 west, State of Michigan."

"The record of this timber-trespass case is set forth in the letter from this office to the Department, dated September 30, 1889 (copy inclosed), recommending that the proposition of Alberts Bros. to settle their liability to the Government by the payment of $435.67 be accepted. This recommendation was concurred in by the Department October 7, 1889 (copy of said letter herewith), and the records show that said sum of $435.67 was duly paid to the receiver of public moneys at Grayling, Mich.

"The land involved is covered by soldiers' additional homestead entry No. 8943, made by Edward Delaney, final certificate No. 6122, issuing March 24, 1887, Reed City series, now Grayling, Mich., land district.

"Delaney transferred the land to Oliver Barrett March 23, 1887, one day before the entry, and Barrett transferred to Frank Alberts & Co. March 2, 1888.

"The entry was held for cancellation by this office February 20, 1889, on the report of the special agent, on the ground that it was made in the interest of other parties than the entryman. The transferees having applied for a hearing, the same was ordered and duly had. Upon the evidence adduced thereat this office decided, June 14, 1890, that the entryman had not violated the statute under which his entry was made, and it was accordingly relieved from suspension. Patent issued thereon March 3, 1893.

"At the time Alberts & Co. cut this timber they were the transferees and equitable owners of the land. In holding them liable for the timber cut this office proceeded upon the theory that the entry having been attacked for illegality the timber cut became the personal property of the Government, and it was entitled to its value.

"In this case the innocence of any wrong on the part of Alberts & Co. was fully recognized, and their proposition to settle their liability at a small stumpage value was accordingly accepted.

"Inasmuch as the Government has failed to cancel the entry of Delaney, and as a patent has issued thereon, the legal title is now in Alberts & Co., if they are still the owners of the land. This title, so far as they are concerned, relates back to the date of their deed from Barrett, and they are in consequence entitled to the timber then growing as a part of the realty.

"Therefore, as the title has been confirmed, the timber for which the Government has received payment becomes the property of Alberts & Co., and they are entitled to the repayment of the money received therefor.

"I therefore recommend that said bill become a law.

"The papers referred to are herewith returned.

"Very respectfully,

"S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner."

In accordance with the recommendation of the Commissioner, your committee recommend that the bill be passed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BISHOP, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members addressed the Chair.

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

NORTHERN PACIFIC INDEMNITY LANDS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a privileged motion. The House has amended the Senate bill (S. 2221) for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands, and I desire to move that the House insist upon its amendments.

The bill and amendments were read.

Mr. LACEY. I move that the House insist upon its amendments to the Senate bill and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTRA HOUSE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred sundry resolutions, begs leave to report as follows:

The bill to repeal joint resolution No. 21, March 3, 1893, authorizing the employment of clerks by Members and Delegates in Congress, is returned without approval.

The resolution providing for increase of compensation of Harris A. Walters, now on the folders' roll in the Doorkeeper's department, from $720 per annum to $1,200 per annum, is disapproved.

The resolution providing for the employment of 10 additional pages during the present session of Congress is disapproved.

The resolution providing for the appointment of W. D. Catlett to have charge of the ladies' reception room, at a compensation of $1,200 per annum, is disapproved.

The resolution providing for the appointment of an additional clerk at a salary of $2,000 per annum, who shall be capable of reading to the House and who shall perform such other services as may be required under the direction of the Clerk, is herewith returned without approval.

The resolution providing for the payment of F. S. Bishop for services performed in the Clerk's document room from December 11, 1895, to February 4, 1896, of a sum at the rate of $1,440 per annum is disapproved, and in lieu thereof your committee recommends that an allowance of $120 be granted said Bishop for such services, and submits herewith a resolution to that effect.

The resolution authorizing the Clerk of the House to employ an assistant clerk in the document room at a salary of $1,200 per annum is disapproved, and in lieu thereof your committee recommends that the salary of W. P. Scott, now employed as assistant binding clerk in said room, be increased from $720 to $1,000 per annum while so employed, and submits herewith a resolution to that effect.

The resolution providing for the payment of $150 to J. A. Miller for services rendered as assistant clerk to Committee on Claims from February 15, 1896, to March 10, 1896, inclusive, is approved.

The resolution providing for the payment of $90 to Thomas Adams for services in the document room from March 4, 1895, to December 4, 1895, is approved.

The resolution directing the Clerk of the House to pay out of the contingent fund to the widow of Lycurgus Dalton, deceased, late Postmaster of the House, the expenses of his late illness and funeral, not to exceed the sum of $500, and a further sum equal to his salary for one year, is approved.

The resolution authorizing the Clerk of the House to pay out of the contingent fund to each Member and Delegate for annual clerk hire an amount not exceeding the sum of $100 per month, to be certified by them on the 1st day of each calendar month in the manner provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893, is herewith returned without recommendation.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund, to F. S. Bishop the sum of $120, for services performed in the Clerk's document room during the current session of Congress.

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund, to J. A. Miller the sum of $150, for services rendered as assistant clerk to the Committee on Claims from February 15, 1896, to March 10, 1896, inclusive.

"Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Thomas Adams, for services from March 4 to December 4, 1895, in the document room, $90, out of the contingent fund.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund, to the widow of Lycurgus Dalton, deceased, late postmaster of the House, a sum equal to his salary for one year and the expenses of his last illness and funeral, said expenses not to exceed the sum of $500.

Resolved, That the salary of W. P. Scott, detailed and employed in the document room on account of his qualifications for the place as assistant binding clerk, be, and is hereby, increased from $720 to $1,000 per annum while so employed, the excess over $720 per annum to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House; said increase to begin April 1, 1896."

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I move the adoption of the resolutions which have been read.

Mr. HARTMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. My understanding is that the Committee on Accounts reports back without recommendation the resolution authorizing annual clerks for members. The adoption of the present motion of the gentleman from Illinois will not, as I understand, prevent us afterwards from adopting the resolution to which I have just referred?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the question on the resolutions just read must first be taken, and after that the question would come up as to what should be done with the resolution on which they make no recommendation.

Mr. HARTMAN. When that time comes I desire to move the adoption of the resolution. Therefore I desire a separate vote upon it.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolutions as read.

Mr. DOCKERY. What are these resolutions?

The SPEAKER. A series of resolutions just reported by the Clerk. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] so desires, they can be reported again.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I ask that they be reported again.

Mr. PICKLER. I object. The rereading of all those resolutions will take fifteen minutes.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I withdraw my request. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. Unless a separate vote is demanded, the question will be taken upon these resolutions as a whole.

Mr. DOCKERY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have just come into the Hall, and I wish to inquire whether in the resolutions now pending there is any proposition proposing to allow annual clerk hire to members?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands not.

Mr. NORTHWAY. There is not. The resolution in regard to annual clerks is reported without any recommendation.

The question being taken, the resolutions reported favorably by the Committee on Accounts were adopted.

ANNUAL CLERKS FOR MEMBERS.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. As to the resolution last referred to in the report, the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], I am violating no confidence when I say—in fact, I am authorized by the committee to say—that the resolution providing for annual clerks for members was defeated in the committee by a tie vote; but upon further consideration it was agreed that it be reported back to the House without recommendation. In that form the resolution now comes up. As that resolution has not been read, I suggest that the Clerk now read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to each Member and Delegate for annual clerk hire an amount not exceeding the sum of $100 per month, to be certified by them on the first day of each calendar month in the manner provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this resolution I wish simply to say that it provides for an allowance of $100 per month for the entire year to each and every member of the House, including the 50 chairmen of committees who now have clerks. On the theory that we shall adjourn by the 1st of June, or thereabouts, it involves an expenditure of some $216,000 for the remainder of this year, or until the beginning of the next regular session of Congress.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is on the theory that every member will draw the full amount?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Yes; as my friend from Minnesota suggests, on the theory that every member will draw the full amount which would be authorized by the adoption of the resolution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before making the motion I shall make in a moment to lay this resolution on the table, I wish to say that it seems to me an inopportune time for the adoption of a resolution of this character. There is no disposition, so far as I know, on the part of any member of this House, or any member of the committee, to withhold from members of the House all the clerical assistance which they may need. But there is a fitting time for all things; and it does seem to me that the adoption of this resolution providing clerks for members during the coming vacation of Congress would be equivalent to authorizing an additional issue of bonds to the amount of $216,000.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. What will be the annual increase of compensation involved in this resolution?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. That would depend on the time when the vacation of Congress may begin; because under the existing system each member is allowed $100 a month during the sessions of Congress. Should Congress adjourn for the present session by the 1st of June, that would leave six months of vacation (until the first Monday of December next) during which this resolution would operate. And on the theory that every Member and Delegate will draw the full amount of his stipend under this resolution, it will make an expenditure of $216,000 for the remainder of the session.

Mr. COX. One question I would like to ask the gentleman, with his permission, to see if I understand exactly the point—I did not catch it clearly—and that is, whether the chairmen of committees are to be allowed, under this provision, annual clerks in addition to the clerks they are now allowed under the provisions heretofore adopted?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. In answer to the gentleman from Tennessee, I will state that there are 25 annual clerks of committees provided for by law, and in addition to that there are 25 session clerks, also provided for by resolution or otherwise. The 25 annual clerks draw a salary ranging from two thousand to three thousand five hundred dollars per annum, I think, and the session clerks have a compensation of $6 per day, amounting to $180 a month.

Mr. COX. Now, are all of these members of the House who are chairmen of committees, and who are entitled to the services of these annual clerks, to come within the provisions of the pending resolution if adopted?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Certainly. It applies to all the members, without reservation.

Mr. COX. And then are all of these clerks made annual by this provision?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. No; and in that connection let me state that in my judgment before such legislation as this is adopted there ought to be an adjustment of compensation allowed by law—the compensation to the session clerks as compared with the compensation to the committee clerks.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask the gentleman this question: This resolution covers the members who are chairmen of committees where these committees have session clerks?

Mr. COX. That is the point.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. It does. It provides that every Member and Delegate shall be entitled to the expenditure of this sum.

Mr. CANNON. But it does not cover, I take it, the members who are chairmen of committees where the committee clerks are annual.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Certainly it does. It makes no exception.

Mr. CANNON. Now, let us distinctly understand this. As I understand the answer of the gentleman from Illinois to the question, it is that as to these session clerks, who of course end their services when the session terminates, yet every member of a committee, including the chairman of it, after the session ends is entitled during the remainder of the fiscal year to the services of a clerk?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Yes, precisely; and at a compensation of $100 per month.

Mr. BINGHAM. Has the gentleman from Illinois conveniently at hand the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I have not the provision before me.

I take it, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution is not yet absolutely before the House, and in order to bring it before the House for consideration, I move that it be laid upon the table.

Mr. DOCKERY. That motion would not be debatable, and it would withdraw the resolution from before the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. Before the gentleman makes that motion I want to ask a question.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I will withdraw the motion. I have no desire to cut off discussion.

Mr. BINGHAM. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Under the resolution we are authorized to pay, or rather the Clerk of the House is authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House to each Member and Delegate, for annual clerk hire, an amount not exceeding $100 per month. I call the gentleman's attention to this language:

To be certified by them on the first day of each calendar month in the manner provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893.

That virtually makes the same provision that is covered by the resolution of March 3, 1893, which provides:

And provided further. That the provisions of this resolution shall not apply to members who are chairmen of committees entitled under the rules to a clerk.

There are, as the gentleman said, annual clerks at two thousand dollars a year salary and upward, and 25 session clerks at $6 per diem. Now, I understand that under this resolution, just as by the resolution of 1893, the chairman of a committee, with an annual clerk or a per diem clerk, can not be and would not be entitled to this compensation.

Mr. DALZELL. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me, the express provision of the resolution is that the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, "to each Member and Delegate," for annual clerk hire, a sum not exceeding $100 per month. There is an independent proposition, and the way that each member is to get his clerk hire is by certifying on the first day of each calendar month, just in the manner provided in the joint resolution approved March 3, 1893.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the gentleman does not read the additional proviso in the original act.

Mr. DALZELL. The resolution imports in its body nothing more than the provision of the resolution of March 3, 1893, that relates to the manner in which the Member or Delegate is to certify his expenditure on this count. I am only calling attention to the fact to show that the gentleman's proposition is not straight.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes; it is. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CANNON. If there be any question about the matter as raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] certainly I should not vote for this resolution without the proviso. And it ought to be amended, if it is to pass, in my judgment, by adding to it the words:

Provided, That the provisions of this resolution shall not apply to members who are chairmen of committees entitled under the rules to an annual clerk.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN].

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH] to withdraw his motion to lay this resolution upon the table. That being the case, there is nothing before the House, and I therefore move the adoption of the resolution.

Now, with reference to the time which the House desires to consume in debating this question, I am anxious to defer entirely to the House. I have no disposition personally to consume more than a few moments, and indeed would be willing to take a vote now; but, Mr. Speaker, several gentlemen have come to me this morning and have indicated their desire to submit some observations against this resolution. They are entitled to be heard as much as those who are in favor of it; and in order to test the sense of the House I now ask unanimous consent that debate upon this resolution be continued for one hour, and that at the expiration of that time the previous question may be considered as ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I will say in behalf of the Committee on Accounts that I will very cheerfully agree to the suggestion of the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLER. This is private bill day, and under the regular order the pension bills on the Calendar come up. I demanded the regular order. Now, my inquiry is as to whether this privileged question can displace the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The difficulty is that that question can not be raised after consideration has been had to the extent which has taken place upon this resolution.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, I made the demand for the regular order, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Illinois presented what he claimed to be a privileged report.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, unless—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not undertake to pass upon the question whether it would be admissible to-day or not, because the matter has been disposed of already, by no objection being made. The Chair does not by any means intend to say that it would not be privileged at all, but simply that it is too late to consider the question.

Mr. PICKLER. Unless you can limit this debate—

Mr. CURTIS of New York (to Mr. PICKLER). You can not help it.

Mr. PICKLER. I demanded the regular order.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have not surrendered the floor. I ask unanimous consent that debate continue for thirty minutes upon this resolution, and at the expiration of that time that the previous question be considered as ordered on the resolution and amendments.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman in charge of the bill can move the previous question whenever he desires. Suppose you let the debate run for thirty minutes or forty minutes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we allow the debate to proceed, when it will develop how much time is wanted. I think a fair hearing should be granted to everyone desiring to be heard upon this proposition.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is right.

Mr. PICKLER. I object, if objection will do any good.

The SPEAKER. The Chair then will recognize the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], to whom the gentleman from Illinois has yielded.

Mr. PICKLER. I have called the regular order in the hope of getting up these pension bills. Why can not you limit this debate now?

Mr. HARTMAN. I move that debate upon this resolution—

Mr. CANNON. That is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH] is in charge of the resolution and has yielded to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], and the Chair has accorded him the floor.

Mr. HARTMAN. Very well; I will withdraw the proposition and proceed to discuss the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I will first address myself to the resolution in its present form. It provides annual clerks to Members and Delegates. It was my intention, when I prepared this resolution, to include within its provisions every Member of this House and every Delegate, irrespective of whether he was the chairman of a committee or not. My idea of that was this: I do not think it fair or just, first, to the clerk of a committee, that he should be called upon to perform the official work of the committee and then, in addition to that, to have added to his burdens the work of the individual who happens to be chairman of the committee. The second point is that it is not fair to the man who is chairman of the committee that he should be compelled to divide the time of his clerk with the committee. The time of his clerk ought to be the time exclusively of the member in whose employ he is, and it is too much to ask that the member divide the time of his clerk with the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my friend that as I understand it these committee clerks have no business to do the work of the chairman of the committee. Their duties are with the committee itself.

Mr. HARTMAN. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. And in my case, and in many others, I have no doubt, we employ stenographers and typewriters personally, in addition to the committee clerks. We have no right to call on the clerk of a committee to do the work of our Congressional districts.

Mr. HARTMAN. In other words, then, under the resolution—should it be amended as suggested—the chairman of a committee would not have the benefit of a clerk at the expense of the Government of the United States. He would be charged with all the burdensome duties which would devolve upon him by reason of being chairman of that committee, and yet would be deprived here of the very services that other members, who have less to do and less responsibility, are provided with at the expense of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, that was the reason why I prepared that resolution in the present form. I will say this, however, that if it seems to be better—and I am not ready to admit it, but if before this discussion is closed it appears to me that it is the sense of this House that the amendments suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] might be accepted, I will do so; but I do not want it understood that I accept it at this stage of the game, because I have not had sufficient information and the House has not had that information yet; and I say that with all due respect to my distinguished friend from Illinois.

Mr. MILES. What is this "game" you are playing? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARTMAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the necessity for these clerks. Every member here who has passed through one—only one—vacation knows that he requires the services of a clerk as much during vacation as he does through the session. I know members, and I know one Delegate upon this floor, who receive from 150 to 200 letters per day. That is during the session. During the vacation they receive probably half that many. Every member here knows that when he goes to his home, remote from this city, to spend his vacation where he has the right to spend it, he is compelled to employ assistance at this end of the line to transact the business which he must transact in order to properly perform his official duties. Any gentleman who does not need the assistance of a clerk need not pay him. Some gentlemen say, "I have no business during the vacation." I say to any gentleman here who does not have business sufficient to occupy the services of a clerk in vacation, he does not need to employ a clerk under this resolution.

This resolution provides that members shall certify, just as they do now, under the joint resolution of March 3, 1893. That resolution provides that a member shall certify that he has employed and agreed to pay a certain amount not exceeding $100 a month to a clerk. There is nothing compulsory about it. I want to ask any man here who says that he does not need clerical help during vacation whether he can justify himself in standing up here and insisting against permitting me, who says that I do need the services of a clerk during vacation, from having one. If there is any district in the United States that does not furnish sufficient business to its member to justify the employment of a clerk in the vacation, then that is an exception. I do not believe there are ten such districts in the entire United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. And the member is not obliged to certify if he does not employ the clerk.

Mr. HARTMAN. Certainly you do not need to employ him at $100 a month. You can employ him for $25 or $50, and if you do not employ him at all you do not pay him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another question about this. Gentlemen say that we can not afford to do this at this time. Mr. Speaker, we can always afford in this House and elsewhere to do what we believe to be the proper thing to do [applause] and make no apologies to anybody. [Renewed applause.] I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not believe there is a constituency in the United States composed of men so narrow and selfish that they are not willing that their representatives shall have accorded to them sufficient aid from the Government of the United States to properly perform their representative duties upon this floor. [Renewed applause.] So far as I am concerned, I want it distinctly understood if I represent that kind of a constituency I will consider it an honor to be defeated by them. I do not want to represent a constituency that is composed of that kind of people, and I do not do it. They are perfectly willing to accord to me the proper financial aid and assistance from the Treasury of the United States to employ and procure the clerical aid necessary for me to perform my official duties properly. They get the benefit of it.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I myself, in the short time of my public service, have paid out over $700 more in clerk hire than I have received from the Government of the United States. Every month that check goes to the clerk, and additional money in vacation. And in no case, in my mind, has any member of this House received one red cent of the salary that has been accorded to him under the joint resolution of March 3, 1893.

Mr. Speaker, it is simply a cold-blooded question of whether this House has the nerve to come up here on the eve of an election and vote for what every member here knows he ought to have for the proper transaction of his business. I have nothing further to say for the present. [Applause.]

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I have been too long a member of this House not to understand its present temper. Now, then, if the views of the gentleman from Montana are to prevail, I suggest that it is only fair and just to give us a yea-and-nay vote on this proposition.

Mr. HARTMAN. I have no objection at all to that.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Let me ask the gentleman from Missouri if the Fifty-second Congress, which passed this resolution, gave the minority at that time a yea-and-nay vote?

Mr. DOCKERY. There was practically no minority. The House seemed to be nearly unanimous for the resolution.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it not a fact that the House in the Fifty-third Congress, in Committee of the Whole, passed this same resolution by a large majority?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not remember; but that is not material to this discussion. The questions to be considered now are, first, whether or not annual clerks are necessary, and, second, if the necessity be conceded, whether this is an opportune moment to make the appropriation. I do not propose at this time to discuss the first proposition, as to the necessity for annual clerks. I am satisfied that every member has already made up his mind either one way or the other. I do propose, however, to address myself for a moment to the question of the propriety of making this expenditure at the present time. Looking at the propositions that have been recently considered at both ends of the Capitol, it would seem that nearly all persons have placarded on the lintels of their doors, "Economy, but next door." [Laughter.] Everybody professes to favor economy, but a great many desire it to begin with their neighbors. Mr. Speaker, if we are to keep down the appropriations of this Congress, if we are to bring them within the limit of the revenues, there must be rigid economy along the whole line, and I know of no point in the long list of public expenditures where it can be more properly applied than to the proposition now pending. For more than one hundred years the members of the House of Representatives have gone without annual clerks. In some way they have contrived to transact their business during all that time, and even if these clerks be necessary, in view of the unfortunate and stringent condition of the Treasury, we should defer the passage of this resolution until a more convenient season.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Is it not a fact that in discussing the Dingley bill, proposed for the purpose of raising revenue in the early part of this session, you stated on the floor that we had a surplus of $260,000,000? [Laughter; applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly; and I reiterated that statement on this floor last Thursday. We have a surplus in the Treasury, including the gold reserve, of about $270,000,000, but it is a borrowed surplus, and I trust the gentleman understands the distinction between that character of surplus and a surplus of current revenues.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But you declined to vote for a bill to raise more revenue because we had that surplus.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to introduce partisan questions, and I do not intend to be betrayed into a partisan discussion, for the object of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] is obvious. It was stated at the outset of this session by the gentlemen on both sides of the House that the current revenues were not adequate to meet current expenses. That statement was made at the opening of the session, when the Secretary of the Treasury estimated a surplus of $17,000,000 at the close of this fiscal year, and I reiterate it now, with a certain deficiency in the current revenues of about $25,000,000, and there is no partisanship in the statement. I do not intend that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] shall force me from a nonpartisan consideration of this indefensible proposition.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Is it not a fact that you argued that we did not need to increase tariff rates at all, because we had revenue enough, and did you not for that reason vote against the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly; but if I had known that this Congress intended to pile up more than $600,000,000 of liabilities, possibly I might have taken a different view. Again let me say that the surplus in the Treasury is a borrowed surplus, and if we do not trench upon it except to meet the necessary expenses of the Government it will be unnecessary to increase taxation, if at all, for at least three years.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of gentlemen on both sides to another feature of this resolution. If this resolution is to be adopted its phraseology should be changed. It is known to all that members are paid this clerk hire. They are made the disbursing agents for the clerks, and there has been some newspaper criticism in view of this fact. Now, Mr. Speaker, we ought to be like Caesar's wife, above suspicion; and if any action of this kind is to be taken these annual clerks should be put upon the roll, and let the money be paid them directly without making the members disbursing agents, and thus perhaps subjecting them to unjust suspicion.

Mr. HARTMAN. Will the gentleman vote for the resolution if amended in that way?

Mr. DOCKERY. I will vote for such an amendment; and then I will vote against the amended proposition. I suggest in all candor to the gentleman from Montana that he ought to amend his proposition so that the annual clerks shall go on the roll and the disbursing clerk of the House pay them the amounts which may be due. If this policy is pursued, it will not be in the power of an unfriendly critic to put any member of the House under the suspicion that he accepted clerk hire and "pocketed it" himself.

I yield the balance of my time to the chairman.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PITNEY].

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution; and I do sincerely hope that this Republican House of Representatives will vote it down. I am sorry to see that the appearance of the distinguished Democrat from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] on the floor in opposition to this resolution has aroused a certain partisan feeling on this side of the House, which I think is entirely foreign to the discussion.

Mr. MAHON. Does not the gentleman from New Jersey understand that with the gentleman from Missouri the question is always one of politics?

Mr. PITNEY. Then I am glad, as a Republican, to stand here and discuss this question without any such feeling. I hope no one will accuse me of being anything else than a loyal and faithful Republican. Such I always have been and always hope to be. I am opposed to this resolution, Mr. Speaker, not because I do not think that clerks are necessary for members. I appreciate the necessity of assistance of this kind. I felt it last summer, before the opening of this Congress, for I paid every month out of my own pocket $50 to $75 in clerk hire and other similar expenses to enable me to perform satisfactorily the duties of the office to which I had been elected. I presume the case will be as bad or worse with me after this session of Congress adjourns. The question is not simply whether this clerk hire is necessary in the sense that it would conduce to a better fulfillment of our duties as members of Congress, but the question is whether it is so urgently necessary at this time that we can afford to vote to spend the borrowed money that is in the National Treasury for the purpose of aiding us in fulfilling our duties. Now, I can not afford to spend this money out of my own pocket any better than any other member of this House. I am poorer than most members here. But I do say that since we have spent this whole session in holding down the appropriations to the very utmost of our ability in order to encroach as little as possible upon the borrowed surplus which the Treasury contains, we ought not to commit this act of enormous inconsistency by voting $216,000 out of the Treasury for this purpose.

Mr. Speaker, from the close of the war until the 1st day of March, 1893, the National Treasury received every year a surplus over and above the ordinary amount which was required to pay the running expenses of the Government, and for the twenty-eight years included in this period the total surplus thus received by the public Treasury was about $1,815,000,000. And yet, sir, during all that time the members of the House of Representatives, if my information is correct, managed to get along and transact their business and the business of their constituents without having the assistance of clerks or paying clerical hire in vacation from the National Treasury. If such service was employed at all the members paid for it themselves.

From March 1, 1893, down to the present time there has been every year a deficiency of revenues to pay the current ordinary expenses of the Government; the deficit for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894, amounting to $69,803,260.58; the deficit for the fiscal year 1895 amounting to $42,805,223.18; and for the fiscal year 1896 up to the present time the deficit amounts to $23,886,793.90, and it will probably reach twenty-five or thirty millions of dollars by the close of the fiscal year.

Now, what is our duty to our constituents and to ourselves under these circumstances? The Republican majority of the House of Representatives was elected, not for the purpose of magnifying, not for the purpose of demonstrating that state of things; we were elected for the purpose of alleviating the condition of the country and the condition of the Treasury by every possible means in our power. Shall we shrink from the responsibility thus imposed upon us when it comes to the consideration of questions affecting our own personal interests?

When we met in December—

Mr. NORTHWAY. We might begin the reduction by cutting down our salaries to four thousand.

Mr. PITNEY. Well, do it, to this extent, by paying clerk hire from your own pockets. We can afford to pay it as well as the people can.

Mr. Speaker, when we met here in December last there were but two ways in which we could hope to do the business which the country sent us here to do, either by increasing the revenues of the Government or by cutting down the expenses of the Government. We have done our share—this Republican House of Representatives has done its share—in an effort to increase the legitimate and current revenues of the Government in proper ways. We passed a bill—not a partisan bill, not a Republican bill, but a fair compromise measure—with a view to increasing our revenue from the customs. It can not be said that it is our fault that it did not become a law. We performed our duty in regard to it; but since it is not likely to become a law, since that bill apparently can not be passed, then it is our duty to take the other alternative and do the only thing we can possibly do under the circumstances, considering the present state of our revenues, and that is to cut down to the lowest possible figure the appropriations.

Every man knows that from the opening of this Congress until now every committee in this House having charge of an appropriation bill has been doing its very utmost to keep the expenditures of the Government within reach of the revenues by practicing the most rigid economy. You know that your public-building bills, your light-house bills, and other bills of a similar character which tend to make increased charges on the national revenues have not been provided for; the appropriations for such purposes have been suspended, not because they were not necessary and legitimate objects of public expenditure, but because at the present time the condition of the Treasury is such that it is inexpedient to appropriate the money for them. And yet, with all of our efforts, the calculation is made that the appropriations for this session of Congress will amount to over $500,000,000. And I do not mean to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are any extravagant appropriations embraced in that sum. I do not believe there are. On the contrary, I know there are none. We have the testimony of the distinguished Democrat from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], in his repeated comments on the appropriation bills, that they are economical in every respect and that they are framed in a proper spirit of economy; and the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], the leader of the minority of the Committee on Appropriations, bears the same testimony. Yet, in spite of every effort that has thus been made, the appropriations for the session will exceed $500,000,000.

Now, in calling attention to these appropriations and in discussing this question of the vast extent of our expenditures we must not forget, Mr. Speaker, that this is a great country and great appropriations must be made, and no partisan argument is to be drawn from it at the expense of the Republican majority on this floor. And when the time comes to make a comparison between the appropriations of this Congress and the appropriations of previous Congresses there must be taken into consideration and put into the calculation the fact that by reason of the recent bond issues of the Administration now in power, made necessary by reason of the deficiencies of the revenues, the annual interest charges of the Government have been increased to the extent of eleven and a half millions of dollars, and the requirements of the sinking fund have increased two and one-half millions of dollars, making a total increase of $14,000,000 per annum which must necessarily be expended on that account.

But gentlemen say, "We of this House are not responsible for this state of things; we had nothing to do with creating the deficiency in the revenues." That is true, Mr. Speaker, but we shall be responsible and will be held responsible by the country if in such an emergency we fail to meet our obligations. And the only way we can do that is by keeping down the expenditures and by appropriating no money for any purpose not necessary and urgently necessary. Let us declare before the country that we are willing to stand by that principle and carry it out to its fullest extent.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me for one question?

Mr. PITNEY. Yes.

Mr. COX. I should like to know what kind of service is contemplated by the House for these clerks of members to perform during the vacation. What is it that they have got to do?

Mr. PITNEY. Why, I suppose every member knows that. A member of the House, in order to properly fulfill the requirements of his constituents, must be a business man. He has a lot of correspondence to take care of. He has 40, or 50, or 75 letters a day. He has many public documents to distribute, and the session is so short and the documents are so late in coming that it is after the close of the session before the documents can be distributed. I am not saying that it is not reasonably necessary—

Mr. COX. I am against it. You need not give yourself any trouble about that. My question is this: Here is the member at home and here is the clerk in Washington, or he may take him home with him. Every letter must go under the inspection of the member.

Mr. PITNEY. Yes.

Mr. COX. Now, you would use that clerk at home to write the letters you dictate. Is not that so?

Mr. PITNEY. Well, if this resolution goes through, I suppose each member will settle, according to his own convenience, the way in which he will employ the clerk or use the appropriation.

Mr. COX. Then, if he keeps the clerk here in Washington, he has to send letters back to his clerk telling him what to do. Now, I do not see where this work comes in.

Mr. PITNEY. I do not understand what the gentleman's inquiry is. I have yielded to him in all courtesy.

Mr. COX. I am against the necessity of a clerk in vacation.

Mr. PITNEY. Then I hope that the gentleman will urge that ground to the best of his ability. I am not going to take any position before this House that I think is not well founded, and I think in my own case a clerk is necessary. I paid one out of my own pocket last summer.

Mr. COX. If I thought so, I should vote to pay him out of the Treasury, too.

Mr. PITNEY. But everyone knows that there is not a business house in the country, or a business man in the country, who is not cutting down expenses, who is not doing more work than he ought and more than he would under ordinary circumstances, in order to save expense. The whole country is feeling the burden of the annual and monthly deficit of our revenues. It applies to every business enterprise and impairs public confidence, and we, as representatives of the people, are bound to use our best efforts. If we can not get some other legislative body to agree with us as to the way in which the emergency shall be met, if we can not get gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol to agree with us on a tariff bill, it is our duty to do, as far as we can, the other thing, and keep down expenses in order that the deficit shall be as little as possible.

Now, gentlemen, I do hope that these views will find a response in your votes. We can afford to go without this allowance one session longer. We can afford to spend six months more under the old system of paying our own clerks and doing our own work. I do not think this House can evade its responsibility to the country in this matter. The people will be disappointed with the work of this Congress, not through any failure of ours, but because they will, perhaps, have expected us to do some things that are impossible. But do not let them be disappointed in this thing. Do not let them, after we have refused many and many an appropriation as necessary and urgent as this on account of the deficit in the public revenues—do not let them have this to charge up against us, that in our own personal business as Representatives we were not willing to apply the knife to unnecessary appropriations as much as in the other branches of the public service. [Applause.]

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that some gentleman who is in favor of the bill be recognized now. I understand the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] to be in control of the time in favor of the bill.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the house in favor of the resolution, and I will ask the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] to yield some time to me.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, if I can be recognized now, I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I propose to vote for this resolution. I believe it is just and will meet the approval of my constituents. I am one of those who do not believe that members of Congress are properly paid. I assent to a proposition that has already been made here, from my own experience in four Congresses, that members need clerks quite as much when Congress is not in session as they do when it is in session. [Applause.] I do not believe that the people of this great country, with its vast and boundless resources, are so small, niggardly, and mean that they are not willing to provide their public servants with the necessary clerical assistance to properly transact their business.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] argues as a reason why this resolution should not pass that the Treasury is empty, and says that the balance in the Treasury is a borrowed balance; in other words, that the Government, under the Democratic Gorman-Wilson tariff bill, has been selling bonds and using the proceeds of those bonds to pay the current expenses of this Government.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri, in answer to that argument, that there are less than eleven months more of this bond-issuing, debt-increasing, wage-reducing, prosperity-killing Democratic Administration. [Laughter and applause.] In eleven months more we will have a Republican Administration. Congress will then be convened in extra session immediately after March 4 next, and will pass a tariff bill through both Houses of Congress that will meet the approval of a Republican President, that will give us revenue sufficient for the needs of carrying on this great Government without issuing bonds; and that revenue will be sufficient to furnish the necessary revenue to properly carry on this great Government, including clerical assistance to the members of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to give one single illustration of the fact that the members of this House are not properly paid, which led many leading papers in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, Democratic and Republican, during the past few years to advocate increasing the pay of members of Congress. My illustrious and distinguished predecessor (Governor Long) retired from this House because he said he could not afford to stay here. He said that it cost him every cent he received for his expenses in living in this city; and now, Mr. Speaker, is it true that the people of this great country are not willing to properly pay members of Congress and not willing to pay for this clerk hire—this assistance which we actually need in order to discharge our public duties. I think not, sir; and for that reason I propose to vote for this resolution. [Loud applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HARTMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] if he is here [cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"], or to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]. As they are not present, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in the five minutes that the gentleman yields to me I will crave the attention of the House. It is well enough to understand just what this resolution does and the history of appropriating for clerical assistance to members of Congress. I will be very brief. Some years ago the Senate passed a resolution to pay for clerical assistance for Senators from its contingent fund, and then asked an additional appropriation for the contingent fund. They passed it in the Senate, and after a great contest in the House the House concurred, because the Senate took the position which drove the House, and always will, that touching their business and their help they must be supreme.

Now, then, some years after that the appropriation for this service went into the regular appropriation bills. Later on the clerks to Senators were made annual; and now there is pending in conference a proposition to increase the annual pay of Senators' clerks from $1,200 to $1,500 a year. Mind you, those are Senators who are not chairmen of committees. That is as far as the Senate has gone. The Senators who are chairmen of committees, that is, committees having clerks, do not get this clerical assistance. Now, the proposition was made in the Fifty-second Congress to enact a law that would give to members of the House clerical assistance.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman a question there?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do not those Senators who do not have clerks as chairmen of committees have such a number of committee clerks as to give to each one of them practically a private clerk all the time?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, some of them have two, and some committees have only one.

Mr. HEPBURN. And those are annual clerks.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I understand so; annual clerks just like our annual clerks. Now, then—

Mr. HEPBURN. Not like our session clerks.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say, further, that this law was enacted in the Fifty-second Congress. We gave clerical assistance during the session to House members, not exceeding $100 a month, on a certificate of expenditure.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will have the kindness to take their seats. Gentlemen desiring to further converse ought to retire to the cloakroom. The House ought to be in order and ought to listen.

Mr. CANNON. I will not tax the House a great while. Now, this is a proposition to pay for clerical assistance during the vacation, and pay it from the contingent fund. If it passes, later on you will have to appropriate for the contingent fund. It is competent to do it and is in our power to do it by a majority vote. A similar proposition to this came up in the last Congress—that was the Fifty-third. It was discussed at length, it was adopted by an overwhelming majority in the Committee of the Whole, but in the House it came to grief on a ye-and-nay vote. On considering the matter thoroughly at that time, I voted for the provision for two reasons. The first was that if there was a necessity for clerical aid for the Senate there was an equal necessity for like aid in the House. The second was that, in my judgment, it was a very just appropriation to make. But a majority of the Fifty-third Congress, on a roll call, said "No."

Now the matter comes up again for action at this time. The resolution as presented here covers all the members of the House. Therein it differs from the Senate provision. The Senate has never gone to the length of providing clerical assistance to Senators who are chairmen of committees. Now, while I am willing to go as far as the Senate seems to have gone—and to have gone, so far as I can see, without serious criticism from the country—I am not willing to go further. Therefore I think this provision covering all members should be amended so as to except Representatives who are chairmen of committees having annual clerks.

Mr. HARTMAN. Is it not a fact that every single Senator of the United States is chairman of a committee?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. HARTMAN. How many of them are not?

Mr. CANNON. A good many.

Mr. HARTMAN. Is not every Senator of the majority chairman of a committee?

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has there been any division of the time or any agreement as to time?

The SPEAKER. There has been no agreement. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. HARTMAN. What I meant to ask the gentleman was this: Is not every Senator of the United States belonging to the majority party the chairman of a committee?

Mr. CANNON. I think not.

Mr. HARTMAN. I think you will find that he is.

Mr. BINGHAM. If the gentleman will pardon me, in the legislative bill for the next fiscal year is an item now under consideration between the two Houses which reads as follows:

For 38 annual clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, at $1,500 each, $57,000.

Mr. HARTMAN. Thirty-eight is the number of the minority in the Senate to-day.

Mr. CANNON. There are some of the minority Senators that are chairmen of committees. Now, I am willing to go as far as the Senate has gone. It would seem that the Senate has gone that far without serious criticism from the country, and that legislation, it seems to me, is fairly justified by the demands of the public service.

Mr. PICKLER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois, as a member of long experience and chairman of a committee, if the clerk to his committee is ever able to render him service as an individual member of Congress?

Mr. CANNON. I reply that the clerks of the Committee on Appropriations never have rendered me any service in my capacity as a Representative other than in connection with my duties as a member of the committee, to the detriment of the public service; but I manage to get along very comfortably, so far as clerical work is concerned, with the help they are able to give me.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How many clerks has your committee?

Mr. CANNON. It has a clerk and an assistant clerk.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will ask the gentleman to state a little more plainly on what ground he advocates his amendment so as to make the resolution not provide clerks for members who are chairmen of committees.

Mr. CANNON. Committees that have annual clerks. I advocate it, I say again, for two reasons. First, the Senate (which we arraign here every session for expending as much for clerical service for one Senator as is expended for five Members of the House) has never gone beyond the providing of clerical service for Senators who are not chairmen of committees. So far the country seems not to have seriously criticised the Senate. When I vote on this resolution, as I have said, I am not willing to go beyond that. If the resolution is amended as I have suggested, then I am content to vote for the amendment and to vote for the resolution in that form as I voted for it in the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I assume, of course, that the gentleman holds that the clerk of a committee will be capable of rendering the same service as private secretary to the chairman of the committee that these clerks who are to be provided for will render to members who are not chairmen of committees, and I can not understand how the gentleman thinks that the clerk of a committee will be able to do that if he does his duty to the committee.

Mr. CANNON. I can not speak for other gentlemen who are chairmen of committees. So far as I am personally concerned, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I get along very comfortably with my clerical work by the aid of the clerks of the committee, full justice being done at the same time to the work of the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON. Your committee, however, has an assistant clerk who is a stenographer and a typewriter.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is proper to be known.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON. None of the rest of the committees are provided in that way, unless it be the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CANNON. The Committee on Appropriations has a clerk and an assistant clerk.

Mr. BRUMM. And the assistant is also an annual clerk, is he not?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interfere with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], but more than the two minutes which I last yielded him have gone by.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I want one minute more.

Mr. HARTMAN. I yield it to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I want that minute simply to say that I sympathized with the point of order made upon this provision on the general appropriation bill. It was not then in order under the rules. I sympathize with this resolution. If the resolution be so amended as to meet my judgment, I am willing to vote for it; and I hope, if it is to pass, we shall have the courage of our convictions and walk up and make a record upon a yea-and-nay vote. [Applause.]

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois rose.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY].

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavor not to trespass on the patience of the House, seeing the desire that prevails to vote. I wish, however, in justice to myself to say that notwithstanding the apparent desire to treat this as a small matter, I do not so regard it. I regard it as an important matter; and the statement of a historic nature which has been made by the gentleman from Illinois shows how easy it is to ingraft an expenditure upon the public moneys of this country by easy stages until it grows into what seems to be a necessity and becomes an annual appropriation. And in this way I undertake to say that the appropriations of this Congress due to unwholesome growths in the past are larger than they ought to have been, notwithstanding the fact that there has been a persistent effort to keep them within reasonable limits.

I have myself, Mr. Speaker, written, I am sure, 500 letters to persons in my district explaining that the reason why appropriations for this thing and that thing could not be had was the fact that there was a constant deficit in the Treasury of the United States, and a deference to that condition of affairs required on our part that appropriations should be kept down to the lowest possible limit. And I regard it as the absolute duty of every Representative on this floor to pursue that line of conduct.

Something has been said here with regard to members having the "courage" to come up and do what they believe to be right. So far as I am concerned, I do not think I have ever hesitated at all in doing what my judgment approved. I intend to do that in this instance. My judgment does not approve of the passage of this resolution, and I shall vote against it. I have been in opposition to it from the time it was introduced. My position has been well known to those who cared to know it. My opposition to the resolution is based partly upon the fact that we stand in front of a condition, not a theory, in which we are constantly attempting to make the cloth cover the object when there is a constant shortness in the amount of cloth.

Mr. Speaker, when I was elected to Congress I was elected under certain prevailing conditions, so far as clerk hire was concerned. I understood what those conditions were. I accepted the position with that understanding; and so far as I am concerned, especially in view of the deficiency in the Treasury which confronts us, I am in favor of serving out the entire term for which I was elected upon the conditions which prevailed when the election took place. I believe that to be the course which ought to be pursued by members of this House; and I sincerely trust that this resolution will be defeated. There is a constant deficit in the Treasury of about four and a half millions per month, and I do not see how, in the face of that deficit, we can afford to vote for an expenditure of nearly a quarter of a million dollars for anything less than an absolute necessity. I do not so regard the pending proposition.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to say anything further on this question. I merely wanted to state the reasons why, in my judgment, this resolution ought not to be adopted by the House; and I trust that it will not. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, if it be in order, I desire to offer an amendment to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after "1893," in line 8, the words: "Provided, That the provisions of this resolution shall not apply to members who are chairmen of committees entitled under the rules to annual clerks."

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to offer a substitute.

Mr. HARTMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry for the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY]. I am sorry that he is so doubtful as to his power to resist temptation. The adoption of this resolution need not necessarily change his status at all. He can have the same regard for conscience and for duty under his present "contract," whether this resolution passes or not. The resolution simply proposes to reimburse members of Congress who pay out $100 or less each month for clerical assistance. The gentleman, with his view of the matter, will refuse to accept this provision, and he will not in any way violate the "contract" that he has made with his constituents. But there are other members of this House who do not understand that there was a contract of that character, and who believe that their constituents will justify this expenditure.

When the joint resolution of March 3, 1893, allowing to members of the House clerical assistance during the sessions of Congress was passed, we were told that members would hear from their constituents on that question in the approaching elections. Did any gentleman hear from his constituents any carping criticism? I have heard nothing of that kind. And I am astonished, Mr. Speaker, to know that there are gentlemen who inveighed against that resolution, who declared it to be unnecessary, who said that they did not need a clerk, and who probably were honest in that declaration, and yet who every month that they have had the power to do so have made the necessary certification and drawn the money. Did they find that they were in error when they made their earlier declarations, or did their integrity serve them only for the purposes of dress parade? [Laughter and applause.]

I believe that this resolution as it is ought to pass. I do not believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] ought to be adopted. Why should there be an exception in favor of the chairman of a committee that has an annual clerk? That chairman of the committee has no right to employ that clerk for his private business. If he requires it of him it is an unjust imposition upon the clerk. He is a public officer, appointed for a public service, not a private clerk.

There are some gentlemen, who have been eloquent to-day, who have gone further than this, and during the vacations, when not chairmen of committees, have compelled the clerks of their committees and the messengers to do their work. It looks to me very much as if that class of gentlemen had something of the characteristics of the "whited sepulcher."

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will listen to a question.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does not the chairman of a committee have the appointment of the clerk?

Mr. HEPBURN. He does, with the approval of the committee, under the rule.

Mr. HOPKINS. But is it not a fact that the clerk is the personal appointee—the friend of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir; if the committee ratifies the appointment.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is there an instance on record where they have not ratified it?

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, you are asking me something now that I do not know.

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, my observation, after ten years of experience, is that the chairman appoints the clerk, and that he is the personal appointee, or friend, of the chairman, and does his work.

Now, take the clerk of your committee. What has he to do after the House adjourns until the next session of Congress convenes?

Mr. HEPBURN. He goes to his home—the clerk of my committee. He lives nearly a hundred miles distant from me, and I will not see him during that interval unless I visit his town. Is that an answer to your question?

Mr. HOPKINS. But he draws his salary, does he not?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly; and so do all other employees of like character. That is in the contract made with them—a part of the understanding when he receives his appointment.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not at all. The chairman appoints him because he is a friend, and he wants him to do his work.

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; that is a mistake. I did not appoint my clerk in that manner. The annual clerk of the committee over which I preside has never yet written a letter or done one item of private business for me.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARTMAN. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa three minutes longer.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know that I shall want further time. I have said all that I desired to say. I believe this proposition is right. I think the resolution ought to be adopted.

But let me say in response to the gentleman from Illinois that this clerk provided in the resolution will not serve me, but he will serve my constituents. He will not serve me with relation to my public business, but will serve my constituents, because doing their private business, that they are accustomed to have members do, to the extent that we are called upon to do, and in that manner I will be better able to serve my constituents in their wants and desires. [Applause.] It is not a part of my public duty; it is because of the relations between us—my attention to so much of their private business—that my constituents are willing I should have the assistance of a clerk.

That is all I desired to say upon this matter.

Mr. ALDRICH. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have three minutes yielded to me in which I desire to say a few words about the amendment which I have offered.

The amendment I propose is that those committees having an annual clerk should not come under the provisions of this resolution; or, in other words, that chairmen of committees which have annual clerks shall be excluded from its operation.

It is well for the House to understand, as has been stated in this colloquy, that the annual clerk of a committee is designated and appointed by the chairman of the committee. I have had the honor to be twice chairman of committees in this House having annual clerks. I did not act in reference to the then clerk of my committee exactly on the plan laid down by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], that is, to the extent of not availing myself of the services of the clerk during vacation. I have employed his services with regard to matters relating to the Congressional district which I have the honor to represent; and in respect to matters connected with the committee I always used my clerk when practicable, in time of vacation. He was my personal selection and my personal friend, a man that I knew I could trust with all of the committee affairs implicitly. I have, therefore, availed myself of his services during the recesses of Congress, because he is near me at our home; he is an annual clerk, paid $2,000 a year, or $4,000 for a Congress, and yet the sum of his labor in each Congress is but eleven months during the sessions. And I now assert that if this resolution should pass after the discussion which has been had here and the understanding brought about by this debate every member having an annual clerk will feel, in view of the restriction as to the employment of clerical hire for chairmen of committees, that he is entitled to the services of that annual clerk during the vacations of Congress. He gets, as I have said, $4,000 for a Congress, and labors for eleven months, at no expense whatever but the mere expense of living here at the time that Congress is in session.

Now, I claim, and submit it to the fair judgment of the House, that in view of the fact that the chairman selects the clerk of his committee, that legislative courtesy gives him his own selection, which is always ratified by the committee, and in view of the further fact that the clerk gets $4,000 for a Congress, and is actually employed in committee work but eleven months in the two sessions—as a matter of fact, in this Fifty-fourth Congress but nine months—I claim that the distinction made by my amendment is just and equitable. It is a distinction that runs in the Senate, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and as far as the Senate have gone, and I think it is as far as this House ought to go at this time.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Would it not be well to have that amendment go further, and limit to the vacation the private clerks of members who are chairmen of committees having session clerks?

Mr. BINGHAM. Gentlemen who have six-dollar-a-day or session clerks come under the provisions of this proposition, and during the interval they get their hundred dollars a month.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Is it only during the interval?

Mr. BINGHAM. Only during the interval they get their hundred dollars. It is a matter of fact known to this House that chairmen of committees use their clerks for their Congressional district relations in almost every committee of the House.

Mr. MAHON. I move an amendment to the amendment, to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN] has control of the time on that side.

Mr. HARTMAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the opinion of the House upon the question as to the desirability or propriety of making an appropriation at this time, I certainly see no justification for the amendment proposed by my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then wipe out the salary of the clerk during the vacation.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman proposes to make a marked distinction between the service that this House shall provide for members who are not chairmen of committees and that for those members who have chairmanships. Every member of the House who is not chairman of a committee will have, under this resolution, the full, undivided services of a clerk to attend to the business of his constituents during every month of the year, and the amendment assumes that the chairman of a committee shall, in some way, obtain the services of the clerk of his committee in a way which shall be equivalent to the services which these personal clerks give to members who are not chairmen.

Now, my experience is that the clerk of a committee has something else to do than to attend to the private business of the chairman of a committee. He is the clerk of the committee. He has not only to attend the sessions of the committee, but he is obliged to attend the sessions of subcommittees of that committee. The chairman may obtain some portion of his services at times by having the clerk work overtime or when the business of the committee is slack; but he does not have and can not have the undivided services of a clerk, as provided for the other members of this House. There are a few committees which have assistant clerks. Of course, in those committees the chairman may have a better opportunity to obtain service for himself from the committee clerks than the chairmen of those committees which have only one clerk. But when Congress adjourns the clerk of the committee must remain here and close up the business of that committee. He must remain here so long as there is anything for him to do here—not simply for the chairman, but for the committee. He is obliged to come here long before Congress assembles to get ready for the session, and I see no reason whatever why a member who is chairman of a committee should be deprived of the services of a clerk during those periods when provision was made for other members.

My experience—and I have no doubt it is the experience of every chairman (certainly of every chairman of a prominent committee)—that not only by virtue of his chairmanship is his correspondence largely increased, but that his private correspondence is largely increased.

Bills, inquiries, and suggestions, as well as calls for information, come from all quarters. These are vastly multiplied by the fact of his prominence and of his connection with the public questions controlled by his committee. I say in justice to the committee that the time of the committee clerks should be devoted to the performance of the work of the committee.

Mr. NORTHWAY. As they always have been.

Mr. BOUTELLE. As they always have been in the past. And the chairman of a committee should not be subjected to the necessity of trying toeke out such assistance as he requires by filching from the time which a clerk should be required to give to the performance of the duties of the committee, in order to be helped out in his private correspondence. And I do not think that members of Congress in their individual capacity should be discriminated one class against another. This provision for clerks is to take care of what I understand to be the constituent business of the member. If a clerk does his duty to a committee, and especially the larger committees of the House, he will be obliged to devote most of his time to the public work, and if he attends to any of the business of the chairman he has to work overtime or else trench upon the time that is due to the transaction of public business. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Speaker, from the beginning of the present session, while opposing you in political sentiment, I have been in constant sympathy with your policy, when confronted with a threatening Treasury deficit, to so far as practical exercise economy, and have watched with approving interest how wisely and adroitly you have wielded the pruning knife over the Rivers and Harbors Committee, the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, the Naval Affairs Committee, and the Appropriations Committee, and others. By this bold stand for economy the country knows you have lost in popularity, even it may be to the extent of losing for the present the highest office in the gift of the American people. The sober second thought of the people, when fully realizing the surrounding conditions, will say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," and the sacrifice of personal ambition upon the altar of present duty will surely reap its just and merited reward. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I am also in full sympathy with my own clerk and the clerk of every other member of this House, and I wish I was able to give them $100 per month, but not out of an empty public Treasury. I fully realize the importunities by which members are besieged to promote the passage of this resolution and thereby give this relief to their clerks. At the same time we ought to be at least as brave and manly as the Speaker and follow his example, and sacrifice this more or less personal legislation when confronted with a deficient Treasury, when he, by the exercise of such public frugality, has hazarded his claims upon the Presidency.

Mr. Speaker, when we come to investigate closely the purpose and objects and, I may add, inwardness of this resolution in a businesslike and practical manner, we will be convinced that the resolution should be entitled "To relieve all Congressmen from the discharge of any duties during vacation, in order they may the more effectively canvass their districts for reelection, or in order they may spend their summers at some favorite summer resort or abroad without molestation from their constituents." There may be some reason for a clerk during the session, but of this I am doubtful; but certainly without legislative duties every Congressman is capable of discharging the duties appertaining to his office without clerical assistance; if he can not, there are at least 1,000 men in his district as capable and as worthy who would obligate to do so for the monthly salary of a Congressman without clerical assistance. As authority for this resolution the other end of the Capitol is referred to. The House at the proper time should have brought grave Senators to realize that this was not the time to increase the salary of their annual clerks, and it was a species of legislative cowardice in the House submitting to this robbery of the people.

As the spokesman of the Populists to this resolution I am not supposed to be the guardian or the director of the majority party of the House. If I were I would direct it to vote against this resolution. If I were its worst enemy I would persuade it to commit suicide by the passage of this resolution, which means a gratuity of about $215,000 during the vacation of Congress to our clerks in these hard times, panics, and low prices, when to let, to rent, for sale is seen everywhere, and the red flag of the auctioneer is upon almost every corner and is seen waving over every barnyard and house top. It is simply criminally extravagant to give away to our clerks this $215,000. I call members' attention to the fact that it is voting away, at present gold prices, 430,800 bushels of wheat, 861,600 bushels of corn, 51,350 bales of cotton—more wheat, corn, and cotton, absolute necessities of human and animal life, than 10,000 honest farmers can raise by working and delving three hundred and sixty-five days in a year. It is your funeral, not mine. It is my duty to warn against such extravagance. If I do not mistake the now scattering racks floating upon the political horizon, their course is in one direction to the accumulation of thickening clouds that will culminate in that terrific thunderstorm that seems so necessary to clarify the political and economic atmosphere of this country and restore happiness and prosperity to the people.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at 10 minutes after 3 o'clock the previous question be considered as ordered, half of the time intervening to be yielded to the gentleman from Alabama, to be followed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON]. I ask unanimous consent for that arrangement.

Mr. CANNON. Is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania pending?

Mr. HARTMAN. That may be pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that at 10 minutes past 3 o'clock the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I do not desire to object, if my friend from South Carolina wishes to be heard.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to have about five minutes.

Mr. LINNEY. I should like to speak on the subject, but if the House does not desire to hear me, I do not care.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I shall want ten minutes against the proposition. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I tremble for my country. [Cries of "Oh!" laughter, and loud and prolonged applause.]

The impatient cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" from the Republican side of this Chamber which we have heard at every pause in this debate are suggestive of the frantic appeals for "Votes!" "Votes!" which we will hear from the Republican party next November.

A vote for this resolution is a flagrant violation of your pledges to the people and a grave violation of your duty as their representatives.

Mr. Speaker, if this is consummated, honest men from lake to Gulf and from ocean to ocean will in thunder tones rebuke this atrocity.

I came to this Congress to use my feeble efforts to relieve our people from the distress which prevails throughout our land. [Applause.] What has brought about that distress? The gold standard has done its part, the McKinley high tariff has done its part, and billion-dollar Congresses have done their part. I hold in my hand an estimate I have made which shows that, taking the entire expenses of Government, the Federal expenses, city and municipal, they now amount to more than $3,000,000 a day, a greater amount than is expended by any other government on earth. [Applause.]

The census of 1890 shows that these expenditures were as follows:

United States Government, including postal service deficiencies.	$318,040,710
States, Territories, and District of Columbia, except for public schools.....	77,105,911
Counties, except for public schools, partly estimated.....	114,575,401
Municipalities, except for public schools, partly estimated.....	232,988,592
Public schools.....	139,065,537
Miscellaneous.....	5,517,183
Total.....	887,293,344

And to-day these expenditures are one-fourth greater.

When I look back, Mr. Speaker, at the golden days of prosperity, of pure, honest Democratic government, that decennium just preceding 1861, those golden days of prosperity when the expenditures of our Government—when our entire expenditures were little more than one-tenth the amount we expend to-day—

Mr. MILES. Has not the gentleman from Alabama always considered those silver days? [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. They were golden days of glorious prosperity, Mr. Speaker; days which I hope the people of this land may again enjoy; and I believe that the free use of the metals that God gave us for the purpose for which God gave them to us, and an economical Congress, would bring back those golden days of prosperity. [Applause.] But what do we see now in every city and in every street? Marshals' sales posted here, sheriffs' sales posted there; "To rent," "To rent," "To rent," "For sale," "For sale," "For sale" placarded on nearly half of the real estate of every city.

Mr. LACEY. Are not these Democratic days, too? [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. These are days controlled by a Republican House, which is now exceeding in its appropriations any ever made before by this or any other Government.

Already the appropriations for this Congress exceed by $22,000,000 the average appropriations of the two sessions of the last Democratic Congress.

You have alarmed the country with your profligacy. You are destroying industry. You are retarding prosperity. You are placing a yoke upon the labor of this land which is too heavy for it to bear, and I repeat, Mr. Speaker, when I hear the rumbling sounds, the groans of the oppressed people—I tremble—I tremble for my beloved country. [Applause.] I appeal to this House to halt. I ask gentlemen to consider, to reflect. I ask them to recall the—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT].

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, this is very short notice, but in that time I desire to say that I opposed this proposition in the Fifty-third Congress for the reason that I deemed it unnecessary, and I desire on this occasion to again enter my protest against its passage; for whenever a single dollar is taken from the taxpayer except that which is actually necessary, it is robbery pure and simple, and I desire to call the attention of this House to one phase of the question now under discussion that has not been presented before. Members may say this is a small matter; but let me say there are 359 members in this House, and during the six months of recess the compensation of their clerks will amount to $315,400 at $100 per month.

Now, then, let us see what this would cost the farmers of this country, as they pay 80 per cent of all the taxes levied by the Government, and then we can see whether it is such a small matter to them, the bone and sinew of this country. At 50 cents a bushel it would take 430,800 bushels of wheat to pay it. How many drops of sweat does it take to pay for that wheat? At 25 cents a bushel it would take 861,600 bushels of corn to pay it. How many furrows would have to be run off to raise this corn, up and down the rows, on hot July days? It would take 8,600 bales of cotton to pay it. Then how many laborers, days, and weeks would it take to raise that cotton?

Now, then, when you view this question from that point I say it is an outrage, it is a monstrosity, that now, in addition to giving enormous pensions to coffee coolers and bounty jumpers, camp followers and bummers, you turn around and propose to pension yourselves [laughter] by voting yourselves $100 a month. This is what you are doing when you thus add another burden to the already overburdened people. Why, sir, a more monstrous proposition was never made. You say because the Senate has done this that the House must do it. No, sir. Two wrongs do not make a right. Let the House do right although the Senate may do wrong. The Senate has increased the salaries of its clerks the snug sum of $68,000.

Mr. Speaker, for these reasons I desire right here and now to enter my protest against any such outrage, against any such monstrosity. For God's sake do not go further in your pension legislation. You have passed hundreds of pension bills for the classes I have described, and you have appropriated over one-half billion during the session of this Congress. Do not turn around now and pension yourselves and rob the people of 430,000 bushels of wheat, of 861,000 bushels of corn, and of 8,600 bales of cotton, which have been reduced in price by your gold-standard policy until to-day the farmer hardly gets enough to pay the cost of producing his crop. That is the present condition of the people that you are thus proposing to burden still further; and I want to raise my hand and my voice against this proposition. I, too, like my distinguished friend from Alabama, after noticing his trembling, begin to tremble for my country when I see such legislation proposed. [Laughter and applause.]

What are the members doing during the vacation that they can not attend to their work. A great number of them are hardly ever in their seats here during the session of Congress, and now they want to add $100 a month to their salaries in the way of clerks. I hope the resolution will be defeated, as it should be. [Applause.]

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALDRICH], I have agreed to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], after which I intend to demand the previous question upon the motion for the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have never seen the hour when I trembled for my country. [Applause.] I am for the resolution and against the amendment. [Applause.] I am for the resolution, because it is in the interest of the people of this country and not in the interest of the Representatives. [Applause.] I made that declaration once before on the floor of this House, and the country has never reproved any of us who hold that doctrine. There is no "salary-grab" element in this resolution. This is a proposition to take one of our own boys or girls, from among the people of our district, to receive our dictation and write our letters and do the detail work which is required to be done in the interest of the people we are sent here to represent. [Applause.]

The clerk of my committee and all the annual clerks of committees work as much as they ought to work, and in the same proportion that members do. The clerk of my committee, the Committee on the Judiciary, devotes his entire attention to the business of that committee, and in addition I have a stenographer and typewriter, the daughter of an old soldier of my district (the old boy himself now in heaven), a girl known to my people, so that when they come into my office, if I am absent, she knows almost as much about the people and the business of the district as I do. She is as much needed to help to work for the people of my district as I am. She has been with me seven years. I bring her here and I take her there, and my experience is the experience of almost all of you. Gentlemen talk about the Senate! We stood in awe of the Senate for a time, but at last we defied the Senate and used our own judgment. Let the House of Representatives be independent now and use its own judgment. [Applause.]

You talk of economy. This country is as rich to-day and richer than it ever was in any hour of its life. We are able to do what is needed for the interests of the people. General Grant, when President, during the great financial crisis that struck the country and when expenditures were exceeding receipts, said: "Let the needed work of the country be done, but stay the hand of legislation on fortifications and on river and harbor improvements not now in process of construction; there is the place to strike." But this country is able now to meet every actual need of the people; and if we go ahead and do properly the work of this country it will only quicken the nation to such legislation as will enable us to meet all the necessary expenditures of the Government. I am for economy, not simply in the next House but in my own house; and my own house is the Third District of Iowa, under the great national roof on which float the Stripes and Stars. My economy touches both these homes; and, impelled by that, I am willing to raise my voice here in favor of this legislation and to record my affirmative vote where the people of my district can read it. [Applause. Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois. I will now ask the previous question, in accordance with an understanding I have had with the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN].

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

The amendment was read, as follows:

After "1893," in line 8, add:

"Provided, That the provisions of this resolution shall not apply to members who are chairmen of committees entitled under the rules to annual clerks."

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois)—ayes 104, noes 83.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment of Mr. BINGHAM was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. ALDRICH of Illinois, Mr. LINNEY, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 109, not voting 116; as follows:

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. BANKHEAD.

On this question:

Mr. BARTLETT of New York with Mr. CROWLEY.

Mr. CANNON (for the resolution) with Mr. MCCALL of Tennessee (against the resolution).

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no," but desire to change the vote to "aye." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be so recorded.

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I find that I am paired with the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. MEIKLEJOHN, and withdraw my vote. I voted in the negative on this question.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to change my vote from "no" to "aye."

The SPEAKER. The several changes suggested will be made. The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. [Applause.]

On motion of Mr. HARTMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is the unfinished business which the Chair will now lay before the House.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill—

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been called for.

Mr. PICKLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLER. If the House should resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, would not the unfinished business of last Wednesday, being business on that Calendar, be first in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not undertake to decide that. The Chair thinks it a question that would have to be examined, because the committee was acting under a special order. But the Chair would suggest that these cases can be reached the next time the House goes into Committee of the Whole under the special order; and it is possible that it may be reached to-night.

Mr. PICKLER. The rule, as I understand it, is that the unfinished business is first in order when the House proceeds to the consideration of that class of business again. On last Wednesday we were acting on the Private Calendar under a special rule; and it seems to me that when we go into Committee of the Whole on the same Calendar the unfinished business is first in order, and the bill before the committee at the time the committee rose on Wednesday last would be the unfinished business to be disposed of.

My object is this, I will state, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. That would have to be decided in committee, at all events.

Mr. PICKLER. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider business on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the rule on this subject. Rule XXIV, clause 6, provides that on Friday of each week, after the unfinished business has been disposed of, it shall be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole. This unfinished business under the rule is first to be disposed of.

Mr. PICKLER. All right, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of pension bills which have been reported by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

JOHN KEHL.

The first business reported by the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1261) for the relief of John Kehl, and to restore him to his former rating.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. TALBERT. I would ask if this bill has been properly engrossed? If it has not been, I make the point that it should be before action is taken on it.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be laid aside for the purpose of engrossment; and the Clerk will report the next bill.

MRS. HELEN MORRILL CARROLL.

The next business was the bill (S. 730) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Helen Morrill Carroll, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MIRIAM V. KENNEY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3937) granting a pension to Miriam V. Kenney, widow of Samuel W. Kenney, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that this bill should be engrossed before its passage. I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be laid aside to be engrossed, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

MARY F. DAVENPORT.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 75) granting a pension to Mary F. Davenport, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HARRIET WOODBURY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1229) to pension Harriet Woodbury, of Windsor, Vt., reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered. The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, this being the case of a remarried widow, I make the point that the engrossed bill is not in the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman demand the reading of the engrossed bill?

Mr. ERDMAN. I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be laid aside for engrossment, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

MARY E. WYSE.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4913) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary E. Wyse, widow of Lieut. Col. F. O. Wyse.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered, the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GEN. WILLIAM H. MORRIS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4383) granting a pension to Gen. William H. Morris, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered. The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY L. BACON.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 5400) to increase the pension of Mary L. Bacon, widow of the late George B. Bacon, lieutenant-commander, United States Navy.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered, the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ARCHIBALD HUNLEY.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 5580) granting a pension to Archibald Hunley.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered, the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. HINES.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 5712) granting an increase of pension to John W. Hines.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered, the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOHN COMBS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 950) to increase the pension of John Combs, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered. The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. HAZLIP.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 138) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Hazlip.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered, the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ANNIS H. ENOCHS.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4275) to increase the pension of Mrs. Annis H. Enoch.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered, the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BYRON COTTON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1022) to increase the pension of Byron Cotton, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered. The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SOPHRONIA S. STOWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5996) for the relief of Sophronia S. Stowell, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered. The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. Mr. ERDMAN. I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be laid aside for engrossment.

JULIA H. H. CROSBY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 446) to place the name of Julia H. H. Crosby on the pension roll, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, the previous question was ordered. The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended as recommended by the committee.

ARMSTEAD M. RAWLINGS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1062) to pension Armstead M. Rawlings, of Arkansas.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MISS JULIETTE BETTS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4395) for the relief of Miss Juliette Betts, with an amendment from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY CRAY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4598) granting a pension to Mary Cray, with an amendment from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. ERDMAN. I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the reading of the engrossed bill. The bill will be laid aside to be engrossed.

DAVID MOSTEN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1936) to remove the charge of desertion standing against David Mosten.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the previous question.

Mr. TALBERT. Is that a Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. It is a House bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. TALBERT. I make the point of order against that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina demands the reading of the engrossed bill. The bill will be laid aside to be engrossed.

NANCY GENTRY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5175) granting a pension to Nancy Gentry.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH T. BEALL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3033) to increase the pension of Elizabeth T. Beall, widow of Benjamin L. Beall, late colonel First United States Cavalry, with an amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Theresa Peebles.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4355) to increase the pension of Theresa Peebles, of Jefferson County, Ga., with an amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Ada J. Schwatka.

The next business was the bill (S. 710) granting a pension to Ada J. Schwatka, widow of the late Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, with an amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

James McGowan.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3524) for the relief of James McGowan from the charge of desertion.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I make the same point against that as I did against the other.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be laid aside to be engrossed.

Edward H. Munson.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4199) to correct the military record of Edward H. Munson, late a private in Company H, Thirty-second New York Regiment Infantry.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I make the same point against that bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be laid aside to be engrossed.

Mrs. Elizabeth M. Williams.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5225) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth M. Williams, of Monroe County, Tenn., with an amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Hannah Yazell.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 1171) to pension Hannah Yazell.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. ERDMAN. I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be laid aside to be engrossed.

William W. French.

The next business was the bill (S. 137) granting an increase of pension to William W. French.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Thomas M. Scott.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6132) granting an increase of pension to Thomas M. Scott.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PICKLER, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various bills were passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILL AND CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bill and concurrent resolution were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

Concurrent resolution—

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,000 copies of the report made by Messrs. Ludlow, Endicott, and Noble, of date October 31, 1895, upon the Nicaragua Canal, together with all the appendixes, maps, plans, and profiles accompanying the same, as submitted by them; 6,000 of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 4,000 for the use of the Senate—

To the Committee on Printing.

A bill (S. 2790) for the relief of Sophronia S. Stowell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7395) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to reconvey to the former owners a certain tract of land in Valverde County, Tex.;

A bill (H. R. 953) for the relief of William Gray; and

A bill (H. R. 1602) for the relief of A. P. Brown, late postmaster at Lemars, Iowa.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. SHANNON, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LINNEY, for five days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. MAHON, for four days, on account of sickness in his family.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. COBB, by unanimous consent, obtained an order for a reprint of the bill H. R. 4447.

EXTENSION OF TIME.

By unanimous consent, the time of the minority of the Committee on Elections No. 3 to file their report in the contested-election case of Yost against Tucker was extended until the 12th of May.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. FITZGERALD, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to extend in the RECORD his remarks on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered. The Speaker accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) declared the House in recess until 8 o'clock p. m., and announced that Mr. HOPKINS would preside at the evening session as Speaker pro tempore.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) was called to order by Mr. HOPKINS, Speaker pro tempore, who directed the Clerk to read clause 2 of Rule XXVI.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar under the special order.

Mr. ERDMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is that the special order under which we were operating the other day? The gentleman says under the "special order."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; the motion is the same motion as is submitted every Friday night, that the House proceed to consider business under the rule.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 51, noes 0.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum, Mr. Speaker. There are too few here to go into Committee of the Whole to transact business. I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is evidently not a quorum present at the present time. We can wait a little while and see if other members come in.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. TALBERT. Before that, if I may be allowed at this juncture, I desire to make a suggestion that my only object is to get rid of the bills on the Calendar to remove charges of desertion. I do not think such bills ought to be passed. I have no objection whatever to pension legislation and no desire to block the passage of deserving pension cases on the list, and if the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions will agree to pass over every one of the bills as he comes to them to-night on the Calendar that removes the charge of desertion, and give me that guarantee, to show you that I am not in bad faith I am willing to withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. I suppose the gentleman from South Carolina knows of course that these bills do not come from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. We have no jurisdiction of them, and while I have no objection, so far as I am personally concerned, they do not come from our committee, and I have no right to make such an agreement. I would be perfectly willing if the House would agree to it.

Mr. TALBERT. But the House might express its willingness to do that. I am here not with the intention of blocking any pension legislation; but I do think that those bills ought not to be passed.

Mr. HULL. If that arrangement can be made, will the gentleman withdraw the point of no quorum?

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly; if that arrangement can be guaranteed.

Mr. HULL. As chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs I am perfectly willing, if the members of the House interested in these bills will agree to it, to adopt that course for to-night.

Mr. TALBERT. If the gentleman says that he will agree to that I will certainly withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. HULL. I will make my statement to the House that, so far as the Committee on Military Affairs is concerned, we are willing to agree that this night shall be devoted to the consideration of pension legislation exclusively. But there are a number of members here who are interested in these bills removing charges of desertion and correcting military records, and I have no right to bind them, although I do not doubt that they will agree to the suggestion made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman put it in the form of a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. PICKLER. I hope the gentleman will do that.

Mr. TALBERT. I will ask unanimous consent, then, that for to-night no bills shall be taken up and considered for removing charges of desertion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina that in the consideration of the Calendar cases to-night no bills removing charges of desertion shall be considered?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROMWELL. That is with the understanding, of course, that these cases retain their places on the Calendar?

Mr. TALBERT. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection; and the request is granted.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, with that understanding, while I do not promise not to make some talk at times against anything else I do not think is right, I withdraw the point of no quorum to show I am in good faith and do not wish to block meritorious pension legislation.

So the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

LEVI T. E. JOHNSON.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2317) to increase the pension of Levi T. E. Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Levi T. E. Johnson, late a member of Company B, Fifty-second Indiana Volunteers, from ten to fifty dollars per month, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, this is the bill we had under consideration on Wednesday when the committee rose and did not finish. There is an amendment pending, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. How is this the first bill on the Calendar for to-night?

Mr. PICKLER. This bill was pending when we were last in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It was the bill last under consideration when the committee rose.

Mr. ERDMAN. But these cases have not been disposed of—the cases prior to this. They are still printed in the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. They have been laid aside to be favorably recommended by the committee.

Mr. ERDMAN. I understand, then, that the Chair holds this bill is the first in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so holds; and the Chair will state that there is an amendment pending, the Chair is informed, to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted on this bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. I was not recognized for debate, but for a point of order, when I rose before.

The CHAIRMAN. But the debate was exhausted on this bill when it was last before the committee.

Mr. ERDMAN. I rose prior to this on a point of order, and did not rise to discuss the bill until now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman state another point of order?

Mr. ERDMAN. No, sir; I rise now to speak on the merits of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted on this question. Mr. ERDMAN. At the last session?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; at the last session. The question is on the amendment to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, that amendment was voted on at the last session.

Mr. BURRELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. This bill was considered before, and the amendment to insert "thirty" was voted down. Does this carry $50, or does it carry $30?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that when the committee rose there was pending this motion, to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty"—that that was the pending question when the committee rose. Of course that is the first question now in order.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, this is the case where the soldier was entirely blind, if I remember right.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, debate is not in order. Debate has been exhausted on this bill.

Mr. MILNES. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the vote upon this was 58 on the proposition to make it $50, and only 7 against, because the soldier is entirely blind.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment was voted upon at the last session.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair is informed by the Clerk that the committee was dividing, and the question of no quorum was raised, leaving this motion which the Chair has just put as the pending question at that time.

Mr. HOPKINS. My attention was called to that, because of my colleague having been in charge. My understanding was that the committee amendment was voted down, and that the point of no quorum was raised on the bill as it was originally presented, at $50; so that the vote to-night is not upon the amendment, but is upon the bill itself at $50.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The RECORD shows, on page 4914, that the amendment was pending when the roll was called.

Mr. HOPKINS. On the amendment itself?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. On the amendment itself. That is the RECORD; so that the Chair is right according to the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has appealed to the Journal, and appealed to the RECORD, and finds that the statement of the condition of the case is as the Chair has stated it.

Mr. BURRELL. Was it passed at $50?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the point of no quorum was raised at that point. That motion did not prevail for the want of a quorum.

Mr. MILNES. I demand a division.

Mr. BURRELL. I demand a quorum now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the committee, to strike out the word "member" and insert the word "private."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURRELL. I asked for a division on the other amendment and did not get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not ask for it until after the Chair had decided the question. The question now is, Shall this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLOTTE A. WELTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3152) granting a pension to Charlotte A. Welton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the condition and limitation laws, the name of Charlotte A. Welton, widow of Lieut. John A. Welton, late of Company E, Fifty-first Indiana Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 a month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as it was determined last Wednesday that the calling for the reading of the report was not blocking pensions, inasmuch as it was determined that we ought to know what we are doing by reading the reports, and inasmuch as the leader who so faithfully called for the reading of the reports last Wednesday is not here to-night, I will ask to have the report read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. KIRKPATRICK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3152) granting a pension to Charlotte A. Welton, report as follows:

The beneficiary in this bill, Charlotte A. Welton, is the widow of John A. Welton, late Lieutenant of Company E, Fifty-first Indiana Volunteers. The testimony offered in support of this bill conclusively shows that on or about the 1st day of May, 1863, at Days Gap, Ala., in the absence of the first lieutenant and captain of Company E, Fifty-first Indiana Volunteers, Second Lieutenant Welton was in command of the company and commanded the same that day in a charge made on the rebel forces. That while leading his company in said charge he received a gunshot wound in the leg below the knee, breaking the bone, and he was left upon the field while the Federal forces moved on, and while there upon the field was captured by the enemy and his leg amputated by a Confederate surgeon, and was left at a house in this wounded condition, where he remained about six months before he was able to return to his home.

The testimony further discloses that the amputation was carelessly done, and that for the want of suitable and proper care the wound never healed and continued to grow worse, discharged pus continuously, except at intervals, up to the time of his death. He was drawing a pension of $15 per month at the time of his death, and a certificate was subsequently issued to his wife, and she continued to draw the same until the year 1877, when she was dropped from the pension roll for the alleged reason that the testimony did not show the soldier to have died of the wound mentioned. She subsequently applied for and obtained a pension of $8 per month under the law of 1890. Two reputable physicians who attended and were well acquainted with the deceased gave it as their opinion that the death of the soldier was the result of this wound; that while he was attended with high fever, it was the necessary and natural result of the wound. This testimony is corroborated by many witnesses. The widow of the deceased is a reputable woman, still remains his widow, and is possessed of no means worth mentioning aside from the pension of $8 per month.

Your committee, having no doubt of the correctness of the foregoing propositions, believe this case to be one that calls for the special intervention of Congress, and therefore report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend this bill by striking out of lines 4 and 5 the words "subject to the condition and limitation laws."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "subject to the condition and limitation laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert the word "First," after the word "of," in line 6; so that it will read "widow of First Lieut. John A. Welton."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, after the word "of," insert the word "First."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE WILLIAM HODGDON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3890) granting a pension to George William Hodgdon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll at $12 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George William Hodgdon, son of George W. Hodgdon, late of Company D, Fourteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In lines 6 and 7 insert the following words, after the word "Hodgdon:" "permanently helpless."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SARAH A. BOYD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6808) granting a pension to Sarah A. Boyd.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Boyd, widow of George Boyd, late private Company E, First Regiment Minnesota Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month, in lieu of the rate she is now receiving from date of her original application.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "private" and inserting the word "captain" in lieu thereof in line 6, and by striking out the word "twelve" in line 8 and inserting the word "seventeen" in lieu thereof, and by striking out all after the word "receiving" in line 9.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

THEODORE V. PURDY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3306) to increase the pension of Theodore V. Purdy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Theodore V. Purdy, late private Company F, First Michigan Sharpshooters, and pay him a pension of $50 a month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Let us have the report.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Why waste time?

The report (by Mr. ANDREWS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3306) to increase the pension of Theodore V. Purdy, having carefully considered the same, respectfully report:

Theodore V. Purdy enlisted November 19, 1862, in Company F, First Michigan Sharpshooters, and was honorably discharged July 28, 1865.

March 18, 1882, soldier filed application alleging catarrh and bronchitis, and pension was granted at $4 per month, which was increased to $12 from September 4, 1890. December 22, 1890, he made application for increase on account of paralysis resulting from fever contracted in the service, but the claim was rejected August 2, 1894, on the ground of no record and no evidence of existence in the service or until 1882.

The records show that during May, June, July, and August, 1864, he was in Harewood Hospital, Washington, D. C., being treated for fever and retention of urine.

The soldier's condition is best indicated by the report of the board of examining surgeons made February 15, 1893:

"We find the claimant a confirmed invalid—the lower extremities paralyzed, the result of locomotor ataxia. He is helpless in every respect so far as movements of the body are concerned. * * * The abductor muscles are paralyzed, and the adductor muscles bring the knees together with such force that to relieve the pressure a soft pad or pillow has to be placed between the knees. * * * Claimant wears a urinal day and night. He suffers with severe cramping that can only be relieved by the hypodermic use of morphia. Claimant requires the constant care of a nurse day and night * * * and is entitled to a first-grade rating."

To the same general effect are the certificates of three other examining boards, two of which report the disability as of service origin, the others being silent on the subject. Three eminent physicians of California are of opinion that the soldier's present condition originated in the Army. The medical referee, however, failed to find the "pathological sequence," and the claim was accordingly rejected.

The evidence shows that most of the time this man suffers excruciating pain, which can be relieved only by injections of morphia, and that his wife is wearing herself away by her constant attention and desperate efforts to obtain a living for both.

The record of the beneficiary seems to be an excellent one. He participated in the pitched battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Cold Harbor, and in all the engagements before Petersburg up to the time he went to the hospital. If he could clearly trace his disability to the service he would be entitled to $73 per month. He has probably failed to do so beyond a reasonable doubt, but the evidence strongly preponderates in his favor, and is amply sufficient to warrant your committee in recommending the passage of the bill.

We therefore respectfully report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE V. BARNARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6466) to increase the pension of George V. Barnard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension now allowed to George V. Barnard, late a private of Company E, Ninety-fifth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, so that he shall be allowed and paid $50 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "thirty"; so as to make it read "$30 per month."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in regard to the amendment. I hope it will not be adopted, and that the bill will remain as it was originally, at the rate of $50 a month. That soldier, Mr. Barnard, served over three years in the ranks and is now totally blind. Now, the evidence does not positively establish the fact that his blindness is the result of his military service; but it is clearly proved that he is pensioned for vertigo and nervous prostration, and there is no doubt in my own mind that this blindness is the result of his military service. If that could be distinctly proved, he would then be entitled to a rating of $72 a month. He is an old soldier, is poor and helpless, and is totally blind. I hope that the committee's amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, of course we have not had the report read, and do not know anything about it. I do not know but that it is just as well. We are in the habit of passing these bills without knowing anything about them. Of course this old soldier is blind; and of course, as the gentleman says, he can not prove that it is due to service origin; and if we had had the report read we would have found the reason that this old soldier is to be pensioned is, that the old soldiers and citizens at his home have petitioned here to increase his pension because he is in a helpless condition. Now, without knowing anything about it, without wanting to know anything about this case, without having the report spread before the House, on this petition for charity, you take it that it is a proper and a good case to grant a pension. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. PICKLER. I only want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought not to say we do not know anything about these cases. These reports are printed, and everybody has access to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HENDERSON MARPLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3877) granting a pension to Henderson Marple.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and restrictions of the pension laws, the name of Henderson Marple.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "roll," in line 4, and insert the following:

"The name of Henderson Marple, late a private in Capt. A. J. Hart's Company, Morgan County Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, at the rate of $12 per month: Provided, That said pension shall be paid to Henderson Marple, and no part of said pension shall be retained by any official of the Government by reason of any pension heretofore paid to said Henderson Marple."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. ERDMAN. As the report in this case has not been read, I want to say that you gentlemen ought really to have heard this report. It distinctly shows that this soldier was dropped from the rolls in 1892 under a Republican Administration, and there is no reflection upon that Republican Administration for dropping him. So this is a very imperfect report, even as reports go. I can easily see why you do not want the report spread upon the record. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken, the bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

MRS. MARY GOULD CARR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4354) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mrs. Mary Gould Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased, at the rate of $75 per month.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five"; so as to make the pension $75 a month.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee of the Whole will allow me a few moments (I promise not to occupy longer) that I may state my reasons for believing that this bill should be passed as originally introduced and without the amendment proposed by the committee. If there ever was a bill presented which was entitled to be passed at the figure originally proposed, it is this case to pension the widow of Gen. Joseph B. Carr. He was a general not only in name but in fact. He enlisted at the beginning of the war and continued in service until the end. His career was one of the most brilliant and successful which the annals of the rebellion afford. He participated in about 19 of the most important and decisive battles of the war. He died, I believe, in the year 1894 or 1895, leaving a widow and one invalid daughter.

This pension is asked, of course, for the benefit of his widow, and the special circumstance which it seems to me should commend the case to this House or to any patriotic body is the fact that the widow for whom the pension is asked shared during the entire military career of her husband his burdens and hardships upon the field. She followed him in all his campaigns. She nursed the soldiers under his command who were wounded and in the hospitals. Thus, from the beginning until the end, she participated in the hardships which he endured. In favor of the passage of this bill we have, in addition to the brilliant and glorious career of General Carr, in addition to what he did in behalf of his country, the further reason which I have stated in behalf of pensioning this noble and patriotic woman. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee striking out $100 and inserting $75.

The amendment was agreed to, there being—ayes 58, noes 21.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

DELIA A. MARSH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4283) granting a pension to Delia A. Marsh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Delia A. Marsh, sister of Albert Marsh, who was a corporal-sergeant in Company B, Sixty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. MILNES. Let us have the report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following report (by Mr. POOLE):

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4283) granting a pension to Delia A. Marsh, dependent sister of Albert Marsh, a corporal and sergeant of Company B, Sixty-fourth Regiment of New York Volunteers, report as follows:

Albert Marsh was a soldier with a gallant record, who, at the battle of Spottsylvania, Va., May 12, 1864, received a gunshot wound in right thigh, resulting in amputation of the leg. Before receiving said wound he personally captured the flag of the Forty-fourth Virginia Volunteers and afterwards received a "medal of honor" for this brave act. The amputation as first made was not successful and a second amputation became necessary. The successive amputations and the shock to his system resulting therefrom made him a physical and mental wreck, and his pension was increased from $8 a month, commencing from the date of his discharge from the Army in 1864, until he was receiving a pension of $72 at the time of his death, January 17, 1895. During the last twenty-five years of his life he received the constant care and attention of his sister, who gave up all other work and faithfully attended this soldier until he died.

The evidence before the committee shows that not only did this sister care for this soldier at the risk of her life and permanent injury to her health, but that she was often obliged to call upon neighbors in the night to help her care for this soldier brother, who at times was violently insane; that in all these years she was his devoted friend and attendant, refusing all offers of an easier and happier life, and that she sacrificed her life willingly and cheerfully to the care of her crippled brother; that this long-continued devotion and care, with the mental strain, has now made her an invalid. She is 61 years of age, and the only property owned by her is a small house, which rents for $6 a month, from which taxes, insurance, and repairs have to be paid.

The sworn evidence examined by your committee shows that twice within the last year she has been operated upon for cancer, said to be the result of blows inflicted upon her by this maniacal soldier, and that at best her remaining years are but few.

Some of the best-known people in Randolph, Cattaraugus County, N. Y., where this claimant lives, have submitted affidavits to your committee fully substantiating all that has been set forth in this report. The soldier never married, and no one is now drawing a pension on account of his service.

In view of all the facts set forth in this report, your committee believe that this bill is based upon equity and justice and recommend its passage.

Mr. MILNES (before the reading of the report was concluded). Mr. Chairman, I waive the request for the further reading of the report. I am satisfied.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ORLEINA J. CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4721) granting an increase of pension to Orleina J. Clark, of Louisville, Ky.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Orleina J. Clark, widow of the late George W. Clark, a soldier in the war with Mexico, from $8 per month to $20 per month, to take effect from the passage of this act.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. COLSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4721) granting an increase of pension to Orleina J. Clark, have considered the same, and respectfully report as follows:

Mrs. Clark is the widow of the late George W. Clark, sergeant Company A, Seventh United States Infantry, and Company F, First United States Dragoons, in the war with Mexico.

The soldier died September 24, 1866, and his widow, the beneficiary, has been allowed a pension at $8 per month under the Mexican war service pension act of January 29, 1887.

The following is the sworn statement of the claimant, together with the certificate of the notary public before whom the affidavit was executed:

"I am a granddaughter of William Cloud, who served in the Revolutionary war under Gen. George Washington, and later was at the battle of New Orleans. I am a daughter of John A. Cloud, who fought under General Jackson in the war of 1812.

"I was raised on my grandfather's plantation in Patrick County, Va., 6 miles from the foot of the Blue Ridge. I married George W. Clark, who served in the First Regiment of Dragoons under General Carney, and later in the Second United States Infantry, Company K, under General Riley, and was ordered to Fort Wilkins, on Lake Superior, when they were ordered to Mexico. My baby was born three months after my husband left, and was 3 years and 6 months old when he returned to Jefferson Barracks, Mo. I joined my husband there with my little children soon after the return.

"After he was discharged he promised me that he would never enlist again, so he went into the railroad business after leaving Buffalo, N. Y., and we went to McMinnville, Tenn., on the Southwestern Railroad, and continued there until the rebellion broke out in 1861, and in the following fall he went into the Quartermaster's Department in the Federal Army. He had a force of quartermaster's hands stationed at White Bluff working on the deep cut under General Gillum until the close of the war. I am the first woman that ever took the Federal officers into her house at Nashville, Tenn. I took Colonel Wood and Captain Tracy, belonging to the Sixteenth Ohio, I think, out of their camp; they were very ill with typhoid fever, and I took them both into my house and cared for them until they were able to join their command. I opened my house to the officers of the United States Army and boarded them until the war closed, and made them feel as much at home as I could possibly do under the circumstances.

"My youngest daughter, Fannie W. Clark, suffered for seventeen years with the most terrible affliction that could befall anyone; she was afflicted with epileptic fits, and was liable to fall at any time or place. During the seventeen years of her affliction she was continuously under medical treatment.

"For fifteen years I have walked the streets of Louisville among the most respectable people in order to make an honest, upright living, and am now completely broken down. For the last six months I have not been able to go out to do anything toward making a support, and have been very destitute, but thank God I have a great many good friends among the first people of Louisville.

"I served my country faithfully at home with my children while my husband was doing his duty in the Army, and now, in the name of God, all I ask of you good men is to give me an increase in my pension.

"ORLEINA J. CLARK.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 14th day of January, 1896.

"[SEAL.]

"CORDIE PURDY, N. P. J. C.

"I have known Mrs. O. J. Clark for fourteen years, and during all that time I have lived within 6 or 8 squares of her. I know her to be a truthful, good woman, who has worked hard to support herself and afflicted daughter, and in order to do this she has been compelled to be on the streets in the severest weather, both hot and cold, and the consequence is she is now completely broken down in health; wherefore I pray you will grant her petition and give her an increase in her pension.

"CORDIE PURDY,
Notary Public, Jefferson County, Ky."

A petition signed by Asher G. Caruth, W. R. Abbott, B. H. Young, and 40 other citizens of Louisville, Ky., sets forth the claimant is 70 years old and very feeble, and that she is a most worthy and deserving woman.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended.

Mr. CURTIS of New York (before the reading of the report was concluded). Mr. Chairman, I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with. Everybody, I think, is in favor of the bill.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I called for the reading of the report. I insist that it be read through.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JESSE M'MILLAN.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk a bill which I ask unanimous consent to have considered now. I dislike to make this request to take up a bill out of the regular order, but I think when members of the committee hear my statement they will agree that I am justified in asking consideration for this bill now. This is the case of a preacher and an old Federal soldier, who is now entirely blind in one eye and nearly so in the other. He is destitute and helpless, and the bill is so far down the Calendar that I can reach it in no other way, and I do hope that under the circumstances no gentleman will object to taking up the case of this poor old blind soldier.

There being no objection, the committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8184) granting a pension to Jesse McMillan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Jesse McMillan, a soldier in Company F, Third Regiment Arkansas Infantry, and allow him a pension rated at $15 per month.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve"; so as to make the pension $12 a month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. TERRY. I thank the Committee of the Whole for its kindness.

PHOEBE M. WOOLLEY PALMETER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1599) granting a pension to Phoebe M. Woolley Palmeter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States the name of Phoebe M. Woolley Palmeter, daughter of Jonathan Woolley, who was a soldier and pensioner of the Revolutionary war, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM H. NESBITT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4361) to pension William H. Nesbitt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension rolls the name of William H. Nesbitt, of Newton County, Mo., who was a member of Company F, Second Illinois Cavalry, in the war of the rebellion, and to grant him a pension at the rate of $72 per month from the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "hereby," in the third line, the words "authorized and"; and amend by striking out all after the word "Nesbitt," in the fifth line, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "late a private in Company F, Second Illinois Cavalry, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of pension heretofore granted."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

LUCY A. ALLEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2969) granting a pension to Lucy A. Allen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Lucy A. Allen, widow of Capt. William E. Allen, late of Company C, Third Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month from the approval of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARIA GIBBONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2405) granting a pension to Maria Gibbons.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria Gibbons, widow of James Gibbons, late captain of Company B, First Battalion Arkansas State Militia, at the rate of $30 per month.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that the leader of the other side, if he were here, would be very much dissatisfied with the riotous way you are proceeding to-night. It is so contrary to what would probably prevail if he were present that I am constrained to ask for the reading of the report in my own time.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Oh, why waste so much time?

The report (by Mr. KIRKPATRICK) was read, as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2405) granting a pension of $30 per month to Maria Gibbons, widow of James Gibbons, late captain Company B, First Arkansas State Militia, having carefully examined into all the facts and circumstances in this case, ask leave to report the following:

In April, 1864, the commanding officer of the District of the Frontier (Gen. A. W. Bishop), at Fort Smith, Ark., in order to protect the district from the invasion and incursion of rebel hordes and guerrilla bands which infested that section of the country, ordered and directed the organization of the First Regiment of Arkansas State Militia, and James Gibbons organized and became captain of Company B of that regiment, and entered at once upon active duty.

In an engagement with guerrilla bands or Confederates about 20 miles from Fort Smith, Ark., on May 22, 1864, Capt. James Gibbons received two gunshot wounds in the breast and side, and was brought to Fort Smith by his comrades, and died therefrom in the hospital at Fort Smith on May 24, 1864. The engagement was participated in by a portion of the Twelfth and Fourteenth Regiments of Kansas Infantry Volunteers.

Capt. A. Jackson Jennings, of Company E, Twelfth Kansas Infantry, and First Lieut. Joseph R. Pratt, of Company L, Fourteenth Kansas Cavalry, both testify to Capt. James Gibbons being wounded and having died in general hospital at Fort Smith, as before stated.

A. W. Bishop, then adjutant-general of Arkansas, testified on November 1, 1866, that—

"Capt. James Gibbons, of Company B, First Battalion Arkansas State Militia, died at Fort Smith on or about May 24, 1864, of wounds received in a skirmish. The militia to which he belonged was organized by the said A. W. Bishop, as commander of the post at Fort Smith, Ark., in April, 1864, acting under orders from the commander of the District of the Frontier, Department of Arkansas; but what has become of their company rolls affiant can not state. I was relieved as commander of the post in May, 1864, and turned over all papers pertaining to this militia to my successor, Colonel Judson, Sixth Kansas Cavalry Volunteers."

Maria Gibbons, the claimant, filed an application for pension June 8, 1866, alleging the facts as stated, and that she was married to Capt. James Gibbons at Kilmalme, Ireland, August 30, 1844, and lived with him up to date of his death.

Her claim was rejected June 30, 1871, on the ground that the records failed to show that Capt. James Gibbons was in the service of the United States or that his company was under the command of a United States officer at the time he received the wounds from which he died.

Your committee believe this case a meritorious one. The claimant is now very old and in destitute circumstances, being supported by relatives and friends, and is unable to understand why her husband's service should not be recognized, when he voluntarily gave up his life in defense of his country and the protection of citizens and property in that locality, and, as he and the officers and men with him believed, under direct orders.

Your committee earnestly recommend that the bill do pass, when amended by striking out the word "thirty," in line 8, and inserting the word "twenty" in lieu thereof.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, the report in this case states that the claimant is not only old and in destitute circumstances, but is unable to understand why her husband's service should not be recognized when he voluntarily gave up his life in defense of his country and while protecting citizens and property in that locality. I am free to confess that I quite agree with her, and yet the record shows, and I desire to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact, that this claim was rejected by a Republican Administration.

That is all, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELLEN EWING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1837) granting a pension to Ellen Ewing, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Ewing.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ellen Ewing, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Ewing, at the rate of $100 per month.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee recommend a reduction to $75 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, if it is possible to have order in the committee, I would like very much to have the report read in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read.

Mr. PICKLER. If I can have the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina for a few moments, I desire to make a suggestion. The report in this case was made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAYTON] and is quite a lengthy report. Everybody knows the record of the services of General Ewing, and I would ask if he would be satisfied with a statement from Mr. LAYTON, which could be made in briefer time than it would take to read the report?

Mr. TALBERT. Well, I think we ought to have the report read, but I have no objection to a statement from the gentleman. I will be satisfied with that in place of the reading of the report.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is a Senate bill, and simply came into my hands as a subcommittee in the ordinary distribution of the Senate bills in our committee.

The bill passed the Senate unanimously without any objection for $100 a month. It came to our committee, and after careful inspection and investigation of the facts and precedents in connection with bills of this character, we were constrained to reduce the amount to $75 a month.

I assume, Mr. Chairman, that it is not necessary for me to speak to this committee of the record of General Ewing's military services. We are all familiar with it—by reputation at least. He was a gallant soldier, and a most distinguished citizen before the war and ever after the war until the time of his death in 1896. He was killed by accident, it will probably be remembered, in the streets of the city of New York by a street car. He commanded the Department of Missouri for a long time during the war, and he is credited with having saved the city of St. Louis from the rebel forces.

I have received during the short time that I had the bill in charge this session, giving it consideration, a large number of letters from distinguished citizens of St. Louis, and members of his command, both in St. Louis and Kansas, certifying to the fact. He was brevetted a major-general for distinguished and gallant services on the field of battle.

His widow also came from an equally distinguished family with General Ewing, and consequently she has been accustomed to the comforts, you may say the luxuries of life. She is now quite aged. She was his wife long before the war, and since that time up to his death. She is about 71 years of age, I think, as I remember the testimony, and I regret to say, Mr. Chairman, that that testimony discloses the fact that Gen. Thomas Ewing left an insolvent estate, so that this old lady can derive nothing whatever from it. For that reason, in consideration of his services, after careful consideration of the matter, your Committee on Invalid Pensions concluded to allow the sum of $75 a month instead of $100, as recommended by the Senate bill. The subcommittee recommended to the full committee that amount, and I hope under the circumstances that there will be no objection to the bill as recommended.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt in the world of the truth of every word the gentleman from Ohio has uttered. Last Friday night I endeavored here, by moving to amend a bill, to reduce the claims of a widow of a general officer from fifty to forty dollars a month, thereby trying to get at some common ground on which the officers' widows should stand, and which we will be justified in supporting. It was voted down. I acquiesced in it, and, as I understood, there was a kind of tacit agreement of the Committee of the Whole that hereafter on Friday nights they would establish the grade of $50, because on that evening there were several bills passed at $50 per month. I think that is sufficient, and I think it would be a very good idea to establish that grade. I hope that to-night we can succeed in agreeing upon that common level. To that end, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "seventy-five" and inserting "fifty." I make that motion in good faith. You can vote it up or vote it down, and I will submit to what you do.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Mr. Chairman, allow me a word. I hope the amendment offered by my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] will not prevail. He must have failed to consider the great merits of this case of General Ewing and his services. I am sure it is not the intention of this House to cut down the amount in as meritorious a case as this. I understand that my friend from South Carolina has indicated his entire willingness that it should go at $75 a month, if the committee so vote.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to learn, though I supposed that we all knew it before, that Gen. Thomas Ewing came of a very distinguished family. I am glad also to know that his wife came of a very distinguished family; but I did not know that this House or this country was pensioning widows simply because they came of a distinguished family. I believe that $50 a month is enough; and until the thousands and tens of thousands of widows of meritorious and brave soldiers throughout this land get their pensions of at least $12 a month, I am not in favor of granting $50 or $75 a month to some widow simply because she belongs to a very distinguished family. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] will prevail.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, if the rule had prevailed here that officers' widows should be pensioned at $50 a month I should gladly vote for the amendment, but having passed one or two bills here this evening, and many before, granting pensions at $75 a month, I am opposed to reducing the amount in the case of the widow of Gen. Thomas Ewing.

Mr. PICKLER. Has any bill passed at $75 to-night?

Mr. NORTHWAY. We voted that to the widow of General Carr. Now, I have known Gen. Thomas Ewing and known of him for many years; and while we did not belong to the same political party, and while we always fought each other in politics, there never was a braver man, never a truer gentleman, never a more honorable man of my acquaintance than Gen. Tom Ewing, of the State of Ohio. And I stand here to affirm that if the widow of any man on earth should have $75 a month it is the widow of Gen. Tom Ewing. Although he had ceased to reside in Ohio and had become a resident of New York, yet the name of Thomas Ewing is deeply embedded in the affections of the people of the State of Ohio, Republicans and Democrats alike, and I stand here to defend him and to say that the pension of his widow should not be reduced to $50 a month so long as pensions to widows of other men no better or braver, remain at $75 a month.

Mr. PICKLER. Is it not probable that $50 a month would keep this widow very comfortably during her life?

Mr. NORTHWAY. As I have already stated, I should have been glad to establish a rule of that kind; but the Committee on Invalid Pensions, by its vote on many occasions, has established a different rule, and I am not in favor of changing the rule now.

Mr. TALBERT. It is never too late to do good.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman from Ohio agree that the Committee of the Whole shall establish that rule to-night and abide by it hereafter?

Mr. NORTHWAY. If the committee will report that amount in these cases, I certainly shall stand by the committee; but I am not willing to make an exception in this case, and I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, I want to heartily indorse all that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] has said. I, too, knew General Ewing personally, and I know his family. For six years General Ewing was my law partner; and I am not going to allow an amendment to be voted on here to reduce the amount which the committee have awarded to his widow without at least protesting against it because of my personal knowledge both of General Ewing and also of the present condition of his widow and his daughter. This is not only granting a pension to General Ewing, but there is an unmarried daughter. By reason of misfortune, in spite of the distinguished career of General Ewing, of which we all know, he left an insolvent estate, and his widow and daughter have no means of support whatever except such as this House gives them here to-night. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I want to make one suggestion. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MILNES] has spoken of distinguished families. I disagree with him, unless possibly we only differ as to what he means by the words "distinguished family." It so happens that from Revolutionary times this country has owed much to certain individuals and has owed also much to certain families, and from good stock away back in the Revolutionary time to the present time you see it run down through different branches of the family. We not only know of Gen. Tom Ewing, but we know also of the father of Tom Ewing, that he was Secretary of the Treasury under William Henry Harrison and Secretary of the Interior under President Tyler, and he himself was a United States Senator. We all know General Sherman, who was left an orphan when a small boy, and was reared by General Ewing's family side by side with Gen. Tom Ewing; and I appeal to this House, with recollections of the Shermans and Ewings of this country, not to vote to give that widow and that daughter less than $75 a month.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, now this bill passed the Senate at $100 a month. The Committee on Invalid Pensions reported it here at $75. It seems to me that when a bill comes in where gentlemen are personally interested we never can put it high enough; and when it applies to people on the outside we can not get it low enough. Now, no bill has been reported for a high amount except where there was a record of distinguished services of soldiery. I am inclined to say, after hearing the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FAIRCHILD], that we ought to put this at $50. We are not pensioning heredity. We can not pension these women because they come of a distinguished family. Plowboys who fought the battles of the Union did not generally have any very distinguished backing previous to that time, so far as family was concerned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe individually that $50 a month is sufficient, I do not care how distinguished the widow's family may be. I believe that $50 ought to keep a widow comfortably in nearly any place in this country.

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILES. I believe you have read this report?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILES. Do you bear in mind that there is a dependent daughter here, too?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe, while my sympathy goes out for them, that we can pension a whole family. I do not believe we are called upon to do that. This committee has been criticised in speech after speech. Several gentlemen that I might mention here have come up and criticised the Committee on Invalid Pensions in regard to high pensions, stating that a pension of $75 is too high. I accept that, and we will settle it down to not exceed $50. I will vote for the amendment that the gentleman has proposed.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just addressed the committee has made an argument that is absolutely without force, unless it be in favor of cutting down this widow's pension in order that the money may be saved for the old soldier.

Now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. PICKLER. That is the best reason in the world.

Mr. MILES. The gentleman says that that is the best reason in the world. Well, now, I will suggest a better method to save the money for the old sure-enough soldier, and that is to keep off the pension rolls the deserters and bounty jumpers.

Mr. PICKLER. We have not put any on the rolls.

Mr. MILES. You have done so on a general pension law. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this, that the only reluctance I have in voting any longer larger pensions for distinguished Union soldiers than for one who is a common soldier grows out of the fact that you are refusing to allow us to keep the pension roll a roll of honor; and it seems that the commoner a soldier in the estimation of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions the more he is entitled to a pension.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would not address the committee again on this proposition but for the curious state of affairs existing. The Chairman will recollect that on one occasion some weeks ago I took occasion to criticise certain matters that the Committee on Invalid Pensions had done, a report that was made, where a recommendation was made. I undertook to do it leniently, and made mention of no names and mentioned no committee; but no sooner had I taken my seat than the able chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions arose and attacked me in a vigorous and vicious manner, saying I was attacking the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which had carefully examined these matters, he said, and when it made a report it was entitled to some consideration; and now he is fighting himself, and I stand here as a poor weak man defending him against himself. [Laughter and applause.] That committee has reported this bill at $75 a month, has written a long report in favor of it, and now the members of the committee stand here to oppose themselves and to ask this House to oppose the committee, because they want to revise the report they have already made. I submit that this is a curious way to get up confidence in a committee. The gentleman who is presiding this evening as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole will recollect that he attacked me somewhat vigorously—

Mr. MILES. The gentleman does not intend his remarks for the whole committee?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I mean only those who are opposed to me; that is all. [Laughter.] The gentleman is with me.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Chairman, I want the gentleman to give me one second to say—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] yield?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Not for a speech.

Mr. MILES. No, I do not wish to make a speech; but the gentleman has that kind of amiability which I know will permit me to make myself understood by the House.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly.

Mr. MILES. If I was understood by the House as opposing a pension of $75 a month for the widow of Gen. Thomas Ewing, I desire the minds of members to be disabused in that respect. I shall vote cheerfully for this pension of $75 a month.

Mr. NORTHWAY. If the gentleman understood me as criticising his action, or intimating that he was opposed to this pension, he misunderstood me.

Mr. MILES. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Is the gentleman in favor of granting a pension to the widow of every brigadier-general at the rate of $75 a month?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I am not; I answer the gentleman frankly.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LACEY. If General Ewing, instead of being killed by a railroad accident had been killed in battle, his widow would have received only $30 a month. Now, why should she receive by a bill of this kind $45 more per month than she would under the general law if her husband had been killed in battle?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I will try to answer the gentleman. He will recollect that I undertook some weeks ago, in remarks which I then made, to urge just that question. I wanted to know why a private soldier should receive more under a private pension bill than he would at the Pension Bureau. After I had submitted my criticism the able gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] and the gentleman who is presiding this evening [Mr. HEPBURN] "went for" me at the rate of 250 pounds per minute. They both got on top of me; the Committee of the Whole got on top of me, and the bill then under discussion was passed, notwithstanding my criticism.

I should have been in favor of a uniform rate of $50 a month for the widows of brigadier-generals; but the House of Representatives of this Congress has voted otherwise; this Committee of the Whole has several times voted otherwise. This very night this Committee of the Whole has voted to give $75 to the widow of a brigadier-general. Now, why should we make a distinction against the widow of General Ewing? I have just pride enough in the State of Ohio and just pride enough in Tom Ewing and his family to stand here and say that it is an invidious distinction to give the widow of General Carr $75 a month, and then in the next breath give the widow of Tom Ewing only $50 a month. I repudiate any such discrimination. I stand here to defend the two families. If you give a pension of $75 in one case you should give it in the other.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me very strange that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions should subscribe to a report favoring a pension of $75 a month to the widow of Gen. Tom Ewing, and then, because some gentleman on the floor chooses to say that General Ewing is of a distinguished family and that his widow is of a distinguished family—because, forsooth, both of them have had distinguished families—that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions should deem it a crime to belong to a distinguished family, and should therefore be willing to reduce the pension of $75, as proposed by his own committee, to $50.

Mr. MILES. You are not surprised at that, are you?

Mr. BRUMM. I am surprised. There are some things at which I would not be surprised; but this is such an extreme case that I am surprised, even at the action of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions upon this floor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is no crime to be of a distinguished family. I do not believe there is one gentleman here that wants to vote a dollar more to the widow of Tom Ewing because she and her husband have had distinguished families. The reason which induced the committee to report in this case in favor of a pension of $75 a month was the distinguished service of Tom Ewing, not his distinguished family. But he is not the less deserving as a soldier and a general—his widow is not less worthy of a pension—because he was of a distinguished family. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is but a few hours since our worthy friend from South Dakota advocated on this floor a pension of $100 to the widow of General Gresham. I ask wherein did General Gresham stand higher as a distinguished statesman and a distinguished soldier than did Tom Ewing? And the gentleman was extremely anxious that she should have $100 a month, although she is the representative of a very distinguished family.

Mr. MILES. And made a speech in favor of it.

Mr. BRUMM. Why, therefore, this change? Why, Mr. Chairman, there are widows in this country of distinguished officers, widows of generals who are getting $200 a month, and I know that there are beneficiaries, possibly of these very pensions, who are finding fault with some of the pensions granted to-night. [Applause.] I understand that this is the case, but of course I will not mention names. But they are granted and the beneficiaries are willing to accept them for themselves or their friends, and I ask why the chairman of this Committee on Invalid Pensions, at this late hour, would attempt now to reduce the pension of Gen. Thomas Ewing's widow simply because she is a woman deserving of a high pension, a distinguished lady, the descendant of a distinguished family, and her husband also a distinguished man? Is that a good reason for opposing a pension? I do not understand such consistency as that.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Now, since the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MILES] have been so sweet on one another, and agree so lovely, and since the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] has misrepresented me knowingly, for he knows how I stand on this question—

Mr. BRUMM (interrupting). I deny it, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, well, you did, anyway.

Mr. BRUMM. I deny it. I say it is not true.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, you have done it.

Mr. BRUMM. It is not so. I permit no man to say that I misrepresented him knowingly. I may have been in error, but I never misrepresent any man.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, I think you knew that you were in error.

Mr. BRUMM. I knew nothing of the kind. I simply stated facts which were well known to this committee.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Did you not vote a pension of $100 a month for the widow of General Gresham and advocate it on this floor?

Mr. PICKLER. I did.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. That is precisely what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said.

Mr. PICKLER. But this is not a parallel case at all with the Gresham claim.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Why not?

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, well, I gave you the reasons. Look up my speech in the RECORD and you will find them. This very debate to-night illustrates the difficulty the Pensions Committee has in these matters. It has become the custom lately to accuse the Committee on Invalid Pensions of inconsistency in these reports. I have had to take the floor more frequently than I desired upon that very account. When the gentleman from Ohio is not interested in a bill himself, he takes the committee to task for putting the rate of pension too high. Now, he attacks the committee to-night, when he is interested in a special case, because the committee will not put the pension high enough, and because I wish to put it lower than he does.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I was not attacking the gentleman for that, I was only suggesting the inconsistency of the proceedings.

Mr. PICKLER. Just as another gentleman, who always criticizes the action of the Pensions Committee for putting a pension too high, moved to-night to raise our report from what the committee recommended, because the case was one from his own State.

Now, I want to state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he knows I did not object to anything on the ground he suggests—that I did not object to the pension in the Ewing case, or to any amount that has been named in connection with it, simply because they are of a distinguished family. On the contrary, I am very proud of that. But because a man is of good family and his wife is of a distinguished family, that is no reason for granting a high pension.

Mr. BRUMM. You signed a report in favor of $75 a month, did you not?

Mr. PICKLER. No; I did not.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, you favored it.

Mr. PICKLER. No; I did not. I never did favor it.

Mr. BRUMM (continuing). Well, you have favored even larger sums in other cases, and why do you see proper to change your views now after this bill has been reported, and try and reduce it?

Mr. PICKLER. I can only repeat that I never did favor that sum in this case. That is the reason I object to it. I do not think it is right, and I think it ought to be reduced, and that is another reason why I have to take the floor oftener than I like to in these cases. We are compelled to protect the action of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MILES] very well knows, as he has made his thrusts at me in connection with this matter, that he, with his Democratic colleagues, is always in favor of the highest kind of pensions. I have protested and constantly refused in every one of these cases to put the widow of a general officer at a higher rate than $50, except in the case of the widow of General Gresham. I have already said that I regard that as the most exceptional case that we had before the committee. All the others, I think, may fairly stand upon another but an equal footing.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Let me ask the gentleman—

Mr. PICKLER. No; I will not yield any further.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. PICKLER. In a moment, Judge. I want to except Judge LAYTON from the statement in regard to his colleagues on that committee.

Mr. LAYTON. If the gentleman will permit me—

Mr. PICKLER (continuing). And I withdraw, as far as you are concerned, the charge of favoring these high pensions.

Mr. MILES. Do not let him withdraw his charge as to the rest of us, for we are decorated with it.

Mr. PICKLER. I believe $50 ought to keep, comfortably, any widow of any officer.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. How about the daughter?

Mr. PICKLER. Now, I submit that I have as much sympathy with the daughter of a soldier as anybody else; but the Government never yet has adopted the policy of granting a pension to the widow of a soldier and at the same time pensioning the daughter. It is a provision of every pension law that we have on the statute books that there can be but one pension for one service at the same time. Now, we can not pension the widow and pension the daughter at the same time.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Will the gentleman from South Dakota yield for a question?

Mr. PICKLER. No; I can not yield now. The gentleman from New York had his time. I was just desiring to say that while I have not taken the initiative here, as chairman of the committee, because the majority of my committee disagree with me on this question, while I have not moved to reduce these pensions, although I fought them in the committee, yet when the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] or anyone else moves to amend a bill here in a way that I believe to be right, I think I have the right as an individual to exercise my individual judgment as a member of this Committee of the Whole, and vote to reduce, where I think we have reported too high an amount.

The widow of a brigadier-general can get $30 under the general law. Of course where an increase is recommended you can scarcely recommend any intermediate amount between thirty and fifty dollars; so if we recommend any advance we have generally recommended $50, but there is no rule as to that, and above that I am opposed to going. I am glad that this motion has been made here. This was a distinguished general, but the trouble is about all these cases that we had so many distinguished men in that war, and we have so many distinguished widows now, and gentlemen like the gentleman from Ohio get up here and speak in favor of them. I admire the earnestness of the gentleman from Ohio. I have never attacked him.

Mr. NORTHWAY. You have not, eh?

Mr. PICKLER. No; I take it all back if I did. I do not attack anybody. I am a little emphatic once in a while, but I have no malice against anybody, I assure you. The trouble is that we have these same speeches before the committee, and gentlemen come down here and preach about distinguished families, and they show the distinguished records of these soldiers, and they almost compel us to report these bills at a high rate. It is illustrated here in the committee to-night. Just as soon as you get the case of a general or a general's widow from the State of one of these gentlemen we can not get the rate high enough to suit them; but let a case come from any other State, and they are all on their feet criticising the Committee on Invalid Pensions for putting the rate so high. That is the position we are in. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this motion will prevail at $50. As far as I am individually concerned, I believe that is enough in all these cases. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. POOLE. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I merely rise to call the attention of this committee to the fact that there are some slight indications that the mouth disease has again become epidemic. [Laughter.] I sincerely hope that the mind of everyone here is made up by this time, and I hope that in order to convince everybody else that we are not afflicted in the way that I mention everybody will keep still and let us have a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] to amend the committee's amendment by striking out "seventy-five" and inserting "fifty."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 63 noes 60.

Mr. LAYTON. Let us have tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. LAYTON and Mr. TALBERT.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 67.

Accordingly, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] moves to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty." You who favor the adoption of that motion will say "aye"—

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word or two. I want to express my surprise again at gentlemen on this floor who get up here and shed crocodile, hypocritical tears over the widows of officers, when they do not open their mouths in the interest of the widows of common soldiers. I want to say that is a sad commentary upon this House, Democrats especially. I must say, gentlemen, that nothing that the Republicans do ever surprises me [laughter], but I am surprised that distinguished Democrats when they have an opportunity of regulating and grading pensions of widows of officers at $50 will get up here like oat-fed horses, and walk between the tellers and be counted, voting in favor of $75 a month when they have never been known to open their mouths in the interest of the common soldiers. I want to say that while I do not agree with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I believe he is an honest, upright, conscientious man, although he is a little extreme upon pensions. I want to say that I was glad to see him
